1. STATUTES.

63 & 64 Vict. c. 50 is the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900.

5 Edw. 7 c. 8 is the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, Continuation Act, 1905.

2. TENANCY.

Nature of—Construction of Agreement—Weekly Rent—"Rent not to be raised" during Continuance of Lessor's Interest.]—On January 11, 1900, a shop was demised to the plaintiff under a written agreement as follows:—"I shall be pleased to accept you as tenant for barber's shop at the rental of seven shillings per week, the rent not to be raised during my present tenancy." The landlord was the lessor of the shop under a lease which would expire on June 24, 1901:—Held, that the plaintiff was not a mere tenant from week to week, but was entitled to a term which would expire on June 24, 1901. Adams v. Cairns, 85 L. T. 10—C.A.

(a) Tenancy at Will.

Entry by Landlord to Repair—Statute of Limitations.]—Where a tenant at will remains in possession of the premises for more than twelve years after the expiration of the first year of the tenancy, but pays no rent, and the landlord enters from time to time to do repairs, there being no evidence whether such entry was made with or against the consent of the tenant, the entry does not operate so as to constitute a resumption of possession by the landlord, and thereby to determine the tenancy at will, and the tenant therefore acquires a statutory title to the premises by virtue of section 7 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, and the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874. Lynes v. Snaith, 68 L. J. Q.B. 275; [1899] 1 Q.B. 486; 80 L. T. 22; 47 W. R. 411—D.

Determination of Tenancy by Mortgage of Reversion—New Tenancy by Estoppel—Statute of Limitation.]—A tenancy at will is determined by a mortgage of the premises by the landlord, such mortgage being brought to the knowledge of the tenant. Jarman v. Hale, 68 L. J. Q.B. 681; [1899] 1 Q.B. 994—D.

Where the tenant remains in possession, the new tenancy, necessary to prevent the Statute of Limitations running against the landlord, is sufficiently created by estoppel, and the fact that he had by the mortgage parted with his reversion is immaterial. Ib.

Expiration of Lease—Creation of Express Tenancy at Will—Application of Terms of Lease not Inconsistent with such Tenancy—Arbitration Clause.]—The principle that a tenant who holds over after the expiration of a lease and pays or agrees to pay rent, and becomes a tenant from year to year, is deemed to hold upon all the terms and conditions of the original lease, so far as they are applicable to a yearly tenancy, applies where an express tenancy at will has been created on the termination of a lease. An arbitration clause contained in the old lease is not inconsistent with such tenancy at will, and applies during the continuance of the tenancy. Morgan v. Harrison, 76 L. J. Ch. 548; [1907] 2 Ch. 137; 97 L. T. 445—C.A.

Tenant at Will or on Sufferance—Power to Create Relationship of Landlord and Lodger.]—The relationship of landlord and lodger may be created between a tenant at will or on sufferance, and a person occupying part of the premises of such tenant. On compliance, therefore, by the lodger with the requirements of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, his goods are exempt from distress at the instance of the superior landlord. Bensing v. Ramsay, 62 J. P. 613—D.

(b) Yearly Tenancy.

Demise for Twelve Months with Option of Lease—Term not Specified.]—The plaintiff by an agreement in writing demised to the defendant a shop and dwelling-house for a period of twelve months "with the option of a lease of the same after the aforesaid time at the rental of 30*l.* per annum." Before the expiration of the twelve months the defendant claimed to exercise the option reserved by the agreement and refused to give up possession. In an action brought by the plaintiff to recover possession of the premises the Judge held that, upon the exercise of the option by the defendant, a further tenancy was created for one year:—Held, that the true meaning of the agreement was that, upon the exercise by the defendant of the option, a tenancy for at least a further period of one year was created, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover possession upon the expiration of the twelve months. Austin v. Newham, 75 L. J. K.B. 563; [1906] 2 K.B. 167; 95 L. T. 490—D.

Seemle, per KENNEDY, J., that the further tenancy created was one for the life of the defendant. Ib.

Notice to Quit—Letting "until such tenancy shall be determined as hereinafter mentioned"]—

Three Months' Notice to Quit.]—An agreement of tenancy provided that the letting should be from May 13 "until such tenancy shall be determined as hereinafter mentioned" at a "yearly" rent, and it also provided that "It shall be lawful for either party to determine the tenancy hereby created by giving to the other of them three calendar months' notice in writing":—Held, that a yearly tenancy was created determinable by a special three months' notice to quit to expire at the end of any year of the tenancy, and not an indefinite tenancy determinable by three months' notice. Doe v. King v. Grafton (21 L. J. Q.B. 276; 18 Q.B. 496) distinguished. Lewis v. Baker (No. 2), 75 L. J. K.B. 848; [1906] 2 K.B. 599; 95 L. T. 10; 22 T. L. R. 680—C.A. Affirming, 54 W. R. 146—Jelf, J.

Estoppel by—Bankruptcy of Assignee of Lease—Disclaimer by Trustee—Liability of Assignee's Mortgagee in Absence of Vesting Order—Lessor's Claim for Rent under Tenancy from Year to Year.]—A tenancy from year to year is created by estoppel between the mortgagee of an assignee of a lease, disclaimed by the assignee's trustee in bankruptcy, and the original lessor, where, in the absence of a vesting order under section 55 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, in favour of either party, the mortgagee has entered into possession and occupation of the premises, and has for some years continued to pay quarterly the original rent reserved by the lease to the lessor. That the mortgagee had done this merely to preserve his security is no defence to an action for rent due under a tenancy from year to year, nor is it a defence that the lessor had a remedy by distress. Jump v. Payne, 68 L. J. Q.B. 607—Day, J.

Sporting Rights—Licence—Successive Tenancies for Single Year—Incorporeal Hereditament—Six Months' Notice—Reasonable Notice.]—A lessor purported to lease certain shooting rights for one year from March 25, 1895, by an instrument not under seal. On December 31, 1895, the lessor consented to a future reduction of rent in a letter addressed to the lessee. Subsequently to March 25, 1896, the lessee continued for some years longer in tacit possession of the shooting at the reduced rent, but nothing further was agreed between the parties as to the nature or duration of such tacit possession. On February 26, 1901, the lessor determined the said possession by verbal, and on March 23 by written, notice, as from March 25 then instant:—Held, that the possession of the lessee subsequent to March 25, 1896, was not that of a mere licensee. Lowe v. Adams, 70 L. J. Ch.

Wood v. Leadbitter, [14 L. J. Ex. 161; 13 M. & W. 889] questioned, having regard to Walsh v. Lonsdale, [52 L. J. Ch. 2; 21 Ch. D. 9]. Ib.

Quare, whether such possession was that of a tenant granted successive rights each year for a single year, or that of a tenant from year to year. Ib.

Held, however, that the common-law rule as to the necessity of giving six months' notice to determine a tenancy from year to year in a corporeal hereditament does not apply in the case of an incorporeal hereditament such as the one now in question; and assuming that the defendants were entitled to "reasonable notice," that "reasonable notice" had in fact been given in the circumstances. Ib.

3. LEASES AND AGREEMENTS.

(a) Generally.

Lease of Floor—Outer Wall.—A lease of the rooms on a floor is a lease of a separate dwelling, and includes the outer wall so far as it is solely appropriate to the rooms let. Carlisle Cufé Co. v. Muse, 67 L. J. Ch. 53; 77 L. T. 515; 46 W. R. 107—Byrne, J.

Lease of Shootings—No Implied Obligation on Landlord to Keep Plantation Fences in Repair.—Under a lease of a mansion-house and policies, with the right of shooting over the estate, there is no implied obligation upon the landlord to keep the fences round the plantations in such a state of repair as to be effectual to exclude live stock. Patrick v. Harris's Trustees, 6 F. 985—Ct. of Sess.

Interest on Arrears of Rent—Title not Shewn.—Where the lessor has not shewn a good title to grant the lease until after the grant of the lease, interest on arrears of rent does not begin to accrue until the time of good title shewn. Canadian-Pacific Railway v. Toronto Corporation, 74 L. J. P.C. 15; [1905] A.C. 83; 91 L. T. 703; 21 T. L. R. 44—P.C.

Interpretation of Lease—Parcels—Right of Way—Misdescription—Falsa Demonstratio—Rectification.—In the application of the doctrine falsa demonstratio non nocet it is immaterial in what part of the description the falsa demonstratio appears. It is not necessary that it should follow the true part, and qualify what has gone before. Coven v. Truett, 68 L. J. Ch. 563; [1899] 2 Ch. 309; 81 L. T. 104; 47 W. R. 661—C.A.

Whether the doctrine applies in a case where the Court can see what the document in question was really intended to mean, quære. Ib.

Document—Construction of—Immediate Interest in Land—Document Void, not being under Seal—Agreement for Lease—Lease for Life—Specific Performance.—The agent of the plaintiffs signed a document, not under seal, which recited, "I have let to" the defendant a house "at a weekly rental of 23s., and I agree not to raise" the defendant's "rent as long as he lives in the house and pays the rent regular. I shall not give him notice to quit. Any time" the defendant "wishes to move out, I promise to return to him the 6l. he has paid me on taking possession of the house":—Held, that the document did not create an immediate interest in land at law as between the plaintiffs and the defendant by reason of its not being by deed as required by section 3 of the Real Property Act, 1845, but that it could be treated as an agreement for a lease for the defendant's life, subject to the conditions that the plaintiffs might turn him out if he did not pay rent regularly, and that the defendant might determine his life interest by moving out on notice being given to the plaintiffs; and further, that such agreement was one in respect of which specific performance could be enforced. Zimnier v. Abrahams, 72 L. J. K.B. 103; [1903] 1 K.B. 577; 88 L. T. 46; 51 W. R. 343—C.A.

Lease for Life or in Perpetuity.—C., owner in fee of certain premises, and H., a yearly tenant under C. of the premises, entered into an agreement in writing whereby, after reciting the existing yearly tenancy, and that C., "for herself and her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," had agreed with H., "his executors, administrators and assigns," to allow him to hold and occupy the undisturbed possession of the premises in consideration of the due payment by H. of the yearly rent of 50l., it was witnessed that C. agreed to let and H. to take the premises at the yearly rent of 50l. The agreement contained covenants whereby H., "for himself, his executors, administrators and assigns," agreed to keep the premises in repair and to carry out alterations on the approval of C., and a covenant by C. whereby she, "for herself, her heirs, executors, administrators and assigns," agreed with H. that so long as he, "his executors, administrators or assigns," continue to pay the yearly rent, C. would continue H., "his executors, administrators or assigns," as the tenant of the premises, and preserve to him and them the quiet and peaceable enjoyment of same, and a further covenant by H. that he, "his heirs, executors or administrators," should not let, sell or assign his interest in the premises without the consent of writing in C., "her heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, or her or their agent at the time being": Held, that the agreement created a tenancy for the lessee's life. Coleman's Estate, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 483—Ross, J.

Parcels—Right of Way—Falsa Demonstratio.

—By a lease the upper rooms in two adjoining houses, Nos. 13 and 14, were demised to the plaintiff, "together with free ingress and egress for her servants and customers through the staircase and passages of No. 13 to and from the premises hereby demised on the second floor of the said messuages Nos. 13 and 14." Before the date of the lease the staircase of No. 13 had been pulled down and a lift made in lieu thereof. The only staircase was that of No. 14, and access to that was through the shop where the lessors carried on an extensive business:—Held, that the words "of No. 13" should be rejected as falsa demonstratio, and that the plaintiff was entitled to use the staircase of

No. 14. Cowen v. Truefitt, 67 L. J. Ch. 695; [1898] 2 Ch. 551; 79 L. T. 848; 47 W. R. 29—Romer, J.

Presumption—Occupation of Additional Land Enclosed.—H. demised an island to E. Subsequently E. occupied two other plots of H.'s land. These plots were situate on the mainland, and were something between half a mile and a mile from the island demised to E. They were inclosed land. There was no evidence that they were occupied by E. as an addition to his holding under H., and no rent was paid in respect of them. After more than twelve years had elapsed, when E.'s tenancy of the island had determined, H. brought an action against E.'s successor in title to obtain possession of the two plots. The County Court Judge held that there was a presumption that E. had occupied them as H.'s tenant, and in the absence of evidence to rebut this presumption H. was entitled to recover possession. On appeal:—Held, that there was no such presumption. Seem, the presumption that a tenant who occupies more land than is demised to him occupies it for the benefit of his landlord is confined to encroachment on waste. Hastings (Lord) v. Saddler, 79 L. T. 355—D.

Shooting Rights—Profit à Prendre—Agreement not under Seal.—By agreement in writing not under seal dated July 30, 1898, Lord C. agreed to let to the plaintiffs part of the lands of B and C, reserving, except as thereafter provided, the exclusive right to game and the exclusive right of shooting upon the demised premises, for one year, from May 1, 1898, and so on from year to year, till the letting should be determined, at the yearly rent of 45*l.*; and further agreed that the plaintiffs should for the term of ten years from the date of the agreement have the right of shooting over all the lands of B and C, and full authority to use proper means for the preservation of the game on the said lands. The lands (of which Lord C. was owner in fee) consisted mainly of mountain in his occupation and also of holdings in the occupation of yearly tenants. These tenants held under agreements in writing, not under seal, made in 1868, which gave them the exclusive right of grazing on the mountain, and reserved to the landlord the exclusive right to the game and the exclusive right of shooting and sporting. Some of these tenants (together with other persons living in the neighbourhood) interfered with the plaintiffs' shooting on the mountain. In an action for an injunction to restrain them from interfering with the plaintiffs' right of shooting, it was contended for the defendants—first, that the right of shooting over the tenants' holdings was not validly reserved to Lord C. as the agreements were not under seal, and, secondly, that the agreement made between Lord C. and the plaintiffs, not being under seal, was invalid as regards the sporting rights:—Held, first, that the right of shooting was validly reserved; secondly, that the grant of the right of shooting was not a mere licence, but a demise of a profit à prendre, and that the agreement was valid. Radclyffe v. Hayes, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 101—M.R.

Lease of Land Adjoining New Street—Presumption as to Ownership of Soil usque ad Medium

Filum, Via—Rebutting Circumstances.—The presumption that a conveyance of land abutting on a highway passes the soil of the road usque ad medium filum is rebutted by the surrounding circumstances where a new street is made by commissioners under an Act of Parliament which imposes on them duties and obligations inconsistent with the presumption, and where the parcels and plan shew no intention to pass any part of the street. Mappin v. Liberty, 72 L. J. Ch. 63; [1903] 1 Ch. 118; 87 L. T. 523; 51 W. R. 264; 67 J. P. 91; 1 L. G. R. 167—Joyce, J.

Seem, the presumption does not apply to building estates or schemes. Quere, whether the presumption applies to leases or to grants from the Crown. Id.

Public-house—Reversionary Lease—Implied Condition as to Premises being Continued as Public-house.—In 1885 a reversionary lease for fifty years to take effect on the determination in 1899 of the tenancy then existing was granted to the defendant's testator. At the date of the lease the premises included therein were occupied as a fully licensed public-house, and one of the covenants was that the lessee should, during the continuance of his lease, use the demised premises as a fully licensed house so long as the necessary licence could be obtained for that purpose. The licence was forfeited about 1893, by the tenant then in possession, and no fresh licence had been obtained. In an action by the lessor against the lessee for rent, Held, that there was no implied condition that the premises should be fully licensed when the lease came into operation, and that the lessee was therefore liable for the rent reserved. Blum v. Ansley, 64 J. P. 184—Phillimore, J.

Express Demise of Lights—Covenant not to "object to any works to adjoining premises"—"Obstruction of Lights."—Under a lease dated September 20, 1894, W. became the lessee of certain premises for a term expiring in 1932. By a deed dated August 3, 1899, W. demised the premises to H. for a term of twenty-one years, "together with all . . . lights, easements, . . . and appurtenances to the said premises belonging." The deed contained a covenant by the lessee that he would not "object to any works to adjoining premises" that might be sanctioned by or on behalf of the lessor or the superior landlords or landlord. The lease also contained a covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment of the premises. A company had acquired an interest in certain property adjoining to the demised premises and forming part of the same estate, and were proposing to erect thereon some buildings which, as H. alleged, would obstruct the access of light hitherto enjoyed by his premises. He accordingly brought an action to restrain the company from building so as to obstruct his light. The proposed buildings had been approved by the surveyor of the estate. In these circumstances, W., who was interested in the company, brought an action against H. to restrain him from objecting to the buildings then being erected by the company, on the ground that his action constituted a breach of the covenant; and he then moved, under section 24, sub-section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1873, for a stay of proceedings in H.'s action:—Held, that the words "adjoining premises" did not extend to any buildings which were situated near enough to affect materially the demised premises by obstructing easements, but only to buildings which came into physical contact with the demised building; that "adjoining" meant adjoining in the sense in which it was used in the London Building Act, 1894, and could not be used in the sense of "neighbouring"; and that therefore H. was not precluded on that ground from objecting to the erection of the buildings. White v. Harrow, 86 L. T. 4; 50 W. R. 259—C.A.

Derogation from Grant in Lease—Light—Trespass—Architect's Authority—Party-wall—External Wall—Injunction.—The defendants demised a plot of ground in London to the plaintiffs, agreeing to clear it of certain old buildings for the erection of a warehouse proposed by the plaintiffs. The defendants left the roof timbers and stanchions of a shed situate upon adjoining land which belonged to them projecting by some inches over one boundary of the demised premises. By leave of the plaintiffs' architect, but without the plaintiffs' knowledge or authority, these projections were built into the new wall of the warehouse, which was erected entirely within the land demised. It appeared that this converted the wall into a party-wall within the meaning of the London Building Act, 1894, with the consequence that two of the warehouse windows would have to be blocked up:—Held, that, on the assumption that the windows would have to be blocked up, the defendants had acted in derogation of their own grant, and that, the architect having acted outside the scope of his authority, they had committed a trespass upon the plaintiffs' property, which must be restrained by injunction. Betts, Lim. v. Pickfords, Lim., 75 L. J. Ch. 483; [1906] 2 Ch. 87; 94 L. T. 363; 54 W. R. 476; 22 T. L. R. 315—Kekewich, J.

Lease of Coal—Prior Lease of Fireclay—Damage by Working.—In 1896 the proprietor of lands containing both fireclay and coal let for thirty-one years from 1893 the whole fireclay therein to lessees without reserving a right to work the coal. At the date of that lease, and within the knowledge of the lessees, part of the coal was being worked by the proprietor's tenants. Prior to 1902 the proprietor re-acquired the right to the coal, and in that year granted to other persons a lease of all the workable seams of coal, limestone, and fireclay so far as belonging to him in the said lands. Neither the fireclay nor the coal could be worked by the respective lessees without material injury to the other:—Held (LORD MONCREIFF dissenting), that the lessees of the fireclay were entitled to interdict the lessees of the coal from working the coal so as to interfere with or to make it impracticable to work the fireclay. Shawcross Fireclay Co. v. Larkhall Collieries, 5 F. 1131—Ct. of Sess.

Reversionary Term—Interesse Termini—Merger.—A reversionary lease only confers an interesse termini until after entry under the lease when the date fixed for the commencement of the term has arrived. It cannot, therefore, coalesce with an earlier subsisting term so as to cause a merger. Smith v. Day (6 L. J. Ex. 219; 2 M. & W. 624) and Dee d. Rawlings v. Walker (4 L. J. (o.s.) K.B. 93; 5 B. & C. 111) followed. Ib.

Vesting of Property in Underlessee—Costs of Enquiry as to New Rent.—Where a lease became forfeited by virtue of a proviso contained therein, and the Court, acting under section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, made an order vesting the property in the underlessee, the underlessee was ordered to pay the costs of the enquiry that was necessary to determine the new rent. Ewart v. Fryer, 86 L. T. 676—Joyce, J.

(b) Statute of Frauds.

Agreement for Renewed Lease—Part Performance—Payment of Increased Rent—Specific Performance.—Where a tenant in possession agrees verbally with his landlord for a further tenancy at an increased rent and remains in possession and pays the increased rent, this is a sufficient part performance of the contract to prevent the application of the Statute of Frauds in an action for specific performance. So held on the authority of Nunn v. Fabian (35 L. J. Ch. 140; L. R. 1 Ch. 35). Miller and Aldworth v. Sharp, 63 L. J. Ch. 322; [1899] 1 Ch. 622; 80 L. T. 77; 47 W. R. 268—Byrne, J.

(c) Reservations.

Shooting Rights—Assigns—Licence to Stranger.—The plaintiff was grantee of lands under a fee-farm grant, by which "free liberty" was reserved to the grantor, "his heirs and assigns, and his and their attendants, gamekeepers and servants, to hunt, fowl, fish, hawk, and set" in the demised premises:—Held, that this did not authorise the grantor or his assignee to permit a stranger to shoot game on his own account in the absence of the grantor or the assignee. Reynolds v. Moore, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 641—Q.B. D.

(d) Option of Renewal.

Agreement for Three Years—Specific Performance.—Premises were let by agreement in writing, not under seal, for a term of three years commencing from a certain date, at a clear yearly rental of 80*l.* and 8*l.* yearly for the use of water, payable on the usual quarter days, "with the option of renewal":—Held, that the words "with the option of renewal" were sufficiently definite to enable the Court, at the instance of the tenant, to carry them out by a decree for specific performance for a renewed agreement for the same period, on the same terms, except as to renewal, as those contained in the agreement. Lewis v. Stephenson, 67 L. J. Q.B. 296; 78 L. T. 165—Bruce, J.

(e) Option to Buy Fee.

Perpetuity—Lease—Long Term—Covenant Running with Land.—S., the owner in fee of certain land, by lease dated July 6, 1867, demised it to W., his executors, administrators, and assigns, for ninety-nine years from June 24, 1866, at a yearly rent. The lease contained a provision that if the lessee, his heirs or assigns, should at any time during the term become desirous of purchasing, the fee-simple in the land demised at the rate of 500*l.* per acre, and such further sum for the timber thereon as should be ascertained by a fair valuation, upon the receipt of the purchase-money, the lessor, his heirs or assigns, would execute a conveyance of the premises with the timber thereon in favour of the lessee, his heirs and assigns. On July 14, 1869, S. demised another piece of land to W. for ninety-nine years from September 29, 1868, at a yearly rent. This lease also contained a provision giving the lessee an option to purchase the fee-simple in substantially the same form as in the former lease, except that the option to purchase was given to the lessee, "his executors administrators and assigns," and the price was to be 600*l.* per acre. The plaintiff was the assignee of the two leases, and he desired to exercise the option to purchase. The defendants were, as trustees of a settlement, the owners of the fee-simple subject to the leases:—Held, by WARRINGTON, J., that the options to purchase created an estate or interest in land, and were void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. Held, by the COURT OF APPEAL, that the provisions giving the option to purchase were concerned with something wholly outside the relations of landlord and tenant, and could not be said to run with the land under the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, and therefore could not be enforced by the plaintiff. Woodall v. Clifton, 74 L. J. Ch. 555; [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 93 L. T. 257; 54 W. R. 7; 21 T. L. R. 581—C.A.

A contract in a lease giving an option of purchase might be good, without regard to the provisions of the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, as binding the land in the hands of the heirs or assigns, provided it did not infringe the law as to perpetuities. It would not be the less a binding contract because it was contained in a lease. London and South-Western Railway v. Gomm (51 L. J. Ch. 530; 20 Ch. D. 562) applied by WARRINGTON, J. Ib.

—Charitable Purpose—Specific Performance—Damages.—A lease of land for thirty years to a public body for a charitable purpose contained a covenant giving the lessees an option to purchase the fee at any time during the term:—Held, that the covenant created an interest in land which infringed the rule against perpetuities, and could not be specifically enforced in equity. London and South-Western Railway v. Gomm (51 L. J. Ch. 530; 20 Ch. D. 562), Woodall v. Clifton (74 L. J. Ch. 555; [1905] 2 Ch. 257), Bowen, In re; Lloyd Phillips v. Davis (62 L. J. Ch. 681; [1893] 2 Ch. 491), and Stratheden and Campbell, In re; Alt v. Stratheden and Campbell (63 L. J. Ch. 872; [1894] 3 Ch. 265), applied. Worthing Corporation v. Heather, 75 L. J. Ch. 761; [1906] 2 Ch. 532; 95 L. T. 18; 4 L. G. R. 1179; 22 T. L. R. 750—Warrington, J.

But held, also, that, the covenant being valid in law, damages could be recovered for its breach. Collins v. Plummer (2 Vern. 635; 1 P. Wms. 104) followed. Sevis v. Bruton (2 Vern. 251) explained and distinguished. Ib.

Lease—Lessee and Assigns—Equitable Assignee of Lease.—An option to purchase the fee-simple given to a lessee or his assigns is not exercisable by an equitable assignee. Friary, Holroyd & Healey's Breweries v. Singleton, 63 L. J. Ch. 622; [1899] 2 Ch. 261; 81 L. T. 101; 47 W. R. 662—C.A.

4. AGRICULTURAL TENANCIES.

63 & 64 Vict. c. 50 is the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900.

Authority of Agent—Agreement that Tenant may Change Cultivation from that of Agricultural Land to Market Garden—Valuation on Determination of Tenancy—Claim "otherwise than in manner authorised by this Act."—The manager of an estate has, in the absence of any limitation of his authority, power to bind the landlord by an agreement with the tenant that the latter may be at liberty to change the cultivation of the estate from agricultural land to that of a market garden. Where, by such an agreement, made since the passing of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, it is provided that the tenant shall be allowed a market-garden valuation upon leaving the estate, the tenant is entitled at the termination of his tenancy to receive from the landlord under the agreement the amount of such valuation. Pearson and Tanson, In re, 68 L. J. Q.B. 878; [1899] 2 Q.B. 618; 81 L. T. 289; 48 W. R. 154; 63 J. P. 677—D.

Section 57 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, which prohibits a tenant from claiming compensation in respect of an improvement under the Act, otherwise than in manner authorised by the Act, only applies to a tenant claiming compensation under the Act, and not to a tenant who is claiming under an agreement outside the Act. Ib.

Market Garden—Fruit Trees—Agreement as to Compensation.—A fixed sum specified in a lease of market gardens as a compensation for the exercise by the lessor of a power reserved to him by the lease of resuming possession of any part of the land on giving six calendar months' notice to the lessee,—Held, by STIRLING, L.J., and FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J. (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., doubting, but not dissenting), upon the terms of the particular lease not to be payable in respect of fruit trees permanently set out on the land subsequently to January 1, 1896, when the Market Gardeners' Compensation Act, 1895, came into operation. Smith and Devonshire (Duke), In re, 22 T. L. R. 619—C.A.

Away-going Crop—Deductions under Lease—Deductions by Custom of the Country—Inconsistency.]—The following proviso was in a lease made between the landlord and the tenants: "Provided, lastly, that on the determination of his tenancy the tenant shall, in the event of his having duly performed the several stipulations and agreements hereinbefore contained and to be performed on his part, be entitled to have and take a following or away-going crop of corn not exceeding one-third of the arable land hereby demised, such crop to be taken from land summer fallowed or from which turnips or rape have been eaten, or from land sown in the regular course with seeds and depastured by sheep, and which said away-going crop shall be taken at a valuation to be ascertained by two disinterested persons, one to be named by the on-coming, the other by the off-going tenant or their umpire (in case they cannot agree), such umpire to be appointed by such valuers before proceeding upon such valuation, and the decision of such two arbitrators or of their umpire shall be final and binding on both parties. And it is further agreed that one-half of the value of such away-going crop shall be paid at Christmas next after the determination of this demise and the remaining half at Lady Day following; subject, nevertheless, to such deductions as the same may be liable to under any of the covenants and agreements hereinbefore contained on the part of the tenant, and which the landlord is hereby authorised to deduct accordingly, and also subject to such of the rents hereinbefore reserved as shall be due and owing, to the payment of which it shall be primarily liable, and for which rents the said landlord shall be entitled at any time to distrain the same away-going crop before or after severance as for rent in arrear." The covenants thereinbefore referred to were inserted for the benefit of the landlord as to cultivation and repairs to buildings, and gave him in certain cases a right of lien on the valuation of the away-going crop in respect of his claim for damages against the tenant for breaches of covenant committed by him. There were no stipulations, however, as to the mode of ascertaining the value of such crop:—Held, that there was nothing to prevent the application of the custom of the country, and that the tenants were entitled to the away-going crop and manurial value of the straw, but that the landlord was entitled to deductions for standage, rateable proportion of the rates and taxes, and cost of labour. Constable and Cranwick, In re, 80 L. T. 164—D.

Reference—Enforcing Award—Claims Outside Act—Agreement to Refer all Claims to Umpire Appointed under Act.]—An outgoing tenant of an agricultural holding gave notices to the landlord of his intention to claim compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, and the landlord gave counter-notices of his intention to claim for breaches of covenant. Referees and an umpire having been appointed under the Act, it appeared that, while some of the claims were within the Act, others were outside it, and it was thereupon agreed between the landlord and tenant that all matters in difference between them, as set out in the various claims and counterclaims, should be referred for decision to the referees and umpire already appointed under the Act. The umpire having awarded that there was a balance due from the tenant to the landlord,—Held, that the agreement constituted a submission to arbitration outside the Act, and that nothing in the Act prevented the landlord from being entitled to leave under section 12 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to enforce the award in the same manner as a judgment to the same effect. Lloyd and Tooth, In re, 68 L. J. Q.B. 376; [1899] 1 Q.B. 559; 80 L. T. 394—C.A.

Agricultural Holdings Act—Statutory Arbitration—Agreement in Writing.]—A clause in an agricultural lease referring to two arbitrators certain questions of compensation under the lease is not an agreement in writing in the sense of section 1 of the Second Schedule, Part II. of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot, 7 F. 1115—Ct. of Sess.

An agricultural lease gave the tenant right on the termination of the lease to compensation for manure and feeding-stuffs purchased by the tenant and applied to the lands, the amount of compensation to be determined by arbitration in the manner and according to the rules set forth in the lease. On the termination of the lease the tenant lodged a claim in an arbitration under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, in which he claimed, inter alia, compensation for manure and feeding-stuffs:—Held, that the claim, in so far as it was for compensation for manure and feeding-stuffs, was incompetent, in respect that such compensation fell to be determined by arbitration under the lease. Ib.

Retrospective Effect of Statute.]—The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, gives tenants right to compensation, inter alia, for "laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years prior to the determination of the tenancy":—Held, that a tenant, whose tenancy terminated less than two years from the date of the Act, was entitled to compensation under this enactment. Ib.

Dispensing with Notice as to Terms of Compensation.]—An agreement under section 4 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, to dispense with written notice need not be in writing. Ib.

Reservation—Landlord's Right to Sell Land for "Building sites"—Sale of Site for Smallpox Hospital.]—A reservation to the landlord, in an agreement under which land is let for farming purposes, of a right to sell portions of the land for "building sites" is confined to the sale of the land for the erection of dwelling-houses and the like, and does not extend to the sale to a local authority of a site for a smallpox hospital. English v. Tynemouth Corporation, 67 J. P. 239; 1 L. G. R. 177—D.

5. RENT.

Apportionment of Rent—Payment in Advance—Re-entry for Breach of Covenant.]—Section 2 of the Apportionment Act, 1870, does not apply to a sum duly paid in pursuance of the terms of a contract before the happening of the incident which is said to necessitate or require the apportmentment. Ellis v. Rowbotham, 69 L. J. Q.B. 379; [1900] 1 Q.B. 740; 82 L. T. 191; 48 W. R. 428—C.A.

An agreement for the letting of a house contained a covenant by the tenant to pay the rent by instalments in advance, and also gave the landlord the right to re-enter for breach of covenant without prejudice to other remedies he might have. The tenant having made default in the payment of an instalment of rent, the landlord re-entered and also sued the tenant for the amount of the instalment:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to recover the whole amount of the instalment, and that the Apportionment Act, 1870, had not the effect of limiting the liability of the tenant to an apportioned part of the rent to the date of the re-entry. Ib.

— Assignment.—P. took an assignment by way of mortgage from O.N. of lands held by the latter as tenant to G. The assignment was made between the two half-yearly terms on which rent was payable. G. claimed to recover from P. the full amount of the half-year's rent falling due upon the next usual rent-day after the assignment:—Held (KENNY, J., dissenting), that the Apportionment Act, 1870, applies to the liability to pay as well as the right to receive, and that G. was entitled to recover from P. only an apportioned part of the rent, computed de die in diem from the date of the assignment to the usual rent-day. Glass v. Patterson, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 660—K.B. D. And see Ellis v. Rowbotham, 80 L. T. 328.

Lease to Company—Surety for Payment of Rent During Term—Dissolution of Company—Liability of Surety.—The plaintiffs granted a lease for a certain term of certain land to a company incorporated under the Companies Acts, the defendants being sureties for the payment of the rent, which was payable monthly. The lease provided that "the lessees do and each of the sureties doth for himself covenant that the lessees and sureties, or some or one of them, will during the said term pay the said rent on the dates and in the manner hereinbefore mentioned." During the term the company was wound up and finally dissolved under section 143 of the Companies Act, 1862, and the rent was paid down to the date of the dissolution. The plaintiffs thereupon sued the defendants as sureties for the rent due for the following month:—Held, that the term came to an end when the company was dissolved, and that therefore the defendants, who were sureties for the payment of the rent during the term, were not liable. Hastings Corporation v. Letton, 97 L. T. 582; 23 T. L. R. 456; 77 L. J. K.B. 149; [1908] 1 K.B. 378—D.

Salvage Payment by Sub-tenant—Principle of Contribution.—Lands held for ever subject to a fee-farm rent were sold in lots. Six lots were made primarily liable for the head rent in certain proportions, and were bound to indemnify the remaining lots accordingly. Afterwards the head rent fell into arrear, owing to the default of the owners of some of the indemnifying lots to pay their proportion, and an ejectment for non-payment of rent was brought by the head landlord. The plaintiff, who was a sub-tenant of part of one of the indemnified lots, paid the rent and costs in order to save the lands from eviction, and claimed contribution from the owners of the several lots:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to contribution on the principle of salvage, and that the owners of the lots should contribute according to the value of the lots at the date when the salvage payment was made. Allison v. Jenkins, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 341—M.R.

Tithe-rentcharge—Agreement by Tenant, to Pay—Validity.—By an agreement of tenancy a farm was let to a tenant at a yearly rent of 235*l.*, "and also by way of further rent so much as the landlord shall pay for tithe-rentcharge on the said premises." The tenant agreed to pay the rent reserved and also the tithe-rentcharge:—Held, that the agreement to pay the further rent was void by virtue of section 1 of the Tithe Act, 1891. Davies v. Fitton (2 Dr. & W. 225) followed. Ludlow (Baron) v. Pike, 73 L. J. K.B. 274; [1904] 1 K.B. 531; 90 L. T. 453; 52 W. R. 475; 68 J. P. 243; 20 T. L. R. 276—Channell, J.

6. DISTRESS.

(a) Generally.

Unlawful Entry—Trespass ab Initio—Second Distress for Same Rent—Replevin.—A landlord issued a distress warrant for rent in arrear. The bailiff to whom the warrant was handed effected an unlawful entry upon the demised premises, and having seized goods of the plaintiff remained in possession of them for some days. He then left the premises, and on returning was refused admission. The landlord then issued a second distress for the same rent under which the same goods were seized, whereupon the plaintiff brought an action of replevin against him:—Held, that the first entry and seizure were a trespass ab initio and void as a distress, and that the second entry and seizure were justified, as the defendant had not lost his right to distrain. Attack v. Bramwell (32 L. J. Q.B. 416; 3 B. & S. 520) followed. Grinnell v. Welch, 75 L. J. K.B. 657; [1906] 2 K.B. 555; 95 L. T. 238; 54 W. R. 581; 22 T. L. R. 688—C.A.

Sub-lease—Assignment.—A sub-lease for a period co-extensive with, or longer than, the sub-lessor's term operates as an assignment, and the sub-lessor cannot distrain for rent in arrear. Parmenter v. Webber (8 Taunt. 593; 2 Moore, 656) and Preece v. Corrie (6 L. J. (o.s.) C.P. 205; 5 Bing. 24) followed. Lewis v. Baker (No. 1), 74 L. J. Ch. 39; [1905] 1 Ch. 46; 91 L. T. 744; 21 T. L. R. 17—Swinfen Eady, J.

Neither section 5 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730, nor section 44 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, apply so as to give a right of distress where the original right has been lost by reason of the lessor of a term at a rent parting with the whole of his interest. Ib.

Levy by Uncertificated Bailiff—Goods of Third Person on Demised Premises.]—Section 7 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, which provides that no person other than a certificated bailiff shall levy a distress for rent, applies not only as to distresses between landlords and tenants, but also as to those between landlords and third persons whose goods may be on the demised premises. Perring v. Emerson, 75 L. J. K.B. 12; [1906] 1 K.B. 1; 93 L. T. 748; 54 W. R. 47; 22 T. L. R. 14—D.

Exemption from Distress—Machine on Hire-purchase Agreement—Estoppel—Substitution of Complainant in Summons.]—A sewing machine in the possession of a tenant under a hire-purchase agreement, and used by the tenant's wife to support the family, is exempt from distress, under section 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, as a tool and implement of the trade of such tenant. Upon a distraint being made upon such a sewing machine, and a man being put in possession, a letter was written to the landlord: "I hereby request you to remove the sewing machine and other goods you have distrained on my premises."—Held, that this did not stop the respondent from raising the question whether the machine could be distrained upon at all. Semble, that although the husband was the tenant and the hirer, the proceeding could be maintained by the wife, but that in any case the proceedings could be put right, either by having fresh proceedings or substituting the husband for the wife as complainant. Masters v. Fraser, 85 L. T. 611; 66 J. P. 100—D.

— Goods Belonging to Crown—Privilege from Distress.]—Crown property, even though the Crown be not tenant, is privileged from distress for rent on premises demised to a subject. Secretary of State for War v. Wynne, 75 L. J. K.B. 25; [1905] 2 K.B. 845; 93 L. T. 797; 54 W. R. 235; 22 T. L. R. 8—D.

— Implement of Trade—Cab—Only Chattel on Premises Worth More than Five Pounds.]—A four-wheeled cab used by a cab-driver for the purposes of his trade is within the protection from distress for rent afforded to a tenant by section 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (incorporating the words of section 147 of the County Courts Act, 1888), in respect of the "tools and implements of his trade" to the value of 5*l.* Lavell v. Ritchings, 75 L. J. K.B. 287; [1906] 1 K.B. 480; 94 L. T. 515; 54 W. R. 394; 22 T. L. R. 316—D.

An implement of trade whose value exceeds 5*l.* is within the exemption from distress for rent given by section 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, to the tools and implements of the tenant's trade "to the value of five pounds," provided that it is the only chattel upon the premises. Ib.

— Public Trade—Things Delivered to be Managed in the Way of His Trade.]—The plaintiff was the sub-lessee of certain premises upon which he carried on a club to which artists, who were members, sent pictures for exhibition.

Members and friends, introduced by them, a one could use the club, and the plaintiff received a commission upon all pictures sold. By the rules of the club the entire management of the pictures and their exhibition was vested in the picture committee. Certain pictures which were being exhibited were distrained upon by the superior landlord for rent due from his lessee. The plaintiff and the artists who owned the pictures brought an action claiming an injunction to restrain the lessor from proceeding with the distress. NEVILLE, J., held that the plaintiff did not carry on a public trade so as to render the pictures privileged from distress:—Held, on appeal, affirming the decision, that the pictures were not delivered to the plaintiff to be managed in the way of his trade, so as to be privileged from distress, his trade being that of a club proprietor, and the committee having the management of the pictures. Challoner v. Robinson, 77 L. J. Ch. 72; [1908] 1 Ch. 49; 24 T. L. R. 38; 71 J. P. 585—C.A.

— Goods Protected from Seizure in Execution up to 5*l.*—"Bedding."]—Section 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, exempts from distress for rent goods to the value of 5*l.*, protected from seizure in execution by section 147 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and the word "bedding" in the latter section includes "bedstead." Davis v. Harris, 69 L. J. Q.B. 282; [1900] 1 Q.B. 729; 81 L. T. 780; 48 W. R. 445; 64 J. P. 186—D.

— Chattel Belonging to Third Person Annexed to Soil—Hire-purchase Agreement—Engine on Concrete Bed in Soil Secured by Screws to Bolts Sunk in Concrete—Fixture.]—A gas engine laid on a raised bed of concrete and screwed down on to bolts sunk in the concrete and fastened into the ground is a fixture, and is therefore not distrainable by the landlord for rent. Hobson v. Gorringe (66 L. J. Ch. 114; [1897] 1 Ch. 182) and Reynolds v. Ashby & Son (72 L. J. K.B. 51; [1903] 1 K.B. 87) followed. Hellawell v. Eastwood (20 L. J. Ex. 154; 6 Ex. 295) not followed. Crossley v. Lee, 77 L. J. K.B. 199; [1908] 1 K.B. 86; 97 L. T. 850—D.

Removal of Chattels by Execution Creditor without Regarding Landlord's Claim for Rent—Tort—Measure of Damages.]—Where cattle, exceeding in value one year's rent, were seized in execution by a special bailiff, who, after notice of a claim for rent by the landlord, removed them from the lands without paying a year's rent, and subsequently, after five or six days, returned them to the lands, on the amount of the claim being satisfied:—Held, that the landlord was entitled to damages, as in an action of tort, which were measured at the amount of the year's rent, of which he had been deprived. Wren v. Stokes, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 167—C.A.

Illegal Distress—Damages—Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Receiver.]—Where a mortgagee of a leasehold house has appointed a receiver of the rents and profits under section 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, a distress for arrears of rent levied by the mortgagor, without any authority from the receiver, is illegal. Woolston v. Ross, 69 L. J. Ch. 363; [1900] 1 Ch. 788; 82 L. T. 21; 48 W. R. 556; 64 J. P. 264—Cozens-Hardy, J.

So long as the receivership is in force, and the notice to the tenant of the appointment has not been withdrawn, no valid distress can be levied except by the receiver, or some person authorised by him. Ib.

Contract for Percentage in Excess of Statutory Charges—Order of Justices for Treble Amount.]—A bailiff employed to make a distress for rent which did not exceed 20l. obtained the signature of the landlord to a warrant containing a clause authorising him to deduct 5 per cent. as commission over and above the statutory costs allowed on the amount recovered. The Justices dismissed a summons under the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, for treble the amount so taken:—Held (DARLING, J., dissenting), that the agreement was not made unlawful by section 1 of the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, and that therefore the Justices were not bound to make the order under section 2 of the Act. Robson v. Biggar, 76 L. J. K.B. 248; [1907] 1 K.B. 690; 96 L. T. 271; 71 J. P. 164; 23 T. L. R. 276—D.

Impounding Distress—Actual Possession of Goods—Pound Breach.]—It is not necessary that a landlord who has impounded distrained goods upon the premises under section 10 of the Distress for Rent Act, 1737, should retain actual possession of them. Jones v. Beirnsstein, 69 L. J. Q.B. 1; [1900] 1 Q.B. 100; 81 L. T. 553; 48 W. R. 232—C.A.

Agreement to take over Stock at Valuation in Lieu of Rent.]—A landlord of a farm cannot—by entering into an agreement with his tenant after bankruptcy of the latter, not to levy a distress on the terms of taking over the dead stock at a valuation, although such agreement is beneficial to the estate—obtain a larger amount in respect of arrears of rent due to him than the six months' rent allowed him by the conjoint effect of section 42 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, and section 28 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890. In re Griffith; ex parte Official Receiver, 66 L. J. Q.B. 763—D.

Pound Breach—Treble Damages.]—An action for treble damages for pound breach or rescous of goods distrained for rent, under section 4 of 2 Will. & M. c. 5, is maintainable by the landlord without proof of any special damage suffered by him. Kemp v. Christmas, 79 L. T. 233—C.A.

Power of Sale—Auction—Landlord Buying in.] A landlord cannot himself become the purchaser of goods sold by him under a distress. Dictum of BLACKBURN, J., in King v. England (33 L. J. Q.B. 145; 4 B. & S. 782) followed. Moore, Nettlefold & Co. v. Singer Manufacturing Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 457; [1904] 1 K.B. 820; 90 L. T. 469; 52 W. R. 385; 63 J. P. 369; 20 T. L. R. 366—C.A.

Patented Chattel—Sale to Purchaser with Notice of Restrictions on User.]—The purchaser of a patented article at a sale of a distress for rent does not acquire the right to use the article, in breach of a contract entered into by the tenant with the patentee restricting the right to use the article, if at the time of purchase he has notice of the contract. British Mutoscope and Biograph Co. v. Homer, 70 L. J. Ch. 279; [1901] 1 Ch. 671; 84 L. T. 26; 49 W. R. 277—Farwell, J.

(b) Lodgers' Goods.

Illegal Distress—Liability of Bailiff.]—Under section 2 of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, an action for illegal distress lies against a bailiff who levies or proceeds with a distress upon the goods of a lodger after being served with the declaration and inventory mentioned in section 1 of the Act, and after the lodger has paid or tendered to the superior landlord or his bailiff the rent, if any, due from him to his immediate landlord, or so much thereof as is sufficient to discharge the claim of the superior landlord. (COLLINS, M.R., dissenting.) Towce v. Dorling, 75 L. J. K.B. 1019; [1906] 2 K.B. 772; 95 L. T. 243; 22 T. L. R. 779—C.A.

—Bailiff Employed by Landlord—Liability to Action for Illegal Distress.]—An action will lie under section 2 of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, against a bailiff who, being employed by a landlord to distrain, commits an illegal distress. Lowe v. Dorling, 74 L. J. K.B. 794; [1905] 2 K.B. 501; 93 L. T. 398; 54 W. R. 28; 21 T. L. R. 616—D.

—Declaration and Inventory—"Inventory subscribed by the lodger."—An inventory is sufficiently subscribed by a lodger for the purposes of sections 1 and 2 of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, if it is referred to in the declaration to which it is annexed and the declaration is signed by the lodger. Godlington v. Fulham and Hampstead Property Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 242; [1905] 1 K.B. 431; 92 L. T. 362; 21 T. L. R. 223—D.

7. SURRENDER.

Surrender by Operation of Law—Possession of Surrendered Lease.]—A lessee, notwithstanding a surrender of his term by operation of law, retains an interest in the lease, and on the granting of a new lease to him by the lessor is entitled to retain the old lease. Knight v. Williams, 70 L. J. Ch. 92; [1901] 1 Ch. 256; 83 L. T. 730; 49 W. R. 427—Coxens-Hardy, J.

The surrender of an old lease, implied from the acceptance of a new lease, is subject to an implied condition that the new lease is valid. Ib.

Power to Surrender on Giving Three Months' Notice—Lunar or Calendar Months.]—By an agreement dated October 2, 1902, the defendant agreed to let to the plaintiff certain premises for five hundred years from November 1, 1902, at the yearly rent of 100l. payable half-yearly in advance on May 1 and November 1 in each year, with a proviso that the plaintiff should be at liberty to surrender the premises at the end of the first two years on giving three months' notice beforehand of his intention to do so. On July 30 the plaintiff sent to the defendant by registered post a notice of his intention to surrender on November 1, 1904. The letter was not delivered to the defendant till August 1:—Held, that whether the word "months" was to be read as calendar or as lunar months, a notice served on August 1, 1904, of intention to surrender on November 1 following was good. Wilkins v. M'Ginity, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 660—C.A.

8. RE-ENTRY AND FORFEITURE.

(a) Generally.

Writ for Recovery of Possession—Inconsistent Claims—Mining Lease.—To avoid a lease under a proviso that upon breach of covenant by the lessee the lessor may "re-enter and thereupon the lease shall determine," the lessor must either actually re-enter or issue a writ for recovery of possession equivalent in law to re-entry. Jones v. Carter (15 M. & W. 718) and dictum of BAYLEY, C.; in Fenn v. Smart (12 East, 444, 448) followed. Moore v. Ullocoats Mining Co., 77 L. J. Ch. 282; [1908] 1 Ch. 575; 97 L. T. 845—Warrington, J.

In order that a writ for recovery of possession may be equivalent in law to re-entry it must be an unequivocal demand for possession. Principle of Evans v. Davis (48 L. J. Ch. 228; 10 Ch. D. 747) followed. Ib.

A writ claiming possession simpliciter and any further relief which is incident to a claim for possession is equivalent to re-entry; but, where a lessor claims in his writ not only recovery of possession, but also an injunction to restrain breach of covenants in the lease and an order for inspection of the premises, the claims are inconsistent, and accordingly the writ does not constitute an unequivocal demand for possession, and is not equivalent to re-entry. Ib.

A notice by the lessor of his intention to re-enter, and demanding possession, is not entry or equivalent to entry, and is not sufficient to determine the lease. Ib.

Peaceable Re-entry—Statutory Notice.—The giving of the statutory notice provided for by section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is a necessary preliminary to peaceable re-entry on the part of a lessor as well as to re-entry by process of the Court. Riggs, In re; Trustee, ex parte, 70 L. J. K.B. 541; [1901] 2 K.B. 16; 84 L. T. 428; 49 W. R. 624; 8 Manson, 233—Wright, J.

Notice—Action for a Declaration of Forfeiture.—An action for declaration of forfeiture of a lease for breach of a covenant to which section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, applies, though not intended to be followed by a re-entry, will not lie unless the notice required by sub-section 1 of that section has first been served. Wilson v. Rosenthal, 22 T. L. R. 233—Sutton, J.

Notice to Remedy Breach—Validity of Notice.—A notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, requiring satisfaction from a lessee for breach of covenant, may contain allegations of several breaches, though some only shall prove to be actual breaches; a separate notice for each alleged breach is not necessary. Horsey Estate v. Steiger (68 L. J. Q.B. 743; [1899] 2 Q.B. 79) and Skinner's Co. v. Knight (60 L. J. Q.B. 629; [1891] 2 Q.B. 542) distinguished. Lock v. Pearce (62 L. J. Ch. 582; [1893] 2 Ch. 271) followed. Pannell v. City of London Brewery, 69 L. J. Ch. 244; [1900] 1 Ch. 496; 82 L. T. 53; 48 W. R. 264—Buckley, J. And see Gentle v. Faulkner and Jacob v. Down, supra.

Sufficiency.—A notice under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 14, to the lessee, "that you have not kept the said premises well and sufficiently repaired, and the party and other walls thereof," is an insufficient notice of the particular breach of a covenant to repair. Fletcher v. Nokes (66 L. J. Ch. 177; [1897] 1 Ch. 271) followed. Serle, In re; Gregory v. Serle, 67 L. J. Ch. 344; [1893] 1 Ch. 652; 78 L. T. 384; 46 W. R. 440—Kekewich, J.

A notice specifying particular breaches of distinct covenants will not entitle the lessor to maintain an action to enforce a right of re-entry or forfeiture if it is insufficient as to the alleged breach of any one covenant. Ib.

Action for Possession on Breach of Covenant to Repair—Assignee of Equity of Redemption—"Assign" of Lessor—Notice Specifying Breach.—The assignee of the equity of redemption, subject to two mortgages, of house property leased for eighty-one years in 1819 (being in receipt of the rents and profits), is, within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, an "assign" of the lessor, and may, by the operation of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 5, proceed, as of his own right, under the power of re-entry contained in the lease, to recover possession by action for forfeiture upon breach, on the part of the tenants, of the covenant to repair. Matthews v. Usher, 68 L. J. Q.B. 988; 81 L. T. 542—Ridley, J.

Notice under section 14, sub-section 1 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, need not specify the repairs required in each particular house, but is sufficient if it give in copious detail every repair that may be required according to the condition of each house. The tenant must, on knowing what sort of work is required to be done, do it where it is wanted, and distinguish the work he is legally required to do from that which does not fall upon him according to law. Ib.

Continuing Breach—Notice of Breach Complaind of.—A lease under which rent was payable quarterly on the usual quarter days contained a covenant by the tenant to keep the demised premises in repair, and gave the landlord a right of re-entry for breach of covenant. The premises being out of repair, the landlord on September 22, 1896, served a notice upon the tenant under section 14, sub-section 1 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, requiring him to execute certain specified repairs within three months. The repairs were not executed, and on January 14, 1897, the physical condition of the premises being then the same as on September 22, 1896, the landlord commenced an action by which he claimed possession of the premises and rent for the quarter ending December 25, 1896:—Held, that the action was maintainable, for the breach of covenant being a continuing one, the landlord by claiming rent up to December 25, 1896, did not preclude himself from insisting upon his right of re-entry in respect of the continuing breach subsequent to that date, and, the physical condition of the premises being the same, the notice of September 22, 1896, was a good notice of the breach complained of within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 1 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. Penton v. Barnett, 67 L. J. Q.B. 11; [1898] 1 Q.B. 276; 77 L. T. 645; 46 W. R. 33—C.A.

Covenant to Use Land for Agricultural Purposes Only—Attempted Sale in Plots—Breach—Forfeiture.—Where land has been leased for agricultural purposes only and not for subdivision in building lots, it being provided that on breach of such conditions the lessor shall have the right to resume possession, if the lessees advertise the sale of the land in a number of lots which are to be intersected by streets, and the land is shown in plans annexed to such advertisements as so laid out, a forfeiture is incurred and the lessor is entitled to resume possession; forfeiture, not interdict, being the appropriate remedy where actual steps have been taken in breach of the terms of the lease. Short v. Turffontein Estates, 74 L. J. P.O. 148; [1905] A.C. 584; 93 L. T. 57—P.C.

Covenants "to be performed" by Lessee—Default in "performance"—Negative Covenant—Not to Use Premises for Particular Business without Licence—Licence to Predecessor in Title—Breach.—A lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to use the premises for any business except that of an outfitter without the licence in writing of the lessor. It also contained a proviso for re-entry in case the lessee should "make default in the performance of any of the covenants upon his part to be performed." The original lessor gave to the original lessee licence in writing to use the premises for a business other than that of an outfitter. The successor in title of the original lessee used the premises otherwise than for the business of an outfitter. In an action of ejectment by the successor in title of the original lessor, Held, that the proviso for re-entry applied only to breaches of positive and not of negative covenants. Semble, also, that there was no breach of covenant. Harman v. Ainslie, 72 L. J. K.B. 533; [1903] 2 K.B. 241; 88 L. T. 770—Wright, J.

"Act or thing whereby the premises become vested in another"—Sub-letting.—A lease of a public-house for twenty-seven years contained a proviso for re-entry "if the lessees or their assigns should do or suffer any other act, matter, or thing whereby or by reason or means whereof the demised premises, or any part thereof, should either directly, or by operation of law, or otherwise howsoever indirectly become or be rendered liable to become vested, either for the whole or any part of the term thereby created, in any person other than the lessees." The lessees sub-let to a tenant from year to year:—Held, that the lessees had done an act whereby the demised premises became vested for part of the term in the sub-tenant, within the meaning of the proviso, and that a forfeiture had been incurred. Dymock v. Showell's Brewery Co., 79 L. T. 329—C.A.

Limited Company—Liquidation of Solvent Company for Purposes of Reconstruction—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 2 (xv.).—The voluntary liquidation of a company, although the company be solvent and the liquidation be only for the purpose of amalgamation with other companies and of reconstruction, operates as a forfeiture of a lease under a proviso giving a right of re-entry to the lessors on liquidation, voluntary or compulsory. Such a liquidation is within the words of section 2 (xv.) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, under which "Bankruptcy includes liquidation by arrangement, and any other act or proceeding in law having... effects or results similar to those of bankruptcy." Fryer v. Ewart, 71 L. J. Ch. 433; [1902] A.C. 187; 86 L. T. 242; 9 Manson, 281—H.L. (E.)

The results of bankruptcy and winding-up compared. Id.

Condition for Re-entry on Liquidation—Condition Running with the Land—Notice to Remedy Breaches of Covenant—Necessity for Sufficiency of Notice—Covenant not to Underlet—Agreement to Purchase—Letting into Possession.—A plot of land was demised for a term of years to certain persons, one of whom was a limited company. By the lease the lessees for themselves and their assigns, and each of them for himself and itself respectively and his and its respective assigns, covenanted to repair all buildings to be erected on the land, and not to assign or underlet the premises without the consent of the lessors. The lease contained a proviso that if the lessees failed or neglected to perform or observe any of the covenants, or "if the lessees shall become bankrupt or enter into liquidation for the benefit of or compound with his creditors, or being a company shall enter into liquidation whether compulsory or voluntary," the lessors might re-enter. The lessors conveyed their interest in the premises to the plaintiffs, and the lessees with the consent of the plaintiffs assigned the residue of the term to the defendants, one of whom was a limited company. Subsequently, in January, 1897, the defendant company passed a resolution for a voluntary winding-up, not because of insolvency, but for the purpose of reconstruction and increasing the capital. A new company was formed, and the defendant company agreed to sell to the new company all their interest in the leasehold premises for the residue of the term. No assignment was executed, but the new company were let into possession. On November 2, 1897, the plaintiffs served notice on the defendants under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, stating that the defendant company had entered into liquidation, and that the defendants had broken the covenant to repair, and that if the defendants failed to remedy the breaches specified within a reasonable time the plaintiffs would re-enter. Two days afterwards the plaintiffs brought an action to recover possession:—Held, that the proviso for re-entry in the lease meant that if either the individual lessee became bankrupt or the company lessee entered into liquidation the lessors might re-enter; that the right of re-entry accrued upon the liquidation of the company for any cause whatever, and not merely in consequence of insolvency; and that the condition for re-entry in the event of the company entering into liquidation ran with the land, and bound the assignees of the lessees. Horsley Estate v. Steiger, 68 L. J. Q.B. 743; [1899] 2 Q.B. 79; 80 L. T. 857; 47 W. R. 644—C.A.

Held, also, that the liquidation of the company was equivalent to bankruptcy within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and that the effect of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, was to take the case of forfeiture for bankruptcy or liquidation for one year from the date of the bankruptcy or liquidation out of the cases in which notice, required by section 14, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1881 before enforcing the forfeiture, was not necessary; that, therefore, notice was necessary, and that the notice was bad. Ib.

Held, further, that as the new company had been let into possession under an agreement to purchase, there was not an underletting of the premises within the meaning of the covenant not to underlet. Ib.

(b) Relief.

Relief upon Terms.—Under section 14, sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881; the Court can only grant relief from the consequences of past forfeiture, and cannot do anything to condone a continuing breach of covenant in the future. Batson v. London School Board, 69 J. P. 9—Channell, J.

For Non-payment of Rent—Right of Under-lessee to Relief.—Section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, is a general section, and not merely an amendment of section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and under it the Court has power to grant relief to an under-lessee in case of the forfeiture of the superior lease for non-payment of rent. Gray v. Bonsall, 73 L. J. K.B. 515; [1904] 1 K.B. 601; 90 L. T. 404; 52 W. R. 387; 20 T. L. R. 335—C.A.

"Lessor, his heirs and assigns"—Mortgage of Reversion—Mortgagor in Possession.—The Judicature Act, 1873, does not confer on a mortgagor entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits of land on lease at the date of the mortgage the rights of a legal assignee of the reversion, so as to entitle him in his own right to recover possession of the land on a forfeiture for breach of covenant in the lease. Matthews v. Usher, 69 L. J. Q.B. 856; [1900] 2 Q.B. 535; 88 L. T. 353; 49 W. R. 40—C.A.

Under-lessees—Parties Necessary to Application—Original Lessee—Original Assignee.—Although as a general rule upon an application by under-lessees for relief against forfeiture of the head-lease the Court will require the original lessee to be made a party to the proceedings, yet this will be dispensed with where good reason is shewn for not making him a party. Where, therefore, in an action by mortgagees by sub-demise of an under-lease for relief against forfeiture of the lease for non-payment of rent it appeared that the original lessee became bankrupt in 1877, that his trustee assigned the lease, and that the assignee subsequently disappeared and had not been heard of for twenty-six years, the Court dispensed with the necessity of making either the original lessee or assignee parties to the action. Hare v. Elms (62 L. J. Q.B. 187; [1893] 1 Q.B. 604) discussed. Humphreys v. Morten, 74 L. J. Ch. 370; [1905] 1 Ch. 739; 92 L. T. 834; 53 W. R. 552—Swinfen Eady, J.

Costs.—Where in such an action the right of the applicants to relief is contested by the lessor, the order as to costs made in Howard v.

Fanshawe (64 L. J. Ch. 666; [1895] 2 Ch. 531) should be followed—namely, that the applicants must pay the costs of obtaining the relief except so far as they have been increased by the resistance to the claim by the lessor. Newbolt v. Bingham (72 L. T. 852) distinguished. Ib.

Under-lease—Forfeiture of Lease—Relief to Under-lessee—Terms.—By a lease dated June 22, 1896, the plaintiff company demised unto S. T. and C. T. the ground floor and basements of No. 21 R. Approach for a term of twenty-one years at a rent of 300*l.* for the first three years, and thereafter at a rent of 350*l.* By an under-lease dated December 31, 1896, S. T. and C. T. demised unto T. J. C. a part of the ground floor of No. 21 R. Approach for the same term of twenty-one years, except the three last days thereof, at a rent of 125*l.* Forfeiture of the lease of June 22, 1896, having occurred by reason of the non-payment of rent, on September 9, 1902, the plaintiff company instituted an action to recover possession of the premises demised by them to S. T. and C. T. and for 226*l.*, being arrears of rent up to June 24, 1902, and for further proportionate rent from June 24, 1902, until payment. The action was brought against all persons then interested in the premises, and on January 7 and January 15, 1903, judgment was recovered against all the defendants except T. S. C. T. S. C., by his defence and counterclaim delivered January 13, 1903, denied that under the lease of June 22, 1896, any cause of forfeiture had arisen, and claimed an order under section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, vesting in him the premises comprised in the underlease of December 31, 1896, for the whole of the term thereby created. It was admitted by T. S. C. at the trial that cause of forfeiture had in fact arisen under the lease of June 22, 1896. The Court granted the order as claimed by T. S. C., but upon the terms that he should pay all arrears of rent due from S. T. and C. T. to the plaintiff company down to January 15, 1903, and the costs of the present proceedings, and that as from January 15, 1903, he should pay a fair rent to be ascertained. London Bridge Buildings Co. v. Thomson, 89 L. T. 50—Joyce, J.

Assignment of Lessee's Estate, except Leaseholds, for Benefit of Creditors—Declaration of Trust as to Leaseholds—Right of Re-entry on Lessee Executing Assignment for Benefit of Creditors—Notice of Breach—Covenant against "disposing of the land leased"—Sufficiency of Notice—Service on Trustee.—A lessee who had covenanted in his lease that he would not assign the land leased without the consent of the lessor, and that upon breach of any of his covenants, or if he should execute an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, the lessor should have the right to re-enter, executed a deed of assignment of all his estate, except leaseholds, to a trustee who sub-let the premises to a tenant who became the holder of the licence, for a term expiring before the original lease. The sub-tenant while in possession was convicted of permitting drunkenness on the premises, and at the general annual licensing meeting the renewal of the licence was refused. In an action by the lessor against the defendant to recover damages for breach of covenant,—Held, that there had been no breach, as the sub-tenant was not an "assign" within the meaning of the covenant, and that the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to recover. Bryant v. Hancock, 67 L. J. Q.B. 507; [1898] Q.B. 716—C.A. See s.c. in H.L., infra.

• Decision of the Court of Appeal (67 L. J. Q.B. 507; [1898] 1 Q.B. 716) affirmed on the grounds that on the evidence and on the construction of a covenant by the tenant of licensed premises there had been no breach of the covenant. Bryant v. Hancock, 68 L. J. Q.B. 889; [1899] A.C. 442—H.L. (E.)

• Restrictive, when Implied—Common Scheme—Residential Flats.—Where a landlord enters into an agreement to let a residential flat to a tenant, under conditions and regulations which shew on the face of them that the building in which the flat is situated is intended to be used for residential flats only, and the building has in fact been so used, the landlord will be restrained at the suit of the tenant from converting a large part of the building into a club during the tenancy. Hudson v. Crapps, 65 L. J. Ch. 328; [1896] 1 Ch. 265—North, J.

Mortgage by Demise before Conveyancing Act, 1881—Under-lease by Mortgagor—Foreclosure—Acceptance of Rent by Mortgagee—Sub-lease by Licence of Mortgagee—Sale by Mortgagee Subject to Under-lease—Rights of Purchaser as Against Under-lessee and Sub-lessee—Representation by Mortgagee.—The lessee of certain premises under a lease for sixty years mortgaged the premises by demise to N. on March 9, 1881. By under-lease of March 24, 1892, the mortgagor purported to demise the premises to the defendant company for twenty-one years subject to a power of re-entry if the defendant company should be wound up. On March 21, 1895, N. foreclosed, and from that date the defendant company paid their rent to him, and his executors after his death. N. died in 1899, and on October 18, 1899, his executors gave to the defendant company licence in writing to demise to S. the premises comprised in the under-lease for the residue of the term of twenty-one years, less the last ten days, and in this licence the executors described themselves as being the persons in whom the reversion expectant on the determination of the under-lease was vested. On November 27, 1899, the defendant company sub-let the premises to S. On August 9, 1900, N.'s executors assigned the premises to the plaintiff for the residue of the term, subject to but with the benefit of the under-lease. After that the defendant company paid their rent to the plaintiff. On October 1, 1901, the plaintiff gave the defendant company notice to do certain repairs in accordance with the covenants of the under-lease. On October 8, 1902, an order was made for the winding-up of the defendant company. The plaintiff brought the action to recover possession of the property. His contention was that the under-lease was not binding upon him, it having been granted by a mortgagor without the concurrence of the mortgagee under a mortgage created before the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and that the defendant company were merely tenants from year to year to N. and himself of the premises comprised in the under-lease upon the terms thereof so far as they were not inconsistent with such a tenancy, and he could determine the tenancy on account of the winding-up order.—Held, that N.'s executors had by their assertion that the reversion expectant on the determination of the under-lease was vested in them caused both the defendant company and S. to believe in that state of things, and to act on that belief so as to alter their previous positions, and the plaintiff, their successor, was estopped as against both the defendant company and S. from denying that he was the reversioner; and none the less so because the assertion was made by persons who, as mortgagees, were at the time entitled to say that the under-lease was not binding on them. Held, also, that it was a proper case for relief against forfeiture under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. Keith v. Gancia, 73 L. J. Ch. 411; [1904] 1 Ch. 774—C.A.

• Relief against Forfeiture—Liquidation—Sale within a Year of Forfeiture—What Amounts to, within Meaning of Section 2, Sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892.—The M. B. Co., defendants, were mortgagees in possession of the freehold of certain premises leased to the H. C. Co. This company went into liquidation, and thereby incurred a forfeiture for breach of a covenant in their leases against bankruptcy. The receiver appointed by the H. C. Co., to enable him to take advantage of the provision for relief against such a forfeiture under section 14, sub-sections 1 and 6 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and section 2, sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, entered into a contract for sale within one year from the date of the company going into liquidation, but such contract was conditional only and entered into solely for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of the provisions in the Acts. Section 14, sub-section 1 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, provides for relief against forfeiture. Sub-section 6 of this section excludes from such relief breaches of conditions for forfeiture on the bankruptcy of a lessee. Section 2, sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, extended these provisions for relief given by section 14 to a case of forfeiture on bankruptcy, but for one year only from the date of the bankruptcy; but, in case of a sale within one year, the provisions for relief were made applicable. On a motion in the action by the M. B. Co. for possession of the premises for the forfeiture,—Held, there was no sale within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892. To come within the provisions of that section and sub-section a sale must be completed by conveyance, or the contract entered into must be an absolute contract for sale. Castle & Sons, Lim., In re; Mitchell v. Castle & Sons, Lim., 94 L. T. 396—Joyce, J.

Breach of Covenant not to Assign Without Consent—Equitable Relief.—By a lease granted by the plaintiffs to the defendants, the defendants covenanted (inter alia) not to underlet, assign, or part with the possession of the rooms or offices and premises, or any part thereof, to any person or persons without the written consent of the plaintiffs, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld; and there was a further clause entitling the plaintiffs to re-enter upon and into the rooms, &c., or any part in the name of the whole, if the defendants should not perform these covenants. The defendants received a letter from B, in which all the terms of a sub-letting to him of a room were set out, and he was actually permitted by the defendants to partly move into the room. He was admitted to be a desirable tenant, but no written consent had been obtained from the plaintiffs:—Held, that there was a sub-letting, for the letter amounted to an agreement which could have been enforced, and so a forfeiture ensued and the plaintiffs were entitled to possession. Held, further, on the authority of Barrow v. Isaac (60 L. J. Q.B. 179; [1891] 1 Q.B. 417), that the defendants were not entitled to equitable relief. Eastern Telegraph Co. v. Dent, 70 L. T. 713—Kennedy, J.

(c) Recovery of Premises.

Warrant under Small Tenements Recovery Act—Execution of Warrant.—In proceedings under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838, the magistrate made an order for a warrant to issue, but suspended it for ten days, with an intimation that if the tenant did not go out within the ten days the warrant would issue:—Held, that the magistrate had no power to make such an order, as the Act provides that the warrant cannot be enforced within less than twenty-one days from its date. Reg. v. Hopkins, 64 J. P. 454—D.

Rent in Arrear—Action for Recovery of Demised Premises—Sub-lessee in Possession—“Tenant” —Tender of Rent and Costs—Stay of Proceedings.—Where rent is in arrear under a lease, and an action is brought by the lessors for the recovery of the demised premises against the lessee and a sub-lessee in possession, who has not proved any title under the original lessee, but who has paid rent to the lessors, the sub-lessee is a “tenant” within the meaning of section 212 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, and is consequently entitled to a stay of the proceedings upon payment of the rent in arrear and costs. Doe d. Wyatt v. Byron (14 L. J. C.P. 207; 1 C. B. 623) applied. Moore v. Smea, 76 L. J. K.B. 658; [1907] 2 K.B. 8; 96 L. T. 594—C.A.

Public-house—Tenant Vacating Possession—Action to Recover Possession—Appointment of Receiver of Licences—Power to Receiver to Appoint Person to Carry on Business.—The defendant, who was tenant to the plaintiffs of a public-house, disappeared and vacated the premises, and his address was unknown. The plaintiffs commenced an action to recover possession of the premises, and moved ex parte for the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of the public-house and of the licences belonging thereto, and that the receiver when appointed might be at liberty to appoint some fit and proper person to reside upon the premises and to hold the licences under his supervision. The Court, following though doubting Charrington v. Camp (71 L. J. Ch. 196; [1902] 1 Ch. 386), made an order as asked. Whitbread v. Grain, 23 T. L. R. 462—Kekewich, J.

9. DETERMINATION OF TENANCY.

Lease—Failure of Purpose for which Subjects Let—Implied Warranty.—The lease of a shop bore to be granted for ten and a half years, and that only for the purpose of the tenants “carrying on therein the business of wine and spirit merchants,” and provided that it should be used exclusively for the business of a wine and spirit merchant. The tenants, after occupying the shop as a public-house for three and a half years, were refused a renewal of the licence. In an action at the landlord’s instance against the tenants, in which he agreed to remove the restriction upon the use of the premises,—Held, that the lease was not brought to an end by the loss of the licence and consequent failure of the purpose for which the shop was let. Hart’s Trustees v. Arrol, 6 F. 36—Ct. of Sess.

Agricultural Holdings—“Determination of the tenancy”—Compensation.—The words “determination of the tenancy” in section 7 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, mean the determination of the holding in so far as it is an agricultural holding, so that under a tenancy of agricultural land terminating by a custom recognised in the lease on an earlier date than the tenancy of the buildings, the tenancy for the purposes of compensation under the Act of 1883 is determined at the earlier date. Morley v. Carter, 66 L. J. Q.B. 843; [1898] 1 Q.B. 8; 77 L. T. 337; 46 W. R. 77—D.

Abandonment of Farm by reason of Landlord’s Breach of Obligation to Fence.—The tenant under an agricultural lease for nineteen years left the farm at the end of the third year in consequence of the landlord’s failure to carry out his obligation to put the fences into good tenantable repair:—Held, that the breach of this obligation did not entitle the tenant to terminate the contract of lease, and that his abandonment of the farm did not constitute a “determination of tenancy” within the meaning of section 42 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1883, which corresponds to section 61 of the English Act, 1883. Todd v. Bowie, 4 F. 435—Ct. of Sess.

Tenancy from Year to Year—Parol Agreement Varying the Terms, Accepted by Tenant and Acted on by Landlord—Surrender by Operation of Law—Surrender by Estoppel—Statute of Frauds.—An existing tenancy from year to year may be surrendered by parol agreement of the parties, where the landlord and tenant mutually agree that the tenant shall be released, and free to quit the premises at a given date, earlier than he could otherwise have done. A new tenancy is thereby created, and its acceptance by the tenant works a surrender of the tenancy from year to year by operation of law. And where the landlord, acting upon the new agreement, and relying on the tenant quitting the premises, conveys them to a purchaser with possession at the particular date the tenant agreed to deliver them up, a surrender of the tenancy from year to year is worked by estoppel. In neither instance can the tenant set up section 3 of the Statute of Frauds in answer to an action by the landlord for possession. Fenner v. Blake, 69 L. J. Q.B. 257; [1900] 1 Q.B. 426; 82 L. T. 149; 48 W. R. 392—D.

10. NOTICE TO QUIT.

Notice—By Whom to be Given—Equitable Charge.—Where a lease for twenty-one years contains the usual proviso for its determination by the lessee or his assigns by six months' notice at the expiration of the first seven or fourteen years of the term, such notice, in order to be valid, must be given by or on behalf of the person in whom the term is vested; and therefore the first assignee of the lease, who has purchased an equitable charge created by a second assignee by the deposit of the lease with the assignments as a security for a loan, is not entitled to give such notice, as he is not the person in whom the term is vested. Seaward v. Drew, 67 L. J. Q.B. 322; 78 L. T. 19—Channell, J.

Agricultural Holding—Service by Registered Letter.—A year's notice to quit a holding to which the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, applies, made necessary and sufficient by virtue of section 33 of that Act, is a notice under the Act within the meaning of section 28 of the Act, and may be served upon the person to whom it is to be given by being sent through the post in a registered letter addressed to him at his last known place of abode in England. Van Grutten v. Trevenen, 71 L. J. K.B. 544; [1902] 2 K.B. 82; 87 L. T. 344; 50 W. R. 516—O.A.

Omission of Reservation of Lessor's Rights—Liability of Lessee for Breaches of Covenant.—Where a lease has been determined by notice given by the lessee, the lessor is entitled to maintain an action for damages for breaches of covenant committed by the lessee during the term, notwithstanding that the lessor's rights are not expressly reserved by the lease. Blore v. Charlton, 72 L. J. K.B. 114; [1903] 1 K.B. 356; 88 L. T. 235; 51 W. R. 336—Wright, J.

Yearly Tenancy—"Three months' notice on either side."—A tenant agreed in writing to take a tenement at a certain rent per annum from a certain date, and to pay rates and taxes. The agreement contained this clause, "Three months' notice on either side to terminate this agreement":—Held, that the tenancy was a yearly tenancy, and that a notice to quit expiring on any day not being an anniversary of the date of the commencement of the tenancy was invalid. Dixon v. Bradford and District Railway Servants' Coal Supply Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 136; [1904] 1 K.B. 444; 90 L. T. 122; 20 T. L. R. 159—D.

End of Current Year's Tenancy.—A notice to determine a yearly tenancy from Lady Day to Lady Day, dated and served on March 24, requiring the tenant to quit on June 24, 1898, or at the end of the current year's tenancy, although a bad notice as regards June 24, must be understood to mean a year's notice to quit on March 25, 1899, and not a one day's notice. Doe d. Huntingtower v. Culliford (4 Dowl. & Ry. 248) approved. Wride v. Dyer, 69 L. J. Q.B. 17; [1900] 1 Q.B. 23; 81 L. T. 453; 48 W. R. 73; 64 J. P. 118—D.

Tenancy for One Year certain, and so on from Year to Year—Proviso for Notice to Quit at any Time—Notice to Quit during First Year.—Premises were let, under a written agreement, "for the term of one year certain from the date thereof, and so on from year to year, unless or until the tenancy thereby created should be determined by either party giving to the other twenty-eight days' notice in writing, such notice to expire at any period of the year without any reference to the time of entry, the date of the agreement, or the commencement of the tenancy":—Held, that the tenancy could not be determined by notice during the first year. Cannon Brewery v. Nash, 77 L. T. 648—C.A.

Grant of Lease during Yearly Tenancy—Notice to Quit by Original Landlord—Validity.—A landlord who, during the currency of a yearly tenancy, grants a lease of the premises to a third person, cannot, during the term granted by such lease, give the yearly tenant a valid notice to quit. Wordsley Brewery Co. v. Halford, 90 L. T. 89—D.

Quarterly Tenancy—Notice not Expiring on Quarter-day Named—Validity of Notice.—An agreement of tenancy of a public-house provided that the rent should be payable every three months on May 1, August 1, November 1, and February 1 in each year, "subject to three months' notice on either side at any time to terminate this agreement":—Held, that, in the absence of any express provision in the agreement that a tenancy from year to year was entered into, a three months' notice might be given at any time to determine the agreement. Soames v. Nicholson, 71 L. J. K.B. 24; [1902] 1 K.B. 157; 85 L. T. 614; 50 W. R. 169—D.

Weekly Tenancy.—By an agreement for a weekly tenancy it was agreed that the tenancy might be terminated by either landlord or tenant giving the other one week's notice, the key to be given up before twelve o'clock on the day of leaving:—Held, that a notice given at 10 A.M. on November 17 to expire on November 24 was not a good notice. A week's notice is seven clear days, and the law does not take notice of the fraction of a day. Weston v. Miller, 88 L. T. 769; 67 J. P. 203—D.

11. DANGEROUS DEFECTS IN DEMISED PREMISES.

Unfurnished House—Promise by Landlord to Repair—Injury to Tenant's Wife—Liability of Landlord.—The wife of a tenant injured in consequence of the defective condition of the premises, which the landlord has promised to repair, has no cause of action against the landlord. The wife is not in a better position to recover damages than a customer or a guest. Cuvalier v. Pope, 75 L. J. K.B. 609; [1906] A.C. 428; 95 L. T. 65; 22 T. L. R. 648—H.L. (E.)

Liability of Landlord for Injury to Tenant—Agreement by Landlord to Repair—Notice of Want of Repair.—A landlord is not liable to his tenant for personal injuries caused by the defective condition of the demised premises unless the landlord has agreed to repair the premises and has received notice of the want of repair. Tredway v. Machin, 91 L. T. 310; 53 W. R. 136; 20 T. L. R. 726—C.A.

Damage by Fall of Ceiling—Known Danger—Assurance by Landlord of Safety.—In an action of damages by the tenant of a house taken from year to year against the landlord, for damage to furniture due to a fall of plaster from the ceiling of a room, the pursuer averred that on re-taking the house he pointed out to the landlord's factor that the plaster on a beam in the ceiling was apparently insecure, as evidenced by cracks therein; that the factor told him, and that he accepted the assurance, that there was no danger; that the plaster work was not repaired, and that a portion of it fell and damaged the furniture six months later in consequence of not having been repaired:—Held (Lord Young dissenting), that the action was maintainable. Calder v. McCallum, 4 F. 371—Ct. of Sess.

Negligence of Contractor—Liability of Landlord for—Defective Cistern—Overflow of Water —Damage to Tenant's Goods—Competent Contractor Employed by Landlord after Notice of Defect.]—Where a person uses his land for any purpose for which it may in the ordinary course of the enjoyment of land be used, and without any default or negligence on his part damage happens to his neighbour's premises, no liability attaches to him. Further, if a person claiming to be compensated for damage caused by dangerous matter upon his neighbour's land has consented to such dangerous matter being brought upon his neighbour's land, he cannot recover. Therefore, where a landlord of premises lets a part of them, and at the time the tenant takes such part a water supply has been laid on to the premises by the landlord, the landlord is not, in the absence of contractual obligation, liable to the tenant for injury to goods of the latter, upon that portion of the premises occupied by him, caused by an overflow of water by reason of defective work to the landlord's water supply by a contractor employed by him, provided that the contractor is competent to do the work and was employed by the landlord upon receipt of notice of the defect in the water supply. Blake v. Wolf, 67 L. J. Q.B. 818; [1898] 2 Q.B. 426; 79 L. T. 188; 47 W. R. 8; 62 J. P. 559—D.

Negligence—Derogation from Grant—User by Lessor of Land Retained—Injury to Land Let—Duty of Lessor to Take Reasonable Care.]—A person who lets part of his land, retaining other part, is bound to take reasonable care in the user of the part retained not to cause damage to the tenant in his occupation of the part let. Hargroves, Aronson & Co. v. Hartop, 74 L. J. K.B. 233; [1905] 1 K.B. 472; 92 L. T. 414; 53 W. R. 262; 21 T. L. R. 226—D.

A floor of a building was let to the plaintiffs by the defendants, who retained the roof, with gutters attached thereto, in their own possession. One of the gutters became stopped up. The defendants had notice of its condition, but delayed taking any steps to clear it out, owing to which delay the plaintiff's floor was flooded:—Held, that the defendants were liable. Id.

Title of Third Party to Sue for Injuries.]—An action for damages against the landlord of a dwelling-house for breach of the contract of lease will not lie at the instance of any one who is not either a party to the lease or a person having a jus quasitum under it; but any person who sustains injuries through the fault of the landlord can sue him therefor in an action ex delicto:—So held in an action of damages by a domestic servant employed by the tenant of a dwelling-house against the landlord. Cavalier v. Pope (75 L. J. K.B. 609; [1906] A.C. 428) distinguished. Kennedy v. Bruce, [1907] S.C. 845—Ct. of Sess.

Warranty—Evidence.]—An affirmation made upon the sale or letting of real property as to the then state of the property may amount to a warranty, provided the like conditions exist as in the case of a warranty upon the sale of a chattel. De Lassalle v. Guildford, 70 L. J. K.B. 533; [1901] 2 K.B. 215; 84 L. T. 549; 49 W. R. 467—C.A.

Written Agreement of Tenancy—Parol Warranty as to Condition of Drains.]—Upon the execution of a lease of a dwelling-house, the landlord verbally warranted that the drains were in good condition. The lease contained covenants by the lessee to do the inside, and by the lessor to do the outside repairs, but was silent as to the then condition of the drains:—Held, that the parol warranty was collateral to the lease and admissible in evidence, and that the tenant was entitled to maintain an action for the breach of it. Id.

12. LICENCE.

Licence or Lease—Construction of Document.]

—The owners of a house and shop, in September, 1890, wrote a letter to the person who was then in occupation, in the following terms: "We hereby agree to let you keep peaceable possession of your present house and shop in Strand Lane for a term of ten years, on condition that you commit no nuisance, and pay us the sum of 9s. 3d. per week for rent thereof. You to pay local board rates and we to pay poor rates and water rates as hitherto":—Held, that there was a demise of the premises for a term of ten years. Duxbury v. Sandiford, 80 L. T. 552—C.A.

To Use Part of Premises—Breach.]—The lessee of a theatre granted to a refreshment contractor "the free and exclusive licence and right to the use of all the refreshment bars, smoking rooms, wine cellars, and offices" in the theatre, together with the free right of access thereto, and also the sole and exclusive right of advertising therein, for a term of years at a fixed rent. The grant contained a power to determine the terms on non-payment of rent, and a covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held, that the effect of the document was to grant a licence under which the refreshment contractor took no estate or interest in the property, and therefore it did not amount to breach of a covenant in the lease not to assign without the consent of the lessor. Edwards v. Barrington, 85 L. T. 650; 50 W. R. 358—H.L. (E.)

Agreement to let Hoarding—Yearly Tenancy—Notice to Quit.]—An agreement to let a hoarding for a bill-posting and advertising station and use a wall of a house for the same purpose, at a rental of 10l. per annum, payable quarterly, on the usual quarter-days,—Held, to constitute a licence and not a tenancy, and that a three months' notice to quit, expiring at the end of a year of the term, was a reasonable and valid notice to determine it. Wilson v. Turner, 70 L. J. Ch. 263; [1901] 1 Ch. 578; 84 L. T. 48—Joyce, J.

— to Cut Timber—Licence Amounting to Demise of Land.]—A licence to cut timber on land whereby exclusive possession of the land is conferred upon the licensee amounts to a demise of the land, although there may be reservations or restrictions in respect of the purposes for which the land may be used. Glenwood Lumber Co. v. Phillips, 73 L. J. P.C. 62; [1904] A.C. 405; 90 L. T. 741; 20 T. L. R. 531—P.C.

Shooting Rights.]—See Radcliff v. Hayes, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 101—M.R.

18. FIXTURES.

Trade Fixtures—Right of Removal—Market Garden—Glass-Houses.]—Glass-houses erected for the purpose of his trade by a tenant who is carrying on the business of a market gardener, with the knowledge of his landlord, are trade fixtures, and may be removed by the tenant during the tenancy though attached to the freehold. Mears v. Cullender, 70 L. J. Ch. 621; [1901] 2 Ch. 388; 84 L. T. 618; 49 W. R. 534; 65 J. P. 615—Cozens-Hardy, J.

— Right of Tenant's Trustee in Bankruptcy to Remove.]—A lease of a messuage for a term of twenty-one years contained a covenant by the lessee to yield up the same at the end of the term, "together with all doors, locks, keys, bolts, bars, staples, hinges, iron pins, wainscots, hearths, stoves, marble and other chimney-pieces, slabs, shutters, fastenings, partitions, pipes, pumps, sinks, gutters of lead, posts, pales, rails, dressers, shelves, and all other erections, buildings, improvements, fixtures, and things which are now, or at any time during the said term hereby granted shall be fixed, fastened, or belong to the said messuage and premises, or any part thereof." The lessee was described in the lease as a boot and shoe manufacturer, and he covenanted not to carry on on the premises any business other than that of a boot and shoe maker. He brought on to the premises for the purpose of his trade certain machinery which was nailed, screwed, or bolted to the floors:—Held, that the articles enumerated having this common characteristic—that they would not, as between landlord and tenant, ordinarily be removable by the tenant if put up by him—the general words which followed must be confined to articles of the same genus; and that the trade machinery in question, which was not connected with the building in such a way as to become an integral part of it, but only for its more convenient user, was not included in the covenant. The principle of Bishop v. Elliott (24 L. J. Ex. 249; 11 Ex. 113) applied. Lambourn v. McLellan, 72 L. J. Ch. 617; [1903] 2 Ch. 268; 88 L. T. 748; 51 W. R. 594—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—If a covenant in a lease to leave fixtures at the end of the term leaves the matter doubtful, the ordinary right of a tenant to remove trade fixtures will not be interfered with. Ib.

Tenant's Fixtures—Mortgagee—Removal after Forfeiture of Lease—Debenture-holders.]—Where a tenant surrenders his lease to the landlord, a mortgagee or purchaser from the tenant has a right to remove fixtures within a reasonable time after the surrender. So where a company forfeits a lease by passing a resolution for a voluntary winding-up, in which resolution debenture-holders do not concur, the latter have a similar right to remove fixtures within a reasonable time afterwards. Pugh v. Arton (38 L. J. Ch. 619; L. R. 8 Eq. 626) questioned. Glasdir Copper Mines, In re; English Electro-Metallurgical Co. v. Glasdir Copper Mines, Lim., 73 L. J. Ch. 461; [1904] 1 Ch. 819; 90 L. T. 412; 11 Manson, 224—Joyce, J. And see FIXTURES.

14. IMPROVEMENTS.

Compensation for—Arbitration—Enforcement of Award—Jurisdiction of County Court Judge—Prohibition.]—An agreement for the letting of a farm provided for the adjustment of the rights of the parties on the determination of the tenancy by arbitrators, each party choosing one, whose joint decision should be binding on both parties. Under this agreement the parties respectively appointed arbitrators. The landlord refused to permit the arbitrator appointed by him to concur in the appointment of an umpire. Upon an application by the tenant, the Board of Agriculture appointed an umpire, who made an award in favour of the tenant. Subsequently, upon an application by the tenant under section 24 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, the County Court Judge made an order that the sum awarded should be recoverable from the landlord. The landlord formally objected to the Board of Agriculture before the appointment by the board of an umpire, and also before the County Court Judge at the hearing of the case. Upon an application by the landlord, the Divisional Court granted a writ of prohibition to restrain the County Court Judge and the tenant from proceeding in the matter of the order of the Judge. Upon appeal by the tenant, Held (SIR THOMAS BARNES, P., dissenting), dismissing the appeal, that the arbitration never was one to which the Agricultural Holdings Acts applied, and that the County Court Judge had therefore no power to make an order under section 24 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. Cundall and Vavasour, In re, 95 L. T. 483; 22 T. L. R. 302—C.A.

Easement—Outlay by Lessee on Excepted Premises—Mistake as to Rights—Acquiescence.]

—If, after an agreement for a lease involving a stipulated outlay on the demised premises by the lessee, before the lease is granted the landlord stands by and encourages the lessee to expend additional moneys in artistically paving a passage excepted from the demise, but over which the lessee is given a right of way to the demised premises, the lessee, to the landlord's knowledge, being under the belief that the pavement will remain, the landlord cannot afterwards, as legal owner, insist on its removal or alteration. Nor can the landlord insist on the removal of an advertisement board affixed by the lessee to the outside wall of the landlord's premises under similar circumstances. The propositions stated in Willmott v. Barber (49 L. J. Ch. 792; 15 Ch. D. 96) applied. Civil Service Musical Instrument Association v. Whiteman, 68 L. J. Ch. 484; 80 L. T. 685; 63 J. P. 441—Kekewich, J.

Agricultural Holding—Compensation for Improvement—Agreement by Landlord to Pay Compensation of Tenant Quitting before Determination of Tenancy—Action by Tenant—Claim “otherwise than in manner authorised by this Act.”—A verbal agreement was made between a landlord and a tenant of an agricultural holding that the tenant would quit before the determination of his tenancy, and that the landlord would pay him such amount as might be found by two valuers, one appointed by each party, to be a reasonable compensation in respect of (inter alia) an improvement for which compensation can be obtained under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883. The valuers having been appointed and agreed the amount, Holt, that the tenant was entitled to maintain an action to recover the amount, since there is nothing in the Act which prohibits a landlord and a tenant from making an agreement as to the terms on which the tenant will quit in respect of matters for which compensation can be obtained under the Act; and section 57, which prohibits a tenant from claiming compensation in respect of an improvement under the Act otherwise than in manner authorised by the Act, only applies to a tenant claiming compensation under the Act, and not to a tenant claiming compensation under an agreement outside the Act. Newby v. Eckersley, 68 L. J. Q.B. 261; [1899] 1 Q.B. 465; 80 L. T. 314; 47 W. R. 245—C.A.

—Fruit Trees—Landlord's Consent.—A power in an agreement for an agricultural tenancy for the tenant to turn meadow land into orchard is a consent in writing by the landlord to the planting of fruit trees within section 3 of the Agricultural Holdings (England) Act, 1883, and the tenant is entitled to compensation for trees so planted. Mears v. Callender, 70 L. J. Ch. 621; [1901] 2 Ch. 388; 84 L. T. 618; 49 W. R. 584; 65 J. P. 615—Cozens-Hardy, J.

—Market Gardeners Compensation (Scotland) Act, 1897—Retrospective Effect.—The Market Gardeners Compensation (Scotland) Act, 1897, s. 4 (which corresponds with section 4 of the English Act of 1895) is not retrospective, and does not entitle tenants under leases current at the commencement of the Act to compensation in respect of market-garden improvements executed prior to the commencement of the Act. Smith v. Callander, 70 L. J. P.C. 53; [1901] A. C. 297; 84 L. T. 801—H.L. (Sc.) And see col. 1190.

Agriculture, Board of.—See 3 Edw. 7.

15. FURNISHED HOUSE.

Lease of Furnished House—Right of Tenant to Remove Pictures from Walls during Lease.—The tenant of a furnished house is entitled, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, to remove the pictures from the walls and to store them in one of the rooms during the currency of the lease, notwithstanding the objections of the lessor (Lord Young dissentiente). Miller v. Stewart, 2 F. 309—Ct. of Sess.

16. COVENANTS.

(a) Generally.

Implied Covenant—Construction.—A covenant in a lease, followed by the declaration, “There shall not be implied in this lease any covenant or provision whatever on the part of either of the parties hereto,” must be construed as qualified and controlled by the declaration, and on its true construction does not run with the reversion, is not incident to the relation of landlord and tenant, and the liability for its breach properly falls to be borne by the testator's (the lessor's) general estate. Eccles v. Mills, 67 L. J. P.C. 25; [1899] A.C. 360; 78 L. T. 206; 46 W. R. 898—P.C.

Covenant by Lessee for Himself and Assigns—Sub-lessee for part of Term—Liability for Act of Sub-lessee.—Where a lease of a public-house contains a covenant whereby the lessee for himself and his assigns covenants with the lessor and his assigns in manner following—that is to say, “The lessee will at all times during the continuance of this demise use and keep open the said premises as a licensed public-house for the sale of ale wine beer and spirits therein and will so conduct and manage the same as to afford no reasonable or lawful ground or pretence for the Justices refusing to renew endorsing or objecting to renewal of the licences now attached to the said premises for the sale of ale wines and spirituous liquors and which licences are hereby agreed and declared to be the property of the lessor but any endorsement which may be made on the said licences shall not be deemed a breach of the covenant contained in this clause if the conviction in respect of which such endorsement shall have been made is reversed or annulled on appeal”—the covenant is an absolute one that the licence shall not be endangered by any one, and therefore if a sub-lessee by demise of the public-house is convicted of opening the house in prohibited hours the covenant is broken, and the lessee and his assigns will be liable at the suit of the lessor for the breach. The judgments in Bryant v. Hancock (67 L. J. Q.B. 507; [1898] 1 Q.B. 716; 68 L. J. Q.B. 889; [1899] A.C. 442) explained. Mumford v. Walker, 71 L. J. K.B. 19; 85 L. T. 518—Ridley, J.

Abatement of Nuisance Caused by Structural Defect—Incidence of Expense—Liability of Tenant to Indemnify Landlord.—Where a lessee has by his lease covenanted to “pay and discharge all taxes rates including sewers main drainage assessments and impositions whatsoever which now are or which at any time or times hereafter during the continuance of the said term hereby granted be taxed rated assessed charged or imposed upon or in respect of the said premises or any part thereof on the landlord tenant or occupier of the same premises by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever (landlord's property tax and tithe only excepted),” and the lease contains no covenant by the lessee to repair, he will not be liable as between himself and his landlord to pay the expense of the abatement of a nuisance arising from a defect of a structural nature which has been required by the sanitary authority under section 4 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. In such a case, in order to fix the tenant with liability there must be in the covenant a contract or undertaking by him to indemnify the landlord against a particular charge which he (the landlord) has been called upon to pay, and the covenant must be construed and the obligation of the tenant determined by looking at the whole terms of the covenant and also at the lease, in order to see whether or not the terms import a contract by the tenant to indemnify the landlord in respect of the particular expense. Foulger v. Arding, 70 L. J. K.B. 580; [1901] 2 K.B. 151; 84 L. T. 467; 49 W. R. 442—D.

(b) Alterations, not to make.

Covenant not to make any "alteration to premises" without consent—Construction—Trade Premises—Erection of Clock.—The erection by the lessee, without the lessor's consent, of a large clock by way of advertisement outside a watchmaker's shop, supported by iron stays bolted into the stonework of the front of the house, is not a breach of a lessee's covenant not to make any "alteration to the premises" without the lessor's consent. Bickmore v. Dimmer, 72 L. J. Ch. 96; [1903] 1 Ch. 158; 88 L. T. 78; 51 W. R. 180—C.A.

(c) Not to Assign or Sub-let without Consent.

Original Lessee.—A covenant running with the land not to assign a lease without the lessor's consent is broken even where the lessee for the time being so assigns to the original lessee, and an injunction will lie to restrain such assignment. M'Eacharn v. Colton, 71 L. J. P.C. 20; [1902] A.C. 104; 85 L. T. 594—P.C.

Theatre—Refreshment Contract—Breach.—On February 8, 1894, E., the lessee, granted an under-lease of a theatre to D. for a term of years. D. covenanted with E. not to "assign, demise, or otherwise part with the indenture, or any estate or interest therein" without the licence of E. There was a provision for re-entry on any breach of the covenants by the under-lessee. On April 15, 1898, D. granted to F. W. & Co. "the free and exclusive licence and right to the use of all refreshment rooms, bars, smoking rooms, wine cellars, and offices" in the theatre, together with the free right of access thereto, and also the sole and exclusive privilege of advertising therein, for a term of years. The "landlord" had power to determine the term on non-payment of rent; and covenanted that the tenants should peaceably and quietly "hold, occupy, and enjoy the hereditaments and premises without lawful let, suit, trouble, eviction, or disturbance by the landlord or any other person." No licence to "assign, demise or otherwise part with" was obtained by D. from E. as required by the covenant in the under-lease: On September 4, 1898, E. took possession of the theatre, on the ground that D.'s contract with F. W. & Co. was a breach of that covenant:—Held, that, looking at the document of April 15, 1898, as a whole, the fair effect of it was that a licence instead of a lease of the property was really what was intended by the parties, although there were particular words in the document which might lead to a contrary conclusion; that F. W. & Co. took no estate or interest in the property; but that they were entitled to consider themselves as having an exclusive privilege for the supply of refreshments; and that therefore no breach of the covenant in the under-lease had been committed. Daly v. Edwards, 83 L. T. 548; 49 W. R. 244—C.A.

Assignment of Lessee's Estate, except Leaseholds, for Benefit of Creditors—Declaration of Trust as to Leaseholds—Right of Re-entry on Lessee Executing Assignment, for Benefit of Creditors—Notice of Breach—Covenant against "disposing of the land leased"—Sufficiency of Notice—Service on Trustee.—A lessee who had covenanted in his lease that he would not assign the land leased without the consent of the lessor, and that upon breach of any of his covenants, or if he should execute an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, the lessor should have the right to re-enter, executed a deed of assignment of all his estate, except leaseholds, to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors, and declared therein that he would stand possessed of his leaseholds upon trust for the trustee to assign and dispose of the same as the trustee should direct. The lessor served on the trustee under the deed a notice of breach of covenant by the execution of the deed of assignment:—Held, first, that as the deed of assignment did not contain a legal assignment of the land leased, it did not constitute a breach of the covenant not to assign it; secondly, that the condition for re-entry on the lessee's executing an assignment for the benefit of his creditors was not a condition "against assigning, under-letting, parting with the possession, or disposing of the land leased," within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 6 (i) of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and therefore it was necessary for the lessor to give notice of breach under section 14, sub-section 1, before enforcing his right of re-entry; and thirdly, that the provisions of section 67, sub-section 2 of the Act had not the effect of making the notice on the trustee under the deed a sufficient notice on the lessee within the meaning of section 14, sub-section 1. Gentle v. Faulkner, 69 L. J. Q.B. 777; [1900] 2 Q.B. 267; 82 L. T. 708—C.A.

Leave not to be "Unreasonably" Withheld. Unreasonableness.—Where a landlord and tenant occupy different parts of the same premises, and the tenant has covenanted not to assign or under-let his part of the premises without the written leave of his landlord, but this leave is not to be unreasonably refused, it is not unreasonable for the landlord, as conditions of granting such leave, to enquire for what purposes the proposed under-tenant intends to use the premises, and to stipulate that the under-tenant shall enter into a covenant with him with reference to the assignment or sub-letting of the premises similar to the covenant already in existence between him and his own immediate tenant. Sparke's Lease, In re; Berger v. Jenkinson, 74 L. J. Ch. 318; [1905] 1 Ch. 456; 92 L. T. 537; 53 W. R. 376—Swinfen Eady, J.

Covenant by Assignee to Pay Rent during the Residue of the Term—"Fine, or sum of money in the nature of a fine."—A lease of a public-house contained a covenant against assigning or under-letting without the licence of the lessor, which was not to be unreasonably withheld, but it contained no provision that any fine should be payable in respect of such licence. After several assignments, the person in whom the term was vested applied to the lessor (the plaintiff) for permission to assign to the defendant. As a condition of giving such licence the plaintiff required the defendant as assignee to execute a deed containing a covenant to pay the rent reserved by, and to perform the covenants contained in, the lease during the residue of the term. The defendant entered into that covenant, and the lease was assigned to him and was subsequently assigned by him with the licence of the plaintiff to a person who failed to pay the rent. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant on his covenant for rent which had accrued due since the assignment by the defendant:—Held, that the defendant was liable for the rent under his covenant in the licence, and that he could not rely upon section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, as a defence to the action, inasmuch as that section has not made the payment of a fine an illegal payment and the defendant had voluntarily and without protest entered into the covenant. Waite v. Jennings, 75 L. J. K.B. 542; [1906] 2 K.B. 11; 95 L. T. 1; 54 W. R. 511; 22 T. L. R. 510—C.A.

Semble, per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., that only the original lessee, whose purchase-money had been reduced by the taking of the fine, could claim the advantage of the proviso in section 3. Ib.

Semble, per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and STIRLING, L.J. (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), that money payable under such a covenant was not a "fine, or sum of money in the nature of a fine," within section 3. Ib.

Proviso for Re-entry on Default in Performance of Covenants "to be performed"—Application to Negative Covenant.—A lease of a house, shop, and premises contained, in addition to the usual affirmative covenants to pay rent, rates, and taxes and to keep the premises in repair, negative covenants by the lessee not to use the premises for any business except that of an outfitter, and not to assign or under-let without the consent in writing of the lessor. There was a proviso for re-entry "if the lessee shall commit any breach of the covenants hereinbefore contained and upon his part to be performed":—Held, that upon the true construction of the lease the proviso was not limited by the words "to be performed" to breaches of the affirmative covenants, but applied to a breach of the covenant against under-letting. Harman v. Ainslie, 73 L. J. K.B. 539; [1904] 1 K.B. 698; 90 L. T. 624; 52 W. R. 615; 20 T. L. R. 356—C.A.

Without Written Assent—Partners.—F. L. leased certain premises to T. C. D. for twenty-one years. The lease contained a covenant by T. C. D. for himself, his heirs, administrators, and assigns, that he would not, neither should his executors, administrators, or assigns, assign the demised premises without the consent in writing of the lessor. T. C. D. assigned the premises, with the consent of F. L., to E. V. Subsequently E. V. assigned them, with the consent of F. L., to W. H. and J. L. H., who were partners in the firm of W. H. & Son.

W. H. and J. L. H. dissolved partnership, and J. L. H. assigned to W. H. all his undivided share and interest of and in (amongst other property) the premises contained in the lease. F. L. had no notice of this assignment, nor was his consent given:—Held, that the assignment was a breach of the covenant. Langton v. Henson, 92 L. T. 805—Buckley, J.

Mortgage by Sub-demise without Consent—Issue of Writ by Lessor for Recovery of Possession—Distress by Receiver of Mortgagees on Goods of Tenant in Possession after Issue of Writ—Action for Wrongful Distress—Payment of Rent by Tenant after Issue of Lessor's Writ—Estoppel—Liability of Solicitors of Mortgagees.—A lease of land and buildings for thirty-five years made in 1896 contained a covenant that the lessee would not assign or under-let without the consent in writing of the lessor, which was not to be unreasonably withheld if the proposed assignee or under-tenant should be a respectable and responsible person, and also contained a proviso for re-entry upon a breach of any of the covenants therein. An assignee of the lease, having let the premises to a tenant from year to year, and mortgaged the premises by sub-demise without the consent of the lessor, was adjudicated bankrupt. On September 18, 1901, the lessor issued a writ for recovery of possession of the premises, without stating the ground of the claim. The tenant, while disclaiming any intention of defending the action, entered an appearance to it, and, in order to gain time, with the object of keeping possession of the premises, on October 15 paid the rent for the quarter ending September 29 to the receiver appointed by the mortgagees under the Conveyancing Act, 1881. The claim of the lessor was afterwards amended by alleging the breach of covenant by the mortgage without the consent of the lessor as the ground of forfeiture. On January 11, 1902, the solicitors for the mortgagees having written to the receiver that they would be glad to hear that a distress had been put in, the receiver distrained upon the goods of the tenant on the premises for the rent due on December 25, 1901. The tenant thereupon commenced an action for wrongful distress against the solicitors for the mortgagees and the receiver, at the hearing of which the jury returned a verdict for the tenant with damages. On March 20, 1902, the lessor obtained judgment by consent in the action for recovery of possession:—Held, upon an application for a new trial of the action for wrongful distress—first, that the mortgage by sub-demise was a breach of the covenant not to assign or underlet without the consent of the lessor; secondly, that the issue by the lessor of the writ to recover possession and service thereof on the lessee determined the lease; thirdly, that, in the circumstances, the tenant was not estopped by the payment of rent after the service of the lessor's writ from asserting that the lease was determined; fourthly, that, in the circumstances, the tenant was entitled to recover damages against the solicitors for the mortgagees. Grimwood v. Moss (41 L. J. C.P. 239; L. R. 7 C.P. 360) approved. Serjeant v. Nash, Field & Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 630; [1903] 2 K.B. 304; 89 L. T. 112—C.A.

Mistake.—The defendants held certain rooms in a house as tenants to the plaintiffs under an agreement in writing by which they contracted not to assign, under-let, or part with possession of the rooms or any part thereof without the consent in writing of the plaintiffs for that purpose first obtained, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld. The agreement contained a proviso for re-entry on breach by the defendants of its terms. The defendants asked for and obtained consent to let and did let one of the rooms. They then asked for and obtained consent to put a partition in another of the rooms dividing it into two parts, one of which they let, without asking for consent, to a responsible tenant, who was already tenant to the plaintiffs of an adjoining room. The plaintiffs' consent to this letting, if asked, could not have been withheld:—Held, that there was a breach of the contract not to under-let, and a consequent forfeiture, against which the Court would not grant relief. Eastern Telegraph Co. v. Dent, 68 L. J. Q.B. 564; [1899] 1 Q.B. 835; 80 L. T. 459—C.A.

Unreasonable Condition Attached to Licence—Declaratory Action.—Where a lessor attaches to a licence to assign the lease a condition which is in the opinion of the Court unreasonable, the Court can, in an action by the lessee asking for the declarations, make declarations that the lessor is not entitled to impose the condition in question as a condition of giving his licence, and that the lessee is entitled to assign his lease to the proposed assignee without any further consent of the lessor. Young v. Ashley Gardens Properties, Ltd., 72 L. J. Ch. 520; [1903] 2 Ch. 112; 88 L. T. 541—C.A.

Covenant Against Sub-letting Without Consent—Assignment Without Consent.—A lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to let or demise the demised premises without the lessor's consent. The lessee sold the premises, and the lessor gave his consent, which was indorsed on the assignment. The assignee Doyle then put the premises up for sale, and O'Hara purchased them. O'Hara required the assignment to be made with the lessor's consent. Doyle refused to obtain such consent, and O'Hara refused to complete:—Held, that the covenant only restrained sub-letting without the lessor's consent, and that it was not necessary to obtain such consent to make title. Greenaway v. Adams (12 Ves. 395) distinguished. Doyle and O'Hara's Contract, In re, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 113—C.A.

Payment for Consent—Fine.—The effect of section 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, is not to render the payment of money by the lessee to the lessor for giving his consent to an assignment illegal, but only to read into the lease the provisions of the section as a qualification of the covenant against assignment without consent. Where, therefore, the lessee has without protest paid money to the lessor for obtaining his consent to an assignment, no action lies by the lessee to recover it back. Quere, whether such an action would lie if the money were paid under protest. Andrew v. Bridgman, 77 L. J. K.B. 272; [1908] 1 K.B. 596—C.A.

Where a lessor refuses his consent to an assignment except upon terms inconsistent with the provisions of section 3, the lessee is entitled to disregard the covenant and to assign as if such consent had been given, on the same principle as that on which Treloar v. Bigge (43 L. J. Ex. 95; L. R. 9 Ex. 151) was decided. Id.

Lease of Fishing—Covenant not to Assign the "said premises"—Omission of Words "any part of the premises"—Licence for Two Rods—Validity.—A lessor granted to a lessee for a term of years the exclusive right of fishing in certain portions of a river and taking away the fish so caught, and the lessee covenanted not to under-let or assign the "said premises" without the lessor's consent. The lessee subsequently agreed to grant a licence to another to fish upon the same water, and in like manner as in the lease provided, for the unexpired residue of the term, but so that no more than two rods should be used at any time under the licence. The lessor objected:—Held, that the grant of this licence was not a breach of the covenant. Grove v. Portal, 71 L. J. Ch. 299; [1902] 1 Ch. 727; 86 L. T. 350—Joyce, J.

Receiving Order—Proviso for Re-entry on Assignment or Bankruptcy.—The fact that a receiving order is made against a debtor, and that he is adjudicated bankrupt, even though it be in both cases on his own petition, does not constitute in either case a breach of a covenant not to assign leasehold property. Riggs, In re; Trustee, ex parte, 70 L. (d) Cultivation of Farm.

Agreement to Consume Crops on Farm—Destruction by Fire—Liability in Damages.—The lessee of a farm contracted to cultivate the land in a good and husbandlike manner, and to stack upon the premises all the hay and corn arising from the farm, and to consume upon the farm all hay, straw, chaff, and turnips, and other green crops arising therefrom, and to carry out and spread upon the farm in regular succession all the dung and manure arising therefrom. Stacks of hay and corn were destroyed by accidental fire. In an arbitration under the Agricultural Holdings Acts the lessor claimed compensation for breach of contract in respect of the manurial value of the stacks so destroyed:—Held, that, according to the true construction of the clause, it only applied to things in existence which could be consumed on the farm, and that there had been no breach of contract by the lessee. Hull and Meux (Ludys), In re, 74 L. J. K.B. 252; [1905] 1 K.B. 588; 92 L. T. 74; 53 W. R. 389; 21 T. L. R. 220—C.A.

Lessor Tenant for Life—Covenant by Lessor and Assigns—Death of Lessor—Liability of Executors.—The plaintiffs were the executors of one Bath, and the defendants the executors of one Bowles, and the action was brought for the balance of compensation for certain crops, &c., pursuant to a covenant in a lease granted by Bowles to Bath. Bowles was tenant for life, and under the powers of the Settled Land Acts granted the lease, and by its terms it was provided: "And the lessor hereby for himself and his assigns covenants with the lessee that he will pay the tithe rent-charge on the said premises, also that he the lessor or his assigns or the succeeding tenants will at the expiration or sooner determination of the said term take and pay for the growing crops and manure then upon the said demised premises and the unexhausted tillages and dressings according to the custom of the country at a fair valuation to be made by two valuers, one to be chosen by each party, or, in the event of their differing, then by a third person to be chosen by such valuers." After certain other provisions the lease proceeded: "Provided also that in the event of the lessor or his assigns at any time or times and from time to time desiring during the said term to resume possession of any of the lands (but not the house, garden, building, or yards) comprised in this demise for any purpose other than agriculture, it shall be lawful for him and them so to do upon giving to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, or leaving upon some part of the demised premises three calendar months' notice in writing of such desire, and thereupon at the expiration of such notice a reduction of" rent should be made, "and the lessor or his assigns shall . . . pay to the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for the growing crops," &c., "and for the unexhausted tillages and dressings the like amount as he or they would be entitled to upon quitting, pursuant to the covenant of the lessor in that behalf before contained." The lessor having died, the owners of the fee-simple sold a certain portion of the demised property to a limited company, subject to the tenancy and to the payment of compensation, &c., under the lease. The plaintiffs paid rent in respect of this portion to the company and, notice having been given by the company to the plaintiffs that they intended to resume possession, it was agreed that the company should pay the plaintiffs 50% in respect of the unexhausted improvements. The company being wound up, the plaintiffs could not obtain this amount, and they then sued the defendants on the covenant by Bowles in the lease:—Held, that the defendants were not liable. Bath v. Bowles, 93 L. T. 801—D.

Demise by Mortgagee "as agent"—Covenant by Tenant not to Sell off Hay or Fodder or Remove Manure—Right of Mortgagee's Assign to Enforce Covenant—Covenants Running with Reversion.—A mortgagee, under a mortgage created in 1873, who was not in possession, but collected the rent as agent of the mortgagors, executed an agreement under seal for a tenancy of a farm from year to year to the defendant. The agreement was expressed to be made between the mortgagee "as agent, hereinafter called the landlord," and the defendant, "hereinafter called the tenant." "The landlord" thereby let and "the tenant" took the premises. By one of the covenants the tenant agreed to consume on the premises all hay and fodder and to spread on the land all manure and compost produced on the farm, and not to sell off any hay or fodder, and to leave all manure and compost at the end of the tenancy. The mortgagee afterwards sold the farm, and his purchaser sought to enforce the above covenant by the defendant:—Held, that the question who was the lessor was one of construction, in deciding which the Court could look at the surrounding circumstances, and that on the true construction of the agreement the demise was the demise of the mortgagee; that the words "as agent" were not, in a demise under seal, sufficient to prevent the demise operating on the legal estate vested in the mortgagee, and that the plaintiff as his assign could therefore enforce any covenant contained in the agreement the benefit of which ran with the reversion. Held, further, that the covenant in question touched and concerned the land, and that the benefit of it therefore ran with the reversion. Chapman v. Smith, 76 L. J. Ch. 394; [1907] 2 Ch. 97; 96 L. T. 662—Parker, J.

Not to Carry on Dangerous Trade—Increase of Premium for Fire Insurance—Under-lessee—Injunction.—By a lease dated December 20, 1897, D. demised certain premises to G., who covenanted for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns (inter alia), not to use or occupy the same or any part thereof as a dwelling-house or sleeping-place, or to use the same so as to cause a nuisance, annoyance, or damage to the owners or occupiers of the offices or rooms in the same house or adjoining houses, and not to carry on any noisy or dangerous trade, and also not to do or suffer to be done upon the said demised premises or any part thereof anything which might render any increased or extra premium payable for the insurance of the premises against fire, or which might make void or voidable any policy for insurance. There was also a covenant not to assign without licence. In August, 1903, G. assigned to E. with the lessor's consent, and on October 18, 1904, E. sub-demised to D. On November 12, 1904, the lessor consented to the under-lease, but no explanation of what was intended to be done was given him, and no copy of the agreement was shewn. The sub-lessee exhibited and sold an incandescent lamp in which petrol was used. The insurance company at the expiration of the period for which the premises were insured refused to renew, and although negotiations were entered into for the renewal of the insurance at 12s. 6d. instead of 2s. per cent., they fell through. The lessor now applied for an injunction restraining the sub-lessee from breaking the covenants:—Held, that the defendant must be restrained by injunction from using the premises in a manner prohibited by the lease of which he had constructive notice. Teape v. Douse, 92 L. T. 319; 21 T. L. R. 271—Swinfen Eady, J.

Fish-Frying—Trade necessarily Offensive.—In an action to restrain a defendant from carrying on a fish-frying business in contravention of a covenant not to use his premises "for carrying on any offensive trade whatsoever,"—Held, that the business, although not necessarily offensive, must, having regard to its nature, the locality, and the manner in which it was carried on, be considered an offensive trade within the meaning of the covenant. Devonshire (Duke) v. Brookshaw, 81 L. T. 83; 63 J. P. 569—Kekewich, J.

Not to Permit Premises to be Used for Illegal

Purpose—No Act to be Done Tending to Annoyance.—A lessee of a house covenanted that she would not use or permit the premises or any part thereof to be used for any illegal or immoral purpose, and, further, that no act, matter, or thing should at any time be done on the premises which might be or tend to the annoyance of the lessor or superior landlord for the time being or the lessees or occupiers of neighbouring premises. There was a condition of re-entry on breach of any of the covenants:—Held, that the second part of the covenant in the original lease was not qualified by the word "permit" in the first part, but was an absolute covenant that if the act, matter, or thing specified was done by any one, there was a right of re-entry. Pothero v. Bell, 22 T. L. R. 370—Jell, J.

Sub-lease—Covenants Less Strict.—The lessee sub-let the house, and the sub-lessee covenanted that she would not carry on or permit to be carried on any noisome, or dangerous, or offensive trade or business, or anything that might be or cause an injury, nuisance, or annoyance to the sub-lessor or any of the neighbours. During the occupation of the sub-lessee an act was done on the premises which tended to the annoyance of the superior landlord:—Held, that the original lessee could not be said to have "permitted" the act complained of, simply because she had made a sub-lease without inserting therein covenants as strict as those in the original lease. Id.

Covenant by Landlord not to Allow Certain Trade on "Adjoining" Premises.—In a covenant by a lessor not to allow a certain trade to be carried on in the "adjoining premises," the word "adjoining" was confined to the two houses on either side of the demised premises, although the lessor was at the time of the lease the owner of a block of buildings, of which these formed part only. Vale v. Moorgate Street and Broad Street Buildings, 80 L. T. 487—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Covenant not to Let Adjoining Property for Specified Trades—Covenant with Lessor by Lessee of Adjoining Property—Right to Enforce Covenants.—A covenant by a lessor not to let adjoining property for the purposes of a trade, to which the lessee is restricted, is not broken by the user of such property for that trade by another lessee in breach of a covenant contained in his lease from the same lessor. The lessee under the first lease has no right to enforce, or compel the lessor to enforce, the covenant with the lessor contained in the second. Kemp v. Bird (46 L. J. Ch. 828; 5 Ch. D. 549, 974) followed. Fitz v. Iles (62 L. J. Ch. 258; [1893] 1 Ch. 77) discussed. Ashby v. Wilson, 69 L. J. Ch. 47; [1900] 1 Ch. 66; 81 L. T. 480; 48 W. R. 105—Kekewich, J.

Covenant not to Let Adjoining Property for Purpose of Trade Carried on by Lessee—Breach of Covenant—Remedies of Lessee.—By an agreement in writing dated October 30, 1901, T. agreed to let a shop in an arcade to the plaintiff for twenty-one years, and it was agreed that the lease should contain a covenant by the lessee "not to carry on upon the premises any other trade or business than that of a dealer in pictures . . . prints, engravings, photographs, etchings and articles of vertu, artistic and heraldic stationery, frame maker, and dealer in photographic frames, artists' colours, and the accessories to the said trade or business"; and should also contain a covenant by the lessor "not to let any other portion of the said arcade for the trade or business herebefore mentioned to be carried on by the tenant." By an agreement in writing dated September 25, 1902, T. agreed to let to G. another part of the arcade on a yearly tenancy, and it was agreed that the tenant should "not carry on any business other than that of a librarian, newsagent, bookseller, or stationer, without the previous consent in writing of the landlord." The plaintiff alleged that G. was selling articles which came under the head of artistic stationery, and brought an action against T. and G. claiming an injunction restraining T. from letting or allowing to remain let, and G. from using the premises comprised in his agreement for any of the purposes of the trade or business mentioned in the plaintiff's agreement:—Held, on the evidence, that there had been a substantial breach of the agreement with the plaintiff; that the agreement being only against letting, not against using, the plaintiff had no remedy against G. in that action which treated the letting to G. as an existing letting; but as against T. he was entitled to a declaration that the letting to G. was a breach of T.'s agreement with the plaintiff, and an enquiry as to the damages sustained by the breach, with liberty to apply for an injunction in case there should be any attempt at any further letting such as that to G. The principle of Kemp v. Bird (46 L. J. Ch. 828; 5 Ch. D. 549, 974) applied. Brigg v. Thornton, 73 L. J. Ch. 301; [1904] 1 Ch. 386; 90 L. T. 327; 52 W. R. 276—C.A.

(f) To Insure.

Covenant to Insure—Sale by Tenant to Landlord.—See VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

(g) Licensed Premises.

Brewer's Lease—Covenant to Buy Beer from Lessor—Construction—Assignment of Reversion—Liability.—A lessor, described as a brewer, leased to the defendant's predecessors in title a beerhouse for a term of fourteen years, and the lessee covenanted that he, his executors, administrators, and assigns, and all other persons for the time being carrying on the business of a beer retailer or publican upon the premises, would during the term deal exclusively "with the lessor or his firm or his or their successors in business" for all beers, &c., sold upon the premises. The lease provided that, where the context allowed, the word "lessor" should include the executors, administrators, and assigns of the lessor. The reversion expectant on the lease became vested in the plaintiffs, who were brewers, and the lease became vested in the defendant. The firm of the original lessor were still carrying on business as brewers, and were willing to supply the defendant, who was willing to deal with them:—Held, that the context did not allow of the insertion of the words "executors, administrators, and assigns" after the word "lessor" in the covenant to deal exclusively with the lessor, &c.] and that there was no breach of the covenant so long as the defendant dealt with the firm of the original lessor, and no obligation on him to take his bear from the plaintiffs. Doe v. Reid (8 L. J. (o.s.) K.B. 328; 10 B. & C. 849) and Clegg v. Hands (59 L. J. Ch. 477; 44 Ch. D. 503) considered. Birmingham Breweries v. Jameson, 67 L. J. Ch. 403; 78 L. T. 512—C.A. Reversing, 46 W. R. 375—Byrne, J.

Covenant to Insure Licence against "loss or forfeiture"—Non-renewal of Licence on Ground of Non-necessity.—By a lease of a public-house in 1898 it was provided that, if the licensing authority should for any cause whatsoever refuse to renew the licence, the lease should determine, but the above provision should not take effect unless and until the lessee should have effected an insurance of the demised premises in accordance with the covenant therein-after contained; and the lessee covenanted with the lessor to insure and keep insured against loss or forfeiture the licence of the premises in the sum of 400l. The lessee insured the licence, but excluded from the policy the risk of non-renewal, on the ground that the licence was not required by the necessities of the neighbourhood. In 1904 the licensing Justices refused the renewal of the licence upon the ground that it was not required by the necessities of the neighbourhood:—Held, that there had been a "loss" of the licence within the meaning of the covenant, and that the lessee had committed a breach thereof by not insuring against such loss. Williams v. Lassell and Sharnman, 22 T. L. R. 448—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Covenant by Lessee for Himself and "Assigns"—Sub-lessee for Part of Term—Liability for Act of Sub-lessee.—By the lease of a public-house the lessee covenanted for himself and assigns not to wilfully do or suffer any act or thing which might be a breach of the rules and regulations established by law for the conducting of licensed public-houses or be a reasonable ground for withdrawing or withholding the licence thereof. The lessee assigned the lease to the defendant, who sub-let the premises to a tenant, who became the holder of the licence, for a term expiring before the original lease. The sub-tenant while in possession was convicted of permitting drunkenness on the premises, and at the general annual licensing meeting the renewal of the licence was refused. In an action by the lessor against the defendant to recover damages for breach of covenant,—Held, that there had been no breach, as the sub-tenant was not an "assign" within the meaning of the covenant, and that the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to recover. Bryant v. Hancock, 67 L. J. Q.B. 507; [1893] 1 Q. B. 716; 78 L. T. 397; 46 W. R. 386; 62 J. P. 324—C.A.

Affirmed on the grounds that on the evidence and on the construction of a covenant by the tenant of licensed premises there had been no breach of the covenant. Bryant v. Hancock, 68 L. J. Q.B. 889; [1899] A.C. 442; 81 L. T. 96—H.L. (E.)

Covenant to "keep and conduct" Public-house in Proper Manner—Under-lessee Permitting Drunkenness.—A lease of licensed premises contained a covenant by the lessees that they would at all times during the term keep and conduct the premises in a regular and proper manner in every respect, and would apply for and use their best endeavours when required to obtain a renewal of the existing licences, and would not knowingly or willingly do or suffer any act whereby the same might become indorsed or forfeited or whereby the renewal thereof might be refused, and would not commit any offence against the licensing laws for the time being in force. An under-tenant of the lessees having been convicted of permitting drunkenness upon the demised premises, the renewal of the licence was refused by the Justices at the next general annual licensing meeting:—Held, that there was an absolute obligation upon the lessees to keep and conduct the premises during the term in a regular and proper manner; that their obligation was not qualified by the later words of the covenant; and that there had been a breach of that obligation. Bryant v. Hancock & Co. (68 L. J. Q.B. 889; [1899] A.C. 442) distinguished. Paethorpe v. Home Brewery, Ltd., 75 L. J. K.B. 555; [1906] 2 K.B. 5; 94 L. T. 871; 54 W. R. 489; 22 T. L. R. 505—C.A.

Covenant not to "suffer to be done" any Act whereby Renewal of Licence might be Withheld—Under-lease—Conviction of Under-lessee.—By the lease of a public-house the lessee for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns covenanted that he would not suffer to be done on the premises any act whereby the renewal of the licence might be withheld. An assignee of the lease sub-let the premises to an under-tenant, who was convicted of an offence against the licensing laws in consequence of which the renewal of the licence was refused. In an action against the assignee of the lease by the assignee of the reversion for breach of the covenant,—Held, that the under-tenant was not the agent or servant of the assignee of the lease so as to make the latter liable upon the covenant for the act of the under-tenant. Toleman v. Portbury (39 L. J. Q.B. 136; L. R. 5 Q.B. 288) followed. Bryant v. Hancock (68 L. J. Q.B. 889; [1899] A.C. 442) distinguished. Wilson v. Twamley, 73 L. J. K.B. 703; [1904] 2 K.B. 99; 90 L. T. 751; 52 W. R. 529; 20 T. L. R. 440—C.A.

House Kept as an Inn—Exhibiting Notices Restricting Sale of Liquor.—The defendant expended money upon converting a village public-house into an inn with good accommodation for guests who desired to stay there. The plaintiffs, who were the owners of the house, gave him a lease thereof for a term of fifty years, and the defendant covenanted that he would not use the premises otherwise than as an inn, tavern, or licensed house, and that he would during the term, so long as the requisite licences could be obtained, keep the house open in due and proper course of business as an inn, tavern, or licensed victualling house during the greatest number of days and the greatest number of hours that should be allowed by law, and would conduct and manage the same in a lawful and proper manner, and would not do or suffer anything whereby the licences or any of them might be or become liable to be forfeited or suspended, or the renewal thereof withheld, or whereby the trade or business, or the goodwill thereof, might be or be liable to be prejudicially affected, or break the laws affecting licensed victuallers either by act of commission or omission, and would not affix any advertisement or placard in the premises except trade advertisements. The defendant proposed to exhibit a notice in the house that no one would be served with refreshment on Sunday except visitors staying in the hotel and their guests and travellers, and that no one would be served with alcoholic drink more than once during any morning or afternoon or evening on any weekday:—Held, that the proposed mode of carrying on the business was a breach of the covenants in the lease. Dartford Brewery Co. v. Till, 95 L. T. 636; 70 J. P. 519; 22 T. L. R. 792—C.A.

Covenant not to Do or Suffer any Act—Sub-lease—Breach by Sub-tenant—Liability of Assignee of Lessee.—T. being the assignee of a lease which contained a covenant that the lessee would not do or suffer to be done on the premises any acts whereby the licence might be forfeited or indorsed, sub-leased to K., such sub-lease containing a covenant to the same effect. K. committed a breach of the licensing laws and the Justices refused to renew the licence. In an action against T. by the lessor to recover damages for breach of the covenant,—Held, that T. had not suffered the act to be done, and was not liable. Wilson v. Twamley, 88 L. T. 808—Kennedy, J.

Covenant by Lessee for Himself and Assigns—Sub-lessee for Part of Term—Liability for Act of Sub-lessee.—Where a lease of a public-house contains a covenant whereby the lessee for himself and his assigns covenants with the lessor and his assigns in manner following—that is to say, “The lessee will at all times during the continuance of this demise use and keep open the said premises as a licensed public-house for the sale of ale wine beer and spirits therein and will so conduct and manage the same as to afford no reasonable or lawful ground or pretence for the Justices refusing to renew endorsing or objecting to renewal of the licences now attached to the said premises for the sale of ale wines and spirituous liquors and which licences are hereby agreed and declared to be the property of the lessor but any endorsement which may be made on the said licences shall not be deemed a breach of the covenant contained in this clause if the conviction in respect of which such endorsement shall have been made is reversed or annulled on appeal”—the covenant is an absolute one that the licence shall not be endangered by any one, and therefore if a sub-lessee by demise of the public-house is convicted of opening the house in prohibited hours the covenant is broken, and the lessee and his assigns will be liable at the suit of the lessor for the breach. The judgments in Bryant v. Hancock (67 L. J. Q.B. 507; [1898] 1 Q.B. 716; 68 L. J. Q.B. 889; [1899] A.C. 442) explained. Mumford v. Walker, 71 L. J. K.B. 19; 85 L. T. 518—Ridley, J.

Lease—Licence to Assign—Tied House—“Fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine.”—The lease of licensed premises contained a provision that the lessee should not assign or under-let the premises without the consent in writing of the lessor unless such consent should be unreasonably withheld. The lessee, being desirous of assigning the lease, sought to obtain the consent of the lessor to an assignment to a particular brewery, but the lessor, while willing to consent unconditionally to an assignment to a private person, declined to consent to an assignment to any brewery unless the rent was increased by 25l. per annum and the length of the term extended. His reason for this was that an assignment to a brewery would turn the premises into a tied house, and would in his opinion cause the value of his reversion to be depreciated:—Held, that the imposition of such a condition contravened the provision contained in section 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, and that in seeking to impose an illegal condition the defendant must be taken to have withheld his consent unreasonably, and the lessee was therefore at liberty to assign the premises to the particular brewery without obtaining any further consent of the lessor. Jenkins v. Price, 76 L. J. Ch. 507; [1907] 2 Ch. 229; 23 T. L. R. 608—Swinfen Eady, J. See in C.A., infra.

The lease of a public-house contained covenants on the part of the lessee to reside on the premises, and personally conduct the business, and not to assign without the consent of the lessor unless such consent was unreasonably withheld. The lessee proposing to assign the lease to a limited company,—Held, that the lessor could reasonably withhold his consent, a limited company being unable to perform the covenant to reside on the premises and personally conduct the business. Jenkins v. Price, 77 L. J. Ch. 41; [1908] 1 Ch. 10; 24 T. L. R. 70; 97 L. T. 734; 14 Manson, 343—C.A.

Decision of SWINFEN EADY, J. (76 L. J. Ch. 507; [1907] 2 Ch. 229), reversed on this ground, the Court expressing no opinion upon the points decided in the Court below. Id.

Covenant to Assign and Transfer Licence at End of Term to Landlord—Death of Tenant—Executrix Declining to Carry on Business and Closing Premises—Loss of Licence.—J. W. was tenant of a licensed house under an agreement which contained covenants by him first, not to do or suffer any act whereby the licence might be forfeited or affected prejudicially, or the renewal might be withheld; secondly, that he would do all acts necessary to procure a renewal of the licence, and not to assign or sub-let without consent; and thirdly, at the expiration of the term to do all acts necessary for assigning and transferring the then existing licence to the landlord's nominee. J. W. died on October 26, 1902, and by his will appointed the defendant, his widow, sole executrix. J. W. had a licence for the year ending October, 1902, and had obtained a certificate from the magistrates at the licensing sessions for a renewal, but had not paid the duty. A few days after his death, B., one of the plaintiffs, was told by the defendant that she would not carry on the business, and intended to surrender the premises. The defendant agreed to pay the duty, and gave B. the amount of same, which he agreed to pay for her. B. paid the duty, and took out the licence in J. W.'s name, handing same to M., a solicitor who had

J. W. was in his possession; but M. was not retained or instructed by the defendant. On November 29, 1902, M., without instructions from the defendant, obtained an interim transfer of the licence to the defendant. The defendant refused to open the premises, and on January 31, 1903, removed the stock-in-trade, and sent the keys to the plaintiffs, who took possession next day. The plaintiffs took no steps to obtain an interim transfer or a new licence, although the defendant offered to do everything necessary to transfer the licence. The licence was lost:—Held, that the defendant as executrix was not bound to take out a licence pending a surrender of the licensed premises, and that her omission to take it out and to carry on the publican's business was not an act done by her, by which the existing licence was forfeited. Brown v. Watson, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 218—C.A.

(h) To Maintain Road.

Until "taken to" by Local Authority.—The defendant in the course of developing certain building land, in the year 1888, formed a road on the boundary between his property and land belonging to the plaintiff, and laid a sewer under it. The plaintiff contributed to the expense, and the defendant on his part covenanted that "the said J. M. [the plaintiff] his heirs or assigns, or his or their tenant, shall not be under any liability to contribute to the maintenance or repair of the said roadway and sewer and main drain or any works connected therewith; but on the contrary the same and every part thereof shall be wholly and solely maintained by the said J. W. T. [the defendant] his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, unless and until the same shall be taken to by the parish, or some other local or public authority." In 1901 the local authority made the road up under the Public Health Act, at the expense of the frontagers, and afterwards declared it a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled under the covenant to recover from the defendant the share of the expense of making up the road apportioned on the plaintiff, as the covenant only imposed an obligation on the defendant to contribute towards the cost of maintaining and repairing the roadway as constructed by the defendant in 1888, and did not extend to sums expended by the local authority in converting the roadway into a street of a different character. Moore v. Todd, 68 J. P. 43; 2 L. G. R. 376—C.A.

To Pay a Proportionate Share of Repairing and Maintaining a Road until Undertaken by Local Authority—Standard of Repair.—The plaintiff, in developing a building estate, granted a lease of one piece of land and conveyed another piece of land to the defendant, the property all abutting on a newly made and incomplete road. The lease and the conveyance both contained covenants by the defendant, in similar but slightly different language, to pay a proportionate share, to be fixed by the plaintiff's surveyor, of repairing and maintaining the road until undertaken by the local authority. For three years the defendant paid small contributions in common with other frontagers; but when the plaintiff, by arrangement with the local authority, in order that the road might be taken over by them, expended a large sum on extensive works on the road, the defendant declined to pay his apportioned share of the outlay:—Held, that the defendant's covenants did not extend to the work done, which was practically a reconstruction of the road, to which the defendant was not liable to contribute; and that as the plaintiff declined to amend his claim by asking for an enquiry as to what part of the work could be called repairs, the action must be dismissed with costs. Scott v. Brown, 69 J. P. 89; 4 L. G. R. 103—C.A.

(i) To Pay "Outgoings."

"All impositions and outgoing"—Bakehouse—Certificate of Suitability—Alterations—Apportionment of Expenses.—By a lease made in 1903 premises were let for a term of twenty-one years at a yearly rent of 50l. as an underground bakehouse. The lease contained a covenant that the lessee would during the term "pay all existing and future taxes, rates, duties, assessments, impositions and outgoing of every description for the time being payable either by landlord or tenant in respect of the premises respectively (except landlord's property tax)." The certificate of suitability required by section 101 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, could not be obtained unless structural alterations were made in the premises:—Held, that the expenses of the alterations were "impositions and outgoing" within the meaning of the covenant, and therefore that they must be borne by the lessee. Monk v. Arnold (71 L. J. K.B. 441; [1902] 1 K. B. 761) considered. Goldstein v. Hollingsworth, 73 L. J. K.B. 826; [1904] 2 K.B. 573; 91 L. T. 85; 68 J. P. 383; 2 L. G. R. 879; 20 T. L. R. 550—D.

Bakehouse—Certificate of Suitability—Alterations—Apportionment of Expenses.—By a lease granted in 1899 premises were let for a term of twenty-one years at a yearly rent of 70l. as an underground bakehouse. The lease contained a covenant by the tenant to pay "all existing and future taxes, rates, assessments and outgoing of every description whether parliamentary parochial or otherwise for the time being payable either by the landlord or tenant in respect of the said premises (except landlord's property tax)." As a certificate of suitability of the bakehouse could not otherwise be obtained certain structural alterations were made in the premises. The expenses of the alterations having been paid by the tenant, the magistrate made an order under section 101, sub-section 8 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, apportioning part of the expenses upon the landlord:—Held, that the expenses were "outgoings" within the meaning of the covenant; that as there was an express covenant applicable to the expenses, the magistrate had no jurisdiction under the sub-section to take into account the other circumstances of the case; and therefore that the magistrate was wrong, and the expenses must be borne by the tenant. Goldstein v. Hollingsworth (supra) explained and followed. Morris v. Beal, 73 L. J. K.B. 830; [1904] 2 K.B. 585; 91 L. T. 486; 68 J. P. 542; 2 L. G. R. 1171; 20 T. L. R. 682—D.

Underground Bakehouse—Expenses of Structural Alterations Required by Local Authority before Granting Certificate.]—A lease of an underground bakehouse contained a covenant by the lessee to pay and discharge "all burdens, duties, assessments, outgoings, and impositions rated, taxed, charged, assessed, or imposed" on the premises:—Held, that the tenant was liable under the covenant to pay the whole of the expense of structural alterations required by the local authority under section 101 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, notwithstanding that the work had been done by the landlord after the date of a magistrate's order apportioning the expense between the landlord and tenant. Goldstein v. Hollingsworth (73 L. J. K.B. 826; [1904] 2 K.B. 578) and Morris v. Beal (73 L. J. K.B. 830; [1904] 2 K.B. 585) followed. Stuckey v. Hooke, 3 L. G. R. 633; 69 J. P. 119—Warrington, J.

"All rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoings"—Expenses Incurred by Landlord under Notice to Abate Nuisance.]—A lessee, under a covenant to pay outgoings in respect of the demised premises, is not liable to pay for structural works executed by the landlord, in compliance with a notice from the sanitary authority requiring him to execute such works for the purpose of abating a nuisance, if the works are of such a character that it could not have been within the reasonable contemplation of the parties that the tenant should pay for them. Accordingly the lessee of a cottage in London let from year to year at 20l. a year is not liable, under a covenant to pay "outgoings," to pay expenses incurred by the landlord in reconstructing drains or paving a yard under notice from the sanitary authority requiring him to abate a nuisance, as, in view of the shortness of the term and the small value of the property, it could not have been in the contemplation of the parties that the tenant should bear such expenses. But the tenant is liable for the expense of providing a supply of water to a water-closet, as, having regard to section 37, sub-section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, it might, even in the case of property of small value let from year to year, be in the contemplation of the parties that the tenant should bear such expense. Valpy v. St. Leonard's Wharf Co., 1 L. G. R. 305; 67 J. P. 402—Farwell, J.

"Outgoings"—"In respect of the premises"—Agreement.]—In an agreement for the tenancy of a house for a term of three years and then from year to year, at a yearly rent of 55l. free from deductions except landlord's property tax, the tenant agreed to pay all taxes, rates, assessments, and outgoings of every description for the time being payable in respect of the premises as they became due (landlord's property tax only excepted as aforesaid). The tenant also agreed to keep and leave the premises in as good condition as they were at the date of the agreement (reasonable wear and tear excepted); to keep pipes, water-closets and cisterns clean; and to repair internal pipes and taps. While the tenant was in occupation under this agreement the sanitary authority served on the landlord a notice to reconstruct the drainage:—Held, that the expenses of doing the work were "outgoings" within the meaning of the agreement and the contemplation of the parties, and that the tenant was bound to pay them. Stockdale v. Ascherberg, 73 L. J. K.B. 206; [1904] 1 K.B. 447; 90 L. T. 111; 52 W. R. 289; 68 J. P. 241; 2 L. G. R. 529; 20 T. L. R. 235—C.A.

"Outgoings imposed on or payable in respect of the premises"—Reconstruction of House Drainage.]—A covenant by a lessee that he will pay "... all sewers rates and all other rates, taxes, outgoings, and assessments whatsoever ... imposed or assessed upon or payable in respect of the premises," includes the cost of works amounting to a reconstruction of the house drainage rendered necessary in order to comply with a notice to abate a nuisance on the premises. Antil v. Godwin, 63 J. P. 441—Bruce, J.

Abatement of Nuisance by Landlord—Liability of Tenant under Covenant.]—A lease of a house for a term of years at the yearly rental of 70l. contained a covenant by the tenant to pay all "outgoings in respect of the premises." On the expiration of the lease the lessee continued to occupy the premises and pay the rent, a yearly tenancy being thus created:—Held, that the covenant would not be imported into the yearly tenancy so as to render the lessee liable for an expense of 70l. incurred by the lessor in abating a nuisance on the premises pursuant to a notice from the sanitary authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, as, in view of the shortness of the term and the amount of the rent, it was inconsistent with the presumed intention of the parties that the lessee should be liable for so great an expense. Valpy v. St. Leonard's Wharf Co. (1 L. G. R. 305) applied. Stockdale v. Ascherberg (73 L. J. K.B. 492; [1903] 1 K.B. 873) distinguished. Harris v. Hickman, 73 L. J. K.B. 31; [1904] 1 K.B. 13; 89 L. T. 722; 68 J. P. 65; 2 L. G. R. 1; 20 T. L. R. 18—Wright, J.

Where a lessor of premises incurs expense voluntarily and not under any legal obligation in abating a nuisance thereon, he cannot recover such expense from the lessee under a covenant by the latter to pay all "outgoings in respect of the premises." Ib.

Paving Expenses Paid by Landlord—Liability of Tenant.]—The plaintiff demised to the defendants certain premises for a period of twenty-one years at an annual rent, the defendants covenanting to pay "all rates taxes and outgoings now payable or hereafter to become payable" in respect of the demised premises. The local authority having, under the provisions of section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, executed certain paving works on a road upon which the demised premises abutted, the plaintiff paid to the local authority her proportion of the expenses incurred by them in executing the works, and brought an action against the defendants to recover the amount:—Held, that the paving expenses were "outgoings" payable in respect of the demised premises, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Greaves v. Whitmarsh, Watson & Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 633; [1906] 2 K.B. 340; 95 L. T. 425; 70 J. P. 415; 4 L. G. R. 718—D.

New Rate—To be Borne by Landlord—Agreement to the Contrary.]—A tenant from year to year agreed to pay all outgoings. In the course of the tenancy a new rate was imposed, to be paid by the tenant, who could deduct it from the rent, apart from any agreement to the contrary:—Held, that the tenant could deduct it, as the agreement between him and his landlord did not apply to such a new rate, and that there was no agreement to the contrary. But that it could only be deducted from the current rent, and that past rates which the tenant had paid could not be deducted, but only that for the current year. Mile End Old Town Vestry v. Whitty, 78 L. T. 80—Wright, J.

All "Present and future" Rates and "Outgoings" Charged on Premises—Sub-lease between Completion and Final Apportionment—Covenant by Sub-lessee to Keep his Lessor Indemnified against Covenants of Superior Lease.]—A covenant in a lease whereby the lessee covenants to "pay and bear all present and future rates, taxes, duties, assessments, and outgoings charged upon the" demised "premises or the owner or occupier in respect thereof without any deduction except for landlord's property tax" does not cover a charge in respect of the expenses of private street works executed under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, which works were completed before the making of the lease, although the final apportionment of the expenses was not made until afterwards. *Stock v. (j) For Quiet Enjoyment.

Implied Covenant for—"Agrees to let."]—A covenant for quiet enjoyment is implied by law from the use in a tenancy agreement of the words, "agrees to let," or any equivalent words creating the relationship of landlord and tenant. Budd-Scott v. Daniel, 71 L. J. K.B. 706; [1902] 2 K.B. 351; 87 L. T. 392; 51 W. R. 184—D. And see CONTRACT.

Temporary Obstruction of Access—Railway—Statutory Powers—Injury to Land—Action in High Court—Compensation—Jurisdiction.]—An action will not lie against a railway company for breaches of covenant committed by them in the exercise without negligence of their statutory powers. The only remedy for such breaches is compensation under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway v. Anderson, 67 L. J. Ch. 568; [1898] 2 Ch. 394; 78 L. T. 821—C.A.

A temporary inconvenience caused by the interference of the lessor with the access of his tenant to the demised premises, but which does not affect the estate or title or possession of the tenant, is not a breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Sanderson v. Berwick-upon-Tweed (Corporation) (53 L. J. Q.B. 559; 13 Q.B. D. 547) explained. Ib.

Erection by Lessor of Flats on Adjoining Property Causing Lessee's Chimneys to Smoke.]—

A lessor granted to the lessee a lease for twenty-one years of a certain house for the purpose of carrying on his profession of physician and surgeon. The lease contained the usual covenant for quiet enjoyment. At the date of the lessee entering into possession the lessor was erecting on adjoining property a large block of flats which he subsequently completed. The flats were carried to a height which considerably exceeded that of the lessee's house, and the effect of this was to cause the smoke to be driven down the plaintiff's chimneys by the impact of the wind on the flats, and thereby to render some of the rooms at times practically uninhabitable:—Held, that what had been done by the lessor, although it did not affect the title to or possession of the house, was a substantial physical interference with its enjoyment, and therefore constituted a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Tebb v. Cave, 69 L. J. Ch. 282; [1900] 1 Ch. 642; 82 L. T. 115; 48 W. R. 318—Buckley, J.

Assignment of Reversion—Subsequent Purchase of Adjoining Property by Assignee—Nuisance on Adjoining Premises—Liability of Assignee.]—In 1897 the plaintiff took a lease of offices for fourteen years, with a covenant for quiet enjoyment in the ordinary form against eviction or disturbance by the lessor or any person lawfully claiming under him. In 1898 the defendants purchased the lessor's reversion, and in 1900 they purchased from a stranger the house adjoining the house in which the plaintiff's offices were. They pulled down this house, and built on the site of it a new house, which was higher than the old one, and caused the plaintiff's chimneys to smoke, so as to interfere with the enjoyment of his offices:—Held, that the defendants were not liable as for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Davis v. Town Properties Investment Corporation, 72 L. J. Ch. 589; [1903] 1 Ch. 797; 88 L. T. 665; 51 W. R. 417—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Quære, whether Tebb v. Cave (69 L. J. Ch. 282; [1900] 1 Ch. 642) was rightly decided on the ground of breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment. Ib.

Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Section 11 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, has not altered the old law as to the class of covenants the burden of which will run with the reversion. Ib.

Liability of Landlord for Acts of Assignee or Reversion.]—Where a lessor covenants that the lessee shall peaceably enjoy the demised premises without any interruption by the lessor or any person claiming under him, the effect of the covenant is that the lessor agrees to be bound by any act of interruption by himself or by any person whom he has expressly or impliedly authorised to do the act, but he is not responsible for wrongful or negligent acts which he has not authorised. Sanderson v. Berwick-upon-Tweed Corporation (53 L. J. Q.B. 559; 13 Q.B. D. 547) followed. Williams v. Gabriel, 75 L. J. K.B. 149; [1906] 1 K.B. 155; 94 L. T. 17; 54 W. R. 379; 22 T. L. R. 217—Bray, J.

Restrictive Covenant in Original Lease—Implied Contract or Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment of Title by Under-lessee.—By an agreement in writing, not under seal, which operated as an immediate demise, the defendant let to the plaintiff, who agreed to take, the lower part of certain premises for the term of three years certain. The defendant held the premises for an unexpired term under a lease which contained a covenant against carrying on any trade or business upon the premises. The plaintiff was not aware of the existence of this covenant in the superior lease, and the agreement with the defendant contained no covenant against carrying on business. The plaintiff entered into possession under the agreement, and carried on his trade or business therein. The defendant's lessors in an action against both the plaintiff and the defendant obtained an injunction restraining the plaintiff from carrying on his trade or business. In an action by the plaintiff to recover damages for breach of contract for quiet enjoyment, —Held, that whatever contract or covenant could be implied by the use of the word "let," an unlimited contract or covenant for quiet enjoyment against acts of persons not claiming under the lessor could not be implied, and consequently that the defendant was not liable for the interruption by title paramount. Baynes v. Lloyd (64 L. J. Q.B. 787; [1895] 2 Q.B. 610) discussed. Jones v. Lavington, 72 L. J. K.B. 98; [1903] 1 K.B. 253; 88 L. T. 223; 51 W. R. 161—C.A.

Sub-lease—Action of Ejectment by Superior Landlord against Lessee—Consent to Judgment.—In a sub-lease by the defendant to the plaintiff, the defendant covenanted for quiet enjoyment by the plaintiff "without interruption by him or any person lawfully claiming through him." The superior landlord, to whom the reversion on the defendant's lease had been assigned after the sub-demise to the plaintiff, sued the defendant to recover possession of the premises for a breach of a condition not to assign or sub-let by the sub-lease to the plaintiff. The defendant consented to judgment in that action, and the plaintiff was turned out of possession:—Held, that the interruption of the enjoyment of the plaintiff was caused by the direct act of the defendant in consenting to judgment in the action by the superior landlord, and that there was a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Kelly v. Rogers ([1892] 1 Q.B. 910) distinguished. Cohen v. Tannar, 69 L. J. Q.B. 904; [1900] 2 Q.B. 609; 83 L. T. 64; 48 W. R. 642—C.A.

Residential Flats—Express Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment—General Scheme—Implied Obligation—Nuisance.—The plaintiff was the tenant of a flat under an agreement with C. which contained the usual covenant for quiet enjoyment. The adjoining flats in the same building were held by other tenants under similar agreements, in all of which there was a stipulation by the tenant that he would not permit the premises to be used for any unlawful or immoral purpose, but, on the contrary, would as much as possible contribute to the respectability of the building and keep the premises as a private dwelling-house or residential chambers. C. contracted to sell the building, but no actual assignment of the lease had been executed, when the plaintiff brought an action against the ultimate purchasers, as the equitable assignees of the reversion, on the ground that the flat adjoining his own was being used for immoral purposes. He complained that a nuisance was thereby created and damage sustained by him; and he claimed a declaration that the defendants were bound by the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and an injunction to restrain them from permitting the adjoining flat to be used so as to interfere with the quiet enjoyment by the plaintiff of his flat; and from permitting any act inconsistent with the terms of the agreement. The defendants counter-claimed for arrears of rent, and submitted that no cause of action against them was disclosed. The points of law were first argued. It was decided by Buckley, J., that the covenant for quiet enjoyment related only to freedom from disturbance by adverse claimants extending to physical interference with the use by the plaintiff of his flat as distinguished from its comfortable enjoyment; that the case must go on to trial on this point; that the defendants were not liable for the acts of persons acting adversely to them; but that it might be shown at the hearing that such acts were impliedly authorised by continued receipt of rent from the offending tenant; and, further, that the plaintiff could rely on there being a general scheme for the use of the flats. The defendants appealed:—Held, that, on the grounds stated by Buckley, J., it was impossible at the present stage of the proceedings for the Court to say that there might not be a cause of action capable of proof; that whether that was so or not must depend upon what took place at the trial of the action; and that therefore the case must go to trial. Jaeger v. Mansions Consolidated, Ltd., 87 L. T. 690—C.A.

"At the cost of the lessee"—Determination by Arbitration of Fine Payable by Lessee—Costs of Reference and Award.—Where a lease contains a covenant "that the lessors their heirs or assigns will at any time during the said term, upon the request and at the costs of the lessee his executors and administrators or assigns, and on payment by him or them of a fine calculated according to the table hereunder written upon the number of years of the said term which have expired and the full improved annual value of the premises at the time of such renewal (such value to be determined by the said surveyor or at the option of the lessee by the award of two referees or their umpire) renew or cause to be renewed the said term for a further term . . . at the like rent and subject to the like covenants and conditions as are herein reserved and contained including this present covenant for renewal," the costs of renewal include the costs of an arbitration properly entered upon for the purpose of determining the fine payable by the lessee. Fitzsimmons v. Mostyn (Lord), 73 L. J. K.B. 72; [1904] A.C. 46; 89 L. T. 616; 52 W. R. 337; 20 T. L. R. 134.—H.L. (E.)

Lease for Three Lives.—A lease for three lives contained a covenant by the lessor that he would, upon the dropping of any of the lives which should first happen within a specified term, on the payment of a fine by the lessee, and on the nomination by the lessee of a new life within six months after the death of the person so happening, first to die, add such new life in lieu of the person so happening first to die, and that he would in like manner from time to time successively, upon the failure of any and every other life in the said lease nominated and thereafter, to be successively nominated, on the like nomination and like payment of a fine, successively thereafter during the same term add the life or lives so successively nominated in the place and stead of each and every of the several persons so successively happening to die as aforesaid:—Held, that upon the true construction of this covenant it prescribed as necessary for obtaining a renewal the condition that the lessee should renew regularly within six months from the fall of each life, so as always to maintain (except during such six months) the full number of three lives, and that if he failed so to renew within six months from the dropping of any life he lost his right of renewal. Hussey v. Domville, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 265—C.A.

Lessor's Covenant to Repair—Construction.—The principles of construction of covenants to repair laid down in Lister v. Lane (62 L. J. Q.B. 583; [1893] 2 Q.B. 212) and Proudfoot v. Hart (59 L. J. Q.B. 389; 25 Q.B. D. 42), cases which deal with the liability of lessees in respect of lessees' covenants, are applicable to covenants by the lessor. Torrens v. Walker, 75 L. J. Ch. 645; [1906] 2 Ch. 166; 95 L. T. 409; 54 W. R. 584—Warrington, J.

A covenant by a lessor to repair the external wall or any part of a building is a covenant to repair on notice and not otherwise. Ib.

Tenant, by—House out of Repair through Age.—If premises through their own inherent defects fall in the course of the tenancy into a particular condition, the results of their being in that condition are not within the tenant's covenant to repair. Wright v. Lawson, 68 J. P. 34—C.A.

Agreement of Lessee to Erect Building on Land—Building not Erected—Acquiescence of Lessor—Release of Covenant.—The lessee of a plot of land covenanted with the lessor to complete a coach-house and stable upon the land within six months to the satisfaction of the lessor, and to keep in repair the demised buildings. The lease contained a proviso for re-entry on breach of covenant. The plot was one of a number of building plots subject to a building scheme. The scheme was subsequently modified, and no coach-house or stable was ever built, the lessor approving and consenting to the alteration. Rent was paid for the land for nearly forty years. In an action by the assignee of the lessor to recover possession for breach of the covenant to repair the coach-house and stable,—Held, that the true inference was that the parties intended to release the covenant to repair as regards the coach-house and stable. Gibbon v. Payne, 22 T. L. R. 54—A. T. Lawrence, J.

Demise by Under-lease of Part of Premises—Covenant with Under-lessee for Covenantor and Assigns to Observe as to Part not Demised—Covenant in Head-lease—Covenant Running with Land.—Certain premises were demised to a lessee who covenanted to repair buildings thereon subject to a clause of re-entry for breach. In an under-lease of part of these premises the lessee (who by reason of various mesne assignments was represented by the defendant) covenanted with the under-lessee (represented for the same reasons by the plaintiff) that he would observe and perform the covenant to repair in the head-lease as far as it related to or affected that part of the premises not so demised by the under-lease. The defendant committed a breach of this covenant to repair, whereupon the successors in title of the head landlord obtained judgment against him, and re-entered on the whole of the premises the subject-matter of the head-lease and ejected the plaintiff, who claimed damages from the defendant for breach of the covenant in the under-lease:—Held, that the covenant did not run with the land, and that the defendant was therefore not liable. Doughty v. Bowman (17 L. J. Q.B. 111; 11 Q.B. 444) discussed. Dewar v. Goodman, 76 L. J. K.B. 314; [1907] 1 K.B. 612; 96 L. T. 864; 23 T. L. R. 225—Jelf, J. Affirmed, 77 L. J. K.B. 169; 97 L. T. 885; [1908] 1 K.B. 94; 24 T. L. R. 62—C.A.

Covenant to Pay a Proportionate Share of Repairing and Maintaining a Road until Undertaken by Local Authority—Standard of Repair.—The plaintiff, in developing a building estate, granted a lease of one piece of land and conveyed another piece of land to the defendant, the property all abutting on a newly made and incomplete road. The lease and the conveyance both contained covenants by the defendant, in similar but slightly different language, to pay a proportionate share, to be fixed by the plaintiff's surveyor, of repairing and maintaining the road until undertaken by the local authority. For three years the defendant paid small contributions in common with other frontagers; but when the plaintiff, by arrangement with the local authority, in order that the road might be taken over by them, expended a large sum on extensive works on the road, the defendant declined to pay his apportioned share of the outlay:—Held, that the defendant's covenants did not extend to the work done, which was practically a reconstruction of the road, to which the defendant was not liable to contribute; and that as the plaintiff declined to amend his claim by asking for an enquiry as to what part of the work could be called repairs, the action must be dismissed with costs. Scott v. Brown, 69 J. P. 89—C.A. Affirming, 2 L. G. R. 441—Joyce, J.

To Pay Fair Share of Charge for Repairing Walls, Sewerage or Otherwise, Imposed by Virtue of an Act of Parliament.—In a lease of a factory for twenty-one years, the tenants covenanted to pay "all rates and taxes, sewers rate, and main drainage rate, parish dues, and all other rates, taxes, and impositions and outgoings whatsoever, which were then, or should at any time thereafter, be assessed, charged, or in anywise imposed upon or in respect of the demised premises . . . by authority of Parliament or otherwise." Then followed a covenant for repairs. Then the tenant further covenanted to pay "a fair share and proportion of all costs and expenses which the lessors in respect of being owners and lessors of the premises demised . . . might be called upon to bear, pay, or contribute, or would be liable to, in or about every or any reparation, pulling down, rebuilding, or raising of every or any party wall, party fence, wall, timber, partition, or party arch, off incidental thereto, or in or about any drainage or sewerage or otherwise, by virtue of any Act or Acts of Parliament." During the term the lessors as owners of the demised premises were compelled to spend 710*l.* in constructing a fire-escape according to the requirements of section 7 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891. In an action to recover this expense from the tenant,—Held, that it was not an imposition or outgoing under the first covenant, and even if it was, the second covenant was to be read as a proviso on the first, and the words "expenses which the lessors . . . might be called upon to pay . . . by virtue of any Act or Acts of Parliament," aptly described it and took it out of the operation of the first covenant. The tenant was therefore liable to pay not all, but a fair share of such expense. Arding v. Economic Printing and Publishing Co., 79 L. T. 420—D.

To Build and Repair—Forfeiture—Waiver—Notice.—The defendants covenanted, in the lease to them of lands, that they would pull down and rebuild certain messuages "within the space of 12 calendar months at the most from the date of these presents," and that they would repair "the said messuages and premises so to be erected as aforesaid." The lease contained a proviso for re-entry if there should be "any breach or non-observance of any of the lessees' covenants." The houses were not erected within the twelve months. More than four years after the date of the lease, the lessors served a notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, referring to the lease and reciting the "covenant on the part of the lessees that the lessees would within the space of 12 calendar months at the most from the date of the said lease" erect certain buildings, and the breach alleged was that "no shop, messuage or dwelling-house has been erected on the said piece of land," and the lessees were required "to erect buildings on the said piece of land in the manner prescribed by the said covenant":—Held, first, that the covenant to build within the space of twelve calendar months was broken at the expiration of that period, but that the forfeiture was waived by the receipt of rent subsequently accrued; secondly, that the covenant to repair "the said messuages and premises so to be erected as aforesaid" involved a continuing obligation to build; and thirdly, that the notice under section 14 must be read as referring to the express covenant to build within twelve calendar months, and not to the implied covenant to build generally. Jacob v. Dorn, 69 L. J. Ch.

493; [1900] 2 Ch. 156; 83 L. T. 191; 48 W. R. 441; 64 J. P. 552—Stirling, J.

Agreement of Lessee to Erect and Keep in Repair Building on Land—Building not Erected—Acquiescence of Lessor—Release of Covenant.—By a lease in 1866 the lessee of a plot of land covenanted with the lessor to complete a coach-house and stable upon the land within six months to the satisfaction of the lessor, and to keep in repair the demised buildings. The lease contained a proviso for re-entry on breach of covenant. The plot was one of a number of building plots subject to a building scheme. The scheme was subsequently modified, and no coach-house or stable was ever built, the lessor approving and consenting to the alteration. In an action by the assignee of the lessor to recover possession for breach of the covenant to repair the coach-house and stable:—Held, that the true inference was that the parties intended to release the covenant to repair as regards the coach-house and stable. Gibbon v. Payne, 23 T. L. R. 250—C.A.

Death of Sole Covenantor during Continuance of Term—Occupation and Payment of Rent till Expiration of Term by another Party to the Deed who did not Covenant—Declaration by Covenantor that he held as Trustee for the other Party—Legal or Equitable Liability to Perform Covenants.—Beneficial interest in a lease of premises, accompanied by occupation and payment of rent by a widow, party to the lease, but whose husband, also a party, had alone entered into covenants to repair and had died before the expiration of the term, creates no contract between the widow and the lessor legally binding her to perform the covenants in the lease, nor does it create any like equitable liability, notwithstanding a declaration in the lease by the husband that he held the premises as trustee for his wife as part of her separate estate. Ramage v. Womack, 69 L. J. Q.B. 40; [1900] 1 Q.B. 116; 81 L. T. 526—Wright, J.

Premises Let to Tenant without any Agreement by Landlord to Repair Part of Premises Sub-let by Tenant—Occupation by Sub-tenant's Manager and Wife—Repairs Voluntarily Done by Landlord—Repairs Negligently Executed by Landlord's Servants—Injury to Wife during Tenancy in Consequence of Negligence—Non-liability of Landlord.—The defendants, who were the owners of certain premises, and also of adjoining property, let the premises to W. & Co., but did not enter into any agreement to repair the same. W. & Co. sub-let a part of the premises to a company, whose manager, together with his wife—the plaintiff and family, resided upon the part so sub-let. The defendants had erected on their property adjoining the premises in question, and in proximity thereto, engines and plant for the purpose of generating electricity to light their property. The part of the premises sub-let to the company contained a lavatory, in which was fixed a water tank which, as alleged by the plaintiff, had become unsafe and dangerous by reason of the vibration caused by the engines and plant. Complaints as to the vibration and as to the condition of the water tank were made by the plaintiff and her husband to W. & Co., who communicated them to the defendants. The defendants thereupon sent two plumbers who were in their employment to repair the tank, and the plumbers put up a bracket to support the tank; but this bracket a few months afterwards fell upon and injured the plaintiff when using the lavatory. At the trial the jury found that the bracket fell by reason of the working of the engines, and that such working caused a vibration amounting to a nuisance; also that the defendants, in putting up the bracket and placing the tank upon it, did the work in such an improper and negligent manner as to leave the apparatus in a condition dangerous to any one using the lavatory, and that the plaintiff was injured in consequence thereof:—Held, that the plaintiff had no interest in the premises or any right of occupation in the proper sense of the term which gave her a cause of action based upon a nuisance against the defendants. Held, also, that in the absence of any contractual relation between the plaintiff and the defendants, the mere fact of their having voluntarily done the repairs to the tank—an act which was not done in the discharge of any duty to the plaintiff—gave the plaintiff no cause of action on the ground of negligence. Malone v. Laskey, 76 L. J. K.B. 1134; [1907] 2 K.B. 141; 97 L. T. 324; 23 T. L. R. 399—C.A.

Measure of Damages.—Certain premises were demised to the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs for sixty-one years from Michaelmas, 1837, subject to covenants to repair and deliver up in repair. The premises were sub-demised to the predecessors in title of the defendant subject to the same covenants. In 1894 an action was commenced by the plaintiffs against the defendant for damages for the breaches of the covenants, and 1,305*l.* was recovered, none of which was expended in repairing the premises. On September 19, 1898, the term of the underlease expired, and the plaintiffs claimed the sum that it would cost to put the premises into such state of repair as the defendant would be bound to leave them at the end of the term, making due allowance for the sum of 1,305*l.* they had received:—Held, that the true measure of damages for the breaches of covenant was the cost of putting the premises into the state of repair in which the tenant was bound to leave them at the expiration of the said term, less the sum of 1,305*l.* and interest. Ebbetts v. Conquest, 82 L. T. 560—D.

Payment for Years by Persons not Liable—Presumption of Lost Grant.—By indenture of June 23, 1703, the trustees of forfeited estates conveyed to D. the lands of Clonfad, Rattin, and Ballyoughter, in the county of Westmeath, in fee, subject to payment of the quit-rent of 12*l.* 13*s.* In 1708 H. (in whom D.'s interest in the lands was vested) granted to B. the lands of Clonfad, in fee, subject to the rent of 13*l.* over and above taxes, except quit-rent, which H. covenanted to pay. In 1710 H. granted to B.

the lands of Rattin, subject to the rent of 80*l.*, with the same provision as to quit-rent, which H. covenanted to pay. Since 1780, the quit-rent payable in respect of Rattin and Clonfad had been paid by the successive owners of the grantee's interest under the fee-farm grants of 1708 and 1710:—Held, that in the absence of any explanation of these payments being made by parties not liable thereto for so long a period, a lost grant must be presumed. Bomford's Estate, In re, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 474—C.A.

(n) To Pay Rates, Taxes, &c.

Lease of Portion of Large Building—Covenant by Lessor to Pay "Rates and taxes payable in respect of the demised premises"—Water Supplied under Water Company's Act.—A covenant by the lessor to pay "all rates and taxes payable in respect of the demised premises" will include the water rate in the case of a demise of a portion of a large building, to which at the date of the demise water is supplied for domestic purposes under a water company's Act incorporating the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Direct Spanish Telegraph Co. v. Shepherd (53 L. J. Q.B. 420; 13 Q.B. D. 202) followed. Bourn & Tant v. Salmon & Gluckstein, 76 L. J. Ch. 374; [1907] 1 Ch. 616; 96 L. T. 629; 71 J. P. 329—C.A.

Tenant's Covenant to Pay Rates, &c.—Private Street Works Executed before Date of Lease—Apportionment made after Commencement of Tenancy.—The share of the expenses of private street works executed under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for which the owner of any premises is liable, becomes a charge on the premises as from the completion of the works, though it is not payable till the apportionment has been made. Where, therefore, a lease of the premises is granted after the completion of the works, but before the apportionment, the landlord cannot recover the expenses from the tenant under a covenant on his part to pay all rates "taxes and assessments" in respect of the demised premises, whether or not such a covenant is wide enough to include expenses of the character. Surtees v. Woodhouse (72 L. J. K.B. 302; [1903] 1 K.B. 396) followed. Lumby v. Faupel, 90 L. T. 140; 2 L. G. R. 605; 68 J. P. 265; 20 T. L. R. 237—C.A.

Abatement of Nuisance Caused by Structural Defect—Incidence of Expense—Liability of Tenant to Indemnify Landlord.—Where a lessee has by his lease covenanted to "pay and discharge all taxes rates including sewers main drainage assessments and impositions whatsoever which now are or which at any time or times hereafter during the continuance of the said term hereby granted be taxed rated assessed charged or imposed upon or in respect of the said premises or any part thereof on the landlord tenant or occupier of the same premises by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever (landlord's property tax and tithe only excepted)," and the lease contains no covenant by the lessee or the landlord to repair, he is liable as between himself and his landlord to pay the expense of the abatement of a nuisance arising from a defect of a structural nature which has been required by the sanitary authority under section 4 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. Foulger v. Arding, 71 L. J. K.B. 499; [1902] 1 K.B. 700; 86 L. T. 485; 50 W. R. 417—C.A.

Covenant by Tenant to Pay all "Rates, taxes, and assessments"—Expenses of Paving Street.—The expense of paving a street incurred by a landlord under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is not recoverable by him from a tenant under a lease by which the tenant covenants to pay all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever which then are or during the said term shall be imposed or assessed upon the premises, or the landlord or tenant in respect thereof, by authority of Parliament or otherwise. Baylis v. Jiggins, 67 L. J. Q.B. 793; [1898] 2 Q.B. 315; 79 L. T. 78—Channell, J.

Expenses of Paving Rate.—A covenant in a lease that the lessee would during the continuance "pay all taxes, rates, and assessments imposed or assessed upon the premises, or on the landlord or tenant in respect thereof, does not impose on the lessee the apportioned cost of paving the road in front of the premises in respect of work done by the local authority under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, where the work was done before, but the apportionment was made after, the granting of the lease. Baylis v. Jiggins (67 L. J. Q.B. 793; [1898] 2 Q.B. 315) followed. Foulger v. Arding (71 L. J. K.B. 499; [1902] 1 K.B. 700) distinguished. Lumby v. Faupel, 88 L. T. 562; 51 W. R. 522; 67 J. P. 202; 1 L. G. R. 493—D.

"Rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoings"—Paving Expenses.—Apportioned paving expenses under the Public Health Act, 1875, which the landlord has paid, can be recovered from the tenant, where the latter has covenanted to pay all rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoings payable, or to become payable, whether by the landlord or tenant, in respect of the premises. Weld v. Clayton-le-Moors Urban Council, 86 L. T. 584—D.

Rates, Taxes, and "Demands"—Requirements of Local Authority as to Escape in Case of Fire.—A covenant on the lessee's part, in a lease of a factory granted in 1886, to pay rates, taxes, and all demands which shall or may be laid, imposed, or payable in respect of the premises, includes expenses incurred by the lessor in providing means of escape in case of fire in compliance with the requirements of the local authority under section 7 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891 (now replaced by provisions in section 14 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901). Foulger v. Arding (71 L. J. K.B. 499; [1902] 1 K.B. 700) followed. The lessor may recover the expenses from the lessee in an action on the covenant in the High Court, notwithstanding the provisions in the section giving the County Court jurisdiction, on the application of the owner of a factory, to make such order as appears just and equitable requiring the occupier to bear or contribute towards expenses incurred by the owner in complying with the requirements of the local authority. Monk v. Arnold (71 L. J. K.B. 441; [1902] 1 K.B. 761) distinguished and commented on. Semble, that the provisions giving this jurisdiction to the County Court are intended to apply only where there is no contract between the owner and lessee as to the expenses. Shepherd v. Barber, 1 L. G. R. 157; 67 J. P. 238—Lawrance, J.

"Duties"—Reconstruction of Drains—Incidence of Expense.—Where a lessee has by his lease covenanted to pay "all taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever which now are or hereafter may become payable for or in respect of" the demised property, he will be liable as between himself and his landlord to pay the expense of reconstruction of a drain which has been required by the vestry under the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855, s. 85. Brett v. Rogers (66 L. J. Q.B. 287; [1897] 1 Q.B. 525) approved and followed. Farlow v. Stevenson, 69 L. J. Ch. 106; [1900] 1 Ch. 128; 81 L. T. 589; 48 W. R. 213—C.A.

All "Impositions"—Notice from Sanitary Authority to Repair Drains—Liability.—A tenant under an agreement for three years, who has covenanted to pay the rent "free and clear from all deductions whatsoever" and to pay "all rates taxes assessments or impositions whatsoever whether Parliamentary parochial or otherwise which may become due or be assessed" in respect of the premises, is liable to pay the costs of repairs of drains and other sanitary work required by the sanitary authority, as such repairs may be considered to have been reasonably within the contemplation of both parties when entering into the agreement. Stockdale v. Asherberg (72 L. J. K.B. 492; [1903] 1 K.B. 873) followed. Warriner, In re; Brayshaw v. Nimis, 72 L. J. Ch. 701; [1903] 2 Ch. 367; 88 L. T. 766; 67 J. P. 351; 1 L. G. R. 765—Swinfen Eady, J.

All Charges—Repair of Defective Drain by Lessee by Order of Local Authority—Liability of Lessee.—A lease for years, granted by the plaintiff to the defendant, contained a covenant by the lessee to pay during the term "the sewers rate and all other taxes, rates, charges, and assessments whatsoever, Parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, which then were or hereafter should be imposed, charged, or assessed upon or in respect of the premises, or payable by either the owner or occupier in respect of the same." The lease also contained a covenant by the lessee to repair and keep in repair. In compliance with a notice given by the local authority, under section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the plaintiff did the work necessary to abate a nuisance caused by a defective drain upon the premises, and brought this action to recover the cost of that work:—Held, that the expenses of doing this work came within the terms of the covenant as a "charge imposed upon or in respect of the premises or payable by either the owner or occupier in respect of the same"; and that the lessee was therefore liable to pay the expense thereof himself. George v. Coates, 88 L. T. 48—C.A.

Covenant by Lessor to Pay Land Tax—Building Agreement—Increase in Annual Value of land—Proportion of Land Tax Payable by Lessor.—In pursuance of a building agreement the owners of a piece of land granted to a builder, on the completion of a certain house on the land, a lease of the house at a ground rent. By the lease the lessee covenanted to pay the rent and all outgoings except land tax and landlord's property tax, and the lessors covenanted to pay the land tax chargeable on the demised premises. The annual value of the land was increased when the houses were erected on the land:—Held, that the lessors were only liable to pay the proportion of the land tax based on the rent received by him, and not the land tax payable on the improved annual value of the land. Watson v. Home (7 B. & C. 285) and Smith v. Humble (15 C. B. 321) followed. Mansfield v. Relf, 71 J. P. 556—C.A.

"Assigns" of Lessee—Under-lease—Merger—Privity of Contract—Right of Action.]—By a lease of a portion of a freehold house the lessee covenanted to pay one-third of the water rate payable in respect of the whole house, and the lessor covenanted with the lessee, "his executors, administrators, and assigns," to pay all rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoings whatsoever other than the water rate to the extent covenanted to be paid by the lessee. The lessee sub-demised to the plaintiffs the premises held by him for the remainder of the term for which he held, less three days, and the plaintiffs, who had notice of the superior lease, covenanted to pay one-third of the water rate. The whole of the premises were at first included in one assessment by the local authority, but the ground floor demised and the other portions were subsequently separately assessed for the purposes of rates and taxes. The defendant, who had purchased both the freehold reversion and the superior lease, refused to pay the rates and taxes in respect of the grant comprised in the lease and under-lease. The plaintiffs, having been compelled by a threat of distress to pay these rates and taxes, brought an action to have it declared that their portion of the premises was free from such payments, except one-third of the water rate:—Held, that the plaintiffs, as under-lessees, were not "assigns" of their lessor, so as to be entitled to sue the defendant in respect of the positive covenant by the ground landlord in the original lease. South of England Dairies v. Baker, 76 L. J. Ch. 78; [1906] 2 Ch. 631; 96 L. T. 48—Joyce, J.

Held, also, that, there being no privity of contract or of estate between the under-lessee and the original lessor, the plaintiffs had no right of action at law and no equity to compel their immediate lessor to sue the ground landlord on the covenants in the original lease or to lend his name for that purpose in the absence of any provision to that effect in the under-lease. Ib.

Taxes, Charges, Rates, Duties, and Impositions—Cost of Paving New Street.]—The expense of paving a new street incurred by a landlord under section 77 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, is recoverable by him from a tenant under a lease by which the tenant covenants to "pay and discharge all taxes charges rates duties tithes and tithe rentcharge assessments and impositions whatever which are now or may at any time hereafter be taxed charged rated assessed or imposed upon the said premises or any part thereof or upon the landlord or tenant in respect thereof (the landlord's property tax only excepted)." Wix v. Autson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 298; [1899] 1 Q.B. 474; 80 L. T. 168—Bruce, J.

Payment of "impositions and outgoings." Charged on Demised Premises—"Fair share and proportion" of Expenses Paid by Lessor in Reparation or Otherwise by Virtue of any Act of Parliament.]—A lease contained (inter alia) two covenants by the tenant—one was to pay "all rates and taxes, sewers rates, and main drainage rate, parish dues, and all other rates, taxes, and impositions, and outgoings whatsoever," which might be in any wise imposed upon or in respect of the demised premises or upon the landlords in respect thereof by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever; the other was to pay a fair share and proportion of all costs and expenses which the lessors, in respect of being the owners of the demised premises, might, during the continuance of the term, be called upon to pay in or about "any reparation . . . or in or about any drainage or sewerage or otherwise by virtue of any Act or Acts of Parliament already made," or thereafter to be made. During the continuance of the term the landlords were compelled, under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, to spend money in making structural alterations on the demised premises. In an action by the landlords to recover from the tenant the whole of the amount so spent,—Held, that upon the true construction of the two covenants the tenant was liable to pay, not the whole, but only a fair share and proportion of the amount so spent. Arding v. Economic Printing and Publishing Co., 79 L. T. 622—C.A.

Land Tax—Covenant to Pay.]—See Mansfield v. Relf, 77 L. J. K.B. 145; [1908] 1 K.B. 71; 97 L. T. 745; 24 T. L. R. 79—C.A.

(c) Restrictive Covenants.

Right to Enforce by Injunction—Change in Character of Neighbourhood.]—The right of a person to enforce a restrictive covenant by injunction cannot be defeated by mere change in the character of the neighbourhood, unless there is an equity against him arising from his acts or conduct in sanctioning or knowingly permitting such change as to render it unjust for him to seek relief by injunction. Craig v. Greer, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 258—C.A.

As to User of Adjoining Property—Covenant by Lessor for Self, Heirs, Executors, Administrators, and Assigns—Liability of Subsequent Lessee of such Property—Notice.]—A bargain against particular user of land retained on sale or lease of part of an estate may be enforced by any person entitled in equity to the benefit of the bargain against any person bound in equity by notice of it, either express or to be imputed at the time of acquisition of his own title. This right does not depend upon the existence of a covenant running with the land or of any right to relief under the common law. Holloway v. Hill, 71 L. J. Ch. 818; [1902] 2 Ch. 612; 87 L. T. 201—Byrne, J.

The lessee of a person bound by a restrictive covenant may be sued in respect of a breach of such covenant whether assigns are therein mentioned or not. Ib.

Where a lease of certain shops contained a covenant by the lessor for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns not to permit or suffer to be carried on upon adjoining property the business of a general clothier and tailor, and the lessor subsequently demised an adjoining shop and permitted the lessee thereof (who had notice of the existence of some restrictive covenants) to carry on the business of a tailor, an injunction was, in an action by the first lessee against the lessor and the subsequent lessee, granted restraining such subsequent lessee from carrying on the business of a tailor on the premises demised to him. Ib.

(p) Covenant Running with Land.

Underlease—Demise by Underlessee—Covenant by Underlessee if Term Extended to Grant New Lease—Personal Covenant—Rule against Perpetuities—Assign of Reversion.—Where a lessor who was himself an underlessee covenanted with his lessee that if he should obtain from the freeholder any extension of his term he would grant a new lease to his lessee, it was held on the construction of the covenant that it was personal only to the lessor, and was not binding on his assign; that the covenant was not one for renewal strictly so called, and therefore did not run with the land; and that according to the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, s. 2, the covenant was limited to the reversion with which it ran—that is, the reversion which was vested in the covenantor at the time he entered into the covenant. Brereton v. Tuckey (8 Ir. C. L. R. 190), Kent v. Stoney (9 Ir. Ch. R. 249), and Coe v. Pascoe ([1899] 1 Ir. R. 125) followed. Muller v. Trafford, 70 L. J. Ch. 72; [1901] 1 Ch. 54; 49 W. R. 132—Farwell, J.

Tied House—Lessee's Covenant to Buy Beer from Landlord and His Successors in Business and not Elsewhere—Assigns not Mentioned.—A covenant by a tenant of a tied house that he "will at all times during his tenancy purchase from the landlords and their successors in business all beer, ale, porter, &c., whether sold or consumed on or off the demised premises, and that he will not at any time directly or indirectly sell or dispose of on the premises any beer, ale, &c., other than such as shall have been so bona fide purchased," is a covenant which will run with the land and be enforceable by the purchasers of the reversion and the landlord's brewery business, although the purchasers have at the time of action brought ceased to carry on such business at the original landlord's brewery. Manchester Brewery Co. v. Coombs, 70 L. J. Ch. 814; [1901] 2 Ch. 603—Farwell, J.

Lease Executed by Lessee only—Sale of Landlord's Business—Enforcement of Covenant by Purchaser—Specific Performance—Yearly

Tenancy.—Where an agreement for a yearly tenancy containing such a covenant has been executed by the lessee only, but the lessor or his assigns are in a position to compel the acceptance by the tenant of a duly executed lease, either of them can enforce performance of such a covenant, notwithstanding that the agreement is not a lease by deed within 32 Hen. 8, c. 34. Walsh v. Lonsdale (52 L. J. Ch. 2; 21 Ch. D. 9) and Swain v. Ayres (57 L. J. Q.B. 428; 21 Q.B. D. 289) followed. Clayton v. Illingworth (10 Hare, 451) distinguished. Ib.

Assignment of Reversion—Liability of Original Lessor.—A covenant running with the reversion, entered into by a lessor with his lessee, remains binding on the lessor, notwithstanding that he has assigned the reversion. Dictum in Eccles v. Mills (67 L. J. P.C. 25, 31, 32; [1898] A.C. 360, 371) approved and followed. Stuart v. Joy & Nantes, 78 L. J. K.B. 97; [1904] 1 K.B. 362; 90 L. T. 78; 20 T. L. R. 109—C.A.

Lease Executed by Lessee only—Assignment of Reversion—Tied House—"Successors in business"—Specific Performance.—In 1902 the defendant executed under seal an agreement with B., Lim., to take a yearly tenancy of the M. Hotel, and covenanted with B., Lim., that he would at all times during the tenancy purchase of B., Lim., or their successors in business all ale, beer, &c., sold or consumed either on or off the premises. The document was executed by the defendant alone. In 1899 B., Lim., sold all their property, including the M. Hotel and the goodwill of their business, to the plaintiffs. The defendants refused to purchase beer, ale, &c., from the plaintiffs and bought from others. On an injunction by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants from committing a breach of the covenant, it was—Held, that the plaintiffs were "successors in business" of B., Lim.; that, although the plaintiffs could not before the Judicature Acts have sued in covenant or in assumpsit, yet, as the defendant would have no defence to an action by the plaintiffs for specific performance to compel the defendant to take the legal estate, the plaintiffs could bring this action (Walsh v. Lonsdale, 21 Ch. D. 9, considered); that in the circumstances of this case the plaintiffs might have succeeded on the new contract implied from the conduct of the defendant and the plaintiffs. Manchester Brewery Co. v. Coombs, 82 L. T. 347—Farwell, J.

Lease.—It is doubtful whether the word "lease" in section 10 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, includes an "agreement for a lease." Ib.

17. ASSIGNMENTS.

Equitable Lease—Personal Arrangement.—Where premises are let upon the terms, "We hereby agree to let you keep peaceable possession . . . for ten years on condition that you commit no nuisance and pay . . . rent thereof. You to pay local board rates . . .," it is only a personal arrangement between the parties, and no estate passes. Duxbury v. Sandiford, 78 L. T. 230—D.

Underlease by Assignee by way of Mortgage—

Underlessee in Possession of Demised Premises—Payment by Lessee of Rent Reserved by Lease—Liability of Underlessee to Indemnify Lessee.]

—An underlessee, who is a mortgagee by way of demise from an assignee of a lease, and who is in possession of the demised premises, is not liable to indemnify the lessee in respect of rent which such lessee has been compelled to pay to the lessor under a covenant to pay the rent reserved by the lease. Moule v. Garrett (41 L. J. Ex. 62; L. R. 7 Ex. 101) discussed. Bonner v. Tottenham and Edmonton Permanent Investment Building Society, 68 L. J. Q.B. 114; [1899] 1 Q.B. 161; 79 L. T. 611; 47 W. R. 161—C.A.

Negative Covenants—Covenant by Assignee to Observe and Perform Covenants in Lease—Breach of Covenants—Injunction by way of Specific Performance—Indemnity.]—A covenant in the usual form by an assignee of leasehold premises with the lessee to observe and perform the covenants contained in the lease under which the premises are held and to keep indemnified the lessee from all claims and demands on account of the same is a covenant of indemnity only. Consequently, where the lease contains a covenant not to make any alterations in the demised premises without the previous approval of the lessor, and the assignee has made certain alterations contrary to this negative covenant, but the lessor has taken no proceedings against the lessee in respect of the same, the lessee suing the assignee on his covenant is not entitled to specifically enforce the negative covenant contained in the lease. Poole and Clark's Contract, In re (73 L. J. Ch. 612; [1904] 2 Ch. 173), considered, and observations therein applied. Harris v. Boots Cash Chemists, 73 L. J. Ch. 708; [1904] 2 Ch. 376; 52 W. R. 668; 20 T. L. R. 623—Warrington, J.

Semble,—The covenant entered into by the assignee, in terms an affirmative covenant, is not a negative covenant within the strict rule which binds the Court to enforce by way of injunction specific performance of such a covenant. Id.

Successive Assignments—Covenant by Ultimate Assignee to Indemnify Assignor for Breach of Covenants in Lease—Liability of Assignee to Indemnify Assignor for Breach Prior to Assignment.]—The defendants were the executors of an assignee by mesne assignments of a lease containing a covenant to repair and keep in repair. The plaintiff, as reversioner expectant on the termination of the lease, gave the defendants notice under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, of breaches of the covenant and required them to remedy the same. On the same day as such notice was given the defendants agreed to assign the residue of the term to one Davis at the same rent as that reserved by the lease and subject to the lessee's covenants therein contained, and the agreement further provided that "the purchaser doth hereby covenant with the vendors that he will henceforth pay the rent by the said lease reserved and observe and perform the lessee's covenants therein contained, and from the payment and performance thereof respectively will keep indemnified the vendors." The notice given by the plaintiff not having been complied with, he recovered judgment against the defendants for damages for breach of the covenant contained in the lease.—Held, that Davis, who had been brought in as a third party, was liable under the covenant in the assignment to indemnify the defendants in respect of the damages recovered by the plaintiff against them for breaches of the covenant contained in the lease prior to the assignment. Gooch v. Clutterbuck, 68 L. J. Q.B. 808; [1899] 2 Q.B. 148; 81 L. T. 9; 47 W. R. 609—C.A.

Assignment of Lease—Covenant to Indemnify—Assignment by Trustee.]—See BANKRUPTCY.

18. WASTE.

Lease of Land for Reservoir—Sub-Lease for Rubbish-Shoot—Injury to Inheritance—Injunction—Damages.]—In determining whether an act of waste has been committed by a lessee on the demised premises, the test is whether the act complained of by the lessor is an act which alters the nature of the thing demised. West Ham Central Charity Board v. East London Waterworks Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 257; [1900] 1 Ch. 624; 82 L. T. 85; 48 W. R. 284—Buckley, J.

The plaintiffs' predecessors in title demised to the defendant company a plot of marsh land, for the term of ninety-nine years, for the purpose of constructing a reservoir. The defendant company never constructed the reservoir, but for some time used the demised premises for the purposes of grazing. The defendant company subsequently sub-demised the land to the defendant B. for a rubbish-shoot. The defendant B. shot large quantities of rubbish on the land, with the result that the surface of the land was raised about ten feet above its ordinary level, and the condition thereof materially altered. The plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from bringing or permitting to be brought on the land any rubbish, earth, or material, or otherwise committing waste thereon, and damages for what had been done.—Held, that there had been such an alteration of the level of the land, and such an alteration of the thing demised, as amounted to waste; that the company in authorising B. to do what he had done were equally responsible with B.; that it was no answer to the plaintiff's claim to allege that the value of the land for building purposes had been increased by the raising of its level; and that an injunction must therefore be granted against both defendants, and an enquiry as to damages. Id.

1. THE ACTS.

"Special Act"—Meaning of.—The Military Lands Act, 1892, which provides for the acquisition of lands for military purposes, incorporates the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and enacts that "in the construction of this Act and of the incorporated Acts, this Act shall be deemed the special Act"; it also enacts that the provisions of the incorporated Acts with respect to compulsory purchase shall not be put in force until a provisional order has been made and sanctioned by Parliament;—Held, that a literal construction could not be given to the words of the Military Lands Act, 1892, deeming it to be the "special Act," and that the special Act within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 123 (which limits the time for the compulsory purchase of lands, if no period is prescribed, to three years after the passing of "the special Act"), was the Military Lands Act, 1892, together with the statute confirming a provisional order made thereunder. Hill v. Haire, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 87—M.R.

2. NOTICE TO TREAT.

Effect of Notice Bad in Part—Successive Notices.—If a notice to take land given by a railway company is invalid quoad part of the land specified, it is invalid quoad the whole. Where the company has given notice to take land, it is not precluded from superseding that notice by another notice to take the same land. It is not incompetent for a railway company which desires to take land from the owner thereof to divide that land into two parts, and to serve a separate notice with respect to each part. Coats v. Caledonian Railway, 6 F. 1042—Ct. of Sess.

Deposited Plan—"Delineated."—A notice to take land served by a railway company was held to be invalid in respect that one of the plots of ground which it was proposed to take was not delineated on the deposited plan, no boundary-line on one of the four sides of the plot being shown on the plan. Ib.

Withdrawal—Fresh Notice in Respect of Same Land.—Where promoters of an undertaking with compulsory powers of purchase of land have validly and properly withdrawn a notice to treat given by them under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, they can, provided that the time limited for the exercise of their powers has not expired, give a fresh notice to treat in respect of the same land. Ashton Vale Iron Co. v. Bristol Corporation, 70 L. J. Ch. 290; [1901] 1 Ch. 591; 83 L. T. 694; 49 W. R. 295—C.A.

Effect of Notice upon Building Agreement—Part of Land Comprised in Notice.—Notice to treat was given by a local authority in respect of part of the land comprised in a building agreement;—Held, that the building agreement was still binding in respect of the land not included in the notice to treat, Burness and Willesden Urban Council, 70 J. P. 25; 22 T. L. R. 52—Farwell, J.

Right of Owner to Sell Land after Notice to Treat.—Decision of Ridley, J. (19 T. L. R. 130), who held that while no new interest in land could be created by an owner upon whom notice to treat for the land had been served under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the owner might transfer his interest in toto, compromised on appeal. Sevell v. Harrow and Uxbridge Railway, 20 T. L. R. 21—C.A.

For Part of Building—Particulars of Claim Subject to Apportioned Rent—Summons to Apportion Rent at Less than the Sum Claimed—Notice to Take Whole.—In May and November, 1901, respectively notices to treat for part of a manufactory were served upon the owner and lessees of premises. Before the end of January, 1902, they had forwarded claims and particulars subject to an apportioned rent of 200% per annum. The parties negotiated at considerable expense with regard to the amount of the apportioned rent, and ultimately, after a summons issued under section 119 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, on March 18, 1904, the claimants agreed to an apportionment at 100l. per annum. An offer of considerably less than the amount claimed having been made to the lessees at this apportioned rent, they required the whole manufactory to be taken under section 92. In their action the plaintiffs moved for an interim injunction to restrain further proceedings under the notices to treat:—Held, that the mere lapse of time standing alone counted for nothing, as the compensation asked had never been agreed to provided the reduction in the apportioned rent was consented to, and that the claimants had not forfeited their right to insist on the whole manufactory being taken by simply making their claim. Lavers v. London County Council, 93 L. T. 233; 69 J. P. 362; 3 L. G. R. 1025; 21 T. L. R. 695—Keke-wich, J.

Soil of Private Road—Part of "House."—A railway company proposed to take part of a private road leading to a mansion house with the object solely of carrying a bridge over the road for the purposes of their railway at a spot a quarter of a mile from the house. The owner claimed an injunction to restrain them from so doing without purchasing the whole property:—Held, that such part of the private road would not pass on a conveyance of the "house" by that description, and was therefore not a part only of the house, within the meaning of section 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and that the injunction ought not to be granted. Allhusen v. Ealing and South Harrow Railway, 73 L. T. 396; 46 W. R. 483—C.A.

Land Required by Local Authority—Part Required—Claim Sent in for Part—Meeting of Surveyors—Negotiations as to Compensation—Right to Have Whole Taken.—In October, 1904, notice to treat for part of a butcher's shop was served upon the lessee of the premises. The lessee thereupon sent in a claim for compensation in respect of his interest, which was not accepted by the council, and in September, 1905, the surveyors for both parties met, and a sum for compensation was agreed between them. The solicitors then prepared a formal agreement on the lines of this arrangement, but could not agree as to certain clauses. On May 18, 1906, the lessee's solicitors served on the council a counter-notice stating that the plaintiff declined to sell part only of the premises comprised in the notice to treat, and that he was willing and able to sell the whole of his interest in the premises, and required the defendants to purchase all his interest therein. In his action the plaintiff moved for an interim injunction to restrain further proceedings under the notice to treat:—Held, that the arrangement made by the surveyors did not amount to an agreement, and would not bind the principals until they accepted it; and that the plaintiff was not estopped from claiming his rights under section 92 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. A counter-notice need not be very specific provided it identifies the property. Pollard v. Middlesex County Council, 95 L. T. 870; 71 J. P. 85; 5 L. G. R. 37—Parker, J.

Compulsory Power to Cease after Expiration of Three Years from Passing of Private Act—Service of Notice—Computation of Time.—By section 29 of the West Metropolitan Railway Act, 1899, the powers of a railway company for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purpose of the Act "shall cease after the expiration of three years from the passing of this Act." The Act received the Royal assent on August 9, 1899. On August 9, 1902, the defendants served on the plaintiffs a notice to treat for the purchase of part of the plaintiffs' land:—Held, that the notice to treat had been served in time, as the day on which the Act received the Royal assent must be excluded in the computation of time within which the powers of the defendants under the Act to compulsorily purchase land were to exist. Goldsmiths' Co. v. West Metropolitan Railway, 72 L. J. K.B. 931; [1904] 1 K.B. 1; 89 L. T. 428; 52 W. R. 21; 68 J. P. 41; 20 T. L. R. 7—C.A.

Lease of Adjoining Land by Landowner before Compensation Assessed—Land so Leased Injuri-ously Affected—Claim of Lessee against Railway Company.—Where notice to treat has been served by a railway company on a landowner, and after the notice, but before the award of compensation, the landowner grants a lease of adjoining land, which is injuriously affected by the extension of the railway works, the lessee is not entitled to claim from the railway company compensation for the injurious affecting, inasmuch as the compensation paid to the landowner includes all claims for injury caused to his adjoining land. Mercer v. Liverpool, St. Helens, and Lancashire Railway, 73 L. J. K.B. 960; [1904] A.C. 461; 91 L. T. 605; 53 W. R. 241; 68 J. P. 533; 20 T. L. R. 673—H. L. (E.)

Boundary Defined by "Proposed road"—Description not Grant of Easement.—Where a proposed road is mentioned in the particulars scheduled to a notice to treat for the compulsory purchase of land—for example, as the site for a board school—as one of the boundaries of such land, the same must be regarded as descriptive merely, and not as passing any right to have the road constructed, or any right over land adjacent to the land so compulsorily acquired. A school board gave notice to F., the owner of certain property which he contemplated developing as a building estate, to treat for the purchase of part thereof as the site for a school. In the particulars scheduled to the notice the land required was described as land with frontages to A. Road, B. Road, "and a proposed road leading therefrom." At the inquisition to determine the purchase-money and compensation a verdict was taken by consent for 8,000l. "for the purchase of the estate and interest of F. in the land and hereditaments" in the warrant for the summoning of the jury mentioned; "also, by way of compensation, for all damage sustained by severance, or otherwise by reason of the exercise of the powers of" the school board. In the warrant the land was described by reference to the schedule to the notice to treat which was set out in the warrant. Subsequently to the inquisition F. informed the school board that it was not intended to form the proposed road shewn on the scheduled plan, and suggested a modification of the boundary, his reason being that the road was part of his original scheme for developing his property as a building estate, but that under the altered circumstances it would not be worth his while to construct the road. A summons, under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, was taken out by the school board asking for a declaration that they were entitled to a conveyance of the piece of land specified in their notice to treat with frontages to A. Road, B. Road, and a proposed road leading therefrom, and shewn on the plan to such notice according to the draft conveyance submitted to F.:—Held, that the school board had not obtained any right over F.'s land adjacent to the site which they had purchased; that they had no right to acquire an easement over adjacent land under their compulsory powers, which did not extend to the compulsory acquisition of easements, but only the right to acquire the land itself; that the reference in the notice to treat to the proposed road was merely descriptive; and that the proposed road could not be regarded as an actually made road. London School Board and Foster, In re, 87 L. T. 700—C.A.

Chose in Action—Damage Done in Exercise of Statutory Powers—Assignment of Right to Compensation—Validity of.—A right to compensation for damage, arising directly by reason of a notice to treat given by a railway company under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and which damage might be done in the lawful exercise of statutory powers conferred upon the company, is a legal chose in action within the meaning of sub-section 6 of section 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and is capable of being assigned under that sub-section. Dawson v. Great Northern and City Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 190; [1905] 1 K.B. 200; 92 L. T. 137; 69 J. P. 29; 21 T. L. R. 114—C.A.

3. LANDS AND EASEMENTS TAKEN.

Entry on Land—Land not Included in Notice to Treat—Omission or Inadvertence—Subsequent Notice as to Omitted Portion—Costs.—The defendant company gave the plaintiff notice to treat in respect of his land. They entered on the land included in the notice, and also on an additional piece not included. At the beginning of November, 1903, the plaintiff notified the defendants of this fact. The defendants at first did not admit this, but on November 21 they knew it. On November 25 the plaintiff issued a writ in respect of the trespass to this piece of land, and claimed an injunction. On November 27 the defendants gave notice to treat for this piece of land:—Held, that the defendants had no right to enter on November 23 on land for which they did not give notice to treat till November 27, and that therefore they were liable for the costs of the action. Cardwell v. Midland Railway, 20 T. L. R. 364—Byrne, J. Affirmed, 21 T. L. R. 22—C.A.

Statutory Right to Erect Post "in, over, or under any street"—Erection of Electric Post.—By section 51 of the Newport Corporation Act, 1900, with which the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, was incorporated, the corporation might, for the purpose of working their tramways, construct and erect "on, in, over, or under any street or road" poles and posts. For the purpose of working their tramways the corporation erected an iron pillar, about ten inches in diameter, upon the plaintiff's land, which by dedication, subject to a user by the plaintiff, formed part of the street, such pillar being sunk about six feet in the ground:—Held, that this was not a "taking of land" within the Lands Clauses Act, but was an exercise of the statutory powers of the defendants under their private Act. Escott v. Newport Corporation, 73 L. J. K.B. 693; [1904] 2 K.B. 369; 90 L. T. 348; 52 W. R. 543; 68 J. P. 135; 2 L. G. R. 779; 20 T. L. R. 158—D.

"House"—Paddock.—In section 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the word "house" must be taken in the same sense as it would be in the case of a grant—that is, it must be taken to mean not merely the actual building, but everything that would pass by a grant of the house. A paddock situated at the back of a house and garden and occupied therewith held to be included in the term "house." Low v. Staines Reservoirs Joint Committee, 64 J. P. 212—C.A.

Common Lands—Compensation for Commonable Rights—Apportionment—Action by Commoner to Ascertain Interest—Jurisdiction.—Common lands were compulsorily taken by a local authority. Meetings of statutory committees of the commoners were held, pursuant to the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and agreements were come to with the local authority as to the compensation to be paid for the extinction of the commonable rights. Under these agreements certain monies were paid to the committees of commoners of two parishes. By section 15 of the Inclosure Act, 1854, a majority of a committee might apply to the Commissioners to call a meeting of the persons interested in the compensation money to determine whether it should be apportioned; and by section 17 of the same Act the Inclosure Commissioners or any assistant commissioner appointed for the purpose were directed to ascertain, determine, and award the names of the parties entitled to interests in the commonable lands, and the amount or value of their interests therein. The committees were willing to act under these statutory powers, but had not yet done so. An action was brought by a plaintiff, who claimed to be the sole person entitled to commonable rights, for the payment to him of the whole of the compensation money:—Held, upon the construction of section 104 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and sections 15 and 17 of the Inclosure Act, 1854, that proper machinery was provided to determine who were the parties entitled, and the amount of their interests, and therefore the Court had no jurisdiction to interfere at the present stage. Richards v. De Winton. Richards v. Evans, 70 L. J. Ch. 719; [1901] 2 Ch. 566; 84 L. T. 831; 50 W. R. 87; 65 J. P. 696—Kekewich, J. Compromised on appeal, 72 L. J. Ch. 269; [1903] 1 Ch. 507; 88 L. T. 333—C.A.

Grant of Easement—Powers of Executors.—Where a corporation obtains a private Act of Parliament enabling persons empowered by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts to sell and convey or release lands to grant to such corporation an easement required for the purposes of the Act, an executor of a will which, after charging real estate with payment of debts and legacies, contains an executory devise thereof, is nevertheless not empowered by the joint operation of section 7 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the enabling clause of the private Act to grant an easement to the corporation. Farrow-in-Furness Corporation and Rawlinson's Contract, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 233; [1903] 1 Ch. 339; 87 L. T. 724; 51 W. R. 248—Kekewich, J.

Private Purchase of Land by Railway Company before obtaining Act—Exercise of Compulsory Powers against Tenant—"Lands"—Tenant's Interest—Notice to Treat—Lands "required for the purposes of the special Act."

—On May 11, 1900, a railway company who were promoting a bill in Parliament purchased from the owner, who had full power to sell, 23 acres of land required for their undertaking. The lands were under a lease for a term of years. The company thereafter, on August 6, 1900, obtained their Act, and on August 22 they served a notice on the tenant to treat for 13 out of the 23 acres, that being all the land of which they proposed to take immediate possession. The tenant claimed to have the company interdicted from taking proceedings under the notice, on the ground that, having acquired the whole 23 acres, they were bound to compensate him for his interest therein and not only in the 13 acres:—Held, first, that the 23 acres could not be regarded as property acquired by the railway company under their Act, as they had acquired it by private agreement, from a person entitled to sell, before the Act was passed; and secondly, that they were entitled to exercise their compulsory powers to dispossess the tenant from time to time of such ground as they required, and that the tenant was not entitled to call upon them to treat for his interest in the whole 23 acres at once. Stevenson v. North British Railway, 4 F. 224—Ct. of Sess.

4. SUMMARY TAKING.

"Speedy possession"—Deposit in Bank—Bond—Conveyance—Payment out of Deposit—Evidence of Payment of Purchase-money to Persons Entitled to Land.—Where a company on entering into possession of land under section 85 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, before the compensation to be paid by them has been assessed, deposit in the bank the estimated value of the land, and give to the person claiming to be entitled to convey a bond conditioned to be void if the company pay to the person to whom the bond is given, or deposit in the Bank of England for the benefit of the persons interested in the land, the purchase-money and interest, and the company afterwards, with the concurrence of the person to whom the bond was given pay the purchase-money to the persons claiming and petition for repayment of the deposit, and the person to whom the bond was given concurs in the petition, the Court can order repayment, and has no duty to enquire whether the person to whom the bond was given, or the persons to whom the company have paid the money, were the persons really entitled to receive the purchase-money. Midland Railway, Ex parte, 73 L. J. Ch. 64; [1904] 1 Ch. 61; 89 L. T. 545; 20 T. L. R. 72—C.A.

Land Acquired for Ultra Vires Purpose—Land Entered upon and Used—Liability for Breach of Covenant.—A school board proposed to provide at the cost of the school fund buildings for the purpose—that is, that of a pupil teachers' centre—upon which, as was subsequently held, a school board has no power to expend that fund—Dyer v. London School Board (72 L. J. Ch. 10; [1902] 2 Ch. 768). With this object the Board acquired the leasehold interest in certain premises under a lease containing covenants for the maintenance of the existing buildings, with a proviso for re-entry on breach. The Board then obtained compulsory powers for the acquisition of the land, served notice to treat for the freehold, and made a deposit and gave a bond under section 85 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, so that, had the purposes for which they proposed to acquire the land been legitimate, they would have been entitled to enter upon and use the land; but the freehold interest was never conveyed to them. The Board took possession of the premises, pulled down the existing buildings, and disregarded a notice from the freeholders, under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, complaining of the pulling down of the buildings as a breach of the covenants in the lease:—Held, that as the object for which the Board were endeavouring to acquire the land was ultra vires, they had not obtained any right to possession of the land by their proceedings under section 85 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and, the lease being forfeited for breach of covenant, the freeholders were entitled to possession of the premises. The Board were not, even on the supposition that the proceedings were a mistake on their part, entitled to treat the land as superfluous land acquired under the Lands Clauses Acts. Nor was the fact material that their property was, under the Education (London) Act, 1903, about to be transferred to a body who would have power to provide a pupil-teachers' centre. Held, also, that, although the purposes for which the leasehold interest was acquired were ultra vires, the Board were bound by the covenants in the lease, and were liable in damages for the breach thereof. Batson v. London School Board, 2 L. G. R. 116; 20 T. L. R. 22; 67 J. P. 457—Channell, J.

5. COMPENSATION.

(a) Generally.

Person in Possession as Owner—Prima Facie Right to Compensation.—A person in possession of land in the character of owner, and having therefore a good title against all the world but the rightful owner, has a prima facie claim to compensation for the compulsory taking of such land under statutory powers. Doe d. Carter v. Barnard (18 L. J. Q.B. 306; 13 Q.B. 945) doubted. Perry v. Clissold, 76 L. J. P.C. 19; [1897] A.C. 73; 95 L. T. 890; 23 T. L. R. 232—P.C.

"Lands or any interest therein"—Free and Exclusive Right to Sell Refreshments, Programmes, &c., at Theatre—Licence.]—An "interest" in land within the meaning of section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, so as to give a right to compensation for "lands or any interest therein" taken or injuriously affected, is not created by an agreement under which is granted and let the free and exclusive right to sell refreshments at a theatre, together with the necessary use of the refreshment-rooms and bars, cloak-rooms and wine-cellars, and the free access during the usual hours to and from all parts of the premises as might be necessary and was usual and proper according to the custom of theatres, and also the free and exclusive right of supplying programmes, &c., and of providing cloak-rooms and other accommodation, and also the sole and exclusive privilege of advertising and letting spaces for advertisements in the refreshment and cloak-rooms and on all programmes used and offered for sale at the theatre. Such an agreement shews merely an intention to confer a licence and not to create an interest in land. Warr v. London County Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 362; [1904] 1 K.B. 718; 90 L. T. 368; 52 W. R. 405; 68 J. P. 335; 2 L. G. R. 723; 20 T. L. R. 346—C.A.

Reservation of Minerals—"Interests omitted to be purchased"—Period at which Claim to Compensation is Excluded.]—By section 117 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845 (identical with section 124 of the English Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), in the case of omitted interests in lands which an undertaking is authorised to purchase, the promoters are to remain in the undisturbed possession of such lands for a period not exceeding six months "after the right thereto shall have been finally established by law in favour of the party claiming the same," and then the undertakers are to pay compensation for such interest:—Held, that the six months do not run from a judgment referring the matter to arbitration, but from the award in the arbitration itself. Caledonian Railway v. Davidson, 72 L. J. P.C. 25; [1903] A.C. 22; 87 L. T. 602—H.L. (Sc.)

Expropriation of Private Property for Public Purposes—Compensation—Construction.]—The intention of authorising the taking of private property without compensation cannot be attributed to a Legislature unless it be expressed in unequivocal terms; and if an enactment is in terms susceptible of two constructions—either that such power is reserved or that powers already existing are simply transferred to a newly constituted body—the latter is the preferable construction. Commissioner of Public Works v. Logan, 72 L. J. P.C. 91; [1903] A.C. 355; 88 L. T. 779—P.C.

By a Proclamation of 1813 power was reserved to the Government of taking without compensation the lands therein described for the making and repair of roads. By an Act of 1858 the powers of the Government in respect of road-making were transferred to a Chief Commissioner, upon whom powers were conferred of taking land "generally for any of the objects of this Act," including other objects than road-making. It was not expressly stated that no compensation was to be given for such land:—

Held, that the Act did not confer a new power of expropriation without payment, and the owner of lands required for such other purposes was entitled to compensation. Ib.

Free and Exclusive Right to Supply Refreshments—Estate and Interest.]—An agreement which grants, and lets the free and exclusive right to sell refreshments in a theatre, together with the necessary use of the refreshment-rooms, bars, and cellars, and the right of free access to and from all parts of the premises as might be necessary, and of supplying and providing programmes, &c., and cloak-rooms and other accommodation, and also the sole and exclusive privilege of advertising and letting spaces for advertisements in the refreshment and cloak rooms and on all the programmes, does not create an estate or interest within section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Warr v. London County Council, 88 L. T. 689; 67 J. P. 403—Wright, J.

Limited Owner—Personal "injury, inconvenience, and annoyance"—Glebe Land—Payment of Compensation out of Court.]—Where the construction of a new railway and other works upon glebe land, acquired by a railway company under agreement with the rector, seriously interfered with the comfort and amenities of the rectory house, the Court, under the power conferred upon it by section 73 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, ordered payment of 100% to the rector out of the purchase-moneys in Court, by way of compensation for the injury, inconvenience, and annoyance sustained by him personally. Saunderton Glebe Lands, &c. v. The Rector, ex parte, 72 L. J. Ch. 276; [1903] 1 Ch. 480; 88 L. T. 267; 51 W. R. 522—Farwell, J.

Chance of Renewal of Lease.]—The mere probability of the continuance of a tenancy without disturbance is not a ground for claiming compensation under the Lands Clauses Act. Farlow, Ex parte (2 B. & Ad. 341), commented on. Lynch v. Glasgow Corporation, 5 F. 1174—Ct. of Sess.

Customary Tenements Taken for Undertaking Enfranchisement—Right to Intermediate Fines.]—On enfranchisement of customary tenements acquired by a company under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, the lord is entitled to require the company to pay, or to take into account in estimating the compensation payable to him, all fines arising by reason of the deaths of tenants on the rolls, or of their customary heirs, between the date fixed by the Act for compulsory enfranchisement and the actual enfranchisement. Leconfield (Lord) v. London and North-Western Railway, 76 L. J. Ch. 33; [1907] 1 Ch. 38; 95 L. T. 672; 23 T. L. R. 31—Swinfen Eady, J.

Adaptability of Land in Conjunction with Adjoining Land for Purposes of Reservoir—Assessment of Different Parcels.]—Certain land in respect of which notice to treat had been given was not by itself adaptable as the site for a reservoir, but in conjunction with two adjoining parcels of land of other owners was so adaptable. The arbitrator in assessing compensation had regard to the natural character and position of the land, to its proximity to the other parcels of land, and to the probability that if a demand should arise for the three parcels of land for the purpose of one entire reservoir site, each owner would, by reason of the adaptability of the three parcels for a reservoir, obtain some enhanced value for the parcel belonging to him, but he came to the conclusion that the extent of such enhancement would not be the same in each of the three cases, and that the same value per acre should not be put on each of the three parcels of land:—Held, that the arbitrator was right in so holding. Tynemouth Corporation and Northumberland (Duke), In re, 89 L. T. 557; 67 J. P. 425—Wright, J.

Expense of Establishment &c. of School for Children of Workmen Engaged on Reservoir—Remoteness.—A claim for compensation in respect of expense likely to be incurred in the establishment and maintenance during the period of the construction of the reservoir—a period of probably five years—of a voluntary school for the children of the workmen, in order to avoid the compulsory establishment in the township of a public elementary school by the statutory education authority was held to be too remote and too uncertain to form a ground for compensation. Ib.

Deposit of Plans—Extent of Incorporation—Basis of Compensation—Modification of Plans.—Prior to the passing of a Provisional Order Confirmation Act empowering the defendants to acquire compulsorily from the plaintiff and others certain lands for the purposes of Part III. of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, and for the purposes of the widening, opening, enlarging, and otherwise improving certain streets and roads in Bray, plans of the lands to be taken, one of which shewed a ground plan of forty-five cottages proposed to be built, a proposed “playground,” and a proposed approach fifty feet wide, were duly deposited with the Local Government Board and in Parliament. Section 1 of the Provisional Order in question, which recited the deposit of the plans, described the lands to be compulsorily acquired as “the lands, easements, rights of way, and other premises described in the deposited plans and book of reference”; and the plans were referred to as “the plans showing the lands and premises required for the purposes aforesaid.” The Act did not further or otherwise refer to the plans, and did not contain any provision requiring the defendants to carry out the works according to the plans. After the passing of the Act, the arbitrator appointed by the Local Government Board assessed the compensation to be paid to the plaintiffs for purchase-money and for injury to adjoining lands, and the amount awarded was paid. Subsequently, modified plans for the building upon the acquired lands of a larger number of cottages, the use for that purpose of part of the space marked “playground,” and the making of a twenty-foot instead of a fifty-foot approach, were prepared by defendants and approved by the Local Government Board, through whom the defendants were borrowing money for the carrying out of the works. On an application for an injunction to restrain the carrying out of the modified plans, —Held, that the only restriction on the use of the lands compulsorily acquired by the defendants was that they should be used for the purposes of Part III. of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, and also for the purpose of widening, enlarging, or otherwise improving the said streets and roads in Bray; that whilst observing such purposes the defendants were bound to adhere to the deposited plans; and that the plaintiff's claim for an injunction should be dismissed. Bradshaw v. Bray Urban Council, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 152—C.A.

Omitted Interest—Title—Ejectment.—The plaintiffs were authorised by a Provisional Order, and an Act of Parliament confirming same, to take by compulsory purchase certain lands, including those in dispute in this action. The lands required were the fee-simple property of G., and the defendant, who held adjoining lands from G. under a lease, encroached upon the lands of G., and had, prior to the date of the plaintiffs' Provisional Order, acquired a title under the Statute of Limitations to portion of the lands required by the plaintiffs for the residue of the term of his lease. This portion was included in the advertisements issued and the plans deposited by the plaintiffs under Schedule II. of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, all the provisions of which were duly complied with by the plaintiffs, save that the name of the defendant (of whose claim the plaintiffs were ignorant) did not appear in the schedule to the deposited plans or in the arbitrator's award as a person having an interest in the premises, nor was any notice of the publication of the award left at the defendant's premises or sent by post to him. No claim was ever made by the defendant to the plaintiffs in respect of any interest in the premises. In an action of ejectment brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant to recover possession of that portion of the lands to which the defendant had so acquired a title, —Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover possession. Omagh Urban Council v. Henderson, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 310—C.A.

Apportionment of Rent—Date from which Apportioned Rent is Payable.—Where rent is apportioned under section 119 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, whether by agreement between the parties or by the order of two Justices, the time from which the apportioned rent is payable runs from the date when the apportionment is made. Secretary of State for War and Hurley's Contract, In re, [1904] 1 Ir. 354—M.R.

Compensation—Land Taken for Defence Works.—See ARMY AND NAVY.

Sum Allowed as Compensation—Assignability.—See Dawson v. Great Northern and City Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 190—C.A.

(b) Land “Injurious Affected.”

Acts Done not on Lands Taken.—Where part of a claimant's land is taken under the powers of an Act incorporating the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the claimant claims compensation for the injurious affection of his other land, it is not necessary, in order to entitle him to compensation, that the acts complained of should be done on the land which is taken from the claimants. Dictum of PHILLIMORE, J., in Rex v. Mountford (75 L. J. K.B. 1003; [1906] 2 K.B. 814) followed. Dictum of BIGHAM, J., in Horton v. Colwyn Bay Urban Council (76 L. J. K.B. 91; [1907] 1 K.B. 14) not followed. London and North-Western Railway and Reddaway, In re, 71 J. P. 150; 23 T. L. R. 279—Phillimore, J.

Tram-lines not Laid on Land Taken—Injurious Affection—Claim for Depreciation of Business through the Opening and Running of Tramways.]

—A tramway company were authorised by their Act to construct tramways along a certain street, and by a subsequent Act, which did not incorporate the former Act, obtained power to acquire a certain strip of land for the purpose of widening the street. No portion of the tram-lines was laid upon this strip. The owner of a long lease of the house from which the strip was taken claimed, in addition to the value of the strip, compensation for the damage done to his business as a dentist by reason of the road being brought nearer to his house and the noise arising from the passing tramcars. The jury awarded £60L. as the value of the strip, and in addition 400L. as depreciation in respect of his future practice from the change in the character of the district, and for loss of light and privacy consequent upon the opening and running of the tramways past his house:—Held, that the jury were not entitled to award compensation for such depreciation. Rex v. Mountford, 75 L. J. K.B. 1003; [1906] 2 K.B. 814; 95 L. T. 675; 70 J. P. 511; 4 L. G. R. 1058—D.

Mining Lease—Right of Lessee to Sink New Shaft subject to Lessor's Reasonable Approval.]

—A lease of a colliery with its pits and shafts, as well as of the minerals beneath the surface of a specified area of the adjoining land, contained a clause giving liberty to the lessee, if he should think it necessary or desirable, and on notice to the lessor, to sink a new pit in any part of such adjoining area, but so that the position of such pit should be subject to the reasonable approval of the lessor, his heirs or assigns:—Held, that the right of the lessee under the above clause was the subject-matter of compensation under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845; and that the mere fact of purchase by a railway company of part of the adjoining area did not necessarily annul the right of the lessee to open a pit on the part purchased. Masters and Great Western Railway, In re, 70 L. J. K.B. 516; [1901] 2 K.B. 84; 84 L. T. 515; 49 W. R. 499; 65 J. P. 420—C.A.

Right of Way—Compulsory Powers—Obstruction.]—Motion by the plaintiff to restrain the defendant railway company and their contractors from obstructing and interfering with the right of way of the plaintiff over a certain occupation road, and from permitting any railway to continue upon, and from running trains or locomotives along the road. The defendants had laid down a line which passed along the occupation road, and ran trains thereon for the purpose of carrying the plant and necessary materials for the construction of the lines authorised by the Great Western Railway Act, 1899:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction, but that he had his remedy by compensation under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, because his property had been injuriously affected. Bar-nard v. Great Western Railway, 86 L. T. 798; 66 J. P. 568—Kekewich, J.

Restrictive Covenant Imposed on Land for Benefit of Adjoining Land—Breach by Execution of Works—Construction of Embankment.]

—A railway company purchased land on which restrictive covenants were imposed for the benefit of adjoining land with notice of the covenants, and constructed an embankment under statutory powers, thereby committing other breaches of the covenants which lessened the market value of the adjoining land:—Held, that the owner of the adjoining land was entitled to compensation by reason of his land being "injuriously affected" by the works, within the meaning of section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Long Eaton Recreation Grounds Co. v. Midland Railway, 71 L. J. K.B. 837; [1902] 2 K.B. 574; 86 L. T. 873; 50 W. R. 693; 67 J. P. 1—C.A.

Site Compulsorily Purchased for Board School—Noise of School Children Outside Building—Adjoining Land Injuriouly Affected.]

—In assessing the compensation to be paid to the owner of land compulsorily purchased for the erection of a board school, the noise made by children outside a board school may be taken into consideration as injuriously affecting his adjoining land. Reg. v. Pearce; London School Board, ex parte, 67 L. J. Q.B. 842; 78 L. T. 681—D.

Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment—Assignment of Freehold to Company by Arrangement—Lessee Injuriouly Affected—Compensation.]

—Where a railway company acquires by an agreement the reversion expectant on the determination of a lease, but does not acquire the lessee's interest, and the lessee is afterwards injuriously affected by the company's workings, he has nevertheless no remedy under the covenants in his lease, but must obtain compensation under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway v. Anderson, 67 L. J. Ch. 568; [1898] 2 Ch. 394; 78 L. T. 821—C.A. Affirming, 46 W. R. 509—Byrne, J.

Obstruction of Pavement by Vans.]

—In 1860 L. P. Street was a highway for all purposes, and by a statute of that year the predecessors of the Great Eastern Railway were empowered to divert and stop up that street. A warehouse was constructed between 1860 and 1866 with three openings and flaps in that street, and the vans of the Great Eastern Railway Co. were backed up against the pavement with their tailboards let down so as to extend to the flaps and enable goods to be delivered from the floor of the warehouse into the vans. These loading operations had the effect of blocking the strip of pavement in L. P. Street and of occupying a very large part of the roadway, and besides this a large part of L. P. Street was stopped up and inclosed. This strip of pavement was not actually inclosed, but the user of such strip as above mentioned was never interfered with or objected to. Under the London County Council (Improvements) Act, 1897, the London County Council were authorised to execute certain works in L. P. Street, the effect of which was to prevent the Great Eastern Railway Co. from delivering goods to their vans from the warehouse as set out above, which the company and their predecessors had enjoyed for more than forty years:—Held, that the Great Eastern Railway Co. had a legal right to compensation in respect of the damage suffered, by them owing to their being prevented from so delivering their goods to their vans. Great Eastern Railway and London County Council, In re, 95 L. T. 803; 71 J. P. 95; 5 L. G. R. 162—Kennedy, J. Affirmed, 97 L. T. 116; 72 J. P. 1—C.A.

(c) Assessment by Arbitration.

Basis of Assessment—Church to Remain in Situ—Easement of Use of Subsoil—Possibility of Lands becoming Available for Building Purposes—Severance—Injurious Affection of Adjoining Land.]—A railway company were authorised by their special Acts to take land adjoining a church, but not the church itself, and to enjoy an easement of using the subsoil under the church. In assessing the amount of compensation the arbitrator was to take into account the additional liabilities and expenses entailed on the company in constructing their works without removing the church:—Held, on the construction of the special Acts, that the arbitrator was entitled to assess the compensation on the basis that the site of the church might thereafter, by a scheme under the Union of Benefices Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 142), or otherwise, cease to be the site of a church and become available for building purposes, and to form his own opinion when that time was likely to arrive, and was also right in awarding damages in respect of the severance of the lands taken and injurious affection of other lands, in accordance with section 63 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. City and South London Railway v. St. Mary Woolnoth and St. Mary Woolchurch Haw (Rector and Churchwardens), 74 L. J. K.B. 147; [1905] A.C. 1; 92 L. T. 84; 69 J. P. 101; 21 T. L. R. 127—H.L. (E.)

Lease—Yearly Rent—Clause of Surrender—Basis of Value.]—P., owner in fee, demised lands in 1887 to the Secretary of State for War for twenty-one years, at a rent of 43l., with clause of surrender at the end of seven or fourteen years. In 1898 the Secretary of State for War served notice to treat:—Held, that the compensation payable to P. in respect of the reserved rent should be assessed on the basis of a purchase at a point of time immediately before the notice to treat, and should be valued at the rent reserved upon a lease for the residue unexpired of a term of twenty-one years, taking into account the likelihood of the lease being sooner determined, and that all the circumstances of the case and the holding should be taken into consideration, and that the arbitrator should find the reasonable value of the rent to be purchased on the basis of what a purchaser would have given for it immediately before the notice to treat. Athlone Rifle Range, In re, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 433—M.R.

Semble, 20 per cent. is an unreasonable addition for compulsory taking. Id.

Lease—Yearly Rent—Subsequent Compulsory Acquisition.]—By an indenture dated May 29, 1839, the predecessor in title of the plaintiff granted to certain lessees, whose interest is now vested in the defendants, certain lands for a railway for twenty-one years at a yearly rent of 144l. 5s. The land in question now forms part of the North-Eastern Railway Co.'s system, and the rent has always been duly paid since the expiration of the lease. On October 3, 1890, the defendants served upon the plaintiff a notice to treat, and an arbitration took place under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. The umpire in making his award considered the yearly rent of 144l. 5s. as a basis upon which to calculate the value of the lands:—Held, that he was entitled to do so. Eldon (Earl) v. North-Eastern Railway, 80 L. T. 723—Bruce, J.

Reservoir — Natural Adaptability of Land Taken.]—In estimating the value of land to be acquired by a water board under statutory powers for the purpose of constructing a reservoir, the natural adaptability of the land for the purpose of a reservoir is a proper matter for consideration as an element of value. In order to exclude such an element of value from being taken into consideration it must be shewn on the facts that there is no reasonable possibility of a market for the land apart from the particular scheme under which it is taken. Gough and Aspatria, Silloth, and District Joint Water Board, In re, 73 L. J. K.B. 228; [1904] 1 K.B. 417; 90 L. T. 43; 52 W. R. 552; 68 J. P. 229; 20 T. L. R. 179—C.A. And see Lucas and Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, In re, 77 L. J. K.B. 374; [1903] 1 K.B. 571; 98 L. T. 37; 72 J. P. 76; 6 L. G. R. 150—Bray, J.

— Adaptability of Land in Conjunction with Adjoining Land for Purposes of Reservoir — Assessment of Different Parcels.]—Certain land in respect of which notice to treat had been given was not by itself adaptable as the site for a reservoir, but in conjunction with two adjoining parcels of land of other owners was so adaptable. The arbitrator in assessing compensation had regard to the natural character and position of the land, to its proximity to the other parcels of land, and to the probability that if a demand should arise for the three parcels of land for the purpose of one entire reservoir site, each owner would, by reason of the adaptability of the three parcels for a reservoir, obtain some enhanced value for the parcel belonging to him; but he came to the conclusion that the extent of such enhancement would not be the same in each of the three cases, and that the same value per acre should not be put on each of the three parcels of land:—Held, that the arbitrator was right in so holding. Tynemouth Corporation and Northumberland (Duke), In re, 89 L. T. 557; 67 J. P. 425—Wright, J.

Expense of Establishment &c. of School for Children of Workmen Engaged on Reservoir—Remoteness.]—A claim for compensation in respect of expense likely to be incurred in the establishment and maintenance during the period of the construction of the reservoir—a period of probably five years—of a voluntary school for the children of the workmen, in order to avoid the compulsory establishment in the township of a public elementary school by the statutory education authority was held to be too remote and too uncertain to form a ground for compensation. Ib.

Tied House—Compensation.]—In estimating the fair market value of the interest of a brewery company in a house which they let as a beer-house, and which is compulsorily taken under the powers conferred by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, the existence of a covenant tying the house is a proper subject to be taken into consideration. Chandler's Wiltshire Brewery Co. and London County Council, In re, 72 L. J. K.B. 250; [1903] 1 K.B. 569; 88 L.T. 271; 51 W. R. 573; 67 J. P. 119; 1 L. G. R. 269—Wright, J.

Defence Acts—"Interest" of Landowner—Arrears of Rent Due—"Incumbrance"—Costs of Prior Abortive Arbitration.]—Arbitrators appointed under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts for the purpose of assessing compensation to be paid for lands compulsorily taken for the defence of the realm held not entitled in assessing the value of the owner's (or reversioner's) interest to take into account the existence of arrears of rent due by lessees or tenants which that taking rendered irrecoverable; nor entitled to award to the owner as part of the costs of the arbitration, costs of a prior abortive arbitration purporting to be held under the Railways (Ireland) Acts. Kilworth Rifle Range, In re, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 305—Q.B. D.

Intention of Owner to Use Land for Particular Purpose—Special Adaptability of Land.]—Two ladies contracted to purchase a piece of land specially adapted to be the site of a girls' school, with the intention of building such a school thereon. A question subsequently arose as to the compensation to be paid to them pursuant to the Lands Clauses Acts by a railway company taking part of the land for injuriously affecting the remainder, and was referred to arbitration:—Held, that the arbitrator in assessing the compensation should take into account the intention of the ladies as well as the special adaptability of the land for the intended purpose. Bailey and Isle of Thanet Light Railways (Electric) Co., In re, 69 L. J. Q.B. 442; [1900] 1 Q.B. 722; 82 L. T. 713; 48 W. R. 589—D.

Duty to Take up Award.]—Where an arbitration between a railway company and an owner of property under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, for the purpose of assessing the price to be paid for such property, has been entered into, though under protest by the railway company, and an umpire appointed by the Board of Trade has issued his award, the company is bound to take up the award, and to furnish a copy to the owner of the property, in accordance with the provisions of section 35, and may be compelled to do so by mandamus. Any question as to the rights of the parties must be settled subsequently by an action on the award. London and North-Western Railway v. Walker, 69 L. J. Q.B. 367; [1900] A.C. 109; 82 L. T. 93; 48 W. R. 384; 64 J. P. 483—H.L. (E.)

Finality of Scottish Award.]—By the law of Scotland the oversman, who is appointed in the terms of the deed of submission, is made Judge of law as well as of fact, and is not liable to have his decision reviewed, reversed, or modified unless the parties shew either that he has been guilty of misconduct in his office or has exceeded the bounds of the jurisdiction conferred upon him by the terms of the submission. Consequently, where a railway company gives notice to treat for a portion of property of which the owner requires them to take the whole, and the arbitrator finds, notwithstanding an extended offer of the railway company, that such part cannot be severed without material detriment to the remainder of the property, the arbitrator's award is binding on the Court and cannot be appealed against. Gonty v. Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway (65 L. J. Q.B. 625; [1896] 2 Q.B. 439) distinguished. Caledonian Railway v. Turcan, 67 L. J. P.C. 69; [1898] A.C. 256—H.L. (Sc.)

Personal Inspection by Arbitrator.]—In determining the amount of compensation to be paid to the occupier of land taken under the provisions of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, the arbitrator is not, by clause 7 of the second schedule, confined within the limit of the amounts at which the land was valued on behalf of the occupier and the local authority respectively. Therefore, where the arbitrator inspected the land and awarded as compensation a sum less than the value as appearing from the evidence given on behalf of the local authority,—Held, that he was at liberty to do so. Crawford v. M'Swiney, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 15—K.B. D.

Award of, for More than Sum Claimed for Particular Item—Awarding More than Total Sum Claimed.]—In assessing compensation under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the jury may in a proper case award a sum in excess of the amount claimed in respect of a particular item properly brought to the notice of the promoters. Whether they can properly award a sum in excess of the total claim, quære. Robertson v. City and South London Railway, 68 J. P. 280; 20 T. L. R. 395—Channell, J.

Costs of Arbitration—Local Enquiry under Military Lands Act—Taxation.]—The words "costs of any such arbitration and incident thereto" in section 34 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, do not include the costs incurred by a landowner whose lands are declared suitable to be taken for military purposes in a local enquiry held under the provisions of the Military Lands Act, 1892. But as the function of the Taxing Master in taxing costs under the Lands Clauses (Taxation of Costs) Act, 1895, is ministerial merely, and not judicial, his certificate allowing the landowner the costs of such local enquiry cannot be quashed on certiorari. Rees v. Goff, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 121—K.B. D.

— On August 9, 1898, a railway company, after serving a notice to treat, entered into possession of lands by arrangement with the proprietor, the company undertaking to "pay interest at 5 per cent. per annum on the amount of his [the proprietor's] compensation when ascertained or agreed on from the date when possession was taken." On July 23, 1901, the company tendered to the proprietor's agent 1,300l. "in full of all your client's claims of every description, in respect of his right and interest as proprietor in the land . . . taken." This tender was not accepted, and the question of compensation was referred to arbitration. On March 21, 1902, the umpire fixed the compensation at 1,265*l.*, with interest at 5 per cent. from August 9, 1898, until payment. No award was made as to costs. In an action by the proprietor against the railway company for payment of his costs in the arbitration,—Held, that the tender of 1,300*l.* on a sound construction included not only compensation for the land taken, but also for the interest which the company had undertaken to pay, and therefore, as the sum awarded by the umpire, with interest, exceeded the sum tendered by the company, that the company were liable for the pursuer's costs. Riddell v. Lanarkshire and Ayrshire Railway, 6 F. 432—Ot. of Sess.

Compensation for Unworked Coal—Basis of Assessment.]—See MINES AND MINERALS.

(d) Assessment by Jury.

Offer by Promoters of Undertaking—Time for Acceptance—Acceptance at Hearing before Jury.]—An offer of a sum of money by the promoters of an undertaking under section 38 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, may be accepted by the owner of the lands sought to be purchased at any time before the verdict of the jury is given assessing the amount of the compensation. Rex v. Westminster High Bailiff, 72 L. J. K.B. 600; [1903] 2 K.B. 189; 88 L. T. 834; 52 W. R. 10, 109; 1 L. G. R. 569; 67 J. P. 302—D.

Offer for Interest in Lands—Notice of Intention to Cause Jury to be Summoned—Notice of Desire to have Compensation Settled by Arbitration—Costs of and Incident to Arbitration.]—Section 34 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, applies to an offer made by the promoters of the undertaking under section 38 of the Act, for the interest in lands sought to be compulsorily purchased by them, and for the damage to be sustained by the claimant by the execution of the works. Such offer by the promoters is not abrogated by a notice given by the claimant under section 23 of the Act of his desire to have the compensation settled by arbitration. Therefore if the sum offered by the promoters under section 38 is not less than that awarded to the claimant by the arbitrators, the claimant must bear his own costs incident to the arbitration. Lascelles v. Swansea School Board, 69 L. J. Q.B. 24—Ridley, J.

Notice to Settle Compensation by Jury—Appeal from Judge at Chambers.]—See APPEAL.

(e) Assessment by Justices.

Claim by Yearly Tenant—Determination of Compensation by Justices—Jurisdiction to Enquire into Claimant's Title—Demand of Possession—Condition Precedent.]—The jurisdiction of the Justices under section 121 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, is limited to determining the amount of the compensation on the basis of the interest alleged by the claimant, and does not extend to enquiring whether that interest is his true interest. Great Northern and City Railway v. Tillett, 71 L. J.

K.B. 525; [1902] 1 K.B. 874; 86 L. T. 723; 50 W. R. 652; 66 J. P. 742—D.

On June 14, 1899, a railway company gave notice to treat to the tenants for a term of certain premises. On December 25, 1899, the term expired, but the tenants held over on a yearly tenancy. In March, 1900, the tenants ceased to occupy the premises, but retained the keys. On February 22, 1901, the company, having taken an assignment of the landlord's interest, pulled the premises down. The tenants claimed compensation on the basis of a yearly tenancy. In proceedings under section 121 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to have the amount of the compensation determined by two Justices,—Held, that it was a condition precedent to the right to proceed under the section that the tenant had been required to give up possession before the expiration of his term or interest; that the circumstances disclosed no requirement to give up possession within the meaning of the section; and that the Justices had no right to assess the compensation. Id.

6. CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY ACQUIRED.

Duty of Promoters to Accept Conveyance.]—Local authorities or others, the promoters of an undertaking, having compulsorily acquired land or easements under a special Act incorporating the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, are bound to take a formal conveyance if the vendor desire them to do so, and to have it settled by the Court in case of disagreement. Cary-Elwes' Contract, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 571; [1906] 2 Ch. 143; 94 L. T. 845; 54 W. R. 480; 70 J. P. 345; 4 L. G. R. 888; 22 T. L. R. 511—Swinfen Eady, J.

7. COSTS OF TITLE AND CONVEYANCE.

Sale of Copyholds—Costs of Constituting a Proper Person to Convey—Fine and Fees on Admission of a Tenant to Surrender.]—On a sale under the Lands Clauses Acts the purchasers are liable to pay the costs and expenses of proceedings taken for the purpose of constituting a proper person to convey or assure the property to them, including the costs of procuring the admission of a tenant of copyholds in order that he may surrender to them. There is no distinction between the steward's fees and the fine, and the latter is as much part of the expenses of procuring a proper person to surrender as the steward's fees and legal expenses. London United Tramways Act, 1900, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 223; [1906] 1 Ch. 534; 94 L. T. 608; 54 W. R. 328; 22 T. L. R. 286—Swinfen Eady, J. See also Thames Tunnel Act, 1900, In re, 77 L. J. Ch. 330; [1908] 1 Ch. 493—C.A.

Costs of Disentailing Deed.]—The costs of a disentailing deed, which is necessary in order to obtain payment of a fund in Court lodged by a railway company, are payable by the company, and a special order will be made as to such costs. Navan and Kingscourt Railway Co. and Fingall, In re, [1906] 1 Ir. Administration obtained, after Payment of Money into Court, for the Purpose of Making Title—Colonial Administrator—Power of Attorney—Administration in Ireland—Estate Duty—Costs.—An urban district council compulsorily acquired a part of certain freehold lands to which K. was entitled in fee, subject to a life annuity charged thereon. The arbitrator awarded 385*l.* as compensation for the premises compulsorily taken. After the date of the award K. died in Australia, having by his will devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to a trustee in trust to sell and hold the proceeds of the sale in trust for an Australian charity. Administration of the estate of K. with the will annexed was granted in Australia. After K.'s death the sum of 385*l.*, representing the purchase-money of the premises compulsorily taken, was lodged in Court. Administration of the estate of K., with the will annexed, was granted to A. in Ireland, who had been appointed by the Australian administrator his attorney for the purpose of taking out administration in this country, and to collect the assets and other property of K. Estate duty was paid by A. on the unsold real estate of K., the fund in Court as representing the premises compulsorily purchased, and some book debts due to the deceased. On the application of A., it was ordered that the money in Court should be paid out to him, and that the urban district council should pay all costs properly and necessarily payable:—Held, that the costs of the power of attorney from the Australian administrator, the costs of the grant of administration in Ireland, and the portion of the estate duty applicable to the purchase-money of the lands compulsorily taken were properly payable by the urban district council. Lurgan Urban Council, Ex parte; Kearns, in re, [1902] 1 Ir. Defence Acts—Payment of Death Duties.—The War Department, for the purpose of erecting defence works on Bear Island in Bantry Bay, took by compulsory proceedings the tenants' interests in part of the island. The tenants had no title except occupation, and the War Department in some instances required representation to be taken out to former occupiers:—Held, that the War Department were liable to pay the death duties as well as the costs of taking out probate or letters of administration. Bear Island Defence Works and Doyle, in re, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 164—C.A.

8. PURCHASE-MONEY.

(a) Application of.

Repairs to Chancel—Parliamentary Costs.—The Court has jurisdiction to order purchase-money for a churchyard taken compulsorily under statutory powers to be applied towards the repairs of the chancel of the church and also towards payment of the rector's Parliamentary costs. London County Council, in re; Pennington, ex parte, 84 L. T. 808; 65 J. P. 536—Kekewich, J.

(b) Interim Investment.

Purchase-money Paid into Court—Railway Securities—Brokerage—Costs—Incidence.—Where an interim investment of purchase-money paid into Court under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is made upon railway securities allowed by Order XXII, rule 17 for the investment of cash under the control of the Court, the promoters of the undertaking are, by virtue of section 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, liable for the costs of the investment, although the terms of the section apply only to the costs of investment "in Government or real securities." Brown, in re (59 L. J. Ch. 530), applied. Gaselee, in re, 70 L. J. Ch. 441; [1901] 1 Ch. 923; 84 L. T. 386; 49 W. R. 372—Buckley, J.

Costs—Condition as to Costs of Future Investment.—Where the purchase-money of land taken has, under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, been paid into Court and invested in Consols, there is no rule of practice of the Court that, upon an application for a second interim investment, the Court in sanctioning that second investment will impose a condition that it is to be treated as a permanent investment, and that the promoters are not to be liable to pay the costs of any future investment. Nepton's Charity, in re, 22 T. L. R. 442—Warrington, J.

(c) Costs of Re-investment.

Charity—Real Estate—Official Trustee of Charity Lands.—Where the legal estate in lands belonging to a charity, taken by a corporation under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, is vested in the official trustee of charity lands, he is not bound to receive the purchase-money if tendered. His refusal to receive such purchase-money is not "wilful refusal to receive" within the meaning of section 80, so as to relieve the corporation from the costs of re-investment. Leeds Grammar School, in re, 70 L. J. Ch. 89; [1901] 1 Ch. 228; 83 L. T. 499; 49 W. R. 120; 65 J. P. 88—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Re-investment in Purchase of Real Estate—Contract for Sale—Simultaneous Conveyance and Lease—Sanction of Court—Costs of Lease.—An order of the Court under section 80 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, sanctioning the re-investment of moneys in Court in the purchase of real estate, directed that pursuant to that section, the promoters should pay to the purchasers their costs (including all reasonable charges and expenses of and incident thereto) of obtaining that order and of all proceedings relating thereto, such costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master in case the parties differed:—Held, that the order did not authorise the allowance on taxation of the costs of a lease which the purchasers had by the contract for sale agreed to grant to the vendors immediately upon the completion of the purchase, the purchasers bearing their own costs of such lease. Thavie Estate (Trustees), Ex parte, 74 L. J. Ch. 326; [1905] 1 Ch. 408; 92 L. T. 287; 53 W. R. 346—Farwell, J.

Purchase Beyond Money in Court—Form of Order for Costs.]—Where a fund in Court, the proceeds of land taken under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, is being re-invested under the direction of the Court in land of greater value, the excess being provided by the applicant, the proper order for costs payable under section 80 of the Act is that the promoters of the undertaking pay to the applicant his costs, charges, and expenses of the investment, with a direction that the Taxing Master is not to allow any portion of the said costs, charges, and expenses which may have been incurred by reason of the purchase-money exceeding the amount of the fund in Court, it being proper to leave to the Taxing Master, and not to bring before the Judge, details as to what costs ought to be allowed under the order. Clark, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 325; [1906] 1 Ch. 615; 95 L. T. 143; 54 W. R. 385—Swinfen Eady, J.

Payment out of Small Balance—Costs.]—Money was paid into Court in respect of land taken by a company from the Vicar of S. and belonging to the benefice, under a private Waterworks Act of 1830, and also in respect of other land taken by them under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845:—Held, on a petition for re-investment of the money in Court in the purchase of lands to be settled to similar uses, that any balance not exceeding 20l. might be paid out to the vicar. Held, further, that the petitioner's costs in respect of both funds were payable by the company in accordance with the Lands Clauses Act, 1845. Sheffield (Vicar), Ex parte, 68 J. P. 313—Farwell, J.

Taxation of Costs—Jurisdiction of Chancery Taxing Master.]—See Costs.

(d) Payment out of Court.

Costs of Petition—Appeal—Discretion of Judge—Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, s. 5.]—Where property has been taken under the powers of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the purchase-money paid into Court under section 76 of the Act by reason of the neglect of the owner of the property to make out a title thereto, the costs of and incidental to a petition presented by a person interested in the money to obtain payment out of Court are within the discretion of the Court under section 5 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, and no appeal will lie from the order made in exercise of that discretion. Schmarr, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 219; [1902] 1 Ch. 326; 86 L. T. 71; 50 W. R. 245—C.A.

Assuming that the Court has no jurisdiction to deal with the costs in such a case under section 80 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, there is nothing in that section which amounts to a direction that in no circumstances are any costs whatever to be given in such a case, so as to be an express statutory provision taking the case out of section 5 of the Act of 1890. Fisher, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 235; [1894] 1 Ch. 450), applied. Ib.

Person Absolutely Entitled—Costs—Brokerage.]—Where an interim investment in stock has been made of moneys paid into Court under the Lands Clauses Act, and a person absolutely entitled petitions for payment out, the company or party who paid the money in must pay the brokerage on sale of the investments. Magdalen College, Oxford, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 821; [1901] 2 Ch. 786; 85 L. T. 479; 50 W. R. 90; 66 J. P. 23—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Charity—Payment Out—Consent of Charity Commissioners.]—Where the purchase-money of land, bought from charity trustees with power to sell with consent and give a discharge, has been paid into Court under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, it may be ordered to be paid out to the trustees as persons "becoming absolutely entitled" within section 69 of the Act, without the assent of the Charity Commissioners. Hobson's Trusts, In re (47 L. J. Ch. 310; 7 Ch. D. 708) followed. Sheffield Corporation and St. William's Roman Catholic Schools, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 71; [1903] 1 Ch. 208; 88 L. T. 157; 51 W. R. 380—Byrne, J.

Payment out to District Council as Highway Authority—Parish Land—Land Allotted to Highway Surveyor for Getting Materials for Road Repairs.]—Land allotted by enclosure award of 1834 to the highway surveyors of a parish and their successors for the digging for and getting materials for the repairs of roads and ways was acquired by a railway company, under the compulsory powers of the Lands Clauses Acts, in 1864, and the purchase-money was paid into Court. The purchase-money was now ordered to be paid out to the district council, who were the highway authority for the district, subject to the approval of the Local Government Board being obtained, on the footing that the council, having obtained that approval, would be absolutely entitled to the money by virtue of their power of sale, with such approval, under the Exhausted Parish Lands Act, 1876. Brumby and Frodingham Urban Council, In re, 3 L. G. R. 258; 69 J. P. 96—Kekewich, J.

Termor—Adverse Possession—Reversioner Unknown.]—In 1810 a freehold house was demised, at a peppercorn rent, for two hundred years to secure an annuity of 100l., payable until the death of the survivor of nine named persons, upon which event the term was to cease. From 1829 to 1895, when the ninth life dropped, and from 1895 to December, 1900, the annuitant or his successors in title, the last of whom was the petitioner, had been in possession of the premises and in receipt of the whole of the net rent, which was never less than 120l. per annum, without any claim on the part of the reversioner, who was altogether unknown. In December, 1900, the premises were acquired compulsorily under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and the purchase-money paid into Court. On petition for payment out under section 79 of that Act, Held, that the petitioner was not at present entitled to immediate payment out to her of the capital money in Court within that section, but that the dividends or income on the investments of the fund might be forthwith paid to her until twelve years from the dropping of the ninth life, or until further order. Harris, In re; London County Council, ex parte, 70 L. 9. SUPERFLUOUS LANDS.

Land Taken for Purpose of Future Doubling of Line.]—Land taken compulsorily by a railway company for the future doubling of a line of railway cannot be regarded as superfluous lands within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act. Brown v. North British Railway, 8 F. 534—Ct. of Sess.

Negotiations for Sale Before and After the Expiration of Ten Years—Lease of Portion of Land.]—The mere facts that both before and after the expiration of the ten years limited by the 120th section of the Lands Clauses (Scotland) Act a railway company has negotiated for a portion of their land, without however effecting a sale, and has leased another portion, are not conclusive evidence that such portions have become "superfluous" within the statutory meaning of the word. London and South-Western Railway v. Blackmore (39 L. J. Ch. 718; L. R. 4 H.L. 610) distinguished. Macfie v. Callander and Oban Railway, 67 L. J. P.C. 58; [1898] A.C. 270; 78 L. T. 598—H.L. (Sc.)

Vesting of.]—Where under the provisions of section 127 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, superfluous lands become, in default of sale within the prescribed period, vested in the adjoining owners, the vesting takes place by force of a conditional limitation and not of a forfeiture. Miller v. Waterford Harbour Commissioners, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 421—K.B. D.

LETTERS.

Property in—Right of Writer to Restrain Publication.]—The defendant H., who was the proprietor of a newspaper, published on October 2, 1897, a violent attack upon the plaintiff's conduct in certain Stock Exchange transactions some years ago, founded upon letters written by the plaintiff to B. The same supplement contained a threat to publish on January 1, 1898, proofs which the defendant had in his possession that the plaintiff had carried on similar transactions in later years. The plaintiff, who was also the proprietor and editor of a newspaper, published on October 7, 1897, an article dealing with and denying the defendant's charges, in which he wrote: "You may publish and republish my letters to B. as often as you please"; adding that he could restrain their publication by injunction if he chose, but that he had no intention of doing so. The plaintiff afterwards published a letter, alleged to have been written by the defendant to a third person, as proof that the defendant was a person wholly unworthy of confidence. The plaintiff afterwards discovered that the proofs referred to in the defendant's threat consisted wholly or partly of letters written by the plaintiff to S., and obtained by the defendant H. from S.'s widow. The plaintiff now moved to restrain the defendants H. and S.'s widow from publishing any letters written by the plaintiff to S., and from informing any one of the contents thereof:—Held, that the Court will restrain any person in the possession of letters from publishing them against the will of the writer, except under special circumstances—e.g. where the publication is necessary for the purpose of clearing the defendant's character; that there was nothing in the plaintiff's conduct to disentitle him to this relief, and the defendant had not shown that his purpose in publishing the letters was to clear his own character. The injunction was granted against publication of the letters from the plaintiff to S., but not against informing any one of the contents thereof. S.'s widow was not proved to have given the letters to H. for the purpose of publication, or to have colluded with him, and the action was dismissed against her with costs. Labouchere v. Hess, 77 L. T. 559—North, J.

Right to Use—Publication—Paraphrasing—Extracts from—Right to Publish Information Contained in Letters—Authority to Write Biography—Implied Authority to Use Letters.]—The recipient or possessor of letters is not entitled to publish them, nor paraphrases thereof, nor extracts therefrom, and, if they are written in confidence, he is not entitled to communicate their contents to third persons. But, subject to those exceptions, the lawful possession of a letter confers all the rights incident to property. Philip v. Pennell, 76 L. J. Ch. 663; [1907] 2 Ch. 577; 97 L. T. 386; 23 T. L. R. 718—Kekewich, J.

Accordingly, a person lawfully in possession of letters may make use of the information contained in them for the purpose of writing a biography without any express or implied authority from the writer. Id.

The right to use a letter does not depend upon the intention of the writer. Ib.

Semble, a person who has lawfully obtained possession of letters will not be restrained from using them merely because the addressee has been guilty of a breach of confidence in parting with them. Confidence does not run with the letters. Ib.

Semble, the observations of LORD ELDON in Gee v. Pritchard (2 Swanst. 402, at p. 416) apply to letters as well as to a book. Ib.

(a) Generally.

Alternative Remedies—Different Courts.]—If in an Act of Parliament power is conferred to take remedy in divers Courts, as a general rule that remedy will, in each Court, be subject to the lex fori of that Court, including the limitation of actions. Blackburn Corporation v. Sanderson, 71 L. J. K.B. 590; [1902] 1 K.B. 794; 86 L. T. 804; 66 J. P. 452—C.A.

Accrual of Right of Action.]—A testator who died in 1863 devised freeholds to his wife B. and his daughter J. to hold jointly during B.'s life, and after B.'s death to J. in fee "provided always that if my said wife (B.) should ever get married, she shall forfeit and lose all claim and title to any of my property on receiving the sum of 50*l.*" B. married again in 1874. J. came of age in 1879 and died intestate and unmarried in 1897. In 1898 the plaintiff (the heir-at-law both of J. and of the testator) tendered 50*l.* to B. and demanded possession of the land, and on B.'s refusal brought an action of ejectment against her and her husband:—Held, that the right of action only occurred in 1898 upon the tender of the 50*l.*, and that on lodging this amount in Court the plaintiff was entitled to recover possession of the land. Connolly v. Leahy, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 344—Q.B. D.

Forged Will—Revocation of Probate—Grant of Letters of Administration.]—The grant of probate of a forged will is made void ab initio by its subsequent revocation by the Court; and the established rule is that no action can be maintained in respect of a deceased person's estate except by a duly constituted administrator or executor. Chan Kit San v. Ho Fung Hang, 71 L. J. P.C. 49; [1902] A.C. 257; 86 L. T. 245; 51 W. R. 18—P.C.

Thus in a partnership action for account by the administrator of a deceased partner the Statute of Limitations begins to run not from the grant of probate of a will subsequently declared to be a forgery, but from the grant of administration made after and in consequence of the revocation of such will. Ib.

(b) Concealed Fraud.

"Concealed fraud," to bring into operation section 26 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, must be the fraud of the person setting up the statute or of his predecessor in title. The section does not apply where neither the person sued nor his predecessors in title were party or privy to the fraud at the time when it was perpetrated. McCallum, In re; McCallum v. McCallum, 49 W. R. 129—C.A.

Concealed or Fraudulent Trespass—Ignorance.]—The Statute of Limitations is no answer to a claim in respect of a concealed and fraudulent trespass in the working of coal mines so long as the party defrauded remains in ignorance without any fault or laches of his own. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. North-Eastern Railway (47 L. J. Ch. 20; 4 Ch. D. 845) disapproved. Bull's Coal-Mining Co. v. Osborne, 68 L. J. P.C. 49; [1899] A.C. 351; 80 L. T. 430; 47 W. R. 545—P.C.

Laches.]—The encroachment upon the bounds of, and abstraction of coal from, an adjoining mine by underground working, although tortious, does not, when the arbitrator finds mere negligence on the one side and no laches on the other, raise such an inference of fraud or concealment of fraud as to oust the operation of the Statute of Limitations. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. North-Eastern Railway (47 L. J. Ch. 20; 4 Ch. D. 845) not followed. Astley and Tyldesley Coal Co. and Tyldesley Coal Co., In re, 68 L. J. Q.B. 252; 80 L. T. 116—D.

Real Property—Possession.]—The “concealed fraud,” which under section 26 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, will prevent the running of the Real Property Limitation Acts against a plaintiff claiming real property must, according to the principles which have been always acted upon by Courts of equity, be the fraud of, or in some way imputable to, the person setting up the statutes, or of some one through whom that person claims (RIGBY, L.J., dissentiente). McCallum, In re; McCallum v. McCallum, 70 L. J. Ch. 206; [1901] 1 Ch. 143; 83 L. T. 717; 49 W. R. 129—C.A.

Per RIGBY, L.J.—Section 26 did not alter the old doctrine of the Courts of equity, which was that a suit might have been brought at any time in a case of concealed fraud, notwithstanding that the person sued and those through whom he claimed had not been party or privy to the fraud at the time when it was perpetrated. Ib.

Per LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., RIGBY, L.J., and KEKEWICH, J.—The intentional concealment by a mother of a conveyance of property by her to her daughter is a “concealed fraud” against the daughter, whatever the mother’s motive for concealment may have been. Ib.

Action in County Court—Subsequent Proceedings in Respect of same Cause of Action in High Court—Knowledge of Facts—Res Judicata.]—In 1890 the plaintiff effected a policy of insurance on his life with the defendants, relying upon the inducements of its agent that (inter alia) he would have to pay only a fixed periodical premium. In 1898 a claim was for the first time made on the plaintiff for payment of an increased premium. The plaintiff, being desirous not to forfeit his policy, paid the amount demanded under protest. In April, 1898, he issued a plaint in the County Court to recover a sum as an overpayment, but the County Court Judge in May, 1898, decided that he was not entitled to succeed. Meetings of policy-holders were held from time to time in 1900, when it was resolved to bring an action in the name of the plaintiff against the defendants. But it was subsequently determined to await the decision of the Court in an action which had been instituted against the defendants by another policy-holder. That other action was tried before Kekewich, J., in July, 1902, when his Lordship held that the defendants had no right to increase the premiums as the age of the assured increased. The defendants appealed, and the Court of Appeal took a different view from that of Kekewich, J., but held that the policy was tricky and could be rescinded. The House of Lords in July, 1904, affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal. In September, 1904, the plaintiff issued his writ in the present action, claiming rescission of his policy on the ground of misrepresentations:—Held, that the County Court Judge having in May, 1898, decided what was the true meaning of the policy, and his decision not having been appealed from, the plaintiff must be taken to have known at that date what was the nature of the contract between the defendants and himself, and all the facts which would have enabled him to bring an action for misrepresentation; and that the Statute of Limitations was therefore a bar to the present action, the period at which the statute began to run being that at which the plaintiff knew the facts, and not that at which he ascertained the proper construction to be placed upon them. Molloy v. Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Co., 94 L. T. 756; 22 T. L. R. 525—C.A.

(c) Express Trust.

Moneys Entrusted to Agent for Special Purpose—Fraudulent Concealment—Statute of Limitations.]—The Statute of Limitations is no bar to an action by a principal against his agent in respect of moneys remitted to the agent for an express purpose and retained by him, where such agent is either in the position of an express trustee or guilty of fraudulent concealment in his accounts. North American Land and Timber Co. v. Watkins, 73 L. J. Ch. 626; [1904] 2 Ch. 233; 91 L. T. 425; 20 T. L. R. 642—C.A. Affirming, 52 W. R. 860—Kekewich, J.

Settlement—Term of Years—Money Charged upon Land—Lapse of Time.]—By a settlement of 1838 a freehold estate was vested in trustees for a term of years upon trust to raise two separate sums of 2,000*l.* in two specified events. The first sum became raisable in 1886, the second in 1890, but neither was raised. In 1898 an action was brought for a declaration that both sums should be raised. It was admitted at the trial that the Statute of Limitations did not bar the action as to the first-mentioned sum:—Held, that section 10 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, was a bar to the raising of the second 2,000*l.*, as it was a sum secured upon land by an express trust within that section; and further, that the fact of the trustees being in a position to raise the first sum was not sufficient to entitle them to raise the second. Williams v. Williams, 69

Infancy—Real Property—Adverse Possession—Subsequent Accrual of Infant's Title.]—Where the title of an infant to real property vests in possession at a time when a stranger is in adverse possession as against the infant's predecessor, the Statute of Limitations will continue to run against the infant, notwithstanding his infancy. Murray v. Watkins (62 L. T. 796) followed. Garner v. Wingrove, 74 L. J. Ch. 545; [1905] 2 Ch. 233; 93 L. T. 131; 53 W. R. 588—Buckley, J.

2. SIMPLE CONTRACT DEBTS.

Loan Secured by Charge on Land.]—A simple contract debt though secured by a charge on land, is barred in six years by the Limitation Act, 1623. Barnes v. Glendon, 68 L. J. Q.B. 502, [1899] 1 Q.B. 885; 80 L. T. 606; 47 W. R. 435—C.A.

Part Payment by Tenant for Life—Order for Administration of Real Estate.]—Testator, who died on October 30, 1894, was at his death indebted to the plaintiffs as simple contract creditors. By his will the testator devised part of his real estate to a tenant for life, and subject thereto he devised his residuary real estate to other devisees in fee. In 1895, the plaintiffs made an arrangement with the executors and the tenant for life, under which they received payments on account of their debt and interest out of the rents of the real estate given to the tenant for life, and these payments continued until 1903. In 1905 the plaintiffs took out a summons asking for the administration of the real and personal estate of the testator:—Held, that the part payment by the tenant for life of the simple contract debt of his testator and of interest thereon was sufficient to keep the debt alive, not only as against the devisees in remainder after the life estate, but also as against devisees of other real estate of the testator. Hollingshead, In re; Hollingshead v. Webster (57 L. J. Ch. 400; 37 Ch. D. 651), followed. Roddam v. Morley (26 L. J. Ch. 438; 1 De G. & J. 1) and Dibb v. Walker (62 L. J. Ch. 536; [1893] 2 Ch. 429) applied. Chant, In re; Bird v. Godfrey, 74 L. J. Ch. 542; [1905] 2 Ch. 225; 93 L. T. 265; 53 W. R. 526—Warrington, J.

Acknowledgment of Debt—Conditional Promise to Pay.]—A debtor wrote to his creditor a letter in which he said he was willing to sell 5,230 shares in a certain company for the sum of 816l. 4s. 6d., and in the event of his doing so he would, with the money, pay the call due on 629 of the shares and the balance in settlement of his account with the creditor, amounting, at December 31 last, to 501l. 14s. 6d. This letter was written before the expiration of six years after the debt was incurred. The sale of shares mentioned in the letter did not take place:—Held, that the letter was not in itself sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Barrett v. Davies, 91 L. T. 736; 21 T. L. R. 21—C.A.

—Acknowledgment that Accounts are Open.]—Within the period of limitation in respect of a debt the debtor filed a written statement, in an application for probate of his creditor's will, that he had for the past few years open and current accounts with the deceased:—Held, that this was an acknowledgment by the debtor that there was a right to have the accounts settled, from which a promise to pay the amount found due upon the accounts would be inferred so as to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Maniram v. Seth Rupchand, 22 T. L. R. 619—P.C.

— In October, 1898, a debt then being statute-barred, A. wrote to M.: "You may be quite sure I shall do all I can, and as soon as I can, but it is not much use making promises without some pretty good prospect of keeping them." On November 17 following he wrote to the plaintiff: "I had a letter from you four or five weeks ago, and wrote you in reply that I would do all in my power, but that it was useless for me to make promises I could not be fairly sure of keeping, and I really cannot say anything more definite." Later, in answer to a demand from M.'s solicitors, he wrote asking for particulars, and concluded: "Legal proceedings . . . would only result in my losing my present employment and the small salary I am able to earn, which would still further delay the possibility of payment. I trust your client will agree to accept some comparatively reasonable amount, and if you can give me the option of repaying by instalments I shall be glad." The required particulars were supplied by M.'s solicitors, and he was asked to state with what sum and in what manner he would settle the claim:—Held, that these letters did not constitute a promise to pay absolutely and unconditionally, and therefore did not amount to a sufficient acknowledgment to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. Mowbray v. Appleby, 80 L. T. 805—Bucknill, J.

—Promise to Pay when Able.]—The defendant, who owed money for goods supplied to him by the plaintiff's testator, wrote the following letter to the plaintiff: "I am sorry I cannot pay off anything of my account at present. . . . You have always treated me very well, and as soon as I have the money I shall forward you a cheque for the late account. . . . I hope you will express my regret to the executors, and explain that it is my intention to pay when I am in a position to do so, and I shall not try to get out of the debt by its becoming outdated":—Held, that this was a conditional promise to pay the debt; and, the condition not being fulfilled, the letter did not take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Lusher v. Hassard, 20 T. L. R. 563—C.A.

—Letter—Whether Conditional or Not.]—The statement in a letter "I am really sorry to keep you so long waiting for your money, but I shall be taking some money next month, I think, without fail, and will then try and settle with you," is sufficient admission to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations, and is not conditional. Fryke v. Hill, 79 L. T. 738—D.

— Letter to Managing Director of Company.—A letter, written by the debtor to the managing director of a company to whom he owes money, stating: "I am willing to sell the 5,230 shares that I hold in the P. D. B. B. Company Limited for the sum of 816*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*, and in the event of my doing so I will with the money pay the 10*s.* call due on 629 of the above shares, amounting to 314*l.* 10*s.*, and the balance in settlement of my account with R. B. and Son Limited, amounting at December last to 501*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*," is sufficient acknowledgment to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations, even although the sale of the shares does not take place. Barrett v. Davies, 90 L. T. 460; 52 W. R. 607; 20 T. L. R. 318—Phillimore, J. Reversed, 21 T. L. R. 21—C.A.

A general acknowledgment of a debt with a conditional promise to pay, but without any distinct statement that except upon the performance of the condition the debtor will not or cannot pay, is sufficient to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

— Two Letters—Parol Evidence to Connect—Admissibility.—Parol evidence is admissible to shew that a letter was written in answer to a former one, in order to read the two letters together that they may constitute an acknowledgment to take a debt out of the Statute of Limitations. McGuffie v. Burleigh, 78 L. T. 264—Bruce, J.

— Affidavit for Probate.—In a claim in an administration action for 2,000*l.* lent by a father to his son, no payment in respect of capital or interest had been made since 1898, so that the claim was prima facie statute-barred. In 1905 the son, as executor of his father's will, signed the Inland Revenue affidavit for probate, in which appeared an item of 2,000*l.* stated to have been lent to him by his father:—Held, that the item in the affidavit was an acknowledgment within Lord Tenterden's Act to take the debt out of the Statute of Limitations. Emmett, In re; Jenkins v. Emmett, 95 L. T. 755—Kekewich, J.

— Promise to Pay Balance Found to be Due.—A promise to pay the balance of an original debt which may be found to be due upon taking an account is a sufficient promise to take a case out of the Statute of Limitations. Langrish v. Watts, 72 L. J. K.B. 435; [1903] 1 K.B. 686; 88 L. T. 443; 51 W. R. 503—C.A.

In an action to recover a debt of 100*l.* barred by the Statute of Limitations, the plaintiff, in order to take the case out of the statute, relied upon certain letters written by the defendant, his nephew, in which he wrote: "I cannot satisfy myself as to the exact amount I was owing uncle [the plaintiff] when I left home the first time. I have some note of what I paid back; but to clear up the subject I shall be pleased if you can furnish me with particulars to check them with mine, and I will do my best to pay back what I owe"—"I am well aware that I did give uncle a note for 100*l.* originally but subsequently I gave him a cheque for 40*l.*, because I kept the stub of the cheque, and I am almost positive I also gave him another cheque for 20*l.* reducing the amount at the time I left home to 40*l.* . . . Just at present I cannot lay my hand upon my bank book of that date or would be more positive on the subject. At present I have no money on hand having bought some houses out of the portion I got, but as soon as there is another division I will send uncle some." At the trial it was admitted that "another division" (that is, division of certain property, in which the defendant was to have a share) had taken place, but the defendant failed to prove that he had paid the 40*l.* and 20*l.* off the original debt as alleged:—Held, that the letters were not an acknowledgment of the original debt, but that they did amount to a promise to pay such sum as upon taking an account should be found to be due, that such a promise was a sufficient promise to take the case out of the statute, and that the defendant having at the trial failed to shew that any sums had been paid off the 100*l.* which was admitted to have been originally due, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the whole amount. Ib.

— Part Payment—Account Containing Statute-barred Items—General Payment on Account—Appropriation.—The promise to pay which is inferred from a part payment under the Statute of Limitations is a promise to pay only so much as was not then statute-barred, unless the payment was made expressly on account of the statute-barred debt. A solicitor, part of whose costs were statute-barred, pressed his client for payment, but the client declared his inability to find at the moment more than 20*l.*, which sum was accordingly paid:—Held, that this was an acknowledgment that more than 20*l.* was due, from which a promise to pay ought to be inferred, but that such promise was only to pay so much as was not then statute-barred. Boswell, In re; Merritt v. Boswell, 75 L. J. Ch. 234; [1906] 2 Ch. 359; 94 L. T. 243; 54 W. R. 306; 22 T. L. R. 247—Kekewich, J. Affirmed, 75 L. J. Ch. 658—C.A.

The client owed money to certain persons to whom he had given security. The solicitor on his behalf obtained the loan of a larger amount on the security, paid off the original creditors, and retained the balance on account:—Held, that the retention of this balance could not be treated as a part payment from which a promise to pay could be inferred. Ib.

The costs in question were really incurred for the benefit of all the creditors of a certain debtor, one of whom, recognising a moral obligation to contribute, sent 20*l.* to the solicitor:—Held, that this was in no sense a payment by the client from which a promise to pay could be inferred. Ib.

— Payment by Agent on Account—Inference of Promise to Pay Balance.—An agent who has authority to pay a debt of his principal has authority to promise to pay it; and where an agent acting within the scope of his authority makes a payment on account of a debt of his principal, and nothing more is said or done, a promise to pay the balance of the debt will be inferred so as to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Hale, In re; Lilley v. Foad, 68 L. J. Ch. 517; [1899] 2 Ch. 107; 80 L. T. 827; 47 W. R. 579—C.A.

Part Payment—Judgment—Levy of Part of Demand—Fi. Fa.—Co-debtors.]—Where a judgment was obtained in 1884 against A and B, and in 1886 part of the judgment debt was levied under an execution against A.—Held, that this was sufficient to keep the debt alive against A and B for a further period of twelve years, and that within such period the judgment creditor was entitled to an order for liberty to issue execution against B. Brew v. Brew, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 163—Q.B.D.

Partnership—Account containing Statute-barred Items—Payment on Account—Appropriation by Creditor—Promise to Pay.]—For many years F. & Co. had been employed as commission agents by E. & Co. to effect sales for them. The course of business was as follows: E. & Co. sent goods to the firm, who forwarded them to the purchasers, received the purchase-money, and accounted to E. & Co. for the same after deducting commission. On August 29, 1894, E. & Co. sent the firm a statement of account shewing a balance due to E. & Co. of 494*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* This was arrived at by debiting F. & Co., first, with a series of items which, on the face of the account, had become due within six years from the date when the account was sent; and secondly, with certain items included in a "Consignment account." All the items under the heading "Consignment account" were in August, 1894, statute-barred with the exception of two. F. & Co. sent a cheque in September, 1894, for 300*l.* "on account," and stated that they would "thoroughly examine statements next week, and close up the affair altogether if possible." The 300*l.* so paid was by F. & Co. placed to the credit of the consignment account. Nothing further was done down to the death of one of the partners in F. & Co., against whose estate E. & Co. sought to prove for the balance due to them. The Statute of Limitations was relied on:—Held, that the existence of a fiduciary relation between the parties did not prevent the defence of the statute being set up. Burdick v. Garrick (39 L. J. Ch. 369; L. R. 5 Ch. 233) and Soar v. Ashwell ([1893] 2 Q.B. 390) distinguished. Friend, In re; Friend v. Friend, 66 L. J. Ch. 737; [1897] 2 Ch. 421; 77 L. T. 50; 46 W. R. 139—Stirling, J.

Held further, that the appropriation by E. & Co. of the 300*l.* to the consignment account did not operate to take the case out of the statute, but that the payment was an acknowledgment by F. & Co. that there was pending between them and E. & Co. an account relating to the several items mentioned in the statement, including the consignment account, from which a promise to pay the balance of the account when ascertained ought to be inferred, and that consequently E. & Co. were entitled to prove in respect of the items in the consignment account. Mills v. Fowkes (8 L. J. C.P. 276; 5 Bing. N.C. 455) and Nash v. Hodgson (25 L. J. Ch. 186; 6 De G. M. & G. 474) distinguished. Id.

Action of Contract—Contract by Local Authority to Pay for Repair of Road if they were Liable—Action Instituted after Expiration of Six Months.]—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, does not apply to actions for the price of goods sold and delivered or for work and labour done. Where, therefore, owing to a landslip a portion of a road repairable by the defendant council fell on to the plaintiff's land and it was agreed between the council and the plaintiff that the latter should do the work of repairing the road, the question of liability for the repairs being left over, the plaintiff having done the repairs was held entitled to maintain an action for the cost, although more than six months had elapsed, inasmuch as section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, had no application to such a case. Milford Docks Co. v. Milford Haven Urban Council, 65 J. P. 483—C.A.

3. SPECIALTY DEBTS.

Unclaimed Dividends—Reduction of Capital—Return of Moneys to Shareholders—Sanction of Court—Moneys not Claimed—Statutory Period of Limitation.]—The statutory period of limitation is twenty years in the case of dividends declared on ordinary shares in respect of which certificates have been issued under the seal of the company and referring in the usual way to the rules and regulations of the company, and also, in the case of moneys repayable to the shareholders under an order of the Court, sanctioning the reduction of capital by way of such repayment. Smith v. Cork and Bandon Railway (Ir. R. 5 Eq. 65) and Drogheda Steam Packet Co., In re ([1903] 1 Ir. R. 512), followed. Artizans' Land and Mortgage Corporation, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 581; [1904] 1 Ch. 796; 52 W. R. 380; 12 Manson, 98—Byrne, J.

Deposit of Shares—Statute-barred Debt.]—The time at which a bar to an action for foreclosure arises under or by analogy to the Statute of Limitations is not that at which the personal remedy ceases, but that at which the remedy against the property which is the subject of the charge is taken away. London and Midland Bank v. Mitchell, 68 L. J. Ch. 568; [1899] 2 Ch. 161; 81 L. T. 263; 47 W. R. 602—Stirling, J.

There is no provision in any Statute of Limitations with reference to personal property similar to the provisions contained in the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, whereby the title to land is extinguished after a certain period; so that, though a debt may be barred after six years by the Limitation Act, 1623, in the sense that no personal action can be brought to recover it, yet the debt is not at an end and a mortgagee's right to the property is not destroyed. Id.

4. DAMAGES.

(a) Directors' Liability Act, 1890, under.

Untrue Statement in Prospectus of Company.]—An action against directors and promoters of a company under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, is not an action for "penalties, damages, or sums of money given to the party grieved" by a statute within the meaning of section 3 of the Civil Procedure Act, 1833, and is not subject to the limitation of two years imposed by that section. Thomson v. Glanmorris (Lord),

Per LINDLEY, M.R., and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—An action under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, would under the old forms of pleading have been an action on the case for breach of duty, and by analogy to the old actions the period of limitation would be six years under section 3 of the Limitation Act, 1623. Ib.

Trustees of Loan Fund Society.]—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, only applies to acts done and to neglects and defaults in the execution, or intended execution, of an Act of Parliament, or of a public duty or authority. It has no application in the case of trustees of a Loan Fund Society sued for breach and neglect of their duties as such trustees. O'Brien v. Mitchelstown Loan Fund, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 232—C.A.

Continuance of Injury or Damage—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.]—An action for personal injuries sustained by a person through the misfeasance of a local authority must be commenced within six months from the time of the accident; in such a case there is no continuance of injury or damage within the meaning of section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. Carey v. Bernondsey Borough Council, 67 J. P. 447; 2 L. G. R. 219; 20 T. L. R. 2—C.A.

5. REAL PROPERTY.

Accrual of Right of Action—Trustee—Cestui que Trust of Lessee—Accretion to Demised Property.]—The owner of two adjoining plots of land (called herein the foundry plot and the stable plot) in 1819 granted a lease of the former to one J. M. for ninety-nine years. In 1831 he granted to J. M. a similar lease for ninety-nine years of the stable plot, and J. M. used a strip of the stable property as a yard, in which he stored articles from the foundry. From 1843 the strip was always occupied with the foundry as a storage yard, and there was no access from it to the other part of the stable property except through the foundry. In 1842 J. M. assigned both leaseholds to a trustee to hold on such trusts as he should by deed appoint, and by a deed dated November 1846 he appointed the piece of land whereon he carried on his business of an iron foundry upon trust to pay the rents and profits to his son John M., or to permit him to occupy the same during his life or until he should assign his interest, and afterwards upon trust to assign the same to the children of John M. He made no express appointment of the stable property, but appointed the residue of the properties upon trust to divide the rents and profits between a grandson and two daughters and afterwards for their children. J. M. died in 1848, and John M. carried on the foundry business, and died in 1853. His widow then carried it on, and afterwards his daughter Mrs. T. In 1856 both leases were renewed, the new leases being granted to the settlement trustees. John M. and afterwards his widow retained possession of the strip of the stable plot without payment of rent to the trustees. Subsequently to 1856 Mrs. T. succeeded to the interests of her brothers in the foundry property and carried on the business, occupying and using the disputed strip of land, and in 1890 a new lease of the foundry plot was granted to her by the old description, and she thereupon sold it to the defendants. In 1893 a partition action was commenced, and it was ordered that the lease of the stable property should be sold, and, the trustee having in 1894 taken a renewed lease, it was sold in 1896 to S., who afterwards took a new lease, and in 1901 assigned it to the plaintiffs:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover possession of the strip of land, notwithstanding that the defendants or their predecessors had been in undisputed possession of it for more than fifty years, inasmuch as no right of entry had accrued to the lessor until the surrender of the stable lease in 1894, and it had passed under the subsequent lease of the stable plot. East Stonehouse Urban Council v. Willoughby, 71 L. J. K.B. 873; [1902] 2 K.B. 318; 87 L. T. 366; 50 W. R. 698—Channell, J.

Acts of Possession—Dispossession of True Owner—Right of Way—Equivocal Acts.]—In order to acquire a title to land under the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, it is necessary to prove discontinuance of possession by the true owner or dispossession of the true owner. Littledale v. Liverpool College, 69 L. J. Ch. 87; [1900] 1 Ch. 19; 81 L. T. 564; 48 W. R. 177—C.A.

When dispossession has to be inferred from equivocal acts, the intention with which the acts are done is all-important. Ib.

The plaintiffs having a right of way for agricultural purposes over a strip of grass land belonging to the defendants leading from a public highway to the plaintiffs' field, put up gates at each end of the strip, which they kept locked, and grazed the grass and clipped the hedges of the strip:—Held, that these acts, being compatible with the intention of protecting and exercising the right of way rather than that of excluding the true owner, were insufficient to establish the plaintiffs' title to the strip of land under the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833. Ib.

Copyholds—Custom of Manor—Title—Possession—Married Woman—Disability—Husband Suing in Right of Wife—Will—Construction—

"Estate."—Upon the death of an intestate in 1869, the copyholds of which he died possessed passed by the custom of the manor to his widow, and not to his eldest son. The intestate's widow died in 1870, having by her will given all the share and proportion of her late husband's estate to which she was entitled on his decease to be equally divided between her two daughters, one of whom was the plaintiff M. H.; and the testatrix stated that this provision was made in lieu of the various copyhold and freehold lands of her late husband's, which descended to her son on the intestacy of her husband. At that time P. H. B., the eldest son of the intestate, was a minor, and was believed by every one to be entitled to the copyholds. In 1870 the husband of M. H. and a co-plaintiff entered into possession of the copyholds, and collected the rents until P. H. B. came of age in 1878, when he accounted to him and gave up possession, having in the meantime procured an enfranchisement in his favour. In 1888 it was first discovered that the widow was the customary heir of this property, which had been in the meantime enfranchised. P. H. B. remained in possession until his death in 1890, having by his will given all his real estate to the defendants upon trust for the two children of the plaintiffs. In September, 1901, M. H. and her husband in her right brought an action claiming declarations to establish the right of M. H. to a moiety of this property as devisee under the widow's will:—Held, that both plaintiffs were barred by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, inasmuch as P. H. B. had been in receipt of the rents and profits of the property since 1870, more than thirty years before action brought; and semble, that as the widow had no intention of passing this real estate, which she thought had descended to her son, the gift in her will of all her share and proportion of her late husband's estate was ambiguous and not sufficient to pass this property, having regard to the context. Hounsell v. Dunning, 71 L. J. Ch. 259; [1902] 1 Ch. 512; 86 L. T. 382—Joyce, J.

Foreshore—Dispossession—Acts of Ownership—Intention to Exclude Owner—Foreshore.—The predecessor in title of the defendant, who was the owner of land adjoining the foreshore, which had been conveyed by the Crown to the plaintiff more than twenty years before action brought, placed rocks and piles upon a certain part of the foreshore belonging to the plaintiff for the purpose of protecting a house upon his land from the encroachment of the sea:—Held, that the question of dispossession was one of intention; that the rocks were placed upon the foreshore by the defendant's predecessor, not in order to assert a title to the ownership of the soil, but as ancillary to the use by the defendant of his own property—namely, for its protection from the sea; that the plaintiff had never been dispossessed, and had therefore a right to the land in question, subject to the right of the defendant to an easement over the land for the purpose of protecting his house from the sea by means of rocks and piles placed on the land. Philpot v. Bath, 21 T. L. R. 634—C.A.

Tenancy at Will—Entry by Landlord to Repair.—Where a tenant at will remains in possession of the premises for more than twelve years after the expiration of the first year of the tenancy, but pays no rent, and the landlord enters from time to time to do repairs, there being no evidence whether such entry was made with or against the consent of the tenant, the entry does not operate so as to constitute a resumption of possession by the landlord, and thereby to determine the tenancy at will, and the tenant therefore acquires a statutory title to the premises by virtue of section 7 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, and the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874. Lynes v. Snaith, 68 L. J. Q.B. 275; [1899] 1 Q.B. 486; 80 L. T. 122; 47 W. R. 411—D.

Determination—Creation of Fresh Tenancy.—A tenancy at will is determined by a mortgage of the premises by the landlord, such mortgage being brought to the knowledge of the tenant. Where the tenant remains in possession, the new tenancy, necessary to prevent the Statute of Limitations running against the landlord, is sufficiently created by estoppel, and the fact that he had by the mortgage parted with his reversion is immaterial. Jarman v. Hale, 68 L. J. Q.B. 681; [1899] 1 Q.B. 994—D.

Discontinuance of Possession—User of Land.—In 1819 a portion of the Bull of Clontarf, a sandy tract in Dublin Bay, was taken from V.'s predecessor by the Dublin Ballast Board, after an inquisition, and an award was made, containing a map on which the boundary between the land taken and V.'s land was stated. Some years afterwards three wooden posts were put by an officer of the board in a line considerably outside the boundary, as shewn on the map. As these posts decayed two walls, twenty-one feet long by eight feet high, were built on their site. These were the only physical marks of a boundary. V.'s cattle grazed beyond them without interruption. In 1865 a portion of the land between the boundary on the map and the walls, and which had been previously fenced off, was leased by the board to the Admiralty. In 1876 and 1884 the question as to the correct boundary was raised between the board and V. In 1884 V. commenced an action against the board, claiming damages for trespass, and an injunction. This action was never brought to a hearing:—Held, that there had been no discontinuance of possession by V., and that he was entitled to the land between the boundary on the map and the posts, except that portion leased to the Admiralty. Vernon's Estate, In re, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 1—Ross, J.

Possessory Title—Restrictive Covenants—Extinction—Notice—Constructive Notice.—A "squatter," who gains a possessory title to land by virtue of twelve years' uncontested adverse occupation, is not relieved from the burden of restrictive covenants affecting the land merely by lack of notice of the existence of such covenants during the period of his adverse occupation. Restrictive covenants constitute an equitable interest in the land, and this equitable interest is prior in validity to all equities on the land subsequently created, including the equity of a subsequent purchaser for value. The question of notice is only material as binding the conscience of a purchaser for value so as to prevent him from setting up possession of the legal estate. As a "squatter," however, cannot even set up the preliminary plea of purchaser for value, it becomes immaterial, in this case, further to consider whether he can or cannot set up the additional plea of possession of the legal estate, and in his case, accordingly, it is also immaterial to consider whether he has or has not had notice of the existence of restrictive covenants. Nesbit and Potts's Contract, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 310; [1905] 1 Ch. 391; 92 L. T. 448; 53 W. R. 297; 21 T. L. R. 261—Farwell, J.

Restrictive covenants are not extinguished by virtue of section 34 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833. Ib.

Subsequent purchasers for value from the "squatter" are not protected against restrictive covenants by lack of actual notice, unless they shew that they would not have been affected with actual notice had they searched the title for the usual period of forty years. It is not necessary for those who claim the benefit of the covenants to shew that the title, if searched, would have affected the purchaser with actual notice; the burden, on the contrary, is on the purchaser to prove the negative. Ib.

Tenant of Land—Adverse Possession—Arrears of Rent.—A testatrix gave her real and personal property to trustees upon trust for sale and to hold the proceeds for her four children; and she declared that all moneys owing to her at her death by any child, for rent or otherwise, should be taken towards satisfaction of that child's share. The testatrix had let a farm at the rent of 80*l.* a year to a son, who had paid no rent for over twelve years:—Held, that the title of the testatrix to the land having been extinguished by the Real Property Limitation Acts, all her rights as reversioner had come to an end, and no rent remained owing in respect of the land which could be deducted from the son's share. Jolly, In re; Gathercole v. Norfolk, 69 L. J. Ch. 661; [1900] 2 Ch. 616; 83 L. T. 118; 48 W. R. 657—C.A.

Bailiff for Infants—Change of Possession.—P. C., the owner of a farm held under a yearly tenancy, died intestate in 1864, leaving a widow and four children, minors, in possession. In 1866 the widow married T. M., who was accepted as tenant of the farm by the landlord. No administration was ever taken out to P. C. All of the children of P. C. left the farm prior to 1883; none of them ever returned, or asserted a claim to a share in P. C.'s assets, and no acknowledgment of title was ever made to any of them from the time they left. T. M. died in 1901, having bequeathed the farm to his widow for life, and after her death to his son, the vendor. In 1902 the widow assigned the farm to the vendor freed from her life estate, and in 1907 the vendor entered into a contract for sale of the farm to the purchaser, who required the interests of the children of P. C. to be accounted for. This the vendor refused to do:—Held, on the hearing of a vendor and purchaser summons, that, although the widow of P. C., and subsequently T. M., entered into possession of the farm as to two-thirds thereof as bailiffs for the minor children, their position as such was changed by the departure of the children without making any claims to their shares; that the Statute of Limitations began to run against each child who left the farm on his or her attaining twenty-one years of age, and that, on proof that no claim had ever been made by, or acknowledgment given to, any of the children, a good title would be shewn. Maguire and McClelland's Contract, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 393—C.A.

Next-of-kin Remaining in Possession of Chattel Real—Acquisition of Beneficial Interest—Joint Tenancy.—Where some of the next-of-kin of a tenant who died intestate continued in possession of his holding for a period sufficient to confer title under the Statute of Limitations,—Held, that they had thereby acquired a beneficial title under the statute, and that the character of the title was a joint tenancy. Coyle v. M'Fadden, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 298—Ross, J.

Part Payment—Payment under Foreign Bankruptcy.—A part payment to take a case out of section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, must be such a payment as implies an acknowledgment of liability and a promise to pay the residue; and therefore payment in bankruptcy proceedings is not sufficient to take a case out of the section. Davies v. Edwards (21 L. J. Ex. 4; 7 Ex. 22), Topping, Ex parte (34 L. J. Bk. 44; 4 De G. J. & S. 551), followed. Semble, Jackson v. Fairbank (2 H. Bl. 340) overruled. Taylor v. Holland, 71 L. J. K.B. 278; [1902] 1 K.B. 676; 86 L. T. 228; 50 W. R. 558—Jelf, J.

Payment "in the meantime."—A payment made more than twelve years after the cause of action first accrued, but less than twelve years before action brought, is a payment "in the meantime" within the meaning of section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, which will prevent the right of action being barred. Clifden (Viscount), In re; Annaly v. Agar Ellis, 69 L. J. Ch. 478; [1900] 1 Ch. 774; 82 L. T. 558; 48 W. R. 428—Byrne, J.

Land Tax—Redemption by Lessee—Money Paid as Consideration—Annual Sum Payable by way of Interest—Sum of Money "charged upon" Land—"Rent."—A lessee for years of land, under a lease which contained a covenant by the lessee to pay the land tax during the term, in 1874 redeemed the land tax thereon, and the land thereupon became chargeable under section 123 of the Land Tax Redemption Act, 1802, with the amount of the money paid as the consideration for the redemption, and with the payment of a yearly sum by way of interest thereon equal in amount to the land tax redeemed, for the benefit of such person, his executors, administrators, and assigns. In 1900 an assignee of the benefits arising under the certificate of redemption sued an assignee of the lease of the land, in whom the lease became vested in 1885, for one yearly sum payable in accordance with the section. No payment or acknowledgment in respect of the tax had been made or given by the defendant to the plaintiff or his predecessors in title:—Held, that either the yearly sum payable by way of interest on the consideration money was "rent" within the meaning of section 1 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, or the money paid as the consideration for the redemption of the tax was "charged upon" the land within the meaning of section 8 of that Act, and in either case the plaintiff's claim was barred. Skene v. Cook, 71 L. J. K.B. 446; [1902] 1 K.B. 682; 86 L. T. 319; 50 W. R. 506—C.A.

6. MORTGAGES AND CHARGES.

Money Secured by Charge upon or Payable out of Land.—The effect of section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, is to take out of section 3 of the Limitation Act, 1623, and for all purposes, all actions of debt secured by mortgage or otherwise charged upon or payable out of land, including cases of security by lien. Barnes v. Glenton, 67 L. J. Q.B. 731; [1898] 2 Q.B. 223; 79 L. T. 94; 47 W. R. 13—Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J.

Mortgage of Reversionary Estate in Realty—Action on Covenant—Period of Limitation.—An action by a mortgagee against a mortgagor on the covenant to repay in a mortgage of a reversionary estate in realty is within section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, although the estate is still reversionary at the date of the action. Therefore, in such an action the period of limitation is twelve years. Sutton v. Sutton (52 L. J. Ch. 333; 22 Ch. D. 511) followed. Kirkland v. Peatfield, 72 L. J. K.B. 355; [1903] 1 K.B. 756; 88 L. T. 472; 51 W. R. 544—Wright, J.

Foreclosure—Recovery of Land—Payment of Interest by Mortgagor or His Agent—Person Bound as between Himself and Mortgagor to Pay.—The words in section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, saving the rights of a mortgagee where interest has been paid "by the person by whom the same shall be payable or his agent," include any person who as between himself and the mortgagor is bound to pay the interest. Bradshaw v. Widdrington, 71 L. J. Ch. 627; [1902] 2 Ch. 430; 86 L. T. 726; 50 W. R. 561—C.A.

A father executed a mortgage to secure to the mortgagee the repayment of a sum of money with interest which he had borrowed for the benefit of his son. The son was not a party to the mortgage-deed, but immediately on the receipt of the money from the father he executed a bond conditioned to be void on the payment by him to the father of a sum equal to the principal sum secured by the mortgage and interest. By an arrangement between the father and the son the interest from time to time falling due on the bond was paid by the son to a firm of solicitors who acted as solicitors both for the mortgagee and the father and the son, and was by them debited in their books to the son, and was actually paid by them to the person from time to time entitled to the interest falling due under the mortgage. Subsequently to the date of the mortgage the mortgagor sold the property "free from incumbrances" to A., who continued in possession for more than twelve years without notice of the mortgage, without himself paying any interest on the mortgage, and without notice of the original arrangement between the mortgagor and his son:—Held, that the payments of interest by the son were made "by the person by whom the same shall be payable" within the meaning of section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and that the mortgage debt was thereby kept alive. Ib.

"Particular estate"—"Future estate or interest"—Reversion Expectant on a Term of Years—Surrender of Term—Accrual of Right of Entry.—A reversion in fee-simple expectant upon a lease for years is not a "future estate" within the meaning of section 2 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874. Where a lessee surrenders his lease to the lessor before the expiration of the term, the surrender does not affect a title acquired against the lessee by a third person under the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874. Therefore in such a case the right of entry does not accrue to the lessor until the expiration of the time for which the term was granted. Walter v. Yalden, 71 L. J. K.B. 693; [1902] 2 K.B. 304; 87 L. T. 97; 51 W. R. 46—D.

Foreclosure Action by Puisne Mortgagee—Entry of Prior Mortgagee during Running of Statutory Period—Future Estate or Interest—Suspension of Period.—The existence of a prior mortgage at the date of the creation of a mortgage does not make the mortgagor's interest a future estate or interest for the purpose of determining the time at which the statutory period of limitation commences to run against the puisne mortgagee; nor is the running of that period suspended by the prior mortgagee's entry into possession of the mortgaged property. Dictum of ROMER, J., in Kibble v. Fairthorne (64 L. J. Ch. 184; [1895] 1 Ch. 219) not followed. Johnson v. Brock, 76 L. J. Ch. 602; [1907] 2 Ch. 533; 97 L. T. 234—Parker, J.

Action for Recovery of Land—Mortgage—Payment of Interest by Mortgagor—Mortgagee and Trespasser.—The Real Property Limitation Act, 1837, is not confined to proceedings between a mortgagee and a mortgagor, or those claiming under him, but applies in favour of a mortgagee against a person claiming to have acquired a title by possession under the Statutes of Limitation, although such person may have acquired a good title as against the mortgagor and those claiming under him, provided that the mortgage be an existing one, and was executed before the commencement of the possession on which the person claiming to have acquired a title relies. Ludbrook v. Ludbrook, 70 L. J. K.B. 552; [1901] 2 K.B. 96; 84 L. T. 485; 49 W. R. 465—C.A.

Payment of Interest by Person Liable to the Mortgagor to Pay—Effect of.—The payment to the mortgagee of interest due upon the mortgage debt by a person who, as between himself and the mortgagor, is bound to make the payment, is a sufficient payment within section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, to prevent time running against the mortgagee under the statute. Bradshaw v. Widdrington, 49 W. R. 698—Buckley, J.

Payment by Person Liable to Pay "or his agent."—In the case of a mortgage of land and of a policy of assurance on the life of the mortgagor, the payment by the office issuing the policy of the surrender value of the policy to the mortgagee is not a payment by the agent of the person liable to pay. Harty v. Davis (13 Ir. L. R. 23) followed. Conlan's Estate, In re (29 L. R. Ir. 199), dissented from. Ib.

Payment of Interest by Devisee—Effect of Payment—Other Specifically Devised Real Estate—Right to Administration.—Where real estate has been specifically devised subject to a mortgage containing the usual covenants for payment of principal and interest, continued payment of interest by the devisee prevents the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 8, from taking effect in favour of other specifically devised real estate of the testator not subject to the mortgage, and consequently, if the mortgaged property proves insufficient, the mortgagee will in respect of his debt, notwithstanding the lapse of time, be entitled to an order for the administration of the whole of the testator's real estate. Lacey, In re; Howard v. Lightfoot, 76 L. J. Ch. 316; [1907] 1 Ch. 330; 96 L. T. 306—C.A.

Roddam v. Morley (26 L. J. Ch. 438; 1 De G. & J. 1) and Leahy v. De Moleyns ([1896] 1 Ir. R. 206) applied. Dickinson v. Teasdale (32 L. J. Ch. 37; 1 De G. J. & S. 52) and Coope v. Cresswell (36 L. J. Ch. 114; L. R. 2 Ch. 112) discussed and not followed. Bradshaw v. Widdrington (71 L. J. Ch. 627; [1902] 2 Ch. 430) considered. Ib.

Payment of Interest by Continuing Trustees—Liability of Retired Trustee.—A trustee, together with his co-trustees, in 1882 executed a declaration of trust (in which they were not described as trustees) that certain moneys advanced to them should be a first charge upon certain mortgage securities transferred to the persons making the advance. There was no covenant, express or implied, for repayment of the money advanced. The trustee then retired from the trust and made no further payment on account or other acknowledgment of the debt. Payments of interest were made by the continuing trustees till 1896. In 1897 an action was brought against all the trustees to recover the balance of the loan and interest:—Held, that the action against the trustee who had retired was barred by section 8 of the Limitation Act, 1623. Barnes v. Glenton, 67 L. J. Q.B. 731; [1898] 2 Q.B. 223; 79 L. T. 94; 47 W. R. 13—Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J.

Administration of Real and Personal Estate—Claim upon Covenant in Mortgage-deed—Amount of Interest Recoverable.—In 1858 A borrowed a sum of money from the trustees of a settlement on the security of a charge on the lands of X. A having died in 1887, a decree for the administration of his real and personal estate was made in an action brought by B, his executrix, against C, his eldest son and one of his next-of-kin. No claim was made by the mortgagees in the action, which by consent was not proceeded with. Interest on the mortgage debt was paid out of the lands of X down to 1895 by B who died in 1892, and afterwards by C, who was executor of B and owner of the charge. The lands having proved insufficient to pay the interest, application to revive the action was made by the trustees of the settlement, in order to prove for principal and interest under the covenant.

C, the defendant, objected that the claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that, although the decree did not prevent the statute from running, the payment of interest kept the debt alive; but that only six years' arrears of interest was recoverable, it being a sum of money chargeable upon land within 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 42. An order was accordingly made to continue the action. Thompson v. Hurly, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 588—M.R.

"Acknowledgment of the right" to the Mortgage Money—Statutory Declaration by Mortgagor—Further Charge—"Present right to receive."—A mortgage of land was executed in 1875 to secure an advance, and in 1879 a deed of further charge on the land was executed as security for a further advance. The latter deed recited the mortgage of 1875, and that the date fixed for redemption had passed and contained a covenant by the mortgagor that he would, upon receipt of notice as mentioned in the mortgage of 1875, pay to the mortgagee the money advanced, with interest, and it declared that the power of sale and other powers contained in the earlier deed should extend to and be a security for the further advance and interest thereon. No interest was ever paid on these mortgages. In 1899 the mortgagee became of unsound mind, and his next-of-kin petitioned for an enquiry in lunacy and issued a summons for directions. Upon that summons the mortgagor made a statutory declaration as to the mortgage debts. The mortgagee having died, his executors sued the mortgagor to enforce the mortgages:—Held, that the statutory declaration was not an "acknowledgment of the right" to the money within section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, it being equally consistent with the intention to shew that the debt was statute-barred, nor was it given "to the person entitled thereto or his agent"; that, even if it was an acknowledgment, it was not effectual to take the case out of the statute, because at the time it was made both the remedy against the land and the personal remedy on the covenant were gone; and that, as regards the deed of further charge, there existed when it was executed a "present right to receive" the mortgage money within the meaning of section 8; and that therefore the action was statute-barred. Hervey v. Wynn, 22 T. L. R. 93—Swinfen Eady, J.

Protection of Security—Receiver Appointed by Mortgagee after Mortgagor's Death—His Authority to Pay Instalments of a Debt Incurred by Mortgagor—Effect of Such Payment.—Where a person has created a charge on a business to secure an annuity, and after his death the annuitant in exercise of a power given by reference to a mortgagee's power under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, appoints a receiver and directs him within the terms of the power "to manage and carry on the business as he may think fit," the receiver becomes the agent of the mortgagor's personal representative for the purpose of managing and carrying on the business. He has power to pay to a creditor the instalments of a debt incurred by the mortgagor in carrying on the business. An unconditional payment of such an instalment by the receiver amounts to an acknowledgment on the part of the mortgagor's personal representative of the existence of the debt, and in the absence of rebutting circumstances raises the implication of a new promise to pay so as to prevent the Statute of Limitations barring the creditor's claim. Hale, In re; Lilly v. Foad, 49 L. T. 468—Byrne, J.

Arrears of Interest on Mortgage—Bar by Lapse of Time—Acknowledgment by One of Two Executors and Trustees.]—An acknowledgment in writing given to a mortgagee, by one only of two executors and trustees of the testator's real estate and residuary personal estate, that more than six years' arrears of interest are due upon the mortgage debt, is not sufficient to take the case out of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, s. 42, as regards the real estate, so as to entitle the mortgagee, in an action for foreclosure in which he does not ask for payment out of the personal assets, to recover more than six years' arrears. Semble, such an acknowledgment would be effectual in the case of a claim against the personal assets. Bolding v. Lane (32 L. J. Ch. 219; 1 De G. J. & S. 122), Chinery v. Evans (11 H.L. C. 115), Putnam v. Bates (3 Russ. 188), Fordham v. Wallis (22 L. J. Ch. 548; 10 Hare, 217), and Coope v. Cresswell (36 L. J. Ch. 114; L. R. 2 Ch. 112) applied. Astbury v. Astbury, 67 L. J. Ch. 471; [1898] 2 Ch. 111; 78 L. T. 494; 46 W. R. 536—Stirling, J.

Presumption of Payment of Interest—Owner of Portion of Lands being also Owner or Tenant for Life of Mortgage.]—A fictitious payment presumed to have been made by the owner of an undivided portion of lands charged with a mortgage to himself, as owner or tenant for life of the mortgage, is not sufficient to prevent the Statute of Limitations from running in favour of a third party, owner of the remaining undivided portion. Finnegan's Estate, In re, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 370—Ross, J.

Equity of Redemption—Freeholds, Copyholds, and Policy of Insurance.]—Where real property and a policy of insurance have been included in one mortgage-deed, to secure one indivisible amount, and all subject to one and the same proviso for redemption, and the mortgagee has been in possession of the property for more than twelve years without giving any acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor, so that the right of the mortgagor to redeem the land has become barred by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, the right to redeem the policy will also be barred. Charter v. Watson, 68 L. J. Ch. 1; [1899] 1 Ch. 175; 79 L. T. 440; 47 W. R. 250—Kekewich, J.

Will—Money Charged on Land—Contribution between Specific and Residuary Devisees—Unity of Possession—Presumption of Payment of Interest on Charge by Tenant for Life.]—A testator devised his real estate to trustees upon trust to sell and to pay the income of the proceeds of sale to his wife during her life, except as to certain specified closes, which he devised to his wife for life, with remainders over. The whole of the real estate was subject to a charge created by the testator's predecessor in title; and in 1865 the trustees sold some of the real estate devised to them by the will, and out of the proceeds of sale paid off the charge. The widow received the income of the residue of the proceeds of sale, and also the rents of the unsold land (including the specifically devised closes) until her death in 1895:—Held, that as the widow was not liable to pay and could not be presumed to have paid any interest on the charge, and no acknowledgment of liability had been given, the claim of the residuary devisees to require contribution from the specific devisees towards payment of the charge was barred by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 8. England, In re; Steward v. England (65 L. J. Ch. 21; [1895] 2 Ch. 820), followed. Allen, In re; Bassett v. Allen, 67 L. J. Ch. 614; [1898] 2 Ch. 499; 79 L. T. 107; 47 W. R. 55—North, J.

7. LEASEHOLDS.

Person in Possession of—Effect of Possession as against Lessee.]—The effect of the Statute of Limitations upon the position of a person in possession of leaseholds (not an assignee) is not to transfer to him the interest of the lessee, and make him bound by the covenants in the lease, but merely to give him the right of possession during the remainder of the lease against the lessee or those claiming under him. Tichborne v. Weir (67 L. T. 735) followed. O'Connor v. Foley, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 1—M.R.

Next-of-Kin remaining in Possession.]—The next-of-kin of an intestate, who remain on in possession of chattels real without taking out administration, acquire, under the Statute of Limitations, a joint tenancy in the shares of other next-of-kin who have remained out of possession for more than twelve years, although, in respect of their own original shares, they hold as tenants in common. Smith v. Savage, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 469—Barton, J.

Executor de Son Tort—Chattels Real—Next-of-Kin—Administrator.]—A person who has gone into possession of chattels real of a deceased, as executor de son tort, and remained in possession for twelve years, may, in the absence of circumstances raising an inference of an express trust, rely on the Statute of Limitations in answer to an action for the recovery of the lands brought by a person taking out administration to the deceased. Doyle v. Foley, [1908] 2 Ir. R. 95—K.B.D.

8. LEGACIES AND PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Action to Recover Legacy—From what Date Statute begins to Run.]—In an action to recover a legacy the period of limitation is twelve years from the death of the testator, not from the expiration of one year after his death. Waddell v. Harshaw, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 416—C.A.

Will—Express Trust.]—A testator bequeathed everything he possessed to his wife and children, and appointed his wife sole executrix. The plaintiff, who was the sole surviving child of the testator, attained twenty-one in 1876; and the Court found as a fact that she was told by her mother of her father's will, and had received a part of her share thereunder. In 1903 the plaintiff brought an action against the executors and trustees of her mother, who died in 1885, and claimed a declaration that she was entitled to all the estate of her deceased father, and for an account:—Held, that what the plaintiff claimed was a legacy, and her mother was not an express trustee for her. The action was therefore barred by section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874. Mackay, In re; Mackay v. Gould, 75 L. J. Ch. 47; [1906] 1 Ch. 25; 93 L. T. 694; 54 W. R. 88—Kekewich, J.

Administration—Executors—Right of One only of Several Executors to Receive and Give Discharge—Recovery of Fund.—The Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860, which, by virtue of section 13, begins to operate as a statute of limitations when “a present right to receive” personal estate of any person dying intestate “shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or release of the same,” postulates not only a capability of giving a discharge, but a right to receive the legacy capable of being established by proceedings at law. A claim, therefore, to recover a fund is not barred by the statute, although made long after the twenty years thereby provided, where the person to be sued is a co-executor of the person having the “present right” to sue, such latter person being unable to recover possession of the fund from his co-executor into his own hands by an action. Pardoe, In re; M’Laughlin v. Penny, 75 L. J. Ch. 161; [1906] 1 Ch. 265; 94 L. T. 88; 54 W. R. 210—Kekewich, J. Reversed on facts, 75 L. J. Ch. 748; [1906] 2 Ch. 340; 95 L. T. 512—C.A.

LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION.

Literary Institution—Public or Private Institutions.—The Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, is not confined to institutions of a public or charitable nature, but includes private institutions established for the purposes of the Act. Russell Literary and Scientific Institution, In re; Figgins v. Baghino, 67 L. J. Ch. 411; [1898] 2 Ch. 72; 78 L. T. 588—North, J.

A literary and scientific institution founded and established by the issue of transferable shares, entitling their holders to the property of the institution, but bearing no dividend, was held an institution “founded or established by the contributions of shareholders in the nature of a joint-stock company” so as to escape the operation of section 30 of the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, which forbids a distribution of the property among the members on a dissolution. Id.

Scientific Institution—Dissolution—Distribution of Property.—A horticultural society was constituted in 1844 under a deed which provided that any person who paid a certain fixed sum to the funds of the society should be a member and entitled to one share in the society, which was to be transferable by him or his legal personal representatives, and that each member should pay a fixed annual subscription, and should be entitled to admission for himself and family to the gardens of the society, but should not be entitled to any dividend or bonus, nor to any interest in the property of the society except the right to participate in the profits on a dissolution:—Held, that the society came within the exception in section 30 of the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, and that upon dissolution the property of the society became distributable among the members. *Jones, In re; Clegg v. 2. COUNCIL AND OFFICERS.

Disqualification for—Absence from Meetings—“More than six months consecutively”—Vacation of Office.—For the purposes of section 46, sub-section 6 of the Local Government Act, 1894, which provides that if a member of a council to which the section applies “is absent from meetings of the council . . . for more than six months consecutively” (except as therein mentioned) “his office shall on the expiration of those months become vacant,” the period of six months begins to run not at the last meeting at which the member is present, but at the first subsequent meeting from which he is absent. Kershaw v. Shoreditch Borough Council, 95 L. T. 55; 4 L. G. R. 802; 70 J. P. 190; 22 T. L. R. 802—Warrington, J.

— Member Acting when Concerned in Contract with Urban Council—Contract Completed at Time of Acting.—On November 7, 1904, H. obtained a contract from an urban council for printing to be done in connection with the forthcoming council election. The election took place on January 16, 1905, and H. was elected a member. At the date of his election H. had completed the contract on his part, with the exception of the printing of the notice of the result of the election, but had not received payment of the contract price. On January 18 H. printed the notice of the result of the election, thus completing the contract on his part. On January 23 H. attended a council meeting, signed the declaration of acceptance of office, and acted in the proceedings. Before leaving he was paid the amount of his contract:—Held, that H. had acted as a member of the council when disqualified as being concerned in a contract with the council, and was consequently liable to the penalty for so acting. Royse v. Birley (38 L. J. C.P. 203; L. R. 4 C.P. 296) distinguished. Cox v. Truscott (21 T. L. R. 319) considered. O’Carroll v. Hastings, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 590—K.B. D.

— “Interested in” a Contract with the Council.—A member of the Sydney Municipal Council, whose firm merely supplied materials to a person who was carrying out a contract which he had previously made with the council, without any previous understanding or arrangement with the contractor that the latter should buy the materials from him, was held not liable to a penalty under section 24 of the Sydney Corporation Act, 1902, as being “knowingly engaged or interested in” the contract with the council. Norton v. Taylor, 75 L. J. P.C. 79; [1906] A.C. 378; 94 L. T. 591; 70 J. P. 433; 22 T. L. R. 450—P.C.

Parish Council—Power to Sue—Action on Behalf of Inhabitants.—A parish council has no power to bring an action on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish, even for the purpose of restraining interference with their access to a pump properly erected by the council under the powers given by section 8, sub-section 1 of the Local Government Act, 1894. Stoke Parish Council v. Price, 68 L. J. Ch. 447; [1899] 2 Ch. 277; 80 L. T. 643; 47 W. R. 663; 63 J. P. 502—North, J.

Vestry—Qualification—Residence for Twelve Months—Temporary Absence—Intention to Return.—Temporary absence with an intention and right to return does not prevent a qualification for vestryman being obtained by residence during twelve months. Stanford v. Williams, 80 L. T. 490—D.

Officers—Abolition of Office—Dismissal without Notice—Compensation.—Where a Metropolitan borough council, in the exercise of their powers under section 30 of the London Government Act, 1899, abolish the office of an existing officer transferred to them by that section, and thereupon dismiss him from their employment, without notice, the officer, though, by the terms of his employment by the authority from whom he was transferred, entitled to notice before dismissal, has no right of action against the council, but is confined to his remedy by way of application for compensation. Clarke v. Lewisham Borough, 67 J. P. 195; 1 L. G. R. 63—Bigham, J.

— Transference of Duties of Clerk of the Peace—Reduction in Fees—Existing Officer—Compensation—“Not less salaries or remuneration.”—By section 119, sub-section 1 of the Local Government Act, 1888, “The officers and servants of the quarter sessions, or general assessment sessions, or justices, or any committee of such sessions or justices . . . who held office at the passing of this Act, and who by virtue of this Act become officers and servants of a county council (in this Act referred to as existing officers), shall hold their offices upon the same tenure and upon the same terms and conditions as if this Act had not been passed, and while performing the same duties, shall not receive less salaries or remuneration . . . than they would have if this Act had not been passed.” The plaintiff, by virtue of section 118, sub-section 10 of that Act, being clerk of the peace of Surrey, continued to be clerk of the peace at the quarter sessions held for the county of London at Newington, and for the purpose of the business at those sessions he was deemed to be clerk of the peace for the county of London. The Middlesex scale of fees, which by section 115 was that taken in the county of London by the clerk of the peace, was lower than the Surrey scale, and the Middlesex scale was further reduced by the standing joint committee of the London County Council and the quarter sessions:—Held, that the plaintiff was only entitled, as clerk of the peace for the county of London for Newington, to the fees payable under the reduced scale in Middlesex; but that, by virtue of section 119, he was entitled to receive not less remuneration, whether by salary or by fees, than that to which he was entitled at the passing of the Local Government Act, 1888. Wyatt v. London County Council, 85 L. T. 629; 66 J. P. 325—Wright, J.

Dissolution of Poor Law Union or Rural District—Officer Entitled to Compensation—Solicitor to Guardians or District Council—Nature of Employment—Successive Retainers—Remuneration by Ordinary Charges.—On the dissolution of a poor law union and a rural district under the provisions of a local Act, a firm of solicitors, who had acted as solicitors to the board of guardians and to the rural district council, claimed compensation under a section of the Act which provided for the payment of compensation to officers of the guardians and the council for loss of office, and incorporated with certain modifications section 120 of the Local Government Act, 1888. The claimants were never formally appointed officers of the guardians or the council, but all legal matters which required to be submitted or entrusted to a solicitor were submitted or entrusted to them, and they were employed to deal with such matters from time to time as occasion arose. They did not receive any salary as solicitors, but they received the usual professional charges for work actually done:—Held, that the claimants were not officers, and were not entitled to compensation. Carpenter and Bristol Corporation, In re, 76 L. J. K.B. 1145; [1907] 2 K.B. 617; 97 L. T. 461; 71 J. P. 417; 5 L. G. R. 977; 23 T. L. R. 654—C.A.

Servant of Local Authority—Power to Dismiss without Notice.—A servant of a local authority—for example, the matron of an isolation hospital—with whom there is no special agreement as to notice to terminate the employment, may, by virtue of the power given to the local authority by section 189 of the Public Health Act, 1875, be dismissed at pleasure at any time and without reason assigned. Wood v. East Ham Urban Council, 71 J. P. 129; 5 L. G. R. 403—C.A.

3. ELECTIONS.

County Council Election—Death of Candidate between Nomination and Poll—Countermand of Notice of Poll—Duty of Returning Officer—Procedure—Mandamus.—Section 58 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, incorporates section 1 of the Ballot Act, 1872, so that where the death of one of the candidates nominated at an election of county councillors occurs before the day fixed for the poll, it is the duty of the returning officer to countermand the notice of poll and commence proceedings afresh, and he may be compelled to do so by prerogative writ of mandamus. Westacott v. Stewart, 67 L. J. Q.B. 421; [1898] 1 Q.B. 552; 73 L. T. 256; 46 W. R. 379; 62 J. P. 229—D.

Rural District Council Election—Nomination Paper—Signature.—The nomination paper of a candidate at an election of rural district councillors is not rendered invalid by the fact that it was signed by the proposer and seconder before the name of the candidate was filled in. Cox v. Davies, 67 L. J. Q.B. 925; [1899] 2 Q.B. 202—D.

Decision of Returning Officer.—The decision of the returning officer that a nomination paper is valid is final under rule 7 (2) of the Rural District Councillors Election Order, 1898. Ib.

Election Petition—Returning Officer—Costs.—Where a municipal election petition is dismissed with costs, if the money lodged in Court as security for costs is not more than sufficient to discharge the respondent's costs, the returning officer is not entitled to be paid any part of his costs and expenses incurred under the Local Government Act out of that fund, but must look to the petitioners for payment. Ennis Election Petition, In re, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 334—Q.B. D.

4. BY-LAWS.

Repugnancy to Statute—Use of Obscene or Offensive Language in Tramway Car—Omission of Words Importing Annoyance or Nuisance.—Section 46 of the Tramways Act, 1870, empowers the promoters of a tramway to make by-laws "for preventing the commission of any nuisance in or upon any carriage," provided such by-laws are not repugnant to the laws of that part of the United Kingdom where the same are to have effect. The promoters of a tramway in a city made a by-law which provided that "No person shall swear or use obscene or offensive language whilst in or upon any carriage," but contained no words importing that the language should be an annoyance to passengers, or a nuisance. Section 28 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, which was in force in the city, provides that "Every person who in any street, to the obstruction, annoyance, or danger of the residents or passengers . . . uses any profane or obscene language," shall be liable to a penalty. A local Act in force in the city imposed a penalty upon every person who should "use any profane, indecent, or obscene language to the annoyance of the inhabitants or passengers":—Held, that the by-law was not ultra vires. Gentel v. Rapps, 71 L. J. K.B. 105; [1902] 1 K.B. 160; 85 L. T. 683; 50 W. R. 216; 66 J. P. 117; 20 Cox C.C. 104—D.

Indecent or Obscene Language—Room Opening on Street.—A by-law made by a county council under section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, that "no person shall in any house, building, garden, land, or other place abutting on or near to a street or public place, make use of any violent, abusive, profane, indecent, or obscene language, gesture, or conduct to the annoyance of any person, in such street or place," is neither repugnant nor ultra vires; and any offence using such language in a room opening into a street with the door open is liable to be convicted of an offence against such by-law. Manile v. Jordan, 66 L. J. Q.B. 224; [1897] 1 Q.B. 248—D.

Width of Street—Action in High Court for Injunction, whether Maintainable.]—The Court has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain a breach of by-laws as to the width of a new street where special remedies for breaches are provided by the by-laws, for example, penalties to be recovered by summary proceedings and powers to remove, alter, and pull down any works done in contravention of such by-laws. Grand Junction Waterworks v. Hampton Urban Council (67 L. J. Ch. 603; [1898] 2 Ch. 331) and Chartered Institute of Patent Agents v. Lockwood (63 L. J. P.C. 74; [1894] A.C. 347) followed. Devonport Corporation v. Tozer, 71 L. J. Ch. 754; [1902] 2 Ch. 182; 86 L. T. 612—Joyce, J.

A local authority which has made by-laws in accordance with section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which, among other things, prescribe the width of new streets, is not confined to the remedy thereby provided by way of penalty for breach thereof, but may apply to the High Court for an injunction to restrain such breach. In such a case the Attorney-General may sue as plaintiff at the relation of the local authority. Att.-Gen. v. Ashbourne Recreation Co., 72 L. J. Ch. 67; [1903] 1 Ch. 101; 87 L. T. 561; 51 W. R. 125; 67 J. P. 73; 1 L. G. R. 146—Buckley, J.

Annoyance of Passengers in the Streets—Uncertainty.]—A by-law made by a municipal corporation for the good rule and government of their borough provided that "No person shall wilfully annoy passengers in the streets"; and other by-laws made at the same time dealt with particular kinds of annoyances in the streets:—Held, that the by-law was void for uncertainty. Nash v. Finlay, 85 L. T. 682; 66 J. P. 183; 20 Cox C.C. 101—D.

5. CONTRACTS.

Seal—Contract for Amount Exceeding 50l.—Subsequent Deliveries of Goods on Request—Implied Contract.]—An urban authority invited tenders for a supply of coal for a year, the amount of which would exceed 100l. The plaintiffs tendered, and their tender was accepted subject to the execution of the contract and bond required by section 174 of the Public Health Act, 1875. No such contract or bond was ever executed; but the plaintiffs supplied coal from time to time at the request of the urban authority. The value of the coal supplied in response to each separate request was below 50l. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover the price of the coal so supplied,—Held, that the tender and acceptance did not constitute a contract at all, inasmuch as the acceptance was subject to a condition which was never performed; and that there was, therefore, nothing to prevent there being an implied contract on the part of the urban authority to pay for each parcel of coals delivered at their request, and accordingly that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the price of the coals supplied. Spencer, Whateley & Underhill v. Southall-Norwood Urban Council, 3 L. G. R. 641; 69 J. P. 308—Warrington, J.

—Solicitor—Retainer by Corporation—Subsequent Confirmation under Seal—Provisional Order—Dissolution of Local Authority—Transfer of Liability for Costs to other Local Authorities.]—The Corporation of T. having presented a memorial to the Local Government Board asking for the inclusion within their borough of the Urban District of C., the District Council of C. resolved to oppose it, and by resolutions passed from time to time retained the plaintiffs, a firm of solicitors and Parliamentary agents, for that purpose. The resolutions were not under seal, but subsequently, and after the plaintiffs had done a considerable amount of work under them, the seal of the district council was affixed to the resolutions. An enquiry having been held, a provisional order was made by the Local Government Board, which was afterwards confirmed, the effect of which was to dissolve the C. district, and to add part of it to the borough of T. and the other part to the rural district of N. The plaintiffs' bill of costs in respect of the Parliamentary opposition to the confirmation of the provisional order was delivered to the District Council of C. and afterwards to the defendants. In an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover the amount of such bill from the defendants,—Held, that the confirmation under seal of the original retainers created an obligation binding upon the District Council of C. without any new consideration, and that it was not ultra vires for them to create such an obligation. Held also, that the costs in question were costs authorised by section 298 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and were not subject to the requirements of the Municipal Corporations (Borough Funds) Act, 1872, and that, upon the construction of the provisional order, the defendants were liable to pay them in such proportions as might be awarded under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888. Brooks v. Torquay Corporation, 71 L. J. K.B. 109; [1902] 1 K.B. 601; 85 L. T. 785; 66 J. P. 293—Walton, J. And see CORPORATION, col. 562.

Absence of Penalty Clause—Avoidance of Contract.]—Section 174, sub-section 2 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which, with regard to contracts made by an urban authority under the Act, requires that they shall specify some pecuniary penalty in case the terms of the contract are not duly performed, is directory only, and a contract of an urban authority containing no penalty clause is not void on that account. (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dissenting.) Southill Upper Urban Council v. Wakefield Rural Council, 74 L. J. Ch. 703; [1905] 2 Ch. 516; 93 L. T. 711; 3 L. G. R. 1208; 69 J. P. 447; 21 T. L. R. 766—C.A. Reversing, 91 L. T. 800—Swinfen Eady, J.

6. EXPENDITURE.

Costs of Promoting Bill in Parliament.]—A rivers board constituted for the purpose of enforcing the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, its expenses being met out of a common fund contributed by the local authorities represented on the board, was restrained from applying any of its funds, until authorised by lawful authority so to do, in the preparation and promotion of a bill in Parliament for the extension of their powers, and from employing, at the expense or upon the credit of the board, any of the servants of the board for the purposes of the preparation, promotion, or otherwise in relation to the bill. Att.-Gen. v. Yorkshire (West Riding) Rivers Board, 69 J. P. 177; 3 L. G. R. 764—Buckley, J.

Ratepayers' Consent—Sanction of Local Government Board.]—An urban district council cannot apply the district rate towards payment of the expenses of opposing a local bill not affecting their own duties, rights, or privileges, without first obtaining the consent of the ratepayers under section 4 of the Borough Funds Act, 1872, nor is section 3 of the Local Authorities (Expenses) Act, 1887, under which such expenses if incurred may be sanctioned by the Local Government Board, intended to prevent the Court from intervening to restrain such expenses being thrown on the rate when the sanction of the Local Government Board has not been applied for. Att.-Gen. v. Rickmansworth Urban Council, 86 L. T. 521; 66 J. P. 410—Kekewich, J.

Costs of Action—Sanction of Action by Parish Meeting—Consent to Incur Expenses over Three-pence in the Pound.]—By section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1894, a parish council cannot, without the consent of the parish meeting, incur expenses or liabilities which will involve a rate above threepence in the pound for any year, and the sum raised by the council in any year is not to exceed sixpence. An action was brought by the parish council in which they were unsuccessful, and they incurred costs to the successful defendant amounting to 92l. 14s. 10d. A rate of threepence would realise 54l. 12s., and since March, 1899, when the financial year began, precepts had been issued for 52l., 25l. of which went to defray the council's costs, and the balance in parish expenses. After a rule nisi for a mandamus to the council to issue their precept to the overseers to pay the sum due to the defendant for costs, two parish meetings were called, but the necessary resolutions were not passed to raise the extra threepence owing to the small attendances:—Held, that as no information was forthcoming as to the proceedings before the action was commenced, it must be assumed consent was given, and the rule must be made absolute. Reg. v. Stoke Parish Council; Price, Ex parte, 82 L. T. 198; 64 J. P. 343—D.

Protection of Public against Obstruction of Right of Way—Transfer of Duties from District to County Council—Power of County Council to Contribute to Defence of Action against Members of the Public.]—Upon the true construction of section 26, sub-sections 1, 3, and 4 of the Local Government Act, 1894, a district council or, upon their default, the county council may contribute to the costs of the defence of an action against members of the public who, relying upon a public right, have removed an obstruction in a pathway. The section does not restrict either council to taking or defending proceedings in their own name. Reg. v. Norfolk County Council, 70 L. J. K.B. 575; [1901] 2 K.B. 268; 84 L. T. 822; 49 W. R. 543; 65 J. P. 454—D.

Action on Behalf of Inhabitants by Parish Council—Property Vested in Parish Council—Joinder of Attorney-General—Costs of Plaintiff Wrongfully Joined.]—By an award under an Inclosure Act the herbage on an occupation road was sold by auction yearly by an auctioneer appointed by the inhabitants of the parish, or in default it was sold by the surveyor or surveyors of highways, and the money derived from such sale was, under the award, used in repairing the roads of the parish. An action was brought by the district council, as successors to such surveyors of highways, against the defendant for damages and an injunction for wrongfully depasturing his cattle on the said road, the Attorney-General being joined on their relation:—Held, that as the property in the said herbage was in the parish council, as representing the inhabitants of the parish, who had the beneficial interest in the said sale (which council, and not the district council, was held to be the proper plaintiff), and consequently only the interests of a small part of the community were involved and not those of the community at large, the Attorney-General could not be joined as a plaintiff. Held, further, that, although the plaintiffs had no right to bring the action, they were entitled to the costs of the issues upon which they had succeeded at the trial before the jury, on the ground that the defendant had no right, by denying that he had committed the acts complained of, to put the plaintiffs to the expense of proving them. Att.-Gen. v. Garner, 76 L. J. K.B. 965; [1907] 2 K.B. 480; 97 L. T. 486; 5 L. G. R. 944; 71 J. P. 357; 23 T. L. R. 563—Channell, J.

Transfer of Powers to Urban Council—Expenses Incurred under Burial Acts—Poor Rate—General District Rate.]—Where an urban council have under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1894, taken over the powers, duties, and liabilities of a burial board, the expenses incurred by the council in carrying into execution the Burials Acts, 1882 to 1885, are payable out of the poor rate, and are not chargeable to the general district rate. Reg. v. Connah's Quay Overseers, 70 L. J. K.B. 651; [1901] 2 K.B. 174; 84 L. T. 601; 49 W. R. 463; 65 J. P. 500—D.

"Expenses incurred."]—The expression "expenses incurred" in section 232 of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878 (corresponding to section 229 of the English Public Health Act, 1875), means actual or estimated expenses. Reg. v. Local Government Board, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 324—K.B. D.

7. TOPICS OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

(a) Administration of Justice.

Borough with no Separate Commission of Peace—Clerk to Justices—Appointment—

Salary—Unappropriated Fees and Fines.]—In the case of a borough having no separate commission of the peace the mayor and immediate ex-mayor cannot together, as Justices of the borough, appoint a Justices clerk to perform solely the duties of clerk of special and petty sessions held in and for the borough; nor can they make such an appointment in conjunction with Justices of the county usually acting for the petty sessional division in which such borough is situate. If, however, the provisions of section 5, sub-section 1 of the Justices Clerks Act, 1877, are complied with, the Justices of the petty sessional division in which the borough is situate, including the mayor of the borough, may appoint a second clerk to act for them when holding petty or special sessions within the borough, and in that case the salary will be payable by the county council, and the unappropriated fees and fines from such sessions will be payable to the county treasurer. Huntingdon Corporation v. Huntingdonshire County Council, 70 L. J. K.B. 755; [1901] 2 K.B. 257; 85 L. T. 26; 65 J. P. 675—D.

County Council—Quarter Sessions Borough with Population under Ten Thousand—Salaries of Recorder, Clerk of Peace, and Clerk to Justices—Expenses of Quarter and Petty Sessions—Liability for Payment of.]—The liability of a quarter sessions borough, with a population under ten thousand, to pay the salaries of its recorder, clerk of the peace, and clerk to the borough Justices in petty sessions, is not transferred by the Local Government Act, 1888, to the council of the county in which the borough is included. Decision in Kent County Council and Sandwich Borough Council, In re (80 L. J. Q.B. 314; [1891] 1 Q.B. 389), on this point, and Herefordshire County Council, In re (64 L. J. M.C. 26; [1895] 1 Q.B. 43), overruled. Thetford Corporation v. Norfolk County Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 907; [1898] 2 Q.B. 468; 79 L. T. 315; 47 W. R. 1; 62 J. P. 724—C.A.

(b) Animals, Diseases of.

Inspector Appointed by Local Authority—Order of Board of Agriculture—Negligence of Inspector.]—A local authority who have appointed an inspector under the provisions of the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, are not liable in respect of a negligent act committed by him in carrying out a duty which has been directly imposed upon him by an Order of the Board of Agriculture. Stanbury v. Exeter Corporation, 75 L. J. K.B. 28; [1905] 2 K.B. 888; 93 L. T. 795; 54 W. R. 247; 70 J. P. 11; 4 L. G. R. 57; 22 T. L. R. 3—D.

(c) Arbitration.

Award—Omission of Umpire to Make and Annex Statutory Declaration.]—Where an umpire acting under the Public Health Act, 1875, omitted to make and annex to his award the statutory declaration prescribed by section 180 of the Act, the Court set aside the award at the instance of a party who took steps immediately on becoming aware of the omission. Ludlow Corporation v. Prosser, 70 J. P. 400; 4 L. G. R. 940; 22 T. L. R. 597—D.

Power to Award Costs to Unsuccessful Party.]—A corporation took proceedings under section 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875, against a person for an alleged nuisance, and in that litigation the corporation failed. Thereafter the defendant to those proceedings claimed full compensation under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875. In the arbitration which followed no compensation was awarded, and the corporation was ordered to pay the costs of the arbitration:—Held, that the arbitration was a fresh proceeding distinct from the previous litigation, and that the arbitrator had no power to award costs to the claimant, he being wholly unsuccessful. Barnett and Eccles Corporation, In re, 65 J. P. 757—D.

(d) Areas, Transfer and Adjustment of.

Arbitration as to Difference—Costs of Arbitration.]—By a Local Government Board's order part of the S. M. R. District was transferred to the district of the B. U. D. Council, and the parties being unable to agree to an arbitrator to adjust a difference between them, one was appointed by the Local Government Board, under section 62, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1888. By his award he directed the defendants to pay the plaintiffs a certain sum, and directed that the costs of the award—namely 10l. 10s.—should be paid by both parties in equal shares. No mention was made of the costs of the reference. Subsequently he determined the costs of the reference to be 34l. 2s. 10d., and the costs of the taxation 4l. 4s. In an action to recover these sums from the defendants,—Held, that they could not be recovered. South Mimms Rural Council v. Barnet Urban Council, 82 L. T. 421—Grantham, J.

Severance of new Urban District from former Rural District—Compensation—"Adjustment."]—Where a portion of a district is taken away from the jurisdiction of a rural district council and constituted into an urban district with a council of its own, the rural district is not, under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888, entitled to compensation from the newly formed urban district for the loss of a ratepaying area occasioned by the severance, the word "adjustment" in that section not being equivalent to "compensation," and an apprehended diminution in rates not being comprehended within the words "property, income, debts, liabilities, and expenses." Roehampton Union and Haslingden Union, In re (68 L. J. Q.B. 531; [1899] 1 Q.B. 540), and Buckinghamshire County Council and Hertfordshire County Council, In re (68 L. J. Q.B. 417; [1899] 1 Q.B. 515), overruled. Caterham Urban Council and Godstone Rural Council, In re, 73 L. J. K.B. 589; [1904] A.C. 171; 90 L. T. 653; 52 W. R. 625; 68 J. P. 429; 2 L. G. R. 596; 20 T. L. R. 481—H.L. (E).

Severance of Part of District—Constitution of New District—Adjustment of Liabilities—Adjustment and Agreement as to Existing Accounts—Right to Claim Subsequent Adjustment for Loss by Severance.]—By an order made by a county council under section 57 of the Local Government Act, 1888, a part of a rural district was severed from the district and constituted a new urban district, and all necessary adjustments were to be made in accordance with the provisions of section 68 of the Local Government Act, 1894. An adjustment of accounts was then made and an agreement entered into between the councils providing for the payment of certain sums in respect of matters therein specified, and these sums were paid. Subsequently the rural council, finding that the severance was a pecuniary loss to them, requested the urban council to come to an agreement as to the amount to be paid for such loss, but the councils were unable to agree, and an arbitrator was appointed to determine the question of adjustment of the financial loss sustained by the rural district by the severance of the urban district, in so far as such loss was not determined by the prior agreement. No claim for such loss was included in the prior agreement:—Held, that the adjustment claimed by the rural council was an adjustment within the meaning of section 68 of the Local Government Act, 1894, although the severed portion had been formed into an urban district of itself and had not been transferred to an existing district; and further, that the claim to have such adjustment was not barred by the prior agreement between the councils. St. Thomas Rural Council and Heavitree Urban Council, In re, 86 L. T. 153; 66 J. P. 597—Wright, J.

Transfer of Powers—Abolition of Office—Compensation—Emoluments—Amount—Resolution of Council—Power to Rescind.—By section 30 of the London Government Act, 1899, and the enactments incorporated therewith, including section 120 of the Local Government Act, 1888, any existing officer of a borough council who suffers pecuniary loss from the abolition of his office is entitled to compensation, regard being had to any additional emoluments acquired by him by virtue of those enactments. The officer is required to deliver a claim shewing the amount received and expended by him in every year during the period of five years before the passing of the Act, and the council are required to take the same into consideration and assess the just amount of compensation. The amount assessed becomes a specialty debt due from the council to the officer:—Held, that the amount of the emoluments is a question of fact for the council, and that their finding cannot be reviewed by the Court. Livingstone v. Westminster City Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 434; [1904] 2 K.B. 109; 52 W. R. 895; 68 J. P. 276; 2 L. G. R. 581; 20 T. L. R. 361—Buckley, J.

An officer on the abolition of his office delivered a claim stating the amount of his emoluments for five years before the abolition of his office. The council by resolution granted him an annual sum equal to thirty-seven-sixtieths of the amount stated. The council subsequently rescinded that resolution, and by a second resolution granted a sum equal to thirty-seven-sixtieths of a smaller amount:—Held, that the first resolution was binding and could not be rescinded. Id.

Boundaries—Intercepting Sewer Constructed under Local Act to Serve Certain Districts—Extension of Constituent District—Drainage of Added Area into Intercepting Sewer.—An intercepting sewer was made under the Brighton Intercepting and Outfall Sewers Act, 1870, which provided for the making of intercepting and outfall sewers for Brighton, and two adjoining Improvement Act districts in the parish of Hove, and for the vesting of the sewers in the defendant sewers board. Section 91 of the Act provided that if, after the passing of the Act, any local board or body of commissioners should be constituted for any district in which any part of the sewers authorised would be situate, having powers with respect to sewerage, and to levy rates within such district, such local board or commissioners should be at liberty, by notice to the sewers board, to participate in the benefits and liabilities of the Act, and should thenceforth be a local authority within the Act. By the Hove Commissioners Act, 1873, a body of improvement commissioners was constituted for the whole parish of Hove, and these commissioners were given the benefits and liabilities of the former commissioners for the two parts of Hove under the Act of 1870. By an order made by the county councils of East and West Sussex in 1893, under the Local Government Act, 1888, it was provided that the area of the parish of Aldrington should be transferred to and form part of the urban sanitary district of Hove, and that the "district" in the Act of 1873 should mean the parishes of Hove and Aldrington, instead of the parish of Hove. The district of Hove thus extended was subsequently formed into a borough, and the plaintiffs became the successors of the Hove Commissioners. The plaintiffs claimed to be entitled under these circumstances to send the drainage of Aldrington into the intercepting sewer:—Held (reversing the decision of Kerewich, J.), that the order of the county councils, having been laid upon the table of both Houses of Parliament, and duly confirmed by the Local Government Board, was unimpeachable; that the case came within section 91 of the Act of 1870; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration that they were a local authority within the Act of 1870, and as such entitled to discharge into the intercepting sewers the whole of the sewage of Hove, including that coming from the parish of Aldrington; and that the fact that the sewer might not be at present large enough to accommodate the additional sewage was no answer to the claim for a declaration of the plaintiff's rights, though it might be a ground for giving the defendants reasonable time to comply with the order if an injunction were asked for. Hove Corporation v. Brighton Sewers Board, 1 L. G. R. 355; 67 J. P. 335—C.A.

Parish Partly Within and Partly Without Urban Sanitary District—Order Uniting Part of Old Parish Outside Urban District with next Parish—Re-naming of Remainder of Old Parish—Provision for Continuation of Pauper Settlements in New Parishes—Continuation of Status of Irremovability—Validity.—Before the passing of the Local Government Act, 1894, a parish was situated partly within and partly without an urban sanitary district. Pursuant to the powers given by the Local Government Acts, 1888 and 1894, an order was made by a county authority and confirmed by the Local Government Board, uniting the portion of the parish which was partly without the urban sanitary district, with the neighbouring parish, and directing that the remaining portion of the parish situated within the urban sanitary district should be known as "the parish of W. W." The order contained a clause providing that every person who had acquired a settlement in the original parish should be deemed to have acquired a settlement in that one of the newly formed parishes which comprised the place where the circumstances conferring the settlement in the original parish had occurred; and also a clause providing that any person who had acquired a status of irremovability in the original parish should be deemed to have acquired a status of irremovability from the parish in which he should reside on the date of the operation of the order or (if he should then be in receipt of relief) from the parish in which he was residing at the time of becoming chargeable:—Held, that, whether or not the clauses were ultra vires of the provisions of the Act of 1888 or those of 1894, no objection to their legality could, by reason of section 42 of the Act of 1894, be entertained in legal proceedings commenced more than six months after the confirmation of the order by the Local Government Board. Ree v. Middlesex Justices; Walsall Union, Ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 839; [1907] 2 K.B. 581; 96 L. T. 798; 71 J. P. 393; 5 L. G. R. 1232; 23 T. L. R. 524—C.A.

Creation of County Borough—Adjustment of Financial Relations between Borough and County—Compensation.—On the creation under sections 54 and 59 of the Local Government Act, 1888, of a county borough out of the pre-existing county, no compensation is payable for loss of contributions occasioned by the severance from either of the newly constituted administrative areas to the other. The same principles are to be applied to the establishment of a county borough out of part of a county as were applied in Caterham Urban Council and Godstone Rural Council, In re (73 L. J. K.B. 539; [1904] A.C. 171), where an urban district council was carved out of a rural district council. West Hartlepool Borough Council v. Durham County Council, 76 L. J. K.B. 859; [1907] A.C. 246; 97 L. T. 114; 71 J. P. 385; 5 L. G. R. 854; 23 T. L. R. 576—H.L. (H.)

Poor Law Unions—Order of County Council—Transfer of Portion of Parish from one Union to Another—No Alteration of Boundaries of Unions.—Where by an order of a county council made pursuant to the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 57, and confirmed by the Local Government Board, a portion of a common-law parish wholly within one poor-law union in the county is transferred to a common-law parish within another union in the same county, and the whole area of that parish as extended is included in the rural district to which the transferred portion belonged, but no order has been made altering the boundaries of the two unions, the parish to which the portion was transferred still retains its identity and as a whole is within the union in which it was formerly included, notwithstanding that its area has been extended. The added portion consequently is within the same union. West Ham Union v. London County Council (71 L. J. K.B. 299; [1902] 1 K.B. 562) discussed and applied. Bootle Guardians v. Whitehaven Guardians, 72 L. J. Ch. 582; [1903] 2 Ch. 142; 89 L. T. 237; 51 W. R. 550; 67 J. P. 325; 1 L. G. R. 585—Byrne, J.

Adjustment between Unions.—Where by an order of a county council a portion of a township is transferred from one union to another an adjustment under section 68 of the Local Government Act, 1894, is in all cases required as between the two newly constituted unions. Rochdale Union and Haslingden Union, In re, 67 L. J. Q.B. 846; [1898] 2 Q.B. 206; 78 L. T. 563; 62 J. P. 678—D.

In making such adjustment the arbitrator must take into consideration any loans which may be outstanding and charged upon the rates of the union from which the area has been detached. Where a workhouse provided for the old union is to become for the future the sole property of the union from which the area has been detached, the arbitrator must also consider the terms upon which that is to be done. Id.

Transfer of Liabilities—Action Pending—Costs.—A certain area was transferred from the jurisdiction of the defendant rural council to that of the corporation of a borough by a provisional order which declared that all liabilities, &c., attaching exclusively to the area so transferred should also be transferred, and that any actions or proceedings relating exclusively to such area pending at the time of the transfer might be continued and enforced against the corporation. An action was pending at the time of the transfer to restrain the defendant rural council from allowing sewage matter, conveyed through their sewers from certain houses into a cesspool, to escape into a natural stream flowing through the plaintiff's property. The houses, sewers, and cesspool were all within the area transferred, the plaintiff's property being just outside same. After the transfer the corporation were added as co-defendants to the action, and they then gave an undertaking, which satisfied the plaintiff, to abate the nuisance:—Held, that all the liability of the original defendants, the rural council, was transferred to the corporation, and that the costs of the plaintiff, as well as those of the original defendants, fell to be borne by the corporation. Jackson v. Plympton Rural Council, 64 J. P. 168—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Adjustment of Property and Liabilities.—A parish was taken from a rural district and duly constituted an urban district under the provisions of the Local Government Acts, 1888 and 1894. Prior to the order constituting such urban district, the rural district received from rates levied in the parish for highway purposes an amount greater than that expended for such purposes in the parish:—Held, that the loss to the rural council of this surplus was a matter for adjustment under section 62 of the Local Government Act, 1888. Godstone Rural Council and Caterham Urban Council, In re, 66 J. P. 678—Wright, J.

Rural District Council—Clerks of Former Sanitary Authority and Highway Authority—Duties and Position of, under Council.—The plaintiff was clerk to a rural sanitary authority, and J. was clerk to the highway board for the same district, which two boards were succeeded by the defendant council, which subsequently directed that certain of the duties formerly executed by the plaintiff should be executed by J., but no alteration was made in the status or remuneration of the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from carrying out this arrangement. Genn v. East Kerrier Rural Council, 62 J. P. 215—Jeune, P.

(e) Bathing.

Machines—Licence for One Year—Regulations Made Subsequent to Grant of Licence—Power of Licensing Authority to Revoke Licence.]—The defendants, under their by-laws, granted a licence to the plaintiff authorising him to let bathing machines for one year on the beach. Subsequent to the grant of such licence the defendants made new regulations with regard to licences, and on an infringement by the plaintiff of such new regulations the defendants revoked his licence:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from doing so. Pelham v. Littlehampton Urban Council, 63 J. P. 88—Grantham, J.

Sea Bathing—Charge for Bathing Machine—Charge for Costumes and Towels.]—A by-law as to bathing made by an urban authority under section 69 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, substantially in the model form, fixed the maximum charges for the use of bathing machines stationed on any stand, and provided that the prescribed charges should include charges for the use of towels and a bathing costume. The appellants, who were the proprietors of bathing machines used within the district, charged a bather, in addition to the maximum charge for the use of the machine fixed by the by-law, the sum of threepence for the use of a costume and towels, and were convicted of a breach of the by-law in respect of the charge of threepence thus made. The bather had not demanded the use of a costume and towels without extra charge:—Held, that the conviction must be quashed—by LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., and WILLS, J., on the ground that the by-law in so far as it purported to restrict the charges that could be made for the use of a costume and towels was ultra vires and bad; by CHANNELL, J., on the ground that if the by-law prohibited an extra charge for a costume and towels absolutely it was ultra vires and bad; and that if it merely required the bathing-machine proprietor to provide such requisites as were necessary for decency without extra charge, leaving him free to make an extra charge for articles of superior quality, in which case it might be a good by-law, no breach of the by-law had been shewn. Parker v. Clegg, 2 L. G. R. 608—D.

(f) Betting.

Street Betting—Distributing Newspaper Publishing Probable Results of Sporting Competitions.]—Section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, empowers a county council to make by-laws for the good rule and government of their county. A county council made a by-law prohibiting persons under a penalty from frequenting and using any street or other public place for the purpose of selling or distributing any paper devoted wholly or mainly to giving information as to the probable result of races, steeplechases, or other competitions:—Held, that the by-law was unreasonable and invalid. Scott v. Pilliner, 73 L. J. K.B. 998; [1904] 2 K.B. 855; 91 L. T. 658; 53 W. R. 284; 63 J. P. 518; 2 L. G. R. 1018; 20 Cox C.C. 731; 20 T. L. R. 662—D.

—“Place of public resort.”]—A borough improvement Act empowered the corporation to make by-laws for the prevention of betting and of public offences and nuisances in the “public streets, passages, . . . recreation grounds, and other places of public resort” within the borough. The corporation made a by-law for the prevention of betting in any “street, passage, recreation ground, or other place of public resort” within the borough:—Held, first, that the by-law was not ultra vires; secondly, that private ground, bounded by streets, unfenced, and daily frequented by the public for the purpose of betting, though without the permission of the owner, was a “place of public resort” within the meaning of the by-law. Kitson v. Ashe, 63 L. J. Q.B. 286; [1899] 1 Q.B. 425; 87 L. T. 323; 63 J. P. 325; 19 Cox C.C. 257—D.

—Frequenting Public Place.]—Under a statute which empowered county councils from time to time to “make such by-laws as to them seem meet for the administration of the affairs of the county, for the prevention of vagrancy, and for prevention and suppression of nuisances not already punishable in a summary manner,” a county council made a by-law which provided that “no person shall frequent and use any road or other public place, on behalf either of himself or of any other person, for the purpose of bookmaking or betting or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager with any person, or paying or receiving or settling bets”:—Held, that this by-law was not ultra vires of the county council. Davies v. Jeans, 6 F. (Just. Cas.) 37—Ct. of Justy.

—Using Streets for Betting—No Obstruction.]—The S. County Council, under the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 16, made a by-law as follows: “No person shall frequent any street or public place, and use the same for the purpose of betting or wagering, or agreeing to bet or wager, either on behalf of himself or any other person”:—Held, that the by-law was one properly made for the good rule and government of the administrative county, and was therefore not ultra vires or invalid. Jones v. Walters, 78 L. T. 167; 62 J. P. 374; 19 Cox C.C. 1—D.

(g) Bridges.

County Bridges—Cost of Erecting and Maintaining—Quarter Sessions Boroughs—Liability to Contribute.]—The quarter sessions boroughs included in section 35 of the Local Government Act, 1888, are not liable to contribute to the cost of maintaining or erecting county bridges which have been purchased, taken over, or erected by the county council under section 6 of the Act. Bury St. Edmunds Corporation v. West Suffolk County Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 750; [1898] 2 Q.B. 246; 78 L. T. 624; 47 W. R. 16; 62 J. P. 486—D.

Such expenses are "special" and not "general" county purposes within the meaning of section 68 of the Act. Id.

Bridge Repairable Ratione Tenuræ—Repairs Effected by District Council—Recovery of Sums Expended.]—The remedy for the recovery of the expenses of placing in repair a highway repairable ratione tenuræ from "the person liable to repair," afforded to district councils by section 25, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1894, is confined to the occupier of the land chargeable with the obligation, and creates no liability in the owner of such land to repay sums so expended. Cuckfield District Council v. Goring, 67 L. J. Q.B. 539; [1898] 1 Q.B. 865; 78 L. T. 530; 46 W. R. 541; 62 J. P. 358—D.

(h) Buildings.

Trifling Offence.]—By-laws as to the construction of buildings ought to contain provisions under which the hard-and-fast rules they lay down may be dispensed with in the case of buildings of exceptional character to which those rules are unsuited. But the absence of such provisions does not render the by-laws invalid as being unreasonable. Where, however, proceedings are taken for a breach of a by-law in the case of such a building it is competent to the Justices to treat non-compliance with the by-laws as a trifling offence within the meaning of section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and to dismiss the information accordingly. Salt v. Scott-Hall (72 L. J. K.B. 627; [1903] 2 K.B. 245) approved and followed. Pomeroy v. Malvern Urban Council, 89 L. T. 555; 1 L. G. R. 825; 67 J. P. 375—D.

The object of by-laws as to new buildings made for the prevention of fire is to protect the inmates of the new buildings themselves as well as to prevent the spread of fire to adjoining buildings. The breach of a by-law requiring new buildings to be inclosed with walls of incombustible materials is therefore not necessarily a trifling offence merely because the building is far removed from other buildings.—Id.

Continuing Offence—Retaining Control.]—A person who erects a new building in contravention of a by-law made under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, cannot be convicted of the continuing offence, under section 158 of that Act, consisting in the continued existence of the building in such a form or state as to be in contravention of the by-law, unless he retains such control over the building as renders him in fact responsible for the continued existence of the building in that state. Pomeroy v. Malvern Urban Council, 89 L. T. 555; 1 L. G. R. 825; 67 J. P. 375; 20 Cox C.C. 572—D.

Buildings of a Temporary Character.]—Sections 40 and 41 of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, and the Dublin City by-laws made thereunder (which provide as to the erection of buildings, their position in reference to the street upon which they abut, and the necessity for the walls to be of incombustible materials) contemplate buildings of a permanent character, and not mere temporary structures. Dublin Corporation v. Irish Church Missions, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 387—Q.B. D.

Whirligigs and Swings.]—A local authority purporting to act under the Public Health Act made a by-law, subsequently confirmed by the Local Government Board, that no person should cause or suffer any whirligig or swing to be set in motion or driven on any land immediately adjoining or abutting upon any street or road within the district unless such whirligig or swing was placed at a distance of not less than twenty yards from any road or street, and separated from any street or road by a wall not less than fourteen inches in thickness, and carried up to a height of not less than four feet above the level of the street or road:—Held, that the by-law was unreasonable and void, inasmuch as it required a structure of a permanent character, involving large expense, to provide against a temporary danger, which could as effectively be provided against by a temporary structure. Ennisconthy Urban Council v. Field, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 518—K.B. D.

New Building—Materials—By-law—No Dispensing Power.]—A by-law made under section 157, sub-section 2 of the Public Health Act, 1875, by a rural district council having urban powers, provided that "every person who shall erect a new building shall cause such building to be inclosed with walls constructed of good bricks, stone, or other hard and incombustible materials properly bonded and solidly put together." The district council had no power to dispense with the by-law in exceptional cases:—Held, that the by-law was not unreasonable or ultra vires. Salt v. Scott-Hall, 72 L. J. K.B. 627; [1903] 2 K.B. 245; 88 L. T. 868; 52 W. R. 95; 67 J. P. 306; 1 L. G. R. 753; 20 Cox C.C. 492—D.

Discretion of Justices.]—Though by-laws are of general application and contain no dispensing power, yet in exceptional cases the Justices have a discretion by virtue of section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, to dismiss an information for an offence against the by-laws. Id.

No Retrospective Operation.]—Certain by-laws passed by a district council and duly confirmed applied to "new buildings," and in the case of these required certain conditions to be fulfilled by the person erecting them. Before these by-laws were passed a builder had dug trenches for the foundations of cottages, laid concrete in these trenches, and laid some brickwork thereon. No further work was done by him until after the by-laws came into operation:—Held, that such buildings were not "new buildings," and therefore that the by-laws, which were not made retrospective, had no application to them. Hubbard v. Bromley District Council, 69 J. P. 437; 3 L. G. R. 1377—D.

— Alteration of Old Building—By-laws.—The provision in section 159 of the Public Health Act, 1875, whereby, for the purposes of that Act, the alteration of an existing building in certain specified ways is to be considered the erection of a new building, does not imply that no other alteration of an existing building can amount to the erection of a new building for the purposes of the Act or of by-laws made under it. And the question whether an alteration of an existing building otherwise than in one of the specified ways does amount to the erection of a new building for such purposes is a question of fact. Redruth Brewery v. Redruth District Council, 3 L. G. R. 130; 69 J. P. 78—D.

— Shelter for Weighing-Machine—Movable Shop for Sale of Refreshments.—A movable wooden structure about ten feet long, seven feet broad, ten feet high in front and eight feet high behind, having shutters in front and a door at one side, not fixed to the soil, without sanitary arrangements or provision for artificial lighting or heating, erected at a seaside resort as a shelter for a weighing-machine, and containing besides the weighing-machine a table and two chairs, open in the summer months during the day and visited by persons using the weighing-machine, of which an attendant has charge, is not a "new building" within the by-law of a borough providing that "Every person who shall erect a new building shall cause such building to be enclosed with walls constructed of good bricks, stone, or other hard and incombustible materials properly bonded and solidly put together." Southend-on-Sea Corporation v. Archer; Same v. Romanis, 70 L. J. K.B. 328; 84 L. T. 264; 65 J. P. 292—D.

A movable wooden structure upwards of nine feet long, six feet broad, and seven feet high, having a movable front, not fixed to the soil, without sanitary arrangements or provision for artificial lighting or heating, erected at a seaside resort only in the summer months for the sale of refreshments, containing a counter and shelves on which goods are placed, and open during the day in charge of an attendant as a shop for the sale of refreshments to customers, is not a "new building" within the above by-law. Ib.

New House not Certified for Habitation—"Letting" House—Caretaker in Occupation.—Allowing a caretaker to be in occupation of a newly built house is not a "letting" of same within the meaning of a by-law which imposes a penalty for "letting" any new dwelling-house before it has been certified as in every respect fit for human habitation. Gowen v. Sedgwick, 68 J. P. 484—D.

Erecting Shed—By-law—Neglecting to Comply with Notice—Insufficiency of Notice.—By certain by-laws Nos. 53 and 96 it was provided that if any person should erect new domestic buildings certain open space was to be provided, and any one who was intending to erect a building was to give notice to the council and deliver plans thereof, a description of the materials to be used, and other details. By by-law No. 98, where a person who has erected a building or done any other work to which the by-laws apply receives a notice in writing specifying any matters in respect of which the erection or the work is in contravention of any by-law, such person must cause anything done in contravention to be amended. A notice was served stating: "I am directed . . . to call your attention to the fact that a wooden erection has been made . . . contrary to Nos. 53 and 96 of the by-laws. . . ."—Held, that such notice was sufficient. Dickinson v. Forsyth, 90 L. T. 30; 68 J. P. 170; 2 L. G. R. 1199—D.

Floors of Warehouse Buildings—General Clause to Secure Adequate Strength.—Where the by-laws of an urban authority lay down rules as to the strength of timbers for floors of certain kinds, and do not provide in detail for all possible modes of construction, but contain a general clause requiring suitable materials and adequate strength, a floor constructed partly of timber and partly of steel is subject to such general clause, and not to the rules applicable to floors constructed wholly of timber. Towers v. Brown, 2 L. G. R. 942—D.

Hoarding—"Abutting" on Street.—A hoarding for advertisements sixty feet long and twelve feet above a hedge, no part of such hoarding being nearer to the street than two feet and having the hedge between it and the street, does not "abut" on the street. Barnett v. Covell, 90 L. T. 29; 2 L. G. R. 215; 68 J. P. 93; 20 T. L. R. 134—D.

Water Tower Erected under Special Act—District Council's By-laws under Public Health Act, 1875—Notices by Water Company to District Council.—A water company, empowered by their special Act merely to erect a high-service water tower in a particular situation, are not exempt from the by-laws of a district council made under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring the delivery of certain notices before building has been commenced. Uckfield Rural Council v. Crowborough Water Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 1009; [1899] 2 Q.B. 664—D.

Dangerous Structure—Costs Incurred by Authority.—Section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, does not apply to section 75 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, incorporated in the Act of 1875 by section 160. Expenses of putting up a hoarding under section 75 of the Act of 1847 can be therefore recovered, although three months have not elapsed since the demand. Usk Urban Council v. Mortimer, 90 L. T. 25; 68 J. P. 38; 2 L. G. R. 135; 20 T. L. R. 96—D.

Wooden Structure—Stable.—Under the powers given by section 34 of the Local Government Act, 1858, a local board made a by-law that every person intending to erect any "new building" should give fourteen days' notice to the local board of such intention, and should at the same time deliver detail plans and sections of the proposed new building.—Held, that a wooden structure, being under twenty feet each way and with a slanting roof of twelve feet high, intended for a stable and erected in the centre of inclosed private ground of nearly an acre in extent, was a "new building" within the meaning of this by-law. South Shields Cor- poration v. Wilson, 84 L. T. 267; 65 J. P. 294; 19 Cox C.C. 667—D.

Public Conveniences—"Proper and convenient situation."—Nuisance—Detriment to Adjoining Property.—The urban authority of a seaside resort decided to erect a public sanitary convenience, and selected a site, freely given by the owner, on the slope of the cliffs some thirty feet from the plaintiffs' good-class private houses, and close to public seats used by residents and visitors for the salubrity of the air and the amenity of the view. The plaintiffs, in a quia timet action, complained of a private nuisance likely to arise from noise and smell, and of a public nuisance in respect of the erection of the convenience on the selected site.—Held, on the facts, that no public or private nuisance was to be apprehended, and that the defendant council had reasonably exercised their powers under section 39 of the Public Health Act, 1875, in resolving to erect a convenience of this kind, and in selecting the site in question. Mayo v. Seaton Urban Council, 2 L. G. R. 127; 68 J. P. 7—Kekewich, J.

Post "in over or under any street"—Pillar Supporting Tramway Cable—Penetration of Subsoil.—A municipal corporation by their special Act, which incorporated the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, were empowered to work tramways, and for that purpose to erect "in over or under any street" poles and posts. The plaintiff was the lessee of a piece of land, the surface of which had been dedicated to the public and formed part of a street, subject to the right of the plaintiff to place furniture thereon for sale. For the purpose of supporting the overhead electric wire of their tramway, the corporation, without giving the plaintiff notice under the Lands Clauses Act of their intention to take land, erected a pillar on the piece of land, which was sunk in the ground to the depth of six feet.—Held, that the erection of the pillar was within the powers conferred upon the company by their special Act; that it did not amount to a taking of land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; and consequently that it did not constitute a trespass to the property of the plaintiff. Escott v. Newport Corporation, 73 L. J. K.B. 693; [1904] 2 K.B. 869; 90 L. T. 348; 52 W. R. 543; 68 J. P. 135; 2 L. G. R. 779; 20 T. L. R. 158—D.

Building not "adapted to be used . . . as a place of habitual employment for any person in any manufacture, trade, or business"—Stable for Horses used in Business.—A stable in which horses belonging to a builder are kept and in which they are fed and groomed is not a building "adapted to be used . . . as a place of habitual employment for any person in any manufacture, trade, or business" within the meaning of a clause in the model form exempting from building by-laws any building which shall not exceed certain dimensions, and shall not, inter alia, be "constructed or adapted to be used either wholly or partly for human habitation, or as a place of habitual employment for any person in any manufacture, trade, or business," and shall be at a certain distance from other buildings and property. Such a stable, fulfilling the necessary conditions as to dimensions, &c., is therefore exempt from by-laws containing the exemption in question. Linzell v. Felkstone Urban Council, 90 L. T. 388; 2 L. G. R. 372; 68 J. P. 208—D.

Building Unfit for Human Habitation—Closing Order—"Dwelling-house"—Houses Uninhabited for Five and a Half Years.—A closing order under section 32 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, is properly made in respect of houses already closed to human habitation for the past five and a half years, for the circumstance of their being uninhabited renders them none the less "dwelling-houses" within the definition in section 29 of that Act. Robertson v. King, 70 L. J. K.B. 630; [1901] 2 K.B. 265; 84 L. T. 842; 49 W. R. 542; 65 J. P. 453—D.

Projections from Buildings—"Sign"—Iron Pole Fixed by Bolt and Nut and Carrying Flag.—Section 36, sub-section 5 of the Liverpool Improvement Act, 1892, provides that it shall not be lawful, without the consent of the corporation, to place, fix, or hang any door, shutter, trap, platform, shoot, sign, cathead, crane, hoist, or other apparatus or thing in connection with any building or structure so as to project over the surface of any street. An information alleging a breach of this enactment in respect of an iron pole, placed through a slightly open window, bolted by a screw bolt and nut to the building, and bearing a flag or advertisement on canvas which hung over the street, was dismissed, subject to a Case stated, in which the reason for dismissing the information was stated to be "that the pole and flag were not a sign within the meaning of the sub-section and that the projections therein referred to were intended to be of a more permanent and fixed character".—Held, that the Case must be remitted for reconsideration. Goldstraw v. Jones, 96 L. T. 30; 71 J. P. 22; 21 Cox C.C. 350; 4 L. G. R. 1176—D.

Arch Built under Carriage-way—Cross-action—Injunction to Restrain Interference with Electric Cables.—W. R. & Co. were occupiers of land on both sides of F. Street within the urban district of which the W. U. D. C. was the urban authority. In April, 1901, W. R. & Co. constructed a tunnel or culvert twelve feet beneath the carriage-way of F. Street for the purpose of carrying electric cables in connection with their business. The tunnel consisted of a concrete flooring and a brick archway. They subsequently changed their plans, and, cutting through the concrete, laid the cables in pipes upon or nearly upon the clay subsoil, and filled in the flooring with fresh concrete. The W. U. D. C. gave them notice to remove the tunnel in accordance with section 26 of the Public Health Act, 1875. W. R. & Co. then removed the keystone of the arch, the tunnel fell in, and the subsidence was made good with ballast. The W. U. D. C., not being satisfied, brought an action claiming a declaration that they, as the urban authority, might properly cause the arch, vault, or cellar constructed by the defendants under the carriage-way of F. Street to be altered, pulled down, or otherwise dealt with as the W. U. D. C. should think fit. W. R. & Co. instituted a cross-action for an injunction to prevent the W. U. D. C. from cutting, disturbing, or injuring their pipes or electrical wires. The two actions came on together. It was argued on behalf of the W. U. D. C. that they had a right to remove the whole of the structure, including the pipes and wires:—Held, that, on the evidence, the pipes were not in any part of the structure, and therefore it was unnecessary to decide whether the concrete flooring was part of the tunnel; the W. U. D. C. were entitled to remove the structure, which they could and must do without injuring the pipes or wires. The injunction in the cross-action was granted. Walker Urban Council v. Wigham, 85 L. T. 579; 66 J. P. 152—Farwell, J.

Domestic Building—“Open space” in the Rear of Building.—By a by-law of a local authority, “every person who shall erect a new domestic building shall provide in the rear of such building an open space exclusively belonging to such building, and of an aggregate extent of not less than 150 square feet and free from any erection thereon above the level of the ground . . . and he shall cause the distance across such open space from every part of such building to the boundary of any lands or premises, immediately opposite or adjoining the site of such building, to be not less than 10 feet.” The defendants owned a piece of land which sloped upwards from a road, there being a dwarf wall at the top of the slope. They cut into the slope and built a retaining wall at the back, and upon the space so excavated they erected a domestic building, the top of which came a few inches above the level of the dwarf wall, without having a distance of ten feet between the building and the bank. There were no buildings within ten feet of the rear of the building:—Held, that the defendants had not provided an “open space” in the rear of such building, and that therefore they had contravened the by-law. Att.-Gen. v. Friary Holroyd and Healy’s Breweries, 71 J. P. 343; 5 L. G. R. 697; 23 T. L. R. 437—Warrington, J.

Shelter for Weighing-Machine—Movable Shop for Sale of Refreshments.—A movable wooden structure about ten feet long, seven feet broad, ten feet high in front and eight feet high behind, having shutters in front and a door at one side, not fixed to the soil, without sanitary arrangements or provision for artificial lighting or heating, erected at a seaside resort as a shelter for a weighing-machine, and containing besides the weighing-machine a table and two chairs, open in the summer months during the day and visited by persons using the weighing-machine, of which an attendant has charge, is not a “new building” within the by-law of a borough providing that “Every person who shall erect a new building shall cause such building to be enclosed with walls constructed of good bricks, stone, or other hard and incombustible materials properly bonded and solidly put together.” Southend-on-Sea Corporation v. Archer; Same v. Romanis, 70 L. J. K.B. 328; 84 L. T. 264; 65 J. P. 292; 19 Cox C.C. 660—D.

A movable wooden structure upwards of nine feet long, six feet broad, and seven feet high, having a movable front, not fixed to the soil, without sanitary arrangements or provision for artificial lighting or heating, erected at a seaside resort only in the summer months for the sale of refreshments, containing a counter and shelves on which goods are placed, and open during the day in charge of an attendant as a shop for the sale of refreshments to customers, is not a “new building” within the above by-law. Id.

“Building used exclusively for the working of such mine.”—“Any building (not being a dwelling-house) erected or intended to be erected in connection with any mine, or intended to be used exclusively for the working of such mine,” was not to be subject to certain by-laws:—Held, that the words “used exclusively for the working of such mine” were not to be confined to the getting of the materials, but included putting such materials into a deliverable state as a commercial product. They would not, however, cover buildings used for carrying on another business which the owner of the mine might carry on in addition to the mining in order to make the mine profitable. Tylecote v. Morton, 85 L. T. 692; 66 J. P. 136—D.

Building Erected in Contravention of By-law—Continuing Offence—Builder no longer Entitled to Enter upon Building.—A by-law of a local authority which provided for the ventilation of buildings imposed a penalty on any person erecting a building in contravention of its provisions, and a further penalty for every day during which the offence continued after notice by the local authority. A builder having been convicted of erecting a building in contravention of the by-law, notice under the by-law was given to him by the local authority. The builder had never been owner of the building, and since the conviction he had not been in possession of it, or entitled to enter upon it. The building having been suffered to remain unaltered,—Held, that the builder was not liable for the continuing offence under section 158 of the Public Health Act, 1875, or otherwise. Welsh v. West Ham Corporation, 69 L. J. Q.B. 114; [1900] 1 Q.B. 324; 82 L. T. 262; 19 Cox C.C. 480—D.

—Sale of Building—Liability of Purchaser.—By section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, “It shall not be lawful in any urban district, without the written consent of the urban authority, to erect or bring forward any house or building in any street, or any part of such house or building, beyond the front main wall of the house or building on either side thereof in the same street, nor to build any addition to any house or building beyond the front main wall of the house or building on either side of the same.” “Any person offending against this enactment shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s. for every day during which the offence is continued after written notice in this behalf from the urban authority”:—Held, that a purchaser of a building erected in contravention of the section, who allowed it to remain in the same state after written notice from the urban authority, was not a “person offending” against the enactment, and could not be convicted of allowing the offence to continue. Blackpool Corporation v. Johnson, 71 L. J. K.B. 485; [1902] 1 K.B. 646; 87 L. T. 28—D.

(i) Burial.

Burial Board—Urban District—County Borough—Transfer of Powers.—The area of a county borough is an "urban district" within the meaning of section 62, Part IV. of the Local Government Act, 1894, and the borough council is entitled to exercise the powers conferred by that section. Kirkdale Burial Board v. Liverpool Corporation, 73 L. J. Ch. 529; [1904] 1 Ch. 829; 91 L. T. 28; 52 W. R. 427; 68 J. P. 289; 2 L. G. R. 763; 20 T. L. R. 406—Swinfen Eady, J.

By defining "urban district" to mean the district of an urban sanitary authority, section 21, sub-section 1, Part II. of the Act impliedly includes a county borough in such term, and the true meaning of section 35, which excludes county boroughs from the operation of Part II. of the Act, save where specially provided, is that an "urban district" where mentioned in Part II. of the Act does not, in the absence of special provision to the contrary, include a county borough. Section 35 does not exclude a county borough from the definition of "urban district" contained in section 21, sub-section 1, so as to place county boroughs outside the Act altogether, except where otherwise specially provided. Ib.

(j) Common Lodging-house.

Registration of, when Required—Penalty for Keeping.]—The Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, are sanitary Acts. A common lodging-house is that class of lodging-house in which persons of the poorer class are received for short periods and, although strangers to one another, are allowed to inhabit one common room. The fact that such a house is not carried on as a business for the sake of profit, but as a humane or charitable enterprise, does not take it out of the measure of sanitary protection provided by the Acts, or prevent it being a common lodging-house within their meaning. The question is not with what object, or prompted by what motive the house is carried on, but whether the house is such and is so carried on as a lodging-house as to be within the provisions of the Acts. Logsdon v. Booth, 69 L. J. Q.B. 131; [1900] 1 Q.B. 401; 81 L. T. 602; 48 W. R. 266; 64 J. P. 165—D.

Although a common lodging-house is "open to all comers" in the sense that practically all comers are received without discrimination, there is no obligation upon the keeper to receive them. He may refuse to admit any person he may choose to exclude. Ib.

Booth v. Ferrett (59 L. J. M.C. 136; 25 Q.B. D. 87) was wrongly decided. Ib.

Institution for Assisting the Poor of Better Class—Separate Sleeping Cubicles—Charges Above Average Rate.]—The fact that separate sleeping accommodation by means of cubicles, the other rooms being used in common, is afforded to lodgers, at charges above the ordinary rate paid in common lodging-houses, at an institution promoted by benevolent persons for the benefit of a class of poor persons superior to the "dosser" class, does not render such institution any the less a "common lodging-house," nor exempt it from registration and inspections under the Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853. Logsdon v. Booth (69

L. J. Q.B. 131) discussed and followed. Logsdon v. Trotter, 69 L. J. Q.B. 312; [1900] 1 Q.B. 617; 82 L. T. 151; 48 W. R. 365; 64 J. P. 421; 19 Cox C.C. 460—D.

Charitable Institution—No Payment made by Persons Admitted.]—Having regard to the definition of a "common lodging-house" in section 3 of the Common Lodging-houses (Ireland) Act, 1860, as a "house in which persons are harboured or lodged for hire," &c., a house used for lodging persons of the poorest class, which is carried on as a charitable institution without taking any payment from those admitted, is not a "common lodging-house" within the meaning of the Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, and the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1902, and is therefore not subject to the provisions of those Acts. Gilbert v. Jones (74 L. J. K.B. 929; [1905] 2 K.B. 691) overruled. Parlier v. Talbot, 75 L. J. Ch. 8; [1905] 2 Ch. 643; 93 L. T. 522; 54 W. R. 132; 4 L. G. R. 27; 70 J. P. 43; 22 T. L. R. 10—C.A.

The definition of a "common lodging-house" in the Common Lodging-houses (Ireland) Act, 1860, is not affected by the repeal of that Act by the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878. Ib.

Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—A lodging-house may be a "common lodging-house" within the meaning of the Acts although it is carried on for charity and not for purposes of gain, but the persons receiving the benefit of the charity must be of the very poor and humble class. The sleeping of persons not of the same family in a common room and having meals in a common room does not constitute a "common lodging-house" if such accommodation is not the main purpose of the charity, but a charitable institution will not cease to be a "common lodging-house" because it has other benevolent or religious purposes outside the operation of the Acts. Ib.

The fact that a house, used as a common lodging-house, is not carried on as a business for the sake of profit, but as a humane and charitable enterprise, no payment whatever being taken from those admitted, does not prevent it from being a "common lodging-house" within the meaning of the Common Lodging-houses Act, 1851, and the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1902, and from being, as such common lodging-house, subject to the sanitary provisions of those Acts. Logsdon v. Booth (69 L. J. Q.B. 131; [1900] 1 Q.B. 401) and Logsdon v. Trotter (69 L. J. Q.B. 312; [1900] 1 Q.B. 617) followed. Gilbert v. Jones, 74 L. J. K.B. 929; [1905] 2 K.B. 691; 93 L. T. 520; 54 W. R. 94; 69 J. P. 392; 3 L. G. R. 987; 21 T. L. R. 709—D. But see preceding case.

Compensation for Damage by Exercise of Statutory Powers.]—See STATUTORY POWERS and cols. 1418-9.

(k) Cyclists.

Lights—One Hour After Sunset—One Hour Before Sunrise.]—The appellant was riding a bicycle on August 19, 1898, at Bristol without a light at 8.16 p.m. The hour of sunset at Greenwich on that day was 7.13 p.m., but at Bristol it was ten minutes later—namely, 7.23 p.m. The Justices were of opinion that “one hour after sunset” meant one hour after sunset at Greenwich, and convicted the appellant. Held, that the magistrates were wrong. Gordon v. Cann, 68 L. J. Q.B. 434; 80 L. T. 20; 47 W. R. 269; 63 J. P. 324—D.

(1) Factories.

Sanitary Conveniences for Workers—Suitability or Sufficiency—Requirements of Government Inspector—Justices' Jurisdiction to Hear Evidence.]—Justices have no jurisdiction to hear evidence upon or decide the question of suitability or sufficiency of sanitary accommodation existing in a factory, or required by the notice served by a factory inspector upon the owner of a factory. Tracey v. Pretty, 70 L. J. K.B. 234; [1901] 1 K.B. 444; 83 L. T. 767; 49 W. R. 282; 65 J. P. 196; 19 Cox C.C. 593—D.

—Appeal from Inspector's Requirements.]—But the requirement of the factory inspector is the subject of an appeal to quarter sessions under section 7 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890. Ib.

Ventilation—Dust Injurious to Workers—Evidence of Actual Injury Unnecessary.]—In proceedings under section 36 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, in which the owners of the factory are called upon to provide, maintain, and use a fan or other mechanical means for preventing the inhalation of dust generated in the factory by the workers to an injurious extent, it is unnecessary to prove by evidence that any worker has sustained actual injury, but it is enough to shew that dust was generated to such an extent that its tendency was necessarily to injure the workers' health in course of time. Hoare v. Ritchie, 70 L. J. K.B. 279; [1901] 1 K.B. 434; 84 L. T. 54; 49 W. R. 351; 65 J. P. 261—D.

(m) Fire Brigade.

Urban District—Superintendent—Implied Authority to Call in other Fire Brigade—Remuneration.]—The superintendent of the fire brigade of an urban district has, in the absence of express regulations to the contrary, an implied authority from the district council to call in, where necessary for the proper discharge of his duties, the services of another fire brigade, and the fire brigade so called in, in the absence of evidence shewing that the services were rendered gratuitously, are entitled to receive from the district council reasonable remuneration for the work of the members and for the use of the fire engine and other necessary implements. Janes v. Staines Urban Council, 83 L. T. 426—D.

“Purchase or provide” fire engines, &c., in section 32 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, enables an urban district council not merely to buy, but, where necessity arises; to hire temporarily fire engines, &c. Ib.

(1) Generally.

Sale of Article not of Nature, Substance, and Quality Demanded—Drug not in Accordance with Standard of “British Pharmacopœia”—Compounded Drug.]—A chemist selling to a purchaser, who asks for “mercury ointment” but does not state that he requires it to be made in accordance with the standard of the British Pharmacopœia, an ointment containing only about one-fourth of the percentage of mercury contained in the mercury ointment of the British Pharmacopœia, without informing him of the difference, is liable to be convicted under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of selling to the prejudice of the purchaser a drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser. Dickins v. Randerson, 70 L. J. K.B. 344; [1901] 1 K.B. 437; 84 L. T. 204; 65 J. P. 262; 19 Cox C.C. 643—D.

—Milk as Taken from Cow Deficient in Fat.]—In proceedings under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, in respect of a sale of milk, it was proved that the milk sold contained only 2.81 per cent. of milk fat as against the 3 per cent. laid down by the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901, as the prima facie standard for genuine milk, but that the milk sold had in fact not been tampered with, and that the deficiency was accounted for by the length of the interval that had been allowed to elapse between the successive milkings of the cows from which the milk was obtained:—Held, that under these circumstances the Justices were not bound to convict, and that it was a question of fact whether the article sold was, or was not, of the nature, substance, and quality demanded. Smithies v. Bridge (71 L. J. K.B. 555; [1902] 2 K.B. 13) explained. Wolfenden v. McCulloch, 92 L. T. 857; 3 L. G. R. 561; 69 J. P. 223; 20 Cox C.C. 864; 21 T. L. R. 411—D. And see MILK, infra.

—“Chewing gum”—Paraffin Wax.]—On the hearing of two informations under sections 3 and 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, it was proved or admitted before the Justices that the appellant was a shop-keeper, carrying on business at 5 P. Road, T., where he retailed sweets and groceries. On May 13, 1899, the respondent visited the appellant's shop, and purchased some "chewing gum." Each of the packets of "chewing gum" was labelled "R. & Co.'s chewing. This must not be eaten. For chewing only." The respondent, after looking at the packets and reading the labels, asked the price, and bought three-pennyworth. It was proved, or admitted, that the "chewing gum" was sold as an article to be chewed and not as an article to be eaten. It could not be dissolved by the saliva of the mouth, nor could it be masticated by the teeth. It was, however, capable of being swallowed whole, although it was not intended to be swallowed. Paraffin wax was one of the ingredients, and each packet contained 8·3 per cent. thereof. The wax was an essential ingredient. Paraffin wax if received into the stomach was injurious to health, and the quantity of wax in the packets was sufficient to make the article as a sweet injurious to health if passed into the stomach. If swallowed, therefore, it was injurious to health, but if it was used in the manner in which it was intended to be used—namely, for chewing—it was not in any way injurious to health. The Justices convicted the appellant:—Held, that on the facts the Justices were wrong. Bennett v. Tyler, 81 L. T. 787; 64 J. P. 119; 19 Cox C.C. 434—D.

— Tapioca Sold as Sago.—Where it appeared that it was the custom of the trade to sell as sago a particular kind of tapioca which was of the same value as sago, it was held that the Justices might find that a sale of such tapioca to a person who asked for sago was not a sale to his prejudice, and might therefore dismiss the information taken out against the seller for selling to the prejudice of the purchaser an article not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded. Sandys v. Rhodes, 67 J. P. 352—D.

— No Evidence of Inferiority of Article Sold—Addition of Glucose to Marmalade.—To a person who asked for a pot of marmalade a grocer sold a pot of marmalade which was found to contain 13 per cent. of starch glucose. The glucose consisted of sugar, a gummy substance which had no sweetening property, and water. There was no legal standard for the making of marmalade, and manufacturers used various recipes, and for many years glucose had been used by many, though not by all, manufacturers in the making of it. The glucose to the extent used was not injurious to health, and it prevented the marmalade from crystallising and had a tendency to prevent mildewing and fermenting:—Held, that there was no evidence that the article supplied was inferior to the article demanded or was adulterated, and no evidence therefore that the sale was a sale to the prejudice of the purchaser within the meaning of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Smith v. Wisden, 85 L. T. 760; 66 J. P. 150; 20 Cox C.C. 135—D.

— Article not Stated to be Injurious to Health.—To justify a conviction under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, in respect of the sale of an article of food with which a foreign ingredient has been mixed, it must be found that the article of food has been rendered injurious to health by the admixture of the ingredient; a finding that the added inredient is in itself injurious to health is insufficient. It is not, however, necessary that the analyst's certificate on which the proceedings under the section are founded should state that the article is injurious to health. Hull v. Horsnell, 92 L. T. 81; 2 L. G. R. 1280; 68 J. P. 591; 20 Cox C.C. 759; 21 T. L. R. 32—D.

Proof of Quality where no Standard Fixed by Regulation.—In the case of an article such as brandy, where no standard of purity has been fixed by regulation, the question whether the article supplied is of the nature, quality, and substance demanded is one of fact to be decided on the evidence given at the hearing. Wilson and McPhee v. Wilson, 6 F. (Just. Cas.) 10—Ct. of Justy.

Sale by "Person"—Limited Company.—A limited company is a "person" within the meaning of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, which provides that "No person shall sell to the prejudice of the purchaser any article of food or any drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by such purchaser," under a penalty. Pearks v. Ward, 71 L. J. K.B. 656; [1902] 2 K.B. 1; 87 L. T. 51; 66 J. P. 774; 20 Cox C.C. 279—D.

Sale "to the prejudice of purchaser"—Purchase for Analysis—Knowledge of True Nature of Article Sold.—The respondent employed an agent to purchase on his behalf from the appellants, a grocery company, half a pound of "butter" for the purpose of analysis. The agent asked for and both he and the respondent expected to get "butter," but the company supplied a substance known as "Pearks's butter," consisting of butter blended with milk, and containing in consequence an excess of moisture. The agent and the respondent both knew that the butter supplied was moist, though they did not know that it contained such an excess of moisture as it did contain:—Held, a sale "to the prejudice of the purchaser," within the meaning of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Id.

Sale "to the prejudice of purchaser"—Preserved Peas—Sulphate of Copper Used as Colouring-matter.—An information under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling to the prejudice of the purchaser, as preserved peas, an article not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, was dismissed by the Justices, on the ground that there had been no sale to the prejudice of the purchaser; subject to a Case finding as facts that the purchaser asked for preserved peas, that he was supplied with preserved peas containing, as added colouring-matter, sulphate of copper in a quantity insufficient to be injurious to health, and that preserved peas are habitually sold with added colouring-matter:—Held, that the Justices were justified in point of law in dismissing the information. Friend v. Mapp, 2 L. G. R. 1317; 63 J. P. 539—D.

(2) Beer.

Admixture of Arsenic in Beer—Liability of Innocent Vendor.—A person who sells beer which in fact contains such an admixture of arsenic as to be prejudicial to health is liable to conviction under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, although he does not know, and cannot reasonably be expected to know, of the presence of the arsenic in the beer. Goulden v. Rook, 70 L. J. K.B. 747; [1901] 2 K.B. 290; 84 L. T. 719; 49 W. R. 634, 701; 65 J. P. 646; 19 Cox C.C. 725—D.

(3) Brandy and Rum.

Sale of Brandy—Sufficiency of Certificate.]—Brandy having been analysed, the certificate stated: "I am of opinion that the said sample contained parts as under, or the percentages of foreign ingredients as under: It has been reduced from 25 degrees under proof to 27.6 degrees under proof."—Held, that the certificate was sufficient. Findley v. Haas, 88 L. T. 465; 67 J. P. 198; 1 L. G. R. 377; 20 Cox C.C. 399—D.

Rum more than Twenty-five Degrees under Proof—Notice Posted up—Sufficiency of Notice—"Spirits . . . not . . . of any guaranteed strength"—Sale to the "prejudice of the purchaser."—A notice posted up in an inn that "all spirits sold . . . are of the same quality and strength as heretofore, but, in order to comply with the Food and Drugs Act, will not be of any guaranteed strength," is not a sufficient notice to prevent a sale of rum which is more than twenty-five degrees below proof from being a sale to the prejudice of the purchaser; the vendor in such circumstances is therefore liable to the penalty imposed by section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (DARLING, J., dissenting). Dawes v. Wilkinson, 76 L. J. K.B. 182; [1907] 1 K.B. 278; 96 L. T. 26; 71 J. P. 23; 5 L. G. R. 1; 23 T. L. R. 34—D.

(4) Butter.

Addition of Fat—Importation—Warranty of Quality—Liability of Importer.]—Upon a prosecution under section 1 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, for importing butter adulterated with foreign fat in packages not marked with a description indicating that the butter has been so treated, it is not open to the defendant to set up as a defence that he received the butter with a written warranty of purity, in the truth of which he believed. Such a defence is only available where there has been a sale of the adulterated article. Kelly v. Lonsdale, 75 L. J. K.B. 822; [1906] 2 K.B. 486; 95 L. T. 427; 70 J. P. 441; 4 L. G. R. 949; 21 Cox C.C. 281; 22 T. L. R. 655—D.

Standard of Percentage of Fat—Sale to Prejudice of Purchaser.]—Upon a prosecution under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling as margarine an article not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, the fact that the article sold is margarine within the definition of that term in the Margarine Act, 1887, does not preclude the Justices from convicting on the ground that the article is not genuine margarine. And in deciding whether the article is genuine it is for the Justices to determine, on the evidence before them, the standard, as regards the ingredients and their percentages, with which margarine, to be genuine, must comply. Roberts v. Leeming, 8 L. G. R. 1081; 69 J. P. 417—D.

Upon a prosecution of the kind the Justices found that, to be genuine, margarine should contain at least 85 per cent. of fat, and, as the article sold contained only 75 per cent. of fat, convicted:—Held (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., dissenting), on the particular facts, that there was evidence on which the Justices could come to the conclusion that margarine ought to contain at least 85 per cent. of fat. Ib.

Milk-blended Butter—Margarine—Substance with more than 10 per Cent. of Butter Fat.]—Butter blended with milk so that it contains an excess of water does not become margarine. Therefore a vendor of such milk-blended butter cannot be convicted under section 8 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, for selling margarine containing more than 10 per cent. of butter fat. The sale of butter blended with milk is lawful if sold as such. Bayley v. Pearks, 87 L. T. 67; 66 J. P. 790; 20 Cox C.C. 289—D.

—Notice Affixed in Shop—Excessive Percentage of Water.]—To a purchaser who went into a shop and asked for half a pound of best fresh butter the seller sold butter which was found to be adulterated by the addition of water, and which was in fact milk-blended butter containing an excess of water. There was hung in a conspicuous place in the shop a notice that all butter sold in the shop was milk-blended butter, and the butter when handed to the purchaser was wrapped up in a paper wrapper on which was printed a notice that the butter was choicest butter blended with milk, whereby the percentage of water in it was increased. Upon an information against the seller under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling butter which was not of the nature, substance, and quality of the butter demanded, the Justices found that the sale was to the prejudice of the purchaser, but that the seller was protected by section 8 of the Act by reason of the notice in the shop, and by reason that the butter was wrapped in a printed notice disclosing the fact that the article was a mixture; but there was no finding by them as to whether the notice on the wrapper could or could not be seen by an ordinary purchaser:—Held, that the notice on the wrapper was a sufficient notice by label within section 8, and was a good defence under that section, and that the Justices were right in dismissing the information. Hayes v. Rule, 87 L. T. 133; 66 J. P. 661; 20 Cox C.C. 328—D.

—Excessive Percentage of Water—Notice Affixed in Shop.]—Where provision merchants affixed in their shop, in a position visible to an ordinary purchaser, a notice to the effect that the butter sold at their establishment was butter blended with milk and containing 20 to 24 per cent. of moisture,—Held, that a sale of such blended butter was not a sale "to the prejudice of the purchaser" within the meaning of section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, although the percentage of water was excessive, and the purchaser had not in fact seen the notice. Pearks v. Houghton, 71 L. J. K.B. 385; [1902] 1 K.B. 889; 86 L. T. 325; 50 W. R. 605; 66 J. P. 422—D.

—Excess of Water.]—A provision merchant selling to a purchaser, who asks for "butter," butter to which, by a process subsequent to its manufacture, milk has been added without being converted into butter, and which in consequence contains an excess of water, is liable to be convicted, under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of selling, to the prejudice of the purchaser, an article not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser. Pearks v. Knight; Pearks v. Van Tromp, 70 L. J. K.B. 1002; [1901] 2 K.B. 825; 85 L. T. 379; 50 W. R. 104; 65 J. P. 822; 20 Cox C.C. 46—D.

Butter Containing Excess of Moisture Wrapped up in Greaseproof Paper.—A person purchasing butter for the purpose of analysis caused each of the three parts into which the butter was divided to be wrapped up in a greaseproof envelope. The analysts certified that the butter contained an excess of water, adding that no change had taken place in the butter which would interfere with the analysis, and that in consequence of the butter having been so fastened up it was probable that there had been considerable loss of water since the date of the purchase. On a Case stated by Justices who had convicted the seller under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875,—Held, that the wrapping up of the butter in the manner above mentioned was a sufficient compliance with section 14 of the Act. Pearks v. Ward, 71 L.J. K.B. 656; [1902] 2 K.B. 1—D.

Margarine—Exposing for Sale—Label.—On the defendant's counter there was a butt of margarine from which the lid had been removed, but which was branded on the lid, bottom, and side with the word "Margarine." There was no label attached as required by the second regulation in section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887. The defendant's assistant, on being asked for one pound of margarine by the prosecutor, sliced away that quantity from the margarine in the butt, and sold it to him:—Held, that the facts brought the defendant within the second regulation, and that the magistrates ought to have convicted the defendant thereunder. Maquire v. Porter, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 147—K.B. D.

Excess of Water.—Margarine having been purchased and analysed, evidence was given that it contained 21 per cent. of water, which was at least 5 per cent. in excess of water that margarine should contain:—Held, that the vendor was rightly convicted of selling to the prejudice of the purchaser margarine not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, contrary to section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Burton v. Mattinson, 86 L. T. 770; 66 J. P. 628; 20 Cox C.C. 262—D.

Butter Substitute—Sale of "Keeloma"—Sale "under the name of margarine."—The respondent asked at the appellant's shop for half a pound of "Keeloma" and received a substance wrapped in a brown paper with no label upon it. On the package being opened it was found that there was a second wrapper of paper with the word "Margarine" printed on it as required by the Margarine Act, 1887. Keeloma was in fact margarine, and the purchaser knew this when he purchased it. Notices were displayed in the shop stating that only Keeloma and Overweight, the new butter substitutes, were sold there, and to comply with the Acts they were sold under the name of margarine. The appellants having been convicted of selling margarine under another name,—Held, that the selling of the article under a special name was not necessarily an offence against the Act, and the conviction was wrong. Keeloma Dairy Co. v. Jones, 70 J. P. 533; 5 L. G. R. 246; 22 T. L. R. 535—D.

"Package" containing—Open Tub.—A dealer in margarine had in his shop at the back of his counter, and in full view of customers, several tubs, open at the top, containing margarine:—Held, that these tubs were "packages" within the meaning of section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887, and that they should have been branded or durably marked as required by that section. McNair v. Horan, 91 L. T. 555; 2 L. G. R. 1239; 63 J. P. 518; 20 Cox C.C. 729—D.

Importation of, otherwise than in Packages Marked "Margarine"—Conviction—Question of Fact—Right of Appeal.—No appeal on a question of fact lies to quarter sessions from a conviction by Justices under section 1 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899. So held by RIDLEY, J., and DARLING, J. (BRAY, J., dissentiente). Ree v. Otto Monsted, Lim., 75 L. J. K.B. 629; [1906] 2 K.B. 456; 95 L. T. 526; 4 L. G. R. 942; 70 J. P. 435; 21 Cox C.C. 289—D.

Purchase by Retail Dealer from Wholesale Dealer—Purchase by Inspector from Retail Dealer for Analysis—Admissibility of Analyst's Certificate in Proceedings by Inspector against Wholesale Dealer.—Where a wholesale dealer has sold an article as butter to a retail dealer in the ordinary course of business, and the retail dealer has subsequently sold, on his own account, a portion of the article as butter to an inspector of weights and measures purchasing for analysis, the analyst's certificate of the analysis of such portion is not admissible in proceedings by the inspector against the wholesale dealer under section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887, as evidence that the article sold by him was margarine. Tyler v. Kingham, 69 L. J. Q.B. 630; [1900] 2 Q.B. 413; 83 L. T. 169; 64 J. P. 598; 19 Cox C.C. 547—D.

"Parcel" of—Label—Six Pounds of Margarine Forming Triangular Group or Pyramid.—Six separate pounds of margarine, each partially covered with paper, placed together in a shop window in the form of a triangular group or pyramid, and touching each other, form one "parcel" within the meaning of section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887, and are sufficiently labelled to satisfy that section by a single label placed at the base of the triangular group or pyramid so as to extend across the whole of the bottom portion of the three lowest pieces. Parkinson v. McNair, 93 L. T. 553; 3 L. G. R. 982; 69 J. P. 399; 21 Cox C.C. 42—D.

Register—Obligation to Produce Register for Examination by Inspector—Right of Inspector to take Notes.—The power given by section 7 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, to officers of the Board of Agriculture to inspect the registers kept by manufacturers of, and wholesale dealers in, margarine carries with it the right to take notes of the entries in such registers. Hart v. Cohen & Van der Laan, 4 F. 445—Ct. of Sess.

A firm of margarine dealers were convicted under section 7, sub-section 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, of failure to produce the register kept by them. They had produced their register, but declined to allow the inspector to make notes of its contents:—Held, that the conviction was right. Id.

— “Marvo”—Sale of Butter Substitute otherwise than as Margarine.]—The respondent went into the appellant's shop and asked for half a pound of “Marvo,” and was served with a substance from a box labelled “Margarine,” which substance, before being handed to the respondent, was wrapped in paper on which was printed in half-inch letters “Margarine.” Inside the package was found a slip on which was printed: “Marvo (registered by Act of Parliament). Without this slip none is genuine”; and behind the counter was a notice: “Notice—‘Marvo,’ the new butter substitute, equal in flavour to the finest dairy butter. To comply with the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act is sold as ‘Margarine’”:—Held, that the appellant had not sold a substance prepared in imitation of butter under a name other than margarine, within section 3 of the Margarine Act, 1887. Tanner v. Dyball, 94 L. T. 539; 4 L. G. R. 506; 70 J. P. 279; 21 Cox C.C. 123—D.

— Statement of Weight not Filled up—Butter—Article Liable to Decomposition—Statement as to Change in Constitution.]—In a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, it is not a valid objection to the analyst's certificate that the space in the schedule form of certificate for the weight of the sample has been left blank without any statement that the article could not be conveniently weighed. But a certificate of the analysis of an article which is sent as butter is invalid if the analyst does not report whether any change had taken place in the constitution of the article, the direction in the schedule form of certificate so to report being imperative in the case of butter; and it is no excuse for non-compliance with this direction that the article proved on analysis to be margarine. Hunter v. Winthrop, 7 F. (Just. Cas.) 22—Ct. of Justy.

(5) Drugs.

Not of Nature, Substance, and Quality of Article Demanded—Drug not in Accordance with Standard of “British Pharmacopœia”—“Mercury ointment.”]—A chemist selling to a purchaser, who asks for “mercury ointment” but does not state that he requires it to be made in accordance with the standard of the British Pharmacopœia, an ointment containing only about one-fourth of the percentage of mercury contained in the mercury ointment of the British Pharmacopœia, without informing him of the difference, is liable to be convicted under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of selling to the prejudice of the purchaser a drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser. Dickins v. Randerson, 70 L. J. K.B. 344; [1901] 1 K.B. 437; 84 L. T. 204; 65 J. P. 262—D.

— Vinegar of Squills.]—The British Pharmacopœia gives a formula for the preparation of vinegar of squills but fixes no standard as to the amounts of its ingredients which that drug in its finished state is to contain. On an information under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts for selling vinegar of squills otherwise than in accordance with the demand of the purchaser, it was proved that the drug sold contained less acetic acid than vinegar of squills freshly made in accordance with the formula of the British Pharmacopœia would contain, but that vinegar of squills, even though properly kept, gradually undergoes a loss of acetic acid. The Justices, without considering whether deficiency in acetic acid impairs the efficiency of the drug, convicted on this evidence:—Held, that there was no evidence to justify the conviction. Hudson v. Bridge, 88 L. T. 550; 67 J. P. 136; 1 L. G. R. 400; 20 Cox C.C. 425—D.

— Compounded Drug—Sale to Prejudice of Purchaser.]—Proceedings may properly be taken under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, against a person who sells to the prejudice of the purchaser a compounded drug which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser. Beardsley v. Walton, 69 L. J. Q.B. 344; [1900] 2 Q.B. 1; 82 L. T. 119; 64 J. P. 436; 19 Cox C.C. 447—D.

Evidence of Commercial Standard Differing from Pharmacopœia—Admissibility.]—In a prosecution under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling to the prejudice of the purchaser an article which is not of the nature, substance, and quality of the article demanded, upon the ground that the article, being one mentioned in the British Pharmacopœia, is not in accordance with the prescription in the Pharmacopœia, evidence tendered for the defendant is admissible to shew that there is a commercial standard of the article differing from that prescribed by the British Pharmacopœia. Dickins v. Randerson (70 L. J. K.B. 344; [1901] 1 K.B. 437) explained. Boots Cash Chemists v. Cowling, 88 L. T. 539; 67 J. P. 195; 1 L. G. R. 884; 20 Cox C.C. 420—D.

• Injurious to Health—“Chewing gum”—Paraffin Wax.]—On the hearing of two informations under sections 3 and 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, it was proved or admitted before the Justices that the appellant was a shop-keeper, carrying on business at 5 P. Road, T., where he retailed sweets and groceries. On May 13, 1899, the respondent visited the appellant's shop, and purchased some “chewing gum.” Each of the packets of “chewing gum” was labelled “B. & Co.'s chewing. This must not be eaten. For chewing only.” The respondent, after looking at the packets and reading the labels, asked the price, and bought three-pennyworth. It was proved, or admitted, that the “chewing gum” was sold as an article to be chewed and not as an article to be eaten. It could not be dissolved by the saliva of the mouth, nor could it be masticated by the teeth. It was, however, capable of being swallowed whole, although it was not intended to be swallowed. Paraffin wax was one of the ingredients, and each packet contained 8·3 per cent. thereof. The wax was an essential ingredient. Paraffin wax if received into the stomach was injurious to health, and the quantity of wax in the packets was sufficient to make the article as a sweet injurious to health if passed into the stomach. If swallowed, therefore, it was injurious to health, but if it was used in the manner in which it was intended to be used—namely, for chewing—it was not in any way injurious to health. The Justices convicted the appellant:—Held, that on the facts the Justices were wrong. Bennett v. Tyler, 81 L. T. 787; 64 J. P. 119—D.

(6) Fertilisers and Food-stuffs.

False Invoice—Prosecution—Condition Precedent—Compliance with Provisions as to Samples and Analysis—“Permitting” Invoice to be False—Guilty Knowledge.]—Compliance with the provisions of the Fertilisers and Feeding-stuffs Act, 1893, as to the taking of samples and the analysis of the article sold, is not a condition precedent to a prosecution under section 3, sub-section 1 (b) of the Act. Korten v. West Sussex County Council, 72 L. J. K.B. 514; 88 L. T. 466; 67 J. P. 167; 1 L. G. R. 445; 20 Cox C.C. 402—D.

A chemical company sold a quantity of a particular kind of fertiliser, and an invoice was sent to the purchaser stating that the goods contained 38 to 45 per cent. of total phosphates. The goods in fact contained less than 38 per cent. of phosphates. The evidence shewed that the managing director of the company knew that in the kind of fertiliser in question the proportion of phosphates varied, that in the ordinary course of business sales of that fertiliser would come under his notice, that he was cognisant of the general form of invoice used, and that invoices with a guarantee would not be sent out in the ordinary course without his knowledge; but there was no evidence that he saw the particular invoice in question or knew it to be false, though there was evidence that that invoice would not be sent out in the ordinary course without his knowledge. The managing director having been convicted under section 3, sub-section 1 (b) of the Fertilisers and Feeding-stuffs Act, 1893, of permitting an invoice or description of the article sold to be false in a material particular to the prejudice of the purchaser,—Held, that the conviction was right. Ib.

—Permitting Invoice to be False—Guilty Knowledge.]—In order to constitute the offence under section 3, sub-section 1 (b) of the Fertilisers and Feeding-stuffs Act, 1893, of permitting an invoice or description of the article sold to be false in a material particular to the prejudice of the purchaser, it is not necessary to prove guilty knowledge. Laird v. Dobell, 75 L. J. K.B. 163; [1906] 1 K.B. 131; 93 L. T. 842; 54 W. R. 506; 4 L. G. R. 232; 70 J. P. 62; 21 Cox C.C. 66—D.

(7) Meat.

Diseased—Liability of Person in whose Possession Meat Found—Exposure for Sale.]—A person in whose possession unsound meat is found is not liable to be convicted under sections 116 and 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, of the offence of having in his possession unsound meat intended for the food of man, if he shows that at the time the meat was unsound it was not intended for the food of man. Mallinson v. Carr (60 L. J. M.C. 34; [1891] 1 Q.B. 48) distinguished. Wieland v. Butler-Hogan, 73 L. J. K.B. 513; 90 L. T. 588; 53 W. R. 68; 68 J. P. 310; 2 L. G. R. 1074; 20 Cox C.C. 630; 20 T. L. R. 419—D.

Meat “deposited for the purpose of sale”—Third Person—No Exposure for Sale.]—A person who deposits for the purpose of sale upon the premises of a third person unsound meat intended for the food of man is not liable to the penalty imposed by section 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by section 23 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, if there has been no exposure for sale of such unsound meat. Barlow v. Terrett (60 L. J. M.C. 104; [1891] 2 Q.B. 107) followed. Firth v. McPhail, 74 L. J. K.B. 458; [1905] 2 K.B. 300; 92 L. T. 567; 69 J. P. 203; 3 L. G. R. 478; 20 Cox C.C. 821; 21 T. L. R. 403—D.

Condemnation of Unfit for Food of Man—Compensation—Arbitration—Jurisdiction of Arbitrator—Costs of Magisterial Proceedings.]—Where meat has been condemned and ordered to be destroyed by a magistrate as unfit for the food of man, and the owner of the meat claims compensation under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the arbitrator appointed to award compensation under that section has jurisdiction to decide the question of the soundness of the meat, and may award as part of the compensation the expenses incurred by the claimant in proceedings before the magistrate. Walshaw v. Brighouse Corporation, 68 L. J. Q.B. 828; [1899] 2 Q.B. 286; 81 L. T. 2; 47 W. R. 600—C.A.

Costs of Successful Defence.]—Upon an arbitration under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, all that is to be considered by the arbitrator is whether the person claiming compensation has suffered damage, and the amount of such damage. The costs of successfully defending a prosecution for exposing for sale unsound meat, which meat is the subject of the claim for compensation, cannot be recovered as damages. Davies and Rhondda Urban Council, In re, 80 L. T. 696—D.

Unsound—Destruction of—No Justice’s Order.]—The seizure and subsequent destruction of unsound meat by an inspector of nuisances without an order having been obtained in that behalf from a Justice of the peace is illegal. Ormerod v. Rochdale Corporation, 62 J. P. 153—Bruce, J.

(8) Milk.

Article not of Nature and Substance Demanded—Sale of Milk Deficient in Fat—Absence of Addition to or Abstraction from Milk.]—Where a purchaser demands new milk and the seller supplies him with an article which comes direct from the cow, and which has not been tampered with or adulterated in any way, but is deficient in fat in consequence of the cow having been treated in an abnormal manner, there is evidence upon which Justices may find that the seller has committed the offence under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of selling to the prejudice of the purchaser milk not of the nature, quality, and substance of the article demanded. Smithies v. Bridge, 71 L. J. K.B. 555; [1902] 2 K.B. 13; 87 L. T. 167; 50 W. R. 686; 66 J. P. 740; 20 Cox C.C. 342—D.

Per LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.—Lane v. Collins (54 L. J. M.C. 76; 14 Q.B. D. 193), was decided upon a special state of facts. Id.

Milk as Taken from Cow Deficient in Fat.—In proceedings under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, in respect of a sale of milk, it was proved that the milk sold contained only 2·81 per cent. of milk fat as against the 3 per cent. laid down by the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901, as the prima facie standard for genuine milk, but that the milk sold had in fact not been tampered with, and that the deficiency was accounted for by the length of the interval that had been allowed to elapse between successive milkings of the cows from which the milk was obtained:—Held, that under these circumstances the Justices were not bound to convict, and that it was a question of fact whether the article sold was, or was not, of the nature, substance, and quality demanded. Smithies v. Bridge (71 L. J. K.B. 555 [1902] 2 K.B. 13) explained. Wolfenden v. McCulloch, 92 L. T. 857; 3 L. G. R. 561; 69 J. P. 228; 21 T. L. R. 411—D.

Sale of Milk Deficient in Fat—Absence of, Addition to, or Abstraction from Milk.—Where a purchaser demands new milk and the seller supplies him with an article which comes direct from the cow, and which has not been tampered with or adulterated in any way, but is deficient in fat in consequence of the cow having been treated in an abnormal manner, there is evidence upon which Justices may find that the seller has committed the offence under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of selling to the prejudice of the purchaser milk not of the nature, quality, and substance of the article demanded. Smithies v. Bridge, 71 L. J. K.B. 555; [1902] 2 K.B. 13; 87 L. T. 167; 50 W. R. 686; 66 J. P. 740—D.

Per LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.—Lane v. Collins (54 L. J. M.C. 76; 14 Q.B. D. 193) was decided upon a special state of facts. Id.

"Skimmed" Milk—"Separated" Milk—Disclosure of Injurious Alteration.—The question whether or not an alteration in the quality, substance, or nature of a food or drug has been sufficiently disclosed is a question of fact. Milk from which 97 per cent. of the fat had been abstracted was sold as skimmed milk. The magistrate held, on the evidence, that this was not a sufficient disclosure under the Act:—Held, that there was no appeal from his decision. Petchey v. Taylor, 78 L. T. 501; 62 J. P. 360; 19 Cox C.C. 33—D.

Milk Watered in Transit by Rail from Country to Town—Seller's Liability for Acts of Strangers.—A dairy-farmer, under contract for the sale and delivery of pure unskimmed milk by rail, carriage paid, to the purchaser, at a London railway terminus, is liable to be convicted of an offence under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, as amended by section 8 of the Amendment Act, 1879, if, on its arrival at the London platform, a sample of the milk be found, after analysis at the instance of an inspector under the Acts, to contain a percentage of added water, although such adulteration was wholly without the knowledge or connivance of the farmer, his servants or employees, and could only have been effected by some one, a stranger to him, after the milk had been placed in the train and during its transit from the country station to the London terminus. Parker v. Alder, 68 L. J. Q.B. 7; [1899] 1 Q.B. 20; 79 L. T. 381; 47 W. R. 142; 62 J. P. 772; 19 Cox C.C. 191—D.

Ten per Cent. added Water—Milk exceptionally Good—Trifling Offence.—The respondent was charged with selling milk contrary to section 6 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875. At the hearing of the information the certificate of the analyst was produced and proved on behalf of the appellant, and showed as follows: "I, the undersigned public analyst for the county of Essex, do hereby certify that I received on June 5, 1899, a sample of milk. . . . I am of opinion that the same contained the parts as under: Fat, 3·55 parts; non-fatty solids, 7·46 parts; water, 88·99 parts; total, 100·00. I am therefore of opinion that this milk contains 10 per cent. of added water." The Justices received the certificate of the analyst as sufficient evidence of the facts as herein stated, but it appeared to them that the milk was exceptionally good, the butter fat being above normal, and, having regard to all the circumstances, they thought that, though the charge was proved, the offence was of so trifling a nature that it was inexpedient to inflict any punishment, and they therefore dismissed the information:—Held, remitting the case to the Justices, that if the milk was exceptionally good after the adulteration they need not convict, but if it was only exceptionally good before, the offence was one for which they should convict. Banks v. Wooler, 81 L. T. 785; 64 J. P. 245; 19 Cox C.C. 432—D.

Adulteration—Knowledge of Purchaser.—W. was charged before Justices with selling for new milk an article not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, contrary to section 6 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1875. A sergeant of police, acting under H.'s orders, who was an inspector under the Act, purchased the milk from W., who, when he was asked for new milk, sold skimmed, and charged a penny a pint, the usual price for skimmed. The Justices differed—one being of the opinion that only a penny a pint being asked the purchaser must have been aware it was skimmed milk he was buying:—Held, that the knowledge of the purchaser was immaterial, and case remitted to the Bench to convict. Heywood v. Whitehead, 76 L. T. 781; 18 Cox C.C. 615—D.

Milk Labelled as "not guaranteed three per cent."—Notice to Purchaser.—A dairyman sold milk to a purchaser, who asked for sweet milk, from a can on which the following words were embossed: "Not guaranteed three per cent." These words were seen by the purchaser and "understood by him to mean that the milk in the can was not guaranteed to contain three per cent. of milk fat." The analysis shewed that the milk sold "was not of the nature, substance and quality of sweet milk, but was sweet milk with some admixture of skimmed milk":—Held (LORD MONCREIFF dissenting), that the dairyman had been guilty of an offence under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, in respect that the label on the milk-can gave no notice that the milk was not pure sweet milk, but merely that that milk was not guaranteed to be of a certain quality. Souter v. Lean, 6 F. (Just. Cas.) 20—Ct. of Justy.

Sale in Highway from Vehicle or Can—Name and Address of Seller.—The respondent's servant, who was going from house to house in a village supplying milk, went into a shop carrying in his hand a three-gallon milk-can from which he supplied the shopkeeper with a pint of milk, and on coming out of the shop went to a cart standing about twenty yards off, in which the can and other similar cans were carried. The respondent's name and address were on the cart, but not on the can. An information against the respondent under section 9 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, having been dismissed by the Justices on the ground that the name and address on the cart were a sufficient compliance with the section, on an appeal from their decision by Case stated, —Held, that the section required the person selling the milk to have his name and address upon the cart where the milk was sold from the cart, or upon the can where the milk was sold from the can; that the name and address upon the cart were not sufficient unless the milk was sold from the cart; and that the Case must go back to the Justices to find whether the milk was in fact sold from the cart or from the can, and to decide in accordance with the opinion of the Court. Crabtree v. Skelton, 70 L. J. K.B. 560—D.

Warranty—Addition of Preservative by Retailer.—A retailer of milk, who, after he has received milk from the wholesale dealer under a contract containing a warranty, adds boric acid to it, cannot, upon proceedings taken against him under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling milk deficient in fat and containing added water, set up his vendor's warranty as a defence under section 25. Having added boric acid, he cannot be heard to say that the milk when he sold it was in the same condition as when he purchased it. Hennen v. Long, 90 L. T. 387; 68 J. P. 237; 2 L. G. R. 437; 20 Cox C.C. 608—D.

The Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, does not require a specific warranty with each consignment of milk delivered under a contract; and a general warranty in writing that future deliveries of milk shall be "new unadulterated and with all its cream on" affords the retail dealer the protection of section 25 as a defence. The connection between the milk delivered under such warranty and that which may subsequently be the subject-matter of an alleged offence under the Act may be shewn by evidence. Harris v. May (63 L. J. M.C. 39; 12 Q.B. D. 97) disapproved. Laidlaw v. Willson (63 L. J. M.C. 35; [1894] 1 Q.B. 74) followed. Elliot v. Pilcher, 70 L. J. K.B. 795; [1901]

2 K.B. 817; 85 L. T. 50; 65 J. P. 743; 20 Cox C.C. 18—D.

Semble, section 25 of the Act of 1875 has no application to offences created by sections 3, 4, and the first part of section 9 of the Act. Id.

Warranty in Writing when a Defence.—To support a defence of warranty under section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, a retailer of milk must shew that the producer's contract with him—"the milk to be pure new milk"—covers each consignment of milk delivered under it. Robertson v. Harris, 69 L. J. Q.B. 526; [1900] 2 Q.B. 117; 82 L. T. 536; 48 W. R. 571; 64 J. P. 565—D.

Contract by Letters—Label—Notice.—The respondents by a contract in writing agreed to buy pure new milk with all its cream, each churn to bear a written warranty. To each churn was attached a label, "Warranted pure new milk with all its cream delivered under contract." The company also verbally agreed to buy milk, and that a written warranty should be given with each consignment in the form of a label. To a churn delivered under that agreement was attached a label, "Warranted pure new milk with all its cream." Prosecutions having been instituted against the company under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, notice was given on their behalf under section 20, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, and copies of the labels were inclosed. It was found by the magistrate that all the requirements of section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, had been complied with, and he discharged the company from the prosecutions for selling milk not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by the purchaser, such milk being delivered in pursuance of these contracts:—Held, that the magistrate was right. Semble, that a contract to give a written warranty need not be in writing. Irving v. Callow Park Dairy Co., 87 L. T. 70; 66 J. P. 804; 20 Cox C.C. 295—D. And see infra, WARRANTY.

Place of Delivery to Purchaser—Milk to be "delivered carriage paid to" a Certain Railway Station.—The respondent, who kept a dairy at East Ham, having been summoned under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling milk which was deficient in fat, set up the defence under section 25 that she had purchased the milk as the same as that demanded of her by the purchaser, and with a written warranty to that effect, and that she had sold it in the same state as when she purchased it. She had entered into a written contract for the purchase of "sixteen gallons of pure new milk with all its cream delivered daily, carriage paid, to Wanstead Park Station," and while this contract was in force a number of churns of milk arrived at Wanstead Park Station consigned to the respondent from a station in Derbyshire, and were labelled "Warranted pure new milk with all its cream, pursuant to contract." The churns remained on the platform at Wanstead Park Station for nearly an hour, when they were taken away by the respondent to her dairy. On the same morning part of the milk was sold which was found to be deficient in fat. It was proved that the milk when sold by the respondent was in the same state as when she received it at Wanstead Park Station, but there was no evidence as to whether it was in the same state as when it was delivered by the seller at the station from which it was sent, or when taken from the train on its arrival at Wanstead Park:—Held, that the place of delivery of the milk to the respondent was at Wanstead Park Station, and not at the station from which it was sent; that the purchase took place when she received the milk in her van at Wanstead Park Station; and that, as she had proved that she sold the milk in the same state as she had received it at that station, she was thereby discharged from the prosecution under section 25. Sanders v. Sadler, 95 L. T. 872; 71 J. P. 3; 5 L. G. R. 240; 21 Cox C.C. 316; 23 T. L. R. 11—D.

— Contract for the Purchase of the Whole of the Milk Required by Dairy—Evidence to Connect Warranty with Purchase.—Under a contract the appellant agreed to buy the whole of the milk required for his dairy during twelve months from certain vendors. The contract contained a warranty that the milk was pure, with all its cream, as received from the cow. The appellant was prosecuted under section 9 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling milk from which milk fat had been abstracted so as to affect injuriously its quality, nature, and substance, without making disclosure of the alteration. It was proved that the particular consignment of milk, the subject of the prosecution, was received by the appellant from his vendors, accompanied by a delivery note which made no reference either to the contract or warranty. It was further proved that the milk was delivered under, and within the period covered by, the contract:—Held, that there was a sufficient connection shewn on the face of the contract between the warranty contained therein and the particular consignment of milk, without relying on the delivery note, so as to make the warranty a good defence to the appellant. Watts v. Stevens (75 L. J. K.B. 823; [1906] 2 K.B. 323) distinguished. Evans v. Weatheritt, 76 L. J. K.B. 628; [1907] 2 K.B. 80; 96 L. T. 641; 71 J. P. 228; 5 L. G. R. 608; 23 T. L. R. 424—D.

Reasonable Belief in Truth of Warranty—Milk Consigned by Rail in State of Purity found Adulterated on Delivery.—On proceedings before a magistrate under section 20 (6) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, against a dairy farmer in the country, for giving a false warranty with certain milk consigned by him by rail to a purchaser in London, which was found to be adulterated when it arrived at the London terminus where the property in the milk passed, the defendant proved facts shewing that he had reason to believe that the milk was pure when it was handed over to the railway company at the country station:—Held, that the magistrate was right in holding, on this evidence, that the defendant had brought himself within the provisions of the sub-section protecting the person giving the warranty if he proves that when he gave it he had reason to believe that the statements or descriptions contained therein were true. Oatley v. Lemon, 92 L. T. 200; 69 J. P. 163; 3 L. G. R. 315; 20 Cox C.C. 791—D.

Contract for Future Deliveries—Continuing

Warranty—Evidence to Connect Warranty with Purchase.—Although it is not necessary that a defendant in a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, should, in order to satisfy the provision contained in section 25 of the Act, prove that he received a written warranty with each article purchased by him, there must be some written evidence to connect a warranty intended to be continuing with the article. Therefore, if, before delivery of milk, a written warranty is given to the defendant that all milk supplied to him is "perfectly pure and with all its cream as the cow gives it," and the warranty is intended to be continuing, but there is no written evidence connecting it with the milk subsequently delivered, the defendant will not by virtue of section 25 of the Act be entitled to protection in a prosecution under section 6 of the Act for selling to the prejudice of the purchaser milk which is not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded by him. So held by LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., and DARLING, J. (RIDLEY, J., dissenting). Watts v. Stevens, 75 L. J. K.B. 828; [1906] 2 K.B. 323; 95 L. T. 200; 70 J. P. 418; 4 L. G. R. 821; 21 Cox C.C. 230; 22 T. L. R. 622—D.

Harris v. May (53 L. J. M.C. 39; 12 Q.B. D. 97) and Robertson v. Harris (69 L. J. Q.B. 526; [1900] 2 Q.B. 117) approved. Elliot v. Pilcher (70 L. J. K.B. 795; [1901] 2 K.B. 817) disapproved. Ib. And see infra.

(9) Warranty.

Defence of Written Warranty—Sufficiency.—In order that a warranty may be relied upon as a defence under section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, such warranty must have been given to the person raising that defence from his immediate vendor, and must be given in writing. Quære, whether the benefit of a written warranty given by the farmer to the middleman can be transferred by a contract in writing between the middleman and his purchaser, so as to be a defence under section 25. Hargreaves v. Spackman, 98 L. T. 41; 72 J. P. 52; 6 L. G. R. 145—D.

Jurisdiction of Justices.—The jurisdiction of Justices is not extended by the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, s. 20, sub-s. 5, so as to include proceedings under section 20, sub-section 6, for giving a false warranty against a warrantor, who has given a warranty outside the area included in their jurisdiction, where the person who has received the warranty has also been prosecuted under section 20, sub-section 6, for giving a false warranty, and has been discharged under the provisions of that sub-section. Manners v. Tyler, 71 L. J. K.B. 585; [1902] 1 K.B. 901; 86 L. T. 716; 50 W. R. 604; 66 J. P. 806—D.

False Warranty in Writing—Mens Rea—Nature, Substance, and Quality of Article Demanded.—Under clause 3 of section 27 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, in order to constitute the offence of giving a false warranty in writing to a purchaser in respect of an article of food or drug, a mens rea on the part of the seller at the time when the warranty was given must be proved. Derbyshire v. Houlston, 66 L. J. Q.B. 569; [1897] 1 Q.B.

772; 76 L. T. 624; 45 W. R. 527; 61 J. P. 374; 18 Cox C.C. 609—D.

"Without accepting any responsibility after delivery"—Validity of Warranty.—The addition of the words "but without accepting any responsibility after delivery" do not affect a warranty so as to make it unavailable as a defence under section 25 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Wilson v. Playle, 88 L. T. 554; 67 J. P. 263; 1 L. G. R. 870; 20 Cox C.C. 433—D.

False Warranty to Purchaser in Writing—Time within which Proceedings must be Commenced.—Proceedings under section 20, subsection 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, against a person for having, in respect of an article of food or drug sold by him as principal or agent, given to the purchaser a false warranty in writing, must be commenced within six months from the date when such warranty was given. Whitaker v. Pomfret, 71 L. J. K.B. 353; [1902] 1 K.B. 661; 86 L. T. 420; 50 W. R. 393; 66 J. P. 408; 20 Cox C.C. 180—D. And see supra, MILK, col. 1345.

(10) Inspectors.

Inspector of Nuisances—Public Analyst—Power to Act outside District—Milk in Course of Delivery.—Neither an inspector of nuisances nor a public analyst can act under section 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act Amendment Act, 1879, where the place of delivery of the milk in course of delivery under the contract of sale is not within the district for which he is appointed. McNair v. Cave, 72 L. J. K.B. 26; [1903] 1 K.B. 24; 87 L. T. 680; 51 W. R. 112; 67 J. P. 50; 1 L. G. R. 28; 20 Cox C.C. 364—D.

Right of Local Inspector to Prosecute for Penalties in his own Name.—Where, under section 2 of the Food and Drugs Act, 1899, the Local Government Board or Board of Agriculture, through their officer, procure samples of an article of food for analysis, and communicate the certified result of the analysis, when made, to the secretary of the local authority, such secretary may, without any special resolution, transmit such certificate to the inspector appointed under the Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and he, without antecedent authorisation, may proceed in his own name to prosecute for any penalties to which the vendor may be liable. Connor v. Butler, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 569—K.B. D.

(11) Taking Samples and Analyses.

Refusal to Supply Sample of Milk to Inspector—Obstructing Inspector in the Course of his Duties.—Under section 17 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, an inspector is entitled to demand to be supplied in the same manner as the public are being supplied, and consequently if a dairyman, supplying milk to the public by retail from cans, refuses to supply an inspector on demand with milk except from the top of one of the cans instead of from its cran from which the public are being supplied, he is guilty of a contravention of the enactment. A dairyman so refusing to supply an inspector has not wilfully obstructed and impeded the inspector in the course of his duty within section 16 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899. Scutar v. Kerr, [1907] S.C. (J.) 49—Ct. of Justy.

Sample of Milk Procured by Agent of Inspector—Proceedings in Name of Inspector.—Under section 8 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879, an inspector may obtain by an agent a sample for analysis of milk in course of delivery; and in such a case a prosecution in respect of the milk from which the sample was taken may competently be instituted in the name of the inspector. Tyler v. Dairy Supply Co., 72 J. P. 132—D.

Request of Defendant for Government Analysis of Third Sample—Sample Incapable of Analysis.—The "article of food or drug" which, in accordance with the provisions of section 21 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, has, on the request of either party to a prosecution, to be sent to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for analysis, need not necessarily be the third part or sample retained by the purchaser in accordance with section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. It is therefore not a condition precedent to the conviction of a person for a contravention of section 6 of the Act of 1875 that there should be produced at the hearing an analysis by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of such third part or sample, although the defendant may have requested such analysis under section 21 of the Act of 1899. Hutchinson v. Stevenson (4 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (5th Ser.) Just. Cas. 69) not followed. Suckling v. Parker, 75 L. J. K.B. 302; [1906] 1 K.B. 527; 94 L. T. 552; 54 W. R. 438; 70 J. P. 209; 21 Cox C.C. 145; 4 L. G. R. 531; 22 T. L. R. 357—D.

Purchase of Sample for Purpose of Analysis—Division of Article Purchased.—An inspector purchased four penny packets of cream of tartar, all of which bore similar labels, and, having mixed the contents together, divided them into three parts. One of these he delivered to the seller, another he retained, and the third he sent to the county analyst for analysis:—Held, that there had been a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, and that it was not necessary that any single packet should have been divided into three parts. Mason v. Cowdary (69 L. J. Q.B. 667; [1900] 2 Q.B. 419) distinguished. Smith v. Savage, 74 L. J. K.B. 576; [1905] 2 K.B. 88; 92 L. T. 775; 53 W. R. 477; 3 L. G. R. 582; 69 J. P. 245; 20 Cox C.C. 847; 21 T. L. R. 424—D.

Sample Taken of Milk "in course of delivery."—The servant of S., a wholesale milk-dealer, in pursuance of a contract between S. and B., a retail milk-seller, took milk from S.'s cart in cans belonging to S. into B.'s shop, and there poured it into empty cans belonging to B. An inspector and his assistant were present while this was being done, and immediately after the milk had been poured into B.'s cans the inspector took a sample of the milk from these cans:—Held, that the milk was still "in course of delivery" when the sample was taken. Semple v. Dunbar, 6 F. (Just. Cas.) 65—Ct. of Justy.

Milk in Course of Delivery—Fair Sample.]—

A dairy farmer, who was under contract to supply a dairyman with forty gallons of milk daily in part fulfilment of his contract for a particular day supplied twenty-two gallons of sweet milk contained in three cans, two of which contained eight gallons each and the third six gallons. The dairyman provided two vessels for the reception of the milk. Into one of these vessels the whole contents of the two eight-gallon cans and four gallons from the six-gallon can—twenty gallons in all—were poured. Into the second vessel the remaining two gallons from the six-gallon can were poured. On the vessels being thus filled from the cans, an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts took a sample from each vessel for analysis. When analysed, the sample from the twenty-gallon vessel was found to contain 3.05 per cent. of milk fat, and the sample from the two-gallon vessel 2.8 per cent. of milk fat. By the Board of Trade Regulations, when sweet milk does not contain 3 per cent. of milk fat the presumption is that the milk is not genuine until the contrary is proved. The dairy farmer having been convicted of a contravention of section 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879, in respect of the sample taken from the two-gallon vessel, appealed:—Held, quashing the conviction, that the sample from the two-gallon vessel was not a fair sample of the original contents of the six-gallon can. Crawford v. Harding, [1907] S. C. (J.) 11—Ct. of Justy.

Demand by Inspector for Milk from Particular Can—Warning by Seller that Milk in such Can might not be Sweet Milk—Bona Fides.]—The defendant, a dairyman, started on his round with a quantity of milk, the produce of his own dairy. Finding that his supply was running short, he called at a dairy and asked for two gallons of sweet milk. He was supplied with that quantity, which he put into an empty can. He did not ask for or obtain a warranty with this milk, being content to rely upon his knowledge of the dairyman, from whom he had frequently obtained milk in similar circumstances. He thereafter met the prosecutor, of whose official position he was aware. The prosecutor, having demanded two-pence worth of sweet milk, the defendant was proceeding to supply him with milk from a can containing the produce of his own dairy, as to the genuineness of which he had personal knowledge, but the prosecutor insisted on getting milk from the can containing the purchased milk. The defendant then sold the amount asked for from this can, but informed the prosecutor that the milk was not the produce of his own cows, and warned him that it might or might not prove to be sweet milk. The milk sold to the prosecutor contained 13 per cent. of added water:—Held, on these facts, that the defendant had not committed an offence under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts. Frew v. Gunning, 3 F. (Just. Cas.) 51—Ct. of Justy.

Sale "to the prejudice of purchaser"—Demand by Inspector of Sample from Churn—Absence of Request to be Supplied with "Milk."]—It was proved on an information under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, that the respondent, a milk seller, had supplied the appellant, an inspector under the Act, with a sample of milk from a milk churn, and that the sample was deficient in natural fat. It was found as a fact that there had been no request in terms on the part of the inspector to be supplied with "milk," and that the inspector had been supplied with what he demanded—namely, a sample from the milk churn:—Held, that on these facts it was not proved that there had been any sale to the prejudice of the purchaser, and that the information had been rightly dismissed. Sandys v. Jackson, 92 L. T. 646; 3 L. G. R. 285; 69 J. P. 171—D.

Article Purchased in Small Bottles—Division into Three Parts for Analysis.]—The purchase by an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, of six small bottles of camphorated oil in one lot for analysis, and their division by him into three lots of two bottles each, one of which he sends to the public analyst, is not a compliance with section 14 of the Act, because each bottle, however small, is itself an article within the meaning of the section, and ought to be divided into three parts. Mason v. Cowdary, 69 L. J. Q.B. 667; [1900] 2 Q.B. 419; 82 L. T. 802; 49 W. R. 28; 64 J. P. 662; 19 Cox C.C. 536—D.

Division of Article Purchased into Three Parts—Sufficiency of Each Part for Analysis.]—Where an article is purchased for analysis under section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, each of the three parts into which, in accordance with the requirements of the section, it is to be divided, must be sufficient in quantity to afford reasonable facilities for the purpose of analysis. Lowery v. Hallard, 75 L. J. K.B. 249; [1906] 1 K.B. 398; 93 L. T. 844; 54 W. R. 520; 4 L. G. R. 189; 70 J. P. 57; 21 Cox C.C. 75; 22 T. L. R. 186—D.

Fastening up Parts of Article—Butter containing Excess of Moisture Wrapped up in Greaseproof Paper.]—A person purchasing butter for the purpose of analysis caused each of the three parts into which the butter was divided to be wrapped up in a greaseproof envelope. The analysts certified that the butter contained an excess of water, adding that no change had taken place in the butter which would interfere with the analysis, and that in consequence of the butter having been so fastened up it was probable that there had been considerable loss of water since the date of the purchase. On a Case stated by Justices who had convicted the seller under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875,—Held, that the wrapping up of the butter in the manner above mentioned was a sufficient compliance with section 14 of the Act. Pearks v. Ward, 71 L.J. K.B. 656; [1902] 2 K.B. 1—D.

Accidental Loss of Sample.]—It is a condition precedent to a conviction under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, that the prosecutor shall produce, on the motion of the accused, the sample of the article in question directed to be retained and sent, on the motion of either party, to Somerset House for analysis, and the accidental loss of the sample will not relieve the prosecutor from compliance with this condition. Hutchison v. Stevenson, 4 F (Just. Cas.) 69—Ct. of Justy.

Analyst's Certificate—Sufficiency of Particulars.]—A certificate of a public analyst which merely states that a sample of beer submitted to him for analysis "contains a serious quantity of arsenic" is insufficient. The certificate should contain particulars sufficient to enable the magistrates to come to a conclusion. Goulder v. Rook, 70 L. J. K.B. 747; [1901] 2 K.B. 290—D.

— Sufficiency—Standard of Genuine Milk.]

It is desirable that an analyst's certificate, under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, stating that a sample of milk is adulterated by reason of a deficiency in milk fat, should state in terms the standard with reference to the amount of milk fat in genuine milk on which the analyst bases his conclusions. But failure so to state the standard does not vitiate the certificate if a simple calculation from the figures given in the certificate makes it apparent that the analyst has proceeded upon the standard laid down by the Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901. Bayley v. Cook, 92 L. T. 170; 53 W. R. 410; 69 J. P. 139; 3 L. G. R. 304; 20 Cox C.C. 779; 21 T. L. R. 235—D.

— Article Liable to Decomposition—Statement as to Change in Constitution of Article which would interfere with Analysis.]

Semble, that if the analyst's certificate does not, in the case of a drug liable to decomposition, contain a report as to whether any change has taken place in the constitution of the article which would interfere with the analysis, as is required by the note in the schedule to the Act of 1875, the defect would be a bar to a conviction based on the evidence afforded by the certificate alone; and query whether the defect can be cured by evidence given by the analyst. Hudson v. Bridge, 88 L. T. 550; 67 J. P. 186; 1 L. G. R. 409; 20 Cox C.C. 425—D.

Per CHANNELL, J.—The words "interfere with the analysis" in the note in question mean prevent the analysis from being effective for the purpose of shewing what the constitution of the article was at the time of sale. And where an article varies in its composition so that at one time it will contain more of a particular ingredient than at another, then the analyst ought in his certificate to state whether any change has taken place at the time of his analysis which would prevent his analysis from shewing what the constitution of the article was at the time it was sold. Id.

— Omission of Weight of Sample Sent for Analysis.]

The provisions of section 18 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, as to the form of certificate, coupled with the words in the form itself, given in the schedule, may in some cases be treated as merely directory; and therefore the omission by a public analyst to state in his certificate the weight of a sample of butter submitted to him for analysis does not render such certificate invalid in a case where the Justices have found that the omission is immaterial. Sneath v. Taylor, 70 L. J. K.B. 872; [1901] 2 K.B. 376; 49 W. R. 719; 65 J.P. 548—D.

— Justices' Own Knowledge of Article Alleged to be Adulterated.]

Justices are not bound, upon the hearing of a complaint under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, to discard their own knowledge of the properties of the article alleged to be adulterated, although such knowledge be derived from a report upon the particular article by authorities at Somerset House, which report has been produced by the defendant for the mere cross-examination of the analyst, and is not in evidence in the proceedings. Reg. v. Field (64 L. J. M.C. 158) followed. Shortt v. Robinson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 352; 80 L. T. 261; 63 J. P. 295; 19 Cox C.C. 243—D.

(12) Proceedings.

Prosecution Instituted by Officer of Local Authority not Empowered to Appoint Analyst.]

—The jurisdiction of Justices to hear and determine an information under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, where the prosecution is instituted by an officer of a local authority, acting by the directions of the local authority, is not affected by the question whether it was or was not intra vires of the local authority to give their officer such directions. It is enough to give the Justices jurisdiction that the officer was in fact the person who procured the sample and obtained the analysis. Worthington v. Kyme, 93 L. T. 546; 54 W. R. 185; 3 L. G. R. 1098; 69 J. P. 390; 21 Cox C.C. 37—D.

Jurisdiction of Justices Outside Area.]

The jurisdiction of Justices is not extended by the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, s. 20, sub-s. 5, so as to include proceedings under section 20, sub-section 6, for giving a false warranty against a warrantor, who has given a warranty outside the area included in their jurisdiction, where the person who has received the warranty has also been prosecuted under section 20, sub-section 6, for giving a false warranty, and has been discharged under the provisions of that sub-section. Manners v. Tyler, 71 L. J. K.B. 585; [1902] 1 K.B. 901; 86 L. T. 716; 50 W. R. 604; 66 J. P. 806; 20 Cox C.C. 222—J.

Laying of Information—Issue and Service of Summons.]

A prosecution is instituted within the period required by section 19, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, if the information is laid and the summons issued within twenty-eight days from the purchase of the article in respect of the sale of which the prosecution is instituted; and service of the summons is not necessary within the twenty-eight days in order to comply with the requirement of the section. Beardsley v. Giddings, 73 L. J. K.B. 378; [1904] 1 K.B. 847; 90 L. T. 651; 53 W. R. 78; 68 J. P. 222; 2 L. G. R. 719; 20 Cox C.C. 645; 20 T. L. R. 315—D.

— By section 19, sub-section 1 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act "shall not be instituted after the expiration of twenty-eight days from the time of the purchase" of the article:—Held, that the prosecution was "instituted" if the information was laid within the twenty-eight days, and that it was not necessary that the summons should be issued within that period. Brooks v. Bagshaw, 73 L. J. K.B. 839; [1904] 2 K.B. 798; 91 L. T. 535; 53 W. R. 19; 68 J. P. 514; 2 L. G. R. 1007; 20 Cox C.C. 727; 20 T. L. R. 655—D.

Return of Summons—Computation of Time.]

Section 19, sub-section 2 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, provides that in any prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts "the summons . . . shall not be made returnable in less time than fourteen days from the day on which it is served":—Held, that the period prescribed by the sub-section is a period of fourteen clear days, exclusive not only of the day on which the summons is served, but also of that on which it is returnable. McQueen v. Jackson, 72 L. J. K.B. 606; [1903] 2 K.B. 163; 88 L. T. 871; 1 L. G. R. 601; 67 J. P. 353; 20 Cox C.C. 499—D.

Notice of Defence.—An information having been laid by the respondent against the appellant under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, the appellant's solicitors sent on November 2 to the respondent the following notice:—"We beg to give you formal notice that our client purchased the same butter with a written warranty from G. L. Limited, of 84 C.-St., M. The following is a copy of the warranty in question: 'We guarantee all butters sold by us to be absolutely pure; guaranteed pure butter within the 3rd and 7th sects. of the Margarine Act, 1877' . . . The defendant intends to rely on the foregoing as a defence to this summons." On August 4 the appellant had purchased the butter of the wholesale house, and on the invoice was stated: "We guarantee all butters sold by us to be absolutely pure." The appellant was dissatisfied with this, and, when going to the wholesale house the following week, and after the butter was delivered, took the invoice to the wholesale house, who put on it: "Guaranteed pure butter in accordance with the 3rd and 7th sections of the Margarine Act, 1887. In case of samples being taken for analysis, shew this warranty to the inspector":—Held, that the notice of November 2 was a good notice of a defence under section 20 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899. Farthing v. Parkinson, 90 L. T. 738; 68 J. P. 353; 2 L. G. R. 989; 20 Cox C.C. 661—D.

(o) Housing of the Working Classes.

Housing of Working Classes.—3 Edw. 7 c. 39 is the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1903.

Closing Order—Housing Acts—"Dwelling-house" already Closed for Habitation under By-law—Rescission of By-law.—A closing order may be made under the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, in respect of a house unfit for human habitation, notwithstanding that, at the date of such closing order, an order prohibiting its use for human habitation, made pursuant to a by-law, is in force, and that the building is, in fact, uninhabited. Quere, whether an order prohibiting the use of a house for habitation, made by a local authority pursuant to a by-law in that behalf, remains in operation after the rescission of the by-law. *Slight v. (p) Infectious Diseases.

Notification.—62 & 63 Vict. c. 8 is the Infectious Disease (Notification) Extension Act, 1899.

Conveyance by Vessels.—4 Edw. 7 c. 16 enables regulations to be made to prevent danger arising from conveyance of infection in vessels.

Jurisdiction—"Proper lodging or accommodation"—Order for Patient's Removal.—The circumstance that a person suffering from scarlet fever is lodged in the parlour of a four-roomed house, the other three rooms of which are occupied by the rest of the family, is in itself sufficient evidence that he is "without proper lodging or accommodation" within the meaning of section 124 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to warrant Justices ordering his removal to a hospital, for that section, though primarily for the protection of the patient, is equally directed to the protection of other persons from infection. Warwick v. Graham, 68 L. J. Q.B. 1001; [1899] 2 Q.B. 191; 80 L. T. 773; 63 J. P. 599; 19 Cox C.C. 363—D.

Premature Discharge of Patient from Hospital Provided by Corporation—Infection of other Persons—Liability of Corporation—Negligence of Officer.—Where a corporation provides a hospital under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, for the reception of patients suffering from infectious disease, there is no absolute obligation upon the corporation not to discharge a patient who may cause contagion. There is an implied undertaking by the corporation that their hospital shall be managed with all reasonable skill and care, but the corporation do not act as medical men. They do not undertake to give medical advice, but they do undertake that the patients received in the hospital shall have competent medical advice and assistance. Therefore, if, by the negligence of a competent and duly qualified medical man appointed by the corporation as visiting physician to the hospital, a patient is prematurely discharged and contagion is thereby caused to other persons, the corporation are not liable for such negligence of the medical man. Evans v. Liverpool Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 742; [1906] 1 K.B. 160; 69 J. P. 263; 3 L. G. R. 868; 21 T. L. R. 558—Walton, J.

Destruction of Articles Exposed to Infection by Order of Medical Officer of Health—Scope of Authority—Liability of Local Authority.—The defendant council's medical officer of health ordered the destruction of certain clothes of the plaintiff (which had been exposed to infection) by the hands of the defendants' inspector of nuisances. The plaintiff was a private patient of the medical officer of health. The inspector of nuisances gave in to the defendants a list of the things he had destroyed in obedience to the instructions he had received from the medical officer. It was not proved that the medical officer reported the destruction of the things to the defendants. A claim was made by the plaintiff against the defendants for the value of the things destroyed:—Held, that the medical officer was not acting within the general scope of his authority in ordering the destruction of the things, and there being no ratification by the defendants of what had been done by their inspector of nuisances, they were not liable. Garlick v. Knottingley Urban Council, 68 J. P. 494; 2 L. G. R. 1345—D.

Maintenance of Children in Infectious Hospital—Children sent from Children's Hospital—Liability.—Charitable guardians of children, such as the authorities of the Victoria Hospital for Children, are not "patients" within the meaning of section 182 of the Public Health Act, 1875, so as to be liable as such for the maintenance in an infectious hospital of children sent there by them. Farquhar v. Isle of Thanet Hospital Board, 68 J. P. 319; 2 L. G. R. 1310—D.

Obstruction of Execution of Order for Removal—Finality of Order.—At the hearing of a summons under section 124 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for obstructing the execution of an order made under the section for removal to a hospital of a person suffering from an infectious disorder, the Justices have no jurisdiction to go behind the order by enquiring into the truth of the facts upon which it was made. If a person, knowing that such order has in fact been made, delays the execution of it, he commits an offence under the section. Reg. v. Davey; Bishop, Ex parte, 68 L. J. Q.B. 675; [1899] 2 Q.B. 301; 80 L. T. 798; 63 J. P. 515; 19 Cox C.C. 365—D.

Semble, that the validity of such an order may be questioned by means of a writ of habeas corpus or certiorari. Ib.

(q) Insanitary Areas.

Improvement Scheme—Provisional Order—Confirmatory Act—Valuation for Compensation.—Where property in an unhealthy district is compulsorily acquired by a local authority under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, persons interested therein retain all their legal rights in respect of the same until the Provisional Order made in respect thereof under section 8 of the Act has been confirmed by Act of Parliament under section 8, sub-section 6. Where property is taken under this Act the estimate of the value payable by way of compensation under section 21 is not limited to the value of the property as given in the estimate made under the improvement scheme provided for by sections 4 and 6. Dye v. Patman, 46 W. R. 200; 62 J. P. 135—Byrne, J.

(r) Land.

Land Acquired for One Purpose—Proposed Use for Another—Powers of Local Government Board.—Land compulsorily acquired by a local authority under section 176 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for a particular purpose, cannot be permanently used for another purpose inconsistent with that for which it was acquired. Att.-Gen. v. Hanwell Urban Council, 69 L. J. Ch. 626; [1900] 2 Ch. 377; 82 L. T. 778; 48 W. R. 690—C.A.

The Local Government Board have no power under section 175 of the Public Health Act, 1875—which gives them power to direct that land not required for the purpose for which it was acquired shall not be sold—to order land to be used for a purpose inconsistent with that for which it was acquired. Ib.

Land Acquired by Local Authority for Definite Purpose—Interim User.—Land acquired by a local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, for a definite purpose may, in the interval before it is required for such purpose, be used in any lawful manner which does not substantially interfere with its immediate use when so needed for the purpose for which it was acquired; it is not necessary that during such interval the land should be kept in the same state in which it was when acquired. Att.-Gen. v. Teddington Urban Council, 67 L. J. Ch. 23; [1898] 1 Ch. 66; 77 L. T. 426; 46 W. R. 88; 61 J. P. 825—Romer, J.

Lands Compulsorily Taken—Award—Leave to Appeal—"Failure of justice."—Under Schedule II. (26) of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, leave to appeal against the arbitrator's award fixing the amount of compensation for lands compulsorily taken under the Act can be granted by the Court only "upon being satisfied that a failure of justice will take place if such leave is not granted." In an application for leave to appeal by the owner of lands in terms of the schedule, held that it was not a sufficient ground for granting leave—first, that the arbitrator had limited the skilled evidence of the value of the lands to two witnesses on each side; or secondly, that he had, in addition to hearing such evidence, personally inspected the lands in the presence of the parties, and in his award had proceeded in part on his own judgment as a man of skill. Observations on the meaning of the words "failure of justice." Mucknight's Trustee v. Edinburgh Corporation, 3 F. 90—Ct. of Sess.

Superfluous Lands—Sale by Local Authority—Restrictive Conditions.—A local authority, offering superfluous land for sale by auction, in lots, subject to special conditions (subsequently incorporated into the conveyances of the lots sold) restricting the right of each purchaser as to building on his lot, and having sold one lot, is under an obligation to the purchaser of such lot to observe the restrictive conditions, as to the lots remaining unsold in its hands, to the same extent as purchasers of the lots if sold would be. Davis v. Leicester Corporation (68 L. J. Ch. 440; [1894] 2 Ch. 208) followed. Holford v. Acton Urban Council, 67 L. J. Ch. 636; [1898] 2 Ch. 240; 78 L. T. 829—Stirling, J.

The Court, in determining the respective liabilities and rights of the vendor and the purchaser of the lot sold, will be guided by the principle that the law will imply, in the contract between them, any term obviously intended which is necessary to make the contract effectual, where otherwise, as expressed in writing, it would be futile and would not carry out the intention of the parties. Dictum of BOWEN, L.J., in Oriental Steamship Co. v. Taylor (63 L. J. Q.B. 128, 132; [1893] 2 Q.B. 518, 527), followed. Ib. And see LANDS CLAUSES ACTS, col. 1253.

Purchase of Undertaking—Consideration—“Annuity of 5 per cent. per annum” upon Sum Properly Expended—Irredeemable Stock—Implied Power to Issue—Powers of Corporation—Statute—Provisional Order.]—An Electric Lighting Provisional Order gave a corporation power to purchase compulsorily the undertaking of a company upon the terms of issuing to the company such an amount of corporation stock as would produce, by the dividends thereon, “an annuity of 5 per cent.” upon the capital properly expended by the undertakers. By a Local Government Board Provisional Order, the power (which the corporation then had) to issue irredeemable stock was repealed. Each of the Acts of Parliament which confirmed these orders received the Royal assent on the same day:—Held, that the stock to be issued to the company was irredeemable stock; that the corporation had not, by implication, power to issue such stock; and that so long as they were unable to issue such stock their power of compulsory purchase could not be enforced. Sheffield Corporation v. Sheffield Electric Light and Power Co., 67 L. J. Ch. 113; [1898] 1 Ch. 203; 77 L. T. 616; 46 W. R. 435; 62 J. P. 87—North, J.

(t) Lodging-house.

“House occupied by members of more than one family.”—An ordinary six-roomed house, not specially constructed to be let in separate tenements, having one common internal staircase and one front door, each floor of which is let to and occupied by a separate family, the landlord living elsewhere, and only attending once a week to collect rents, is a house occupied by more than one family within section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, which authorises the making of by-laws as to certain matters in the case of “a house or part of a house which is let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family.” Kyffin v. Simmons, 67 J. P. 227; 1 L. G. R. 381—D.

(u) Music and Dancing Licences.

Condition—Charge to be made for Admission.]—Justices, in granting a licence for music and dancing at a hall which was in connection with a licensed house, imposed the condition that the sum of at least threepence should be charged to each person for admission, and that this sum should not be returned in the form of refreshment:—Held, that the Justices had power, under section 51 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, to impose this condition. Richards, ex parte, 68 J. (w) Noises.

Music in Streets—No Annoyance.]—The K. County Council, under the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 16, made a by-law as follows:—“No person shall sound or play upon any musical or noisy instrument, or sing in any public place or highway, within fifty yards of any dwelling-house, after being required by any constable or by an inmate of such house personally or by his or her servant to desist”:—Held, that the by-law was not invalid outra vires. Brownscombe v. Johnson, 78 L. T. 265; 62 J. P. 326; 19 Cox C.C. 25—D.

Singing near Dwelling-house—Prohibition of—Request by Constable to Desist.]—A by-law prohibiting persons from playing or singing in any public place or highway within fifty yards of any dwelling-house after being required by any constable or by an inmate of the house to desist, is reasonable and valid (MATHEW, J., dissenting). Kruse v. Johnson, 67 L. J. Q.B. 782; [1898] 2 Q.B. 91; 78 L. T. 647; 46 W. R. 630; 62 J. P. 469; 19 Cox C.C. 103—D.

(x) Nuisances.

Alkali Works.]—6 Edw. 7 c. 14 is the Alkali Works Regulation Act, 1906.

Pollution of Rivers.]—61 & 62 Vict. c. 34 is the Rivers Pollution (Border Councils) Act, 1898.

Inspection of Premises by Local Authority—Entry without Asking Permission—Execution of Statutory Powers.]—Where a local authority and their officers, of their own motion and without asking any person's permission, enter premises for the purpose of examining as to the existence of any nuisance thereon, they are not employed in the execution of the Public Health Act, 1875, inasmuch as section 102 of the Act does not authorise entry by the local authority without permission first being requested. Therefore the owner of the premises cannot be convicted under such circumstances upon an information preferred against him under section 306 of the Act for wilfully obstructing the local authority in the execution of the Act. Consett Urban Council v. Crawford, 72 L. J. K.B. 571; [1903] 2 K.B. 183; 88 L. T. 836; 51 W. R. 669; 67 J. P. 309; 1 L. G. R. 558; 20 Cox C.C. 481—D.

Pollution of River—Injunction—Discharge of Sewage—Prescriptive Right of Inhabitants to Discharge into Sewers of Local Authority—Measure of Damages—Continuance of Injury.]—Where householders have acquired a prescriptive right to drain into the sewers of a local authority through which sewage is discharged into a river, and an order has already been made against the local authority under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, and the local authority are taking steps to abate the nuisance caused by the pollution, the Court will refuse to interfere by injunction against the local authority. Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, 74 L. J. Ch. 219; [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 92 L. T. 153; 69 J. P. 62; 3 L. G. R. 321; 21 T. L. R. 98—Buckley, J.

Where a local authority have neglected their duty under the Public Health Acts, the remedy of a person aggrieved is not by action but by complaint to the Local Government Board under section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Ib.

Owing to the pollution of a river by a local authority the plaintiff's lake, which was fed from it, became silted up, and the water supply from the lake to the plaintiff's house destroyed:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for the expense to which he had been put in obtaining another water supply to his house, but not in respect of the silting up of the lake, as his remedy was to exclude the water when he found it was polluted, and claim damages for the loss sustained by not enjoying the supply. Ib.

Discharge of Sewage upon Private Property—Private Nuisance—Prescriptive Rights—Liability of Sanitary Authority for Present and Future Connections of Sewage Drains.]—Where sewage is discharged by a sanitary authority upon private property so as to become a nuisance, no injunction will be granted against the authority which will interfere with the rights of householders under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to connect their houses with the sewers of such authority, if such rights have been gained by prescription, or the connections made with the consent or acquiescence of the sanitary authority; nor will an injunction be granted which will prohibit such authority from permitting or allowing fresh connections to be made, but an injunction will be granted restraining the authority from directing or authorising any sewage or foul matter to flow or to be discharged from sewers or drains vested in them as such sanitary authority on to private property. Charles v. Finchley Local Board (52 L. J. Ch. 554; 23 Ch. D. 767) dissented from; and Att.-Gen. v. Acton Local Board (52 L. J. Ch. 108; 22 Ch. D. 221) and Ainley v. Kirkheaton Local Board (60 L. J. Ch. 734) followed. Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, 68 L. J. Ch. 498; [1899] 2 Ch. 378; 80 L. T. 650; 47 W. R. 538; 63 J. P. 519—Cozens-Hardy, J.

The proper remedy in such a case is to apply to the Local Government Board, under section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for an order which would be enforceable by writ of mandamus. Ib.

A claim of right to discharge surface water, sewage, and drainage along a natural channel upon private property set up by the defendants held to have failed, as it would be highly dangerous to allow the trivial and occasional passage along a natural channel of water more or less contaminated to ripen into a legal claim to pour sewage of all kinds and of indefinite amount along such natural channel. Ib.

Depositing Offensive Matter—Manure—Railway Truck.]—By-law No. 2 of the respondents was as follows: "No person shall deposit, throw, or allow to run, lodge, or accumulate upon the surface of any street, square, court, highway, or place, or on any waste or unoccupied ground, or on any uncovered drain, ditch, watercourse, sink, pond, or other collection of water, or expose or cause to be exposed in any other manner whatever within the district, any animal or vegetable matter, fish, offal, ordure, blood, bones, manure, shells, broken glass, china, or earthenware, dust, ashes, house refuse, waste, or runnings from any manufactory, or other offensive or noxious matter whatever." The appellants received in their goods yard at H. H. a truck of manure which had been carried by them in the ordinary course of their business. It arrived on the Sunday, and notice was at once given to the consignee, who proceeded to remove it on the Monday, and on being emptied it gave forth a very offensive smell. The magistrates convicted the appellants of a breach of the by-law:—Held, that the magistrates were wrong. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway v. Hayward's Heath Urban Council, 80 L. T. 266; 19 Cox C.C. 255—D.

Overcrowding—Order to Inspect—Evidence as to Reasonable Grounds—Form of Order.]—Where by virtue of section 102 of the Public Health Act, 1875, an application is made to a Justice for an order to enter premises where a nuisance is alleged to exist, such Justice, although he has not to decide whether a nuisance in fact exists, may consider whether there are reasonable grounds for suspecting there is a nuisance, and for that purpose may receive evidence as to the true state of the facts. If a Justice makes an order for the officer to enter to inspect, such order ought to be made in reference to a particular subject-matter. Wimbledon Urban Council v. Hastings, 87 L. T. 118—D.

"House"—School without Boarders.]—"House" in section 91, sub-section 5 of the Public Health Act, 1875, includes a day school where there are no boarders and where none of the members of the staff reside. Ib.

Accumulation of House Refuse—Injunction.]—An accumulation of London house refuse, kept on the premises of a firm who obtain a supply of such refuse for the purposes of their business, which causes serious annoyance to persons in the neighbourhood by giving off an offensive odour, and from time to time occasioning a plague of flies, is a public nuisance, the continuance of which will be restrained by injunction at the suit of the Attorney-General on the relation of the local authority, even though there is no evidence that the accumulation is a source of actual injury or danger to health. Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick and Tile Co., 1 L. Ch. R. 654; 67 J. P. 434—Joyce, J.

Domestic Sanitary Arrangements—Local Authority's Notice of Insufficiency—Application to Enter Premises—Justices' Jurisdiction to Entertain Evidence of Sufficiency of Existing Arrangements.]—Upon an application by a local authority to a Court of summary jurisdiction, under section 305 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for an order entitling them to enter a house and substitute a new water-closet in lieu of the existing sanitary arrangements—their notice under section 36 not having been complied with, and permission to enter having been refused by the owner—Justices are not entitled, at the hearing, to review such notice, nor to receive evidence on the part of the owner as to the sufficiency of the existing sanitary arrangements. Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 2), 68 L. J. Q.B. 330; [1899] 1 Q.B. 751; 80 L. T. 262; 68 J. P. 341; 19 Cox C.C. 245—D.

The only appeal from an order of a local authority under section 36 is to the Local Government Board under section 268. Ib.

Defective Water-closet—No Report from Inspector of Nuisances—Claim by Local Authority to Enter Premises—Injunction.]—The plaintiff, the owner of certain premises, claimed an injunction against a local authority. In his statement of claim he alleged that the local authority, without any report from their inspector of nuisances under section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, had made an order under that section requiring him to remedy an alleged defective water-closet on his premises, and that they threatened, failing his compliance with such order, to commit a trespass by entering on his premises:—Held, that this disclosed a reasonable cause of action. Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 1), 63 J. P. 19—C.A.

Privies—Cleansing Undertaken by Local Authority—Failure to Eradicate Fever Germs—Substitution of Water-closets—Duty of Local Authority.]—Where a local authority has taken upon itself, under section 42 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the cleansing of privies belonging to cottage property, but has, after notification of an outbreak of typhoid fever, failed to eradicate fever germs which have penetrated crevices in the brickwork and cause a nuisance, such authority cannot under section 94 call upon an owner of the property to abate the nuisance by abolishing privies and substituting water-closets. Barnett v. Laskey, 63 L. J. Q.B. 55; 79 L. T. 408; 63 J. P. 5—D.

The word "cleansing" in section 42 has a wide meaning, and includes removal of matter which causes the nuisance. Ib.

—Insufficient Privy—Jurisdiction of Local Authority to Require Water-closet.]—Under section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the local authority has power to order the conversion of an insufficient privy into a water-closet. St Luke's, Middlesex, Vestry v. Lewis (81 L. J. M.C. 73; 1 B. & S. 865) applied. Nicholl v. Epping Urban Council, 68 L. J. Ch. 393; [1899] 1 Ch. 844; 80 L. T. 515; 47 W. R. 457; 68 J. P. 600—Stirling, J.

Liability of Local Authority for Nuisance.]—A local order confirmed by statute enacted that it should be the duty of a corporation within a fixed time to proceed to carry out works for the disposal of sewage approved by the Local Government Board, and, in the event of the corporation not so proceeding, that they might be compelled to proceed in manner provided by section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which section empowers the Local Government Board to enforce performance of duty by defaulting local authorities by writ of mandamus. Section 27 of the Public Health Act, 1875, empowers local authorities to construct works for the disposal of sewage, "provided that no nuisance be created." The corporation proceeded to construct sewage works approved by the Local Government Board:—Held, that the local order did not alter in any way the obligation of the corporation not to create a nuisance; and that the fact that the Local Government Board gave their approval to the works did not authorise the corporation to create a nuisance, such approval being merely a condition precedent to the execution of the works, and the order merely providing machinery for enforcing the obligation of the corporation. Held, also, that a breach of section 17 of the Public Health Act, 1875, had been committed for which an action was maintainable by the Attorney-General. Att.-Gen. v. Dorchester Corporation, 94 L. T. 682; 70 J. P. 281; 4 L. G. R. 675; 22 T. L. R. 480—C.A.

"Owner"—Collector of Rents.]—A person who collects the rents of property as agent for another is "owner" within section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and may be served with a notice under that section and required to abate a nuisance on the premises arising from structural defects of the premises. Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 1), 83 L. T. 504; 49 W. R. 205; 65 J. P. 70—D.

Abatement of Nuisance—Structural Defects—Liability of "Owner"—Agent for Premises Ceasing to be Agent.]—Where there has been failure to comply with a notice to abate a nuisance served under section 94 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the object of proceedings, under section 95 of the Act, to obtain an order to abate the nuisance is to found the right of a local authority to enter the premises, do the work, and if necessary recover the expenses from the responsible person; and as the word "owner" in section 95 of the Act includes the person who is the agent of the owner at the time when the offence is committed, an order to abate the nuisance can be made against such agent at an adjourned hearing of a summons taken out against him in respect of such failure, although during the interval between the original and adjourned hearing of the summons he ceases to be such agent. Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 2), 70 L. J. K.B. 628; [1901] 2 K.B. 274; 84 L. T. 844; 49 W. R. 521; 65 J. P. 499—D.

The plaintiff R. was the owner of a house, and on November 24, 1897, the defendants served on him a notice that, as the house was without a sufficient water-closet, he was "to provide a sufficient water-closet to the said house according to the specification given by this notice," and then followed the usual notice that if the work was not done the authority would enter and do the work, and a specification of the kind of water-closet to be put in. In an action for an injunction to restrain the authority from entering,—Held, that the notice was bad on the ground that it did not allow the owner to comply with it by providing any other "sufficient" water-closet than that specified, although it was not given in pursuance of a general resolution without regard to the particular requirements. Semble, that it might be bad also for leaving out the words "earth closet or privy," which according to section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the premises should be without before the notice can be given. In such a case the remedy of the plaintiff is not by appeal to the Local Government Board under section 268 of the Public Health Act, 1875; appeals to that body lie only in cases where the question arises as to the sufficiency. Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation, 78 L. T. 194; 62 J. P. 216—Ridley, J.

Complaint of Private Individual—Order of Justices—Specification—Prohibition of Recurrence.—An order of Justices, upon the complaint of a private individual, on his own behalf, under section 105 of the Public Health Act, 1875, directing the abatement of a nuisance, must specify the works or things necessary to be done to abate it; but so much of the order as goes on to prohibit the recurrence of the nuisance need not specify them where the recurrence can be prevented by the mere refraining on the part of the aggressor from doing an act of a particular nature. Reg. v. Horrocks; Boustead, ex parte, 69 L. J. Q.B. 688; 82 L. T. 767; 64 J. P. 661; 19 Cox C.C. 529—D.

Abatement Notice—Compliance with Notice by Person not Legally Liable—Liability of Sanitary Authority to Recoup Expenses of Abatement—Action not Brought Within Six Months of Service of Abatement Notice.—Where a sanitary authority serves a notice under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, requiring the abatement of a nuisance in connection with a supposed drain, and in the course of the works carried out in compliance with the notice it is discovered that the supposed drain is a sewer, and that the sanitary authority is liable to do the repairs required by the notice, an action brought to recover back from the sanitary authority the cost of the repairs as money paid to the use of and at its request, is an action for an "act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of" an Act of Parliament, or of a "public duty or authority" within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and the sanitary authority is therefore entitled to the protection conferred by that section. Cree v. St. Pancras Vestry, 68 L. J. Q.B. 389; [1899] 1 Q.B. 693; 80 L. T. 388—Bruce, J.

— Compliance with Notice by Person not Liable—Liability of Sanitary Authority—Recovery of Expenses by Person not Liable—Compulsion.—Where a person is called upon by the sanitary authority to abate, and does abate, a nuisance by doing work which the sanitary authority themselves are liable to do, and where that person afterwards seeks to recover from them the cost of the work, upon the principle that, where one person is compelled to do work which another is legally compellable to do, the cost of the work may be recovered by the one as money paid at the other's request, regard must be had to the fact that in the case of a nuisance prompt action by some one is imperative; and because of that fact it is not necessary to shew that there was actual, direct, or irresistible compulsion in order to bring the case within the principle above enunciated. It is sufficient to shew that the sanitary authority took steps which practically amounted to compulsion. Andrew v. St. Olave's Board of Works (67 L. J. Q.B. 592; [1898] 1 Q.B. 775) explained and followed. Self v. Hove Commissioners (64 L. J. Q.B. 217; [1895] 1 Q.B. 685) commented upon. North v. Walthamstow Urban Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 972; 62 J. P. 836—Channell, J.

Order for Abatement of Nuisance—What Constitutes.—Where Justices make an order for the abatement of a nuisance under section 112 of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878 [corresponding to section 96 of the English Public Health Act, 1875], the order of the Justices is not the entry in the order-book, but the document drawn up in accordance with Form C, Schedule C of the Act [corresponding to Form C, Schedule IV. of the English Act]. If the order so drawn up is good in form, its validity is not affected by the fact that the entry in the order-book would be bad on its face as an order. Re v. Down Justices, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 648—K.B. D.

Signature of Order.—Whether, where such an order is made by more than two Justices, the signature of two of them is sufficient, quære. Ib.

6 Edw. 7 c. 25 is the Open Spaces Act, 1906.

(z) Riots.

Suppression—Troops Summoned to Aid—Expenses of Troops—Liability of County Fund.—Where troops are summoned by Justices of a county to aid in the suppression of apprehended riots the county council cannot be called upon to pay out of the county fund the expenses of housing and feeding them. Reg. v. Glamorganshire County Council, 68 L. J. Q.B. 1047; [1899] 2 Q.B. 536; 81 L. T. 372; 48 W. R. 112; 64 J. P. 115—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—At all events, these expenses cannot be paid out of the county fund otherwise than in a case where the troops are summoned with the concurrence of the chief constable and the expenses are incurred by him, of which there is no evidence in the present case. Ib.

(aa) Roads.

Maintenance—County—County Borough—Financial Relations—Equitable Adjustment—Main Roads—County Bridges—Contribution Towards Expenses—Local Government Order.—An equitable adjustment respecting financial relations made as between an administrative county and a newly constituted county borough by virtue of a Local Government Order in terms similar to those of section 32 of the Local Government Act, 1888, may properly include a sum payable by the council of the borough to the council of the county, in respect of contributions, made before the constitution of the county borough, by the area included after its constitution in the county borough towards the expenses—first, of main roads and county bridges; and secondly, other miscellaneous expenses connected with elections, registration of voters, the weights and measures and health departments, and salaries of officers, and legal, stationery, and office expenses. Durham County Council v. West Hartlepool Borough Council, 74 L. J. K.B. 815; [1905] 2 K.B. 340; 92 L. T. 685; 54 W. R. 110; 69 J. P. 283; 3 L. G. R. 738—Channell, J.

Subsidence of Highway—Liability of Sanitary Authority—Defective Condition of Sewer and Road under Highway—Absence of Negligence.

—An action will not lie against a sanitary authority, whose duty it is, under the Public Health Act, 1875, to maintain sewers, for damage occasioned by the subsidence of a highway due to the defective condition of a sewer and the road under the highway, unless there is negligence upon the part of the sanitary authority. Lambert v. Lowestoft Corporation, 70 L. J. K.B. 333; [1901] 1 K.B. 590; 84 L. T. 237; 49 W. R. 316; 65 J. P. 326—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Negligence—Road Making by District Council
—Employment of Contractor—Liability of District Council for Negligence of Contractor.]—A district council employing a contractor to do work in a place where the public are in the habit of passing, which will, unless precautions are taken, cause danger to the public, must take precautions, and if these are omitted cannot, on damage ensuing, escape liability by seeking to throw the blame on the contractor. No sound distinction in this respect can be drawn between a public highway and a road which may be, and to their knowledge probably will in fact be, used by persons lawfully entitled so to do. Penny v. Wimbledon Urban Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 754; [1898] 2 Q.B. 212; 78 L. T. 748; 62 J. P. 582—Bruce, J.

—Making up Road—Dangerous Work—Employment of Contractor—Liability.]—Where a public body takes upon itself the making-up of a road, such work being of itself, unless carefully done, likely to be dangerous to the public, a duty is cast upon such public body to see that no dangerous obstructions are allowed to exist to passengers passing along the road. That duty cannot be evaded by employing a contractor to carry out the work. Hill v. Tottenham Urban Council, 79 L. T. 495—Bruce, J. And see STREETS, infra, col. 1389.

Sale on Beach and Foreshore, Regulating—Validity.]—Under statutory powers enabling a corporation to make by-laws for regulating the selling or hawking of any article on their beach and foreshore, the corporation made a by-law that: "A person shall not on the said beach or foreshore sell or hawk or offer or expose for sale any article, commodity, or thing, except in pursuance of an agreement with the corporation, and in such part or parts of the beach and foreshore as the corporation shall by notice affixed or set up thereon from time to time appoint for the purpose".—Held, that the by-law was unreasonable and bad on the ground that it gave the corporation power to make any agreement they chose without reference to the question of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such agreement, and that it reserved to them a right to refuse to give a licence to any particular person. Parker v. Bournemouth Corporation, 86 L. T. 449; 66 J. P. 440—D.

(cc) Smoke.

Factory Chimney—Abatement—Sufficiency of Notice to Abate.]—A notice to abate a nuisance caused by quantities of black smoke issuing from a factory chimney need not necessarily specify the works required to be done in order to abate the nuisance. Millard v. Wastall, 57 L. J. Q.B. 277; [1898] 1 Q.B. 342; 77 L. T. 692; 46 W. R. 258; 62 J. P. 135; 18 Cox C.C. 695—D.

(dd) Sewers and Drains.

(1) "Sewer" Generally.

Drain or Sewer—Pipe Receiving Drainage from Sewer—Liability to Repair.]—A pipe which is prima facie a sewer does not cease to be a sewer merely because it receives the drainage of another sewer. Wood Green Urban Council v. Joseph, 74 L. J. K.B. 954; 93 L. T. 434; 3 L. G. R. 1147; 69 J. P. 464—D.

"Sewer"—"Drain"—Long User.]—In 1859 or 1860 an estate was laid out for building purposes and a road constructed through it. A twelve-inch drain was at the same time laid from end to end of the road, which discharged its contents into a culvert and then into a river. Houses were built from time to time in the road, and some of the owners of these houses, as early as 1876, connected their drains with the twelve-inch drain, but some of the other houses in the road drained into cesspools. In 1882 the local authority's surveyor was aware of at least one connection from a house with the twelve-inch drain:—Held, that the twelve-inch drain was a sewer and had vested in the local authority, and that it must be inferred that the local authority had accepted it as laid to their satisfaction. Wilmslow Urban Council v. Sidebottom, 70 J. P. 537—Neville, J.

"Drain" or "Sewer"—Conduit Leading to no Outlet—Conduit Laid by Trespasser.]—A conduit in order to be a "sewer" within the Public Health Act, 1875, must be, in some form or other, a line of flow by which sewage or other liquid matter of some kind, such as would be conveyed through a sewer, is taken from one point to another point and there discharged. It must have a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem. Pakenham v. Ticehurst Rural Council, 2 L. G. R. 19; 67 J. P. 448—Buckley, J.

A conduit is none the less a sewer because at a particular point in its course there is a cesspool which existed before the conduit was laid, and which has been converted into a catchpit, nor because at a particular point in its flow the sewage has been so treated as to have become innocuous. Id.

If by way of trespass a conduit such as to fall within the definition of "sewer" has been laid upon land without the knowledge or sanction of the landowner, the landowner upon ascertaining the fact may cause it to be removed; but if he permits it to remain adopting the act of the trespasser, it will vest as a "sewer" in the local authority. Id.

—Liability of Local Authority.]—A pipe laid down before 1894, which is not a sewer within the definition contained in section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, does not become a sewer under section 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, by reason of its becoming vested under that section in the authority having the management of roads, and being a local authority under the Act of 1875, inasmuch as the effect of section 25 of the Act of 1894 is not to alter the status of the pipe, although it transfers the powers, duties, and liabilities of the highway authority in respect of it to the local authority. Williamson v. Durham Rural Council, 75 L. J. K.B. 498; [1906] 2 K.B. 65; 95 L. T. 471; 54 W. R. 491; 70 J. P. 352; 4 L. G. R. 1163—D.

— Trespass on Neighbour's Land.—In considering whether a culvert for conveying the drainage from more than one house is a "sewer" or a "drain" within the definition clause (section 4) of the Public Health Act, 1875, the test is whether the houses do in point of fact constitute one building only, or more than one. Webb v. Knight; Hedley v. Webb, 70 L. J. Ch. 663; [1901] 2 Ch. 126; 84 L. T. 526; 65 J. P. 425—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Query, whether a sewer carried across a neighbour's land by trespass does or does not vest in the local authority under section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Semble, not. Ib.

— Pipe Draining Several Houses of Same Owner—Drainage Passing through Single Private Drain to Public Sewer—Liability to Repair.—A pipe conveying the drainage from several houses belonging to one owner, which is a sewer within the meaning of section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, does not cease to be so and become a single private drain within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, and so repairable by the owner of the houses, because the sewage from it passes on its way to the public sewer through a single private drain conveying the drainage from houses belonging to different owners to which section 19 of the Act of 1890 applies. Jackson v. Wimbledon Urban Council, 74 L. J. K.B. 641; [1905] 2 K.B. 27; 92 L. T. 553; 53 W. R. 485; 69 J. P. 225; 3 L. G. R. 586; 21 T. L. R. 479—C.A.

— Pipe used for Draining Semi-detached Houses—"One building only."—The question whether a pair of semi-detached houses are "one building only" within section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, so as to make a pipe used for draining them a "drain" to which the provisions of section 41 can be applied, is a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case. Humphery v. Young, 72 L. J. K.B. 6; [1903] 1 K. B. 44; 87 L. T. 551; 51 W. R. 298; 67 J. P. 34; 1 L. G. R. 142—D.

— "Single private drain"—Liability to Repair.—If in any particular case it is shewn that a pipe is a private drain and not a sewer (which prima facie it will be if it drains more than one house) an order may be made under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875; but the mere fact that it drains houses which belong to different owners is not sufficient evidence that the pipe is a single private drain. Thompson v. Eccles Corporation, 73 L. J. K.B. 497; [1904] 2 K.B. 1; 90 L. T. 507; 68 J. P. 315; 2 L. G. R. 556—D. Reversed, 74 L. J. K.B. 130; 3 L. G. R. 20; 21 T. L. R. 49—C.A.

— House Connected by Sewer with Single Private Drain—"Connected with public sewer by single private drain."—Liability to Repair.—A house connected with a public sewer by means of a pipe, being a sewer within the meaning of section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, discharging into another pipe being a single private drain within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, is not "connected with a public sewer by a single private drain" within the meaning of the later enactment. Judgment of the Divisional Court (74 L. J. K.B. 954) affirmed on other grounds. Wood Green Urban Council v. Joseph, 76 L. J. K.B. 173; [1907] 1 K.B. 182; 96 L. T. 176; 71 J. P. 89; 5 L. G. R. 322; 23 T. L. R. 126—C.A.

Sewage Pipe with no Outlet.—The fact that a pipe which has no lawful outlet for sewage receives sewage from a house as well as surface-water from a highway is not of itself proof that the pipe is a sewer. If a nuisance arises solely in consequence of a person's own act in sending sewage down such a pipe, he is responsible under sections 94 and 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as a person causing or continuing the nuisance by his "act default or sufferance." Wincanton Rural Council v. Parsons, 74 L. J. K.B. 533; [1905] 2 K.B. 34; 93 L. T. 13; 69 J. P. 242; 3 L. G. R. 771—D. And see Bromley Borough Council v. Cheshire, 77 L. J. K.B. 332; [1908] 1 K.B. 690; 72 J. P. 34; 6 L. G. R. 156—D; and NUISANCE, supra.

Group of Houses with Common Access and Common Accommodation.—A group of a considerable number of houses are not "premises within the same curtilage" within the meaning of that expression as used in the definition of "drain" in section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, though they have a common access by means of a court, and certain accommodation such as ashpits and water-closets in common. A conduit for the drainage of such a group of houses is therefore a "sewer" and not a "drain" within the meaning of that Act. St. Martin-in-the-Fields Vestry v. Bird (64 L. J. Q.B. 230; [1895] 1 Q.B. 428) followed. Harris v. Scurfield, 91 L. T. 536; 2 L. G. R. 974; 68 J. P. 516; 20 T. L. R. 659—D. And see PRIVATE DRAIN, infra.

"Stream" or "Sewer"—Conversion of Natural Watercourse into Sewer—Discharge of Manufacturing Effluent.—A conduit, which was originally a natural stream, may be a "sewer" within the meaning of the Public Health Acts, if for a considerable period it has ceased to be to any substantial extent a channel for the conveyance of water, and has become a channel substantially for the conveyance of sewage only. But the mere illegal act on the part of a local authority of discharging sewage into a natural stream in contravention of section 17 of the Public Health Act, 1875, or of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (or, while that Act was in force, in contravention of section 4 of the Local Government Act, 1858, Amendment Act, 1861), does not convert the stream into a sewer. West Riding Rivers Board v. Gaunt, 67 J. P. 183; 1 L. G. R. 133—D.

Sewage Flowing into Ditch—No Outflow.—Underground pipes or drains which carry sewage-matter from different points on an estate into a ditch on the same estate, from which ditch there is no outflow, do not constitute a sewer within the meaning of section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Pakenham v. Ticehurst Rural Council, 67 J. B. 448—Buckley, J.

Cesspool—Catchpit.—By the consent of two landowners pipes were laid above and below an old cesspool for the conveyance of sewage-matter to prevent an overflow. By this arrangement the cesspool was converted into a catchpit:—Held, that the new connection constituted a sewer. Id.

Where a system of pipes has been laid by one man in the land of another for the conveyance of sewage-matter, such system will constitute a sewer, and be vested in the local authority, if the second landowner consents to such system being laid either at the time the work is done or subsequently. Id.

Cesspools—Omission to Construct—Want of Structural Convenience—Liability of Owner.—The appellants' predecessors in title deposited with the respondents a plan providing for the draining of certain houses into cesspools. The cesspools were not, however, constructed, and the appellants' predecessors without permission turned the slop and scullery water from the houses into a surface-water drain made by the respondents upon a highway upon which the houses abutted. The slop and scullery water passed through the drain into an open ditch and caused a nuisance. The respondents had not constructed any sewer by means of which the appellants could drain their houses. Upon a summons under section 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the Justices made an order upon the appellants to abate the nuisance:—Held, that the nuisance arose from the want of a "structural convenience" within the meaning of section 94, and that the order was therefore properly made; and held, further, that although the surface-water drain was a "sewer" within the definition in section 4, the appellants, even if they had given the notice prescribed by section 21, would not have been entitled to use it to carry off their slop and scullery water. Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation, 68 L. J. Q.B. 819; [1899] 2 Q.B. 41—D.

Open Channel by Roadside—"Sewer"—Liability of Local Authority.—An open channel or surface-water drain alongside of a public road, and taking surface-water from the road and rain-water from adjoining houses, is a "sewer" within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875, and vests in the local authority under section 18 of the Act, and they will be responsible for its cleansing under section 19, and will be liable in damages if injury is caused by sewage-matter wrongfully flowing into and accumulating in it. Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation (68 L. J. Q.B. 819; [1899] 2 Q.B. 41) distinguished. Wilkinson v. Llandaff and Dinas Powis Rural Council, 73 L. J. Ch. 8; [1903] 2 Ch. 695; 89 L. T. 462; 52 W. R. 50; 68 J. P. 1; 2 L. G. R. 174; 20 T. L. R. 30—C.A.

(2) Sewering.

Duty of Local Authority to Furnish—Default—Remedy—Complaint to Local Government Board—Mandamus.—An action for a mandamus VOL. II.

to compel a local authority to furnish necessary sewers for effectually draining their district in accordance with section 15 of the Public Health Act, 1875, will not lie at the instance of an aggrieved individual, the exclusive remedy for the default by the local authority in the performance of their duty being by complaint to the Local Government Board under section 299 of the Act. Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle Urban Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 635; [1898] A.C. 387; 78 L. T. 569; 62 J. P. 628—H.L. (E.)

"Satisfaction of urban authority."—The existence of sewers under a street for the independent drainage of particular houses, and the fact that the street has become vested in the urban authority, are not sufficient to shew that the street has been sewered as a whole. Still less can the legal assumption be made that such a street has been sewered "to the satisfaction of the urban authority" within section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, when notices to sewer have been given by them, and proceedings taken under that section. Handsworth Urban Council v. Derrington, 66 L. J. Ch. 691; [1897] 2 Ch. 438; 77 L. T. 73; 46 W. R. 163; 61 J. P. 518—Kekewich, J. See Rishton v. Haslingden Corporation, 67 L. J. Q.B. 387; [1898] 1 Q. B. 294—D.

"Street"—"Highway repairable by the inhabitants at large"—Street "sewered to the satisfaction of the urban authority."—An urban authority proposed to do certain sewerage works under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, in a street within their borough. The street in question was about eight feet in width, and was laid out before the year 1816; it ran between the back premises of two rows of houses, and formed a means of communication between two old highways which ran at right angles to it. It had always been kept open to these two highways, and no barrier had ever been put up in any part of it. It had always been used without interruption as a footway, but there was some evidence of interruption to its use as a carriage-way. There was no evidence of public repairs, and the alleged private repairs consisted solely of the occasional removal of refuse, &c. A drain ran through the back yards of the houses on one side of the street and carried their drainage, and also the drainage of some of the houses on the other side of the street, into a sewer in one of the above-mentioned highways. It was admittedly an insufficient drain, but had existed in its present condition for about seventy years, nor had its sufficiency ever been questioned until notice was given of the proposed works:—Held, on a case stated after the hearing and determination of objections by the owners of premises fronting, adjoining, and abutting upon the street to the provisional apportionment amongst them of the expenses of the proposed works, that the street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and therefore not a "street" within the meaning of section 5 of the Act of 1892, and that the expenses of the proposed works must consequently be borne by the urban authority. Handsworth Local Board v. Taylor (69 L. T. 798) explained. Rishton v. Haslingden Corporation, 67 L. J. Q.B. 387; [1898] 1 Q.B. 294; 77 L. T. 620; 62 J. P. 85—D.

Right to Support—Subjacent Minerals—Ad-

adjacent Lands.—In 1878 W., the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs, conveyed to the defendants, excepting the minerals, lands on which the defendants constructed sewage works. The compensation was duly paid. In 1878 the defendants also constructed an outfall sewer through lands the property of W., under the powers of the Public Health Act, 1875. The compensation was determined by arbitration under that Act, and was duly paid:—Held, that, as regarded the sewage works, the defendants had acquired by the conveyance a right of support by the subjacent minerals and the adjacent lands of W. for the land conveyed and for any buildings or works reasonably in the contemplation of the parties to the conveyance; and that, as regarded the outfall sewer, the defendants had acquired by virtue of the Public Health Act, 1875, having regard to Dudley Corporation and Dudley's (Earl) Trustees, In re (51 L. J. Q.B. 121; 8 Q.B. D. 86), a right to have it supported by the land in which it was laid, and probably also by the adjacent lands of W.; that this right must be deemed to have been taken into consideration by the arbitrator and to be covered by the award; and that the defendants were not deprived of the above rights by the Public Health Act, 1875 (Support of Sewers) Amendment Act, 1883, since the sewage works and outfall sewer, being sanitary works in respect of which rights of support had been acquired by the defendants before the passing of that Act, and in respect of which rights no compensation was at the passing of the Act recoverable, were by section 5 altogether excepted from the operation of the Act. Jary v. Barnsley Corporation, 76 L. J. Ch. 593; [1907] 2 Ch. 600; 97 L. T. 507; 71 J. P. 468; 5 L. G. R. 1145; 23 T. L. R. 639—Parker, J.

Charge on Owners for Expenses.—By its local Acts a corporation was empowered to constitute a drainage district within the borough and to assess and apportion a due proportion of the original cost of the drain or sewer among the owners of the land or ground within the district, such assessment to be on the full net annual value of such property as ascertained by the valuation list for the time being in force, or, if there were none, by the rate for the relief of the poor made next before the making of such assessment:—Held, that an assessment made in 1898 upon the owners of property within the district at the date of the completion of the works in 1891 upon the valuation list in force at that date was improper; the valuation list in force at the date of the assessment should have been taken. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation v. Houseman, 63 J. P. 85—Byrne, J.

Tidal Stream — "Sewer."—A tidal stream may by virtue of its user be converted into a sewer. Id.

Entry on Private Land without Notice—Erection of Pumping Station—"Sewer."—A local authority has no right to carry a sewer under private property without previously giving the notice required by section 16 of the Public Health Act, 1875. A pumping station is not a "sewer" within section 16 of the Act; but it is, within section 27, an apparatus "for distributing or otherwise disposing of sewage," and consequently the land required for such pumping station must be purchased by the local autho-riety. King's College, Cambridge v. Unbridge Rural Council, 70 L. J. Ch. 844; [1901] 2 Ch. 768; 85 L. T. 303—Byrne, J.

Right of Local Authority to Drain into Intercepting Sewer—Transferred Area.—By virtue of the Brighton Intercepting and Outfall Sewers Act, 1870, the Hove Commissioners Act, and the order of the County Councils of East and West Sussex made in 1893 and duly confirmed, which transferred the parish of Aldrington from Steyning Union to Hove Urban Sanitary District, the Corporation of Hove are entitled to discharge all the sewage of the borough of Hove, as also the sewage of that part of the borough which was within the parish of Aldrington, into the intercepting sewers constructed by and vested in the Brighton Intercepting and Outfall Sewers Board. Brighton Intercepting and Outfall Sewers Board v. Hove Corporation, 68 J. P. 565; 2 L. G. R. 1255; 20 T. L. R. 760—H.L. (E.)

Withdrawal of Notice to Take Land for Sewer—Arbitration—Jurisdiction—Costs.—A local authority served a notice, under section 16 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on the owner of land, of its intention to carry a sewer through such land. Subsequently, the owner gave notice claiming compensation for the damage or injury to be sustained by her by the construction and execution of the drainage works, and requiring arbitration. Both parties appointed arbitrators, but after they had met the local authority withdrew its notice—the works not having been commenced—and offered to pay the owner's taxed costs up to the time of such withdrawal notice; but the owner refused this offer, and went on with the arbitration. The arbitrators awarded her 10% as compensation for the damage she had sustained, and also costs:—Held, that they had no jurisdiction to award either damages or costs in such circumstances. Davis v. Witney Urban Council, 63 J. P. 279—C.A.

Construction of Sewers—Towing-path—"Interruption" of Traffic.—A temporary interference with the traffic on a towing-path, during the laying of a sewer through the path, is an interference with the towing-path so as to interrupt the traffic thereof, within the meaning of section 327 of the Public Health Act, 1875, notwithstanding that the work is carried out so as not to interrupt the traffic over more than half the path at a time, and so as to avoid as far as possible any interference with the towing of vessels from the path. The powers of the Act for the laying of sewers consequently do not authorise the laying of a sewer through a towing-path to which the above-mentioned section applies without such consent as is there mentioned. Thames Conservators v. Walton-upon-Thames Urban Council, 96 L. T. 555; 71 J. P. 202; 5 L. G. R. 274—Phillimore, J.

Trespass by Sanitary Authority in Constructing Sewer—Cutting of Sewer by Owner of Land Trespassed on—Injunction claimed by Sanitary Authority—Costs.—A sanitary authority constructed a sewer under the bed of a goit which supplied water to the defendant's mill without giving the defendant notice as required by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 32, whereupon the defendant cut the sewer:—Held, in an action by the sanitary authority for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the sewer, that the sanitary authority had no right to carry their sewer under the goit, but that the defendant having cut the sewer, causing thereby public inconvenience and risk of disease, was not entitled to costs. Held, further, that the defendant was within his rights in putting in a counterclaim for damages, as the sanitary authority had resisted his title and given him no opportunity of agreeing upon damages. Cleckheaton Urban Council v. Firth, 62 J. P. 536—Kekewich, J.

Interference with Treatment or Utilisation of Sewage—Laundry Effluent.]—Section 45 of the Bradford Tramways and Improvement Act, 1897, prohibits, under a penalty, the discharge into the sewers of the city of Bradford of “any refuse from any manufactory or work that would interfere with the treatment or utilisation of the sewage.” On a prosecution under the section in respect of the discharge of the effluent from a laundry into the sewers, the magistrate held that, having regard to the preamble to the Act, a laundry was not a “work” within the section. He also found, on certain evidence, that the effluent would not interfere with the treatment or utilisation of the sewage:—Held, that, in view of this finding, the magistrate’s decision must stand, whether he was right or not on the question whether a laundry was a “work” within the section. Garfield v. Yorkshire Laundries, 3 L. G. R. 1192; 69 J. P. 411—D.

Prescriptive Right of Drainage—Trade Effluents—Pollution.]—Where a local authority have for some years allowed effluents produced in the course of a trade or manufacture to be discharged into their sewers they are not justified under the provisions of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, s. 7, in cutting off the connection made with their sewer merely because the nature of the trade effluent is such that it renders the disposal by irrigation or otherwise of the sewage matter less efficient than it might otherwise be. Eastwood v. Honley Urban Council, 70 L. J. Ch. 313; [1901] 1 Ch. 645; 84 L. T. 169; 49 W. R. 308—C.A.

Drain Constructed on Private Land—Right of other Persons to Connect with Sewer.]—The owner or occupier of premises is not entitled under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to connect his drains with a sewer on private ground where that sewer has only become such by reason of the fact that it receives the drainage of two or more buildings. Where, therefore, such a connection was made by a local authority at the request of the owner of premises, the owners of the land in which the sewer was situated were held to be justified in removing the connecting pipe. Wood v. Baking Tenants, Ltd., 76 L. J. K.B. 764; [1907] 2 K.B. 390; 97 L. T. 520; 71 J. P. 456; 5 L. G. R. 1055—D.

Right to Pollute Watercourse.]—A private Act of Parliament enacted that “No person shall without the consent of the commissioners . . . open any new drain or other work into any of the drainage works of the commissioners . . . and no person shall cause any filthy or unwholesome water, or washings of manufactories or mines, or other foul or poisonous liquid, to flow into any watercourse within the jurisdiction of the commissioners,” and imposed penalties for the violation of the prohibitions. The section contained a proviso that “this section shall not apply to any person having a legal right to cause such water, washing, or liquid as aforesaid to flow into any existing river, stream, or watercourse.” Before and at the time of the passing of the Act the sewage of a town flowed into a tidal river within the jurisdiction of the commissioners. The urban sanitary authority proposed to remodel their system of drainage, and to make a new outfall into the river, in place of those previously existing:—Held, that, assuming the tidal river to be a watercourse within the meaning of the Act, the case fell within the above-mentioned proviso, and that the commissioners had no power to prevent the carrying out of the new drainage works. The exemption in the proviso is not to be restricted to the precise amount or manner of pollution going on at the time of the passing of the Act. Somersetshire Drainage Commissioners v. Bridgwater Corporation, 81 L. T. 729—H.L. (E.)

Works Constructed on Land Belonging to Local Authority—Compensation—Connection with Sewers Laid in Claimant’s Land—Injurious Affecting Claimant’s Land—General System of Sewerage.]—A local authority, under their statutory powers, laid sewers through land belonging to the claimant. The sewers were connected with a pumping station and reservoir constructed by the local authority on adjoining land which had never belonged to the claimant. The claimant’s land was depreciated in value by reason of the contemplated user by the local authority of the pumping station and reservoir:—Held, that the claimant was not entitled to compensation in respect of such depreciation, notwithstanding that the pumping station and reservoir and the sewers laid under his land together formed one system of sewerage. Horton v. Colwyn Bay Urban Council, 76 L. J. K.B. 91; [1907] 1 K.B. 14; 96 L. T. 84; 71 J. P. 69; 5 L. G. R. 22; 23 T. L. R. 75—Bigham, J. Affirmed in C.A., 77 L. J. K.B. 215; [1908] 1 K.B. 327; 72 J. P. 57; 6 L. G. R. 211.

Persons Outside Metropolitan Area—Public Body—Ultra Vires Agreement.]—A parish outside the metropolitan area cannot send its sewage into any sewer of any parish within that area without the consent of such parish; but a parish within the area cannot make any binding agreement for any definite time to receive sewage from a parish without the area—they can only grant revocable licences for such a purpose. Decision of HALL, V.C., in Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway (49 L. J. Ch. 355; 14 Ch. D. 521), on this point approved. St. Mary, Islington, Vestry v. Hornsey Urban Council, 69 L. J. Ch. 324; [1900] 1 Ch. 695; 82 L. T. 580; 48 W. R. 401—C.A.

Estoppel—Laches and Acquiescence.]—A local authority, being a public body with public duties, are not estopped from asserting a right to put an end to a nuisance by the fact that they had formerly permitted and encouraged the acts which cause the nuisance, it being beyond their power to make any binding agreements to permit such acts. Great North-West Central Railway v. Charlebois (68 L. J. P.C. 25; [1899] A.C. 114) followed. Ib.

Injunction against Local Authority.]—The Court will not grant an injunction compelling a local authority to close sewers under their control, which are in daily use, unless it is absolutely essential to do so, but will allow reasonable time for the local authority to make other arrangements for the disposal of its sewage. Order made declaring that the defendants were not entitled to send sewage into the plaintiffs' sewers without the plaintiffs' consent, with liberty for the plaintiffs to apply to the Judge at the expiration of twelve months from the date of the order for an injunction to enforce their rights. Ib.

Insertion in Provisional Apportionment—Premises extra commercium—Land used as Public Pleasure Ground.]—A provisional apportionment of the expenses of sewerage &c. a street, made under section 6 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, should contain all premises fronting, adjoining, or abutting on such street, whether the owners of such premises are chargeable with such expenses or not. Herne Bay Urban Council v. Payne, 76 L. J. K.B. 685; [1907] 2 K.B. 130; 96 L. T. 666; 5 L. G. R. 631; 71 J. P. 282; 23 T. L. R. 442—D.

Land was purchased by a local authority under the powers conferred by section 164 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and under the covenants contained in the conveyance to them they were bound to keep such land open as recreation and pleasure grounds for the use of the public for ever. Held, that such land was not exempt, as being extra commercium, from paying the amount which might be apportioned in respect thereof for the above expenses. Ib.

(3) Vesting in Local Authority.

Sewer to Divert Surface Water from Quarry—“Made by any person for his own profit.”]—A sewer constructed by a landowner upon his land for the purpose of diverting surface water running on to his land from a public road and preventing it from entering a quarry situate on his land and increasing the expense of working it, is a sewer “made by any person for his own profit” within the meaning of section 13, subsection 1 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore does not vest in the local authority under that section. Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames Urban Council (67 L. J. Ch. 585; [1898] 2 Ch. 515) approved. Sykes v. Sowerby Urban Council, 69 L. J. Q.B. 464; [1900] 1 Q.B. 584; 82 L. T. 177; 64 J. P. 340—C.A.

Sewer Vesting in Landowner—Sewer made for “Profit”—No Direct Money Payment—Discharge of Surface Water on Land.]—The word “profit” in section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which contains an exemption of “sewers made by any person for his own profit” from sewers which vest in the local authority under that section, is not to be restricted to a direct money payment. Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames Urban Council, 67 L. J. Ch. 585; [1898] 2 Ch. 515; 79 L. T. 26; 46 W. R. 667; 62 J. P. 520—Stirling, J.

A sewer made not for sanitary or ordinary drainage purposes, but to enable the land to be occupied more profitably or to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have to be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, is a sewer made for the “profit” of the occupier. Ib.

When, therefore, a landowner made a line of pipes from a highway to a pond in an adjoining field to enable him to use the pond for feeding his cattle, the supply of water being otherwise inadequate for that purpose, he was held to have done so for his own profit within the exception. Ib.

The pond in question was not part of the drainage system under the control of the local authority, and consequently section 67 of the Highway Act, 1835, which only authorised the making and keeping open of ditches and drains in and through lands adjoining a highway, did not empower the local authority, except with the leave of the owner, or in due exercise of any statutory powers vested in them, to discharge the surface water from the highway into the pond. Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co. (62 L. J. Q.B. 479; [1893] 2 Q.B. 135) and Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell (63 L. J. Ch. 497; [1894] 2 Ch. 178) discussed and applied. Ib.

Railway Accommodation Works.]—Drains not used for the drainage of one building only are “sewers” within sections 4 and 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, whether they have carried sewage or not. London and North-Western Railway v. Runcorn Rural Council, 67 L. J. Ch. 324; [1898] 1 Ch. 561; 78 L. T. 343; 46 W. R. 484; 62 J. P. 643—C.A.

For the purposes of the second exception to section 13, there is no difference between drains made in exercise of powers and drains made in the performance of statutory duties. Ib.

The second exception to section 13 is not confined to drains made under Acts passed expressly for draining, preserving, or improving land. The question is whether the drains made under any local Act are made and used for those purposes. Ib.

Railway Acts must be read as if all the sections of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, were written into them; therefore, drains constructed under section 68 of the Act of 1845, as incorporated into a railway company's special Act of 1846, must be treated as having been made under the special Act. Such drains are made under a local and private Act within the second exception to section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and do not vest in the local authority. Ib.

“Local or private Act of Parliament.”]—A railway company's special Act is a “local or private Act” within section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, although in the special Act itself it is provided that “this Act shall be a public Act.” Ib.

Long User.]—In 1859 or 1860 an estate was laid out for building purposes and a road constructed through it. A twelve-inch drain was at the same time laid from end to end of the road, which discharged its contents into a culvert and then into a river. Houses were built from time to time in the road, and some of the owners of these houses, as early as 1876, connected their drains with the twelve-inch drain, but some of the other houses in the road drained into cesspools. In 1882 the local authority's surveyor was aware of at least one connection from a house with the twelve-inch drain:—Held, that the twelve-inch drain was a sewer and had vested in the local authority, and that it must be inferred that the local authority had accepted it as laid to their satisfaction. Wimslow Urban Council v. Sibbottom, 70 J. P. 537; 5 L. G. R. 80—Neville, J.

Vesting in Local Authority.—See Pemsel v. Tucker, post, VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

(4) Duty to Cleanse.

Duty of Local Authority to Cleanse Sewer—Remedy for Default—Action for Damages—Complaint to Local Government Board.—An action for damages against a local authority will lie at the suit of an individual whose property has been injured by the neglect of the local authority to perform the duty imposed by section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to cleanse the sewers belonging to them. Baron v. Portslade-by-Sea Urban Council, 69 L. J. Q.B. 899; [1900] 2 Q.B. 588; 83 L. T. 363; 48 W. R. 641; 64 J. P. 675—C.A.

(5) Surface Water.

Discharge into Natural Stream—Right of Local Authority.—A local authority, when draining their district under the powers of the Public Health Act, 1875, and the Private Street Works Act, 1892, have, under sections 15, 16, and 17 of the Act of 1875, a right to discharge surface water into a natural stream or watercourse or canal on land belonging to another person within their district, so long as such surface water is, as required by section 17, free from all excrementitious or other foul or noxious matter such as would affect or deteriorate the purity and quality of the water in such stream or watercourse. Durrant v. Branksome Urban Council, 66 L. J. Ch. 653; [1897] 2 Ch. 291; 76 L. T. 739; 46 W. R. 134—C.A. Affirming, 61 J. P. 472—North, J.

Deleterious Matter.—Sand and silt are not “deleterious matter” within the meaning of section 17 if the stream is already naturally charged therewith. Ib.

Damage—Compensation.—Any damage caused by the proper exercise by the local authority of the right in question is a matter for compensation under section 308 of the Act of 1875, and forms no ground for an injunction against the local authority or for an action for damages by the owner of the land on which is the bed of the stream. Ib.

Discharge into Drain of Solid Sewage—Liability of Occupiers—“Sewer”—Notice to Local Authority.—A person who commits a nuisance at common law by draining faecal matter into a sewer of the local authority, through which it passes on to the plaintiff's land, cannot justify himself under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 21, without shewing that he has fulfilled the requirements imposed on him by that section. Graham v. Wroughton, 70 L. J. Ch. 673; [1901] 2 Ch. 451; 84 L. T. 744; 49 W. R. 643; 65 J. P. 710—C.A.

Per BYRNE, J.—An owner or occupier has no right under section 21 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to pass faecal matter into a drain used only for the purpose of carrying off rain and slop-water, although it may be a “sewer” of the local authority within the meaning of section 4. Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation (68 L. J. Q.B. 819; [1892] 2 Q.B. 41) followed by BYRNE, J. Ib.

Sewer Made for “Profit”—Absence of Direct Profit—Vesting of Sewer in Local Authority.—A sewer constructed by a landowner in order to prevent surface water from running into the workings of a stone quarry upon his land, but which is not directly profitable to him, is not a sewer made by him “for his own profit” within the meaning of section 13, sub-section 1, of the Public Health Act, 1875, and therefore vests in the local authority. Sykes v. Sowerby Urban Council, 68 L. J. Q.B. 652; [1899] 1 Q.B. 979; 80 L. T. 392; 47 W. R. 560—D.

(6) Private Drain.

Single Pipe Draining Several Houses—Different Owners—Nuisance on Premises of One Owner—Liability of Owner to Abate Nuisance—“Single private drain.”—Where two or more houses belonging to different owners are drained by a single pipe passing through the lands on which the houses are situate into the sewer of a local authority, the authority may, if it has adopted section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, upon written application complaining of a nuisance in the pipe being made to them, treat the pipe as a single private drain within the meaning of that section, and may follow the procedure of section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, with respect to it, and, if it be found that the whole defect may be remedied by works executed upon the premises of one owner only, may serve that one owner only with notice to abate the nuisance, and, if he does not comply with the notice, may execute the necessary works and recover the whole of the expenses incurred from that one owner only. Thompson v. Eccles Corporation; Haedicke v. Friern Barnet Urban Council, 74 L. J. K.B. 130; [1905] 1 K.B. 110; 91 L. T. 750; 53 W. R. 211; 69 J. P. 45; 3 L. G. R. 20; 21 T. L. R. 49—C.A.

The apportionment of expenses for which provision is made by section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1890, is only applicable where a defect is found to exist on the premises of more than one owner, and the expenses have to be distributed among the different owners liable. Eastbourne Corporation v. Bradford (65 L. J. Q.B. 571; [1896] 2 Q.B. 205) approved. Ib.

— Drain Emptying into Cesspool—Undertaking by Owner to Treat Drain and Cesspool as ivate, and to Cleanse Same—Nuisance at Cesspool—Liability of Owner as “person by whose act, default, or sufferance nuisance arises.”]—The appellant, a builder who had built houses on the south side of a certain road, submitted plans to the local authority for a scheme of drainage for the houses, and the plans were accepted subject to the appellant entering into an undertaking with the local authority, which he did; and accordingly a drain or sewer, with which each house was connected by a single pipe, was constructed along the middle of the road for a distance of about 1,200 feet, communicating with the surface by manholes, and terminating at the road at a point at which it was connected with a large cesspool constructed on the adjoining land, of which the appellant was lessee in possession. Several of the houses were connected with the drain, and were drained through the drain into the cesspool as the ultimate outlet. The appellant was not the occupier of any of the houses, but was, within the meaning of the Public Health Acts, the owner of six of them and of the land on which the cesspool was built; and in the undertaking given to the local authority he undertook that the drains should, for all purposes of the Public Health Acts, be private drains, and that the drains and cesspool could be cleaned and maintained by him. A nuisance existed at the cesspool from the overflowing therefrom of sewage:—Held, on the authority of Meador v. West Cowes Local Board 1 L. J. Ch. 561; [1892] 3 Ch. 18, that the appellant was the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arose, and that the obligation to clean out the cesspool and abate the nuisance was upon him and not upon the local authority, notwithstanding that the drain received the drainage of more than one house. Mutt v. Snow, 89 L. T. 802; 67 J. P. 454; L. G. R. 222—D.

Per CHANNELL, J.—Even if the drain became a sewer within the meaning of the Public Health Act by reason of its receiving the drainage of more than one house, yet, as between the immediate parties, the local authority on the one hand and the appellant who had given such an undertaking on the other, the appellant would still be the person by whose act or default the nuisance arose, although third parties might have a right to say that as between them and the local authority the whole had vested in the local authority as a sewer, and that the local authority were liable to abate the nuisance. Ib.

“Single private drain”—Drain constructed on Private Ground to which no Public Access—Ability to Repair.]—A drain constructed upon private ground to which the public have not access is a private drain within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890. Therefore, if such drain becomes a nuisance, a local authority, who have adopted the Act of 1890, may take proceedings under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, against any owner of premises connected with the drain by a branch drain. Hill v. Hair 4 L. J. M.C. 164; [1895] 1 Q.B. 906 dismissed and doubted. Seal v. Merthyr Tydfil Urban Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 37; [1897] 2 Q.B. 43; 77 L. T. 308; 61 J. P. 551—D.

Defective Drain—Single Private Drain—Repair.]—Section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (which deals with the examination of drains, privies, &c., on complaint of nuisance), applies to all cases, including the case of a “single private drain,” within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, in places where the latter Act is in force, where the drain in question is a nuisance or injurious to health. Fulham Vestry v. Solomon, (65 L. J. M.C. 33; [1896] 1 Q.B. 198) distinguished. Southwold Corporation v. Crowdy, 67 J. P. 278; 1 L. G. R. 899—D.

Erection of House—Drains Necessary for Effectual Drainage—Surveyor's Report—Jurisdiction of Local Authority.]—The only matters which the local authority are entitled to take into consideration under section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875, in satisfying themselves whether the construction of a proposed drain or drains to a newly erected house is such as is necessary for the effectual drainage of the house, are the size, material, level, and fall of the drains. If they consider the benefit of a district generally in respect of a system for the best way of the ultimate disposal of the sewage they are not acting within the scope of the section, which only gives them power to require the owner of each house to provide the drain necessary for the effectual drainage of his own house. Mattheus v. Strachan, 70 L. J. K.B. 806; [1901] 2 K.B. 540; 85 L. T. 68; 49 W. R. 651; 65 J. P. 789—D.

New Drainage—Part found Necessary.]—Section 16 of the Glasgow Police (Amendment) Act, 1890, enacts that if the drains of any house, &c., are found to be defective, the owner of the premises shall be bound, immediately on an “order to that effect being given by the Police Commissioners, to carry out all necessary operations for removing defects of structure, or doing such acts as may be requisite to prevent risk to health, and, failing compliance with such order, the Police Commissioners may execute the work and recover the expense thereof as damages from the owner.” The commissioners having found that the drains of a block of houses were defective, issued an order to the owners to repair the same, and, they having made default, the commissioners proceeded to execute the work themselves; but, instead of repairing the old drain, they constructed a new drain on a different site and outfall into the main sewer. In an action for the expenses, the Court of Session assailed the owners upon the ground that section 16 of the Act of 1890 did not warrant the formation of a new system of drainage. This House having remitted the case to the Court of Session to find whether the commissioners had considered that the new drainage was necessary, that Court found that part of the drainage had been considered necessary, but the rest had not:—Held, that the part considered necessary must be paid for by the owners, but not the rest. Glasgow Corporation v. McOmish, [1898] A.C. 432—H.L. (Sc.)

New House—Block of Two Houses—Combined Drain—Necessity of Separate Drain for each House.]—An urban authority have power under section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to require in respect of each newly built house the construction of a separate drain for the drainage of each such house, and their powers under that section are not limited to questions as to the size, materials, and level of the drain. The respondent deposited with the urban authority notice of his intention to erect a block of two houses, semi-detached, with a plan which shewed a combined drain for the two houses. The urban authority on the report of their surveyor disapproved on the ground of the unsatisfactory provisions for drainage, and made an order, under section 25 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for the construction of one drain for each house, to be properly constructed and to be connected with the public sewer:—Held, that section 25 required a separate drain to be constructed for each house, and that a combined drain for the block of two houses was not a compliance with the provisions of the section and that the urban authority had power under the section to make an order for the construction of a separate drain for each house. Woodford Urban Council v. Stark, 86 L. T. 685; 66 J. P. 536—D.

Adjoining Owners—Joint Drain—Work Done by One Owner—Right of Contribution.]—Where an adjoining owner does work on a common drain on his premises in pursuance of a sanitary notice, he cannot recover a proportion of the expenses of such work from his adjoining owner, although the drainage of such last-mentioned owner passes through such common drain and another notice has been served upon him in respect thereof. Reeve v. Sadler, 88 L. T. 95; 51 W. R. 603; 67 J. P. 63; 1 L. G. R. 441—D.

Inspection Chamber—Right to Break up Foot-pavement.]—The occupier of a house in a street has no right to break up the footway of the street for the purpose of constructing an inspection chamber under the footway in a drain connecting the drainage of his house with the public sewer under the street. Att.-Gen. v. Ashby, 97 L. T. 479; 5 L. G. R. 1192; 71 J. P. 387; 23 T. L. R. 489—Joyce, J.

Notice to Repair Given Jointly to Several Owners of Houses Drained Thereby—Validity of Notice.]—Where several houses belonging to different owners are drained by a single private drain which becomes a nuisance and injurious to health, and the local authority, acting under the powers conferred upon them by section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1890, serve upon each of the different owners a notice addressed to them jointly to do the necessary works for the abatement of the nuisance, the fact that any one of such owners would be compelled to go upon the premises of the others in order to execute the necessary works is no bar to the validity of the notice; and therefore the local authority, upon non-compliance with the notice, are entitled to execute the works themselves and recover the expenses from the owners in the manner provided by section 19 of the Act of 1890. Lancaster v. Barnes Urban Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 744; [1898] 1 Q.B. 855; 78 L. T. 355; 46 W. R. 623; 62 J. P. 405—D.

A person served with a notice in respect of a single private drain under section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1890, does not incur any penalty by reason of his neglect to comply with its requirements. Ib.

(7) Inspection by Local Authority.

Entry without Asking Permission—Execution of Statutory Powers.]—Where a local authority and their officers, of their own motion and without asking any person's permission, enter premises for the purpose of examining as to the existence of any nuisance thereon, they are not employed in the execution of the Public Health Act, 1875, inasmuch as section 102 of the Act does not authorise entry by the local authority without permission first being requested. Therefore the owner of the premises cannot be convicted under such circumstances upon an information preferred against him under section 306 of the Act for wilfully obstructing the local authority in the execution of the Act. Consett Urban Council v. Crawford, 72 L. J. K.B. 571; [1903] 2 K.B. 183; 88 L. T. 836; 51 W. R. 669; 67 J. P. 309; 1 L. G. R. 558—D.

"House" — School without Boarders.]—“House” in section 91, sub-section 5 of the Public Health Act, 1875, includes a day school where there are no boarders and where none of the members of the staff reside. Wimbledon Urban Council v. Hastings, 87 L. T. 113; 67 J. P. 45—D.

Overcrowding — Order to Inspect — Evidence as to Reasonable Grounds—Form of Order.]—Where by virtue of section 102 of that Act an application is made to a Justice for an order to enter premises where a nuisance is alleged to exist, such Justice, although he has not to decide whether a nuisance in fact exists, may consider whether there are reasonable grounds for suspecting there is a nuisance, and for that purpose may receive evidence as to the true state of the facts. If a Justice makes an order for the officer to enter to inspect, such order ought to be made in reference to a particular subject-matter. Ib.

(8) Cesspools.

Conduit—Local By-law.]—B., the owner of certain houses, constructed a series of cesspools for their drainage on his own land. He then constructed a conduit, which conveyed the overflow therefrom to a larger cesspool. He was summoned for constructing these cesspools so as to have an outlet into a sewer—namely, the conduit and the large cesspool—contrary to the local by-law. The magistrates were of opinion that the conduit, being used for the drainage of several dwelling-houses occupied by different persons, was a sewer, and that an offence had been committed:—Held, that the magistrates were wrong, and that the appellant had not constructed these cesspools contrary to the by-law. Button v. Tottenham Urban Council, 78 L. T. 470; 62 J. P. 423; 19 Cox C.C. 36—D.

Omission to Construct—Want of Structural Convenience—Drainage—Liability of Owner.]—The appellants' predecessors in title deposited with the respondents a plan providing for the draining of certain houses into cesspools. The cesspools were not, however, constructed, and the appellants' predecessors without permission turned the slop and scullery water from the houses into a surface water-drain made by the respondents upon a highway upon which the houses abutted. The slop and scullery water passed through the drain into an open ditch and caused a nuisance. The respondents had not constructed any sewer by means of which the appellants could drain their houses. Upon a summons under section 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the Justices made an order upon the appellants to abate the nuisance:—Held, that the nuisance arose from the want of a “structural convenience” within the meaning of section 94, and that the order was therefore properly made; and held, further, that, although the surface-water drain was a “sewer” within the definition in section 4, the appellants, even if they had given the notice prescribed by section 21, would not have been entitled to use it to carry off their slop and scullery water. Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation, 68 L.J. Q.B. 819; [1899] 2 Q.B. 41; 81 L. T. 24; 47 W. R. 607; 63 J. P. 580—D.

(9) Privies and Water-closets.

Substitution of Water-closets for Privies—Jurisdiction.—Section 42 of the Manchester Corporation Waterworks and Improvement Act, 1867, provides that the corporation “may,” in any case where a dwelling-house within the city shall be without an ash-pit, or without an ashpit of a construction and size approved by the corporation, order the owner of such house to provide such an ashpit, or to make such alteration, reparation, or enlargement of the existing ashpit as in the opinion of the corporation the circumstances of the case may require. By section 34 of an amending Act of 1869 it is provided that in construing the above enactment “the expression ‘ashpit’ shall be held to include a ‘privy.’” By a clause in a provisional order of the Local Government Board, confirmed by an Act of 1881, it is provided that for the purposes of section 42 of the Act of 1867, and section 34 of the Act of 1869, “the expressions ‘ashpit’ and ‘privy’ shall extend to and be deemed to include any water or other closet for the reception of faecal matter, and the apparatus connected therewith”:—Held, that these enactments empowered the corporation to order the substitution of one kind of sanitary convenience such as a water-closet, for another such as a privy. Agnew v. Manchester Corporation, 67 J. P. 174; 1 L. G. R. 9—D.

Cleansing Undertaken by Local Authority—Failure to Eradicate Fever Germs—Substitution of Water-closets—Duty of Local Authority.—Where a local authority has taken upon itself, under section 42 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the cleansing of privies belonging to cottage property, but has, after notification of an outbreak of typhoid fever, failed to eradicate fever germs which have penetrated crevices in the brickwork and cause a nuisance, such authority cannot under section 94 call upon an owner of the property to abate the nuisance by abolishing privies and substituting water-closets. Barnett v. Laskey, 68 L. J. Q.B. 55; 79 L. T. 408; 63 J. P. 5—D.

The word “cleansing” in section 42 has a wide meaning, and includes removal of matter which causes the nuisance. Id.

Nuisance—Cleansing of “earth-closets privies ashpits and cesspools”—Whether to be Read Conjunctively or Distributively.—The words “earth closets privies ashpits and cesspools” in section 42 of the Public Health Act, 1875, are to be read distributively. Therefore a local authority may, under the section, themselves undertake or contract for the cleansing of earth closets, privies, and ashpits, without also undertaking or contracting for the cleansing of cesspools. Stainland Industrial Corn and Provision Society v. Stainland Urban Council, 75 L. J. K.B. 190; [1906] 1 K.B. 233; 94 L. T. 214; 54 W. R. 282; 70 J. P. 150; 4 L. G. R. 295—D.

Defective Water-closet—Notice to Provide Particular Kind of Water-closet—Validity of Notice.—A notice to the owner of a house with defective sanitary accommodation, calling upon him to provide a particular kind of closet, is not within section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and is therefore bad. Wood v. Widnes Corporation, 67 L. J. Q.B. 254; [1898] 1 Q.B. 463; 77 L. T. 779; 46 W. R. 293; 62 J. P. 117—C.A.

The plaintiff R. was the owner of a house, and on November 24, 1897, the defendants served on him a notice that as the house was without a sufficient water-closet, he was “to provide a sufficient water-closet to the said house according to the specification given by this notice,” and then followed the usual notice that if the work was not done the authority would enter and do the work, and a specification of the kind of water-closet to be put in. In an action for an injunction to restrain the authority from entering,—Held, that the notice was bad on the ground that it did not allow the owner to comply with it by providing any other “sufficient” water-closet than that specified, although it was not given in pursuance of a general resolution without regard to the particular requirements. Semble, that it might be bad also for leaving out the words “earth closet or privy,” which according to section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the premises should be without before the notice can be given. In such a case the remedy of the plaintiff is not by appeal to the Local Government Board under section 263 of the Public Health Act, 1875; appeals to that body lie only in cases where the question arises as to the sufficiency. Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation, 78 L. T. 194; 62 J. P. 216—Ridley, J.

Provisional Order—Sewer Accommodation—Provision by Owners—Appeal—Expenses of Alterations—Justices to make such Order “as to them may seem equitable.”—By the Bootle Provisional Order, 1897, when a sewer and water-supply sufficient for the purpose were reasonably available, the appellants could, by written notice to the owner of any building, require any existing closet accommodation provided at or in connection with the building to be altered so as to be converted into a water-closet complying with the by-laws in force and communicating with the sewer. If the owner failed to comply with the notice, the appellants could do the work specified in the notice and recover the expenses from the owner. If any person deemed himself aggrieved by any of the requirements of the appellants, or as to the reasonableness of any expenses wholly or partially recoverable from him, he could appeal to the Justices, and they might make such order in the matter as to them might seem equitable. The respondent, the owner of certain houses, was served with a notice requiring him to alter the closet accommodation into water-closets. On an appeal to Justices they held that the requirements of the corporation as to the alterations in the closet accommodation were reasonable, and they ordered him to comply with the notice. They further ordered that the expense of doing the work should be borne in equal shares by the appellants and the respondent:—Held, that the Justices had power to make any order as to the expenses that appeared to them reasonable. Boyle Corporation v. Owens, 87 L. T. 74; 66 J. P. 357—D.

Notice to Provide Particular Kind of Water-closet for Each House—Specification—Validity of Notice.—Under section 21 of the Bradford Improvement Act, 1873, the corporation might "in any case where a dwelling house within the borough shall be without a privy, water-closet, or earth closet, or an ashpit, or without a privy, water-closet, or earth closet, or an ashpit of a construction and size approved by the corporation, require the owner of such house, by notice . . . to provide such a privy, water-closet, or earth closet, or such an ashpit or to make such reparation and alteration of the existing privy, water-closet, or earth closet, or ashpit as in such notice shall be stated":—Held, that the corporation might lawfully require the owner of houses to provide a water-closet and ashpit for each house, according to a specification attached to the notice, in the place of existing privies and ashpits which were of good construction and sufficient for the accommodation of the houses, although each house was not provided with a separate privy and ash-pit. Smith v. Greenwood, 76 L. J. K.B. 1129; [1907] 2 K.B. 385; 96 L. T. 730; 71 J. P. 353; 5 L. G. R. 660—D.

(10) Public Convenience.

Erection of—"Proper and convenient situation"—Adjoining Owner.—Section 39 of the Public Health Act, 1875, does not empower an urban authority to provide a public urinal in such a position as in fact to cause a nuisance to neighbouring property, even though the authority bona fide consider that the situation selected is proper and convenient, and even though the result of providing the urinal may be to obviate an existing nuisance. Leyman v. Hesse Urban Council, 67 J. P. 56; 1 L. G. R. 76—Joyce, J.

(11) Negligence of Local Authority.

River—Drainage Operations—Increased Flow—Flooding—Statutory Powers.—Where a drainage board in the exercise of its statutory powers deepened and widened the bed of a river and diverted into it another stream, thereby materially increasing the volume of water in the river, but failed to exercise due care in periodically cleansing the river bed (the necessity for which was due to the operations of the board), whereby the river became so choked with accumulations of silt and mud that after some heavy rains it overflowed its banks and did serious damage to the lands of the plaintiffs, it was held that the board was liable; that the matters complained of gave the plaintiffs a right at common law, and that the statute (under which the board claimed immunity) afforded a justification only for acts done under it with due care, not for acts done negligently. Bligh v. Rathangan River Drainage Board, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 205—Q.B. D.

Sewer—Insufficiency of Drainage.—A local authority which pours offensive matter into a receptacle or channel insufficient for the purpose, and thereby causes damage to private property, is guilty of negligence, and liable in damages to the owner of such property; and it is no defence that the system was sufficient at the time of its construction. Hawthorn Corporation v. Kammulwik, 75 L. J. P.C. 7; [1906] A.C. 105; 93 L. T. 644; 54 W. R. 235; 22 T. L. R. 28—P.C.

Defective Manhole—Injury to Person on Road.—Where it was found that a manhole of a sewer was defective, that its defects were due to improper construction, and that owing to these defects the plaintiff, who was riding a motor cycle on the road, was upset and injured, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages from the defendants. Winslow v. Bushey Urban Council, 72 J. P. 64—Coleridge, J.

Discharge of Sewage into Sea.—See FISHERY, col. 866, and NUISANCE.

(12) Offences, Proceedings for.

Continuing Offence—Work Executed in Contravention of By-law—Continuance in Same State—Continuing Offence not Charged in Information—Notice.—By the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 158, where the execution of any work is an offence in respect whereof the offender is liable in respect of any by-law to a penalty, the existence of the work during its continuance in such a form and state as to be in contravention of the by-law shall be deemed to be a continuing offence. A builder was charged upon an information with having constructed certain drainage work contrary to a by-law. A continuing offence was not charged in the information, but a written notice had been previously served upon him in which he was warned that he was liable to penalties for every day the offence continued:—Held, that he was rightly convicted of a continuing offence from the date when the notice was given, notwithstanding that the continuing offence was not charged in the information, because section 158 of the Public Health Act, 1875, applied, and under that section it was unnecessary to charge the continuing offence as a separate offence. Airey v. Smith, 76 L. J. K.B. 766; [1907] 2 K.B. 273; 96 L. T. 691; 71 J. P. 285; 5 L. G. R. 713; 23 T. L. R. 447—D.

(ee) Slaughter-houses.

Grant of Licence—Death of Licence-holder—Determination of Licence.]—A licence for a new slaughter-house, under sections 125 and 126 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, is a personal licence to the licensee to slaughter animals on the particular premises, and determines on the death of the licensee. Goodwin v. Sale, 76 L. J. K.B. 654; [1907] 2 K.B. 278; 96 L. T. 694; 5 L. G. R. 641; 71 J. P. 303; 23 T. L. R. 453—D.

Condition Limiting Duration to Less than Twelve Months—Premises used as Slaughter-house after Expiration of Licence but within Twelve Months of Grant—Conviction of Occupier.]—It is beyond the power of a local authority under section 29 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, to impose a condition in a slaughter-house licence limiting the duration of the licence to less than twelve months. The appellant obtained from the respondents on August 22, 1906, a slaughter-house licence in respect of certain premises, the licence stating that it was to continue in force until December 31, 1906. In January, 1907, the appellant applied for but was refused a renewal of the licence. On February 4, 1907, he used the premises in question as a slaughter-house, and in respect of that he was summoned and convicted:—Held, that the conviction must be quashed, as the respondents had no power to limit the duration of the licence to less than twelve months; that the licence granted on August 22, 1906, must be read as containing a recital of section 29 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, under which it was granted; and that the condition inserted in the licence was repugnant to the grant, and therefore void. Taylor v. Winsford Urban Council, 76 L. J. K.B. 897; [1907] 2 K.B. 396; 97 L. T. 401; 71 J. P. 375; 5 L. G. R. 786—D.

(ff) Streets.

(1) Generally.

“Street” — Passage — Cul-de-sac — Premises Abutting Thereon without Right of Access Thereof.]—A passage forming a cul-de-sac and not dedicated as a highway may be a “street” within section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and the owner of premises abutting thereon will in such case be liable to pay his apportioned share of the costs incurred by the local authority in making it up, notwithstanding that he has no right of access to it. Walthamstow Urban Council v. Sandell, 2 L. G. R. 835; 68 J. P. 509—Buckley, J.

Footpath—Dedication.]—The defendant, who held under a lease for a long term of years, had built on the lands a number of cottages, and had made, for the benefit of the tenants of the cottages, a footpath on the lands in front of the cottages and bordering the street in question, the whole forming apparently a street consisting of a roadway and this footpath. The order for paving, &c., included this footpath:—Held, that there was jurisdiction to make the order in respect of the footpath. Belfast Corporation v. Hill, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 105—K.B. D.

Vesting in Local Authority—Extent of Vesting—Fee-simple Acquired by Turnpike Trustees.]

—Under section 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875, only so much of the actual soil of a street vests in the urban authority as may be necessary for the control, protection, and maintenance of the street as a highway for public use; and whether the owners of the fee-simple of the land at the time of vesting were the trustees of a turnpike road, or anybody else, the whole of the land does not vest. An urban council, therefore, have no right to interfere with the passage of wires for conveying electric current in the air over a street in their district if the wires do not encroach upon the stratum of air which would be reasonably required for the use of the street as a street. Turnbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird (65 L. J. Q.B. 451; [1896] A.C. 434) followed. Finchley Electric Light Co. v. Finchley Urban Council, 72 L. J. Ch. 297; [1903] 1 Ch. 437; 88 L. T. 215; 51 W. R. 375; 67 J. P. 97; 1 L. G. R. 244—C.A.

Property in—Portion of Street taken by Tramway—Compensation to Corporation.]—The vesting of a street in a municipal authority vests no property in such authority beyond the surface of the street and such portion as may be absolutely necessary to its repairs and management, but does not vest the soil or land in them as owners. Where, therefore, part of a street is converted into a tramway there is no taking of property, and no compensation is payable to the municipal authority. Sydney Municipal Council v. Young, 67 L. J. P.C. 40; [1898] A.C. 457; 78 L. T. 365; 46 W. R. 561—P.C.

Road made by Railway Company on Land Acquired under Special Act—Intention of Company to Use as Street—Ultra Vires.]—A railway company made a road upon land acquired by them in 1848 under their statutory powers. The road led from a road which was intercepted by their railway to another road. In the conveyance to them of the land on which the road was made the company gave the vendor a right of way over it, and covenanted to pave it. In 1860, when conveying to a purchaser superfluous land fronting on the road, the company again covenanted to leave it open and unbuilt upon, and use it only as a street or road. The road had been used in accordance with those deeds ever since. In 1900 the local authority sought to make the company liable for a proportion of the cost of making up the road under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on the footing that it was a street within the Act:—Held, that there was nothing in the facts inconsistent with the inference that the road was an accommodation road within section 68 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845; that, whether this was so or not, the circumstances shewed that the promoters of the railway must have acquired the land for the purpose of a road, and that they intended so to use it, and the Court would not now assume that that was inconsistent with the purposes of the company's special Act; and that the local authority could exercise the powers of section 150 of the Act of 1875 with respect to it. Stretford Urban Council v. Manchester, South Junction, and Altrincham Railway, 1 L. G. R. 683; 68 J. P. 59—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Where to deal with a street under the powers of section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, would be inconsistent with the appropriation of the land to the purposes defined by the special Act of a railway company, the powers of section 150 cannot be applied. That appears from City and South London Railway v. London County Council (60 L. J. M.C. 149; [1891] 2 Q.B. 513); London County Council v. London School Board (62 L. J. M.C. 30; [1892] 2 Q.B. 606), and Mulliner v. Midland Railway (48 L. J. Ch. 258; 11 Ch. D. 611). Per ROMER, L.J.—Where a railway company cannot use a portion of their property except as a road, it is within their powers to allow the public to use it. That appears from Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Petty (57 L. J. Q.B. 413; 21 Q.B. D. 273). Ib.

(2) New Street.

Decisions on the meaning of "new street" in the Public Health Act, 1875, govern the construction of the same words in the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, being in pari materia. Att.-Gen. v. Rufford, 68 L. J. Ch. 179; [1899] 1 Ch. 537; 80 L. T. 17; 47 W. R. 405; 63 J. P. 232—North, J.

Building on the Sides of Old Highway.]—Wherever buildings are erected on opposite sides of a highway so as to limit and define the breadth of the roadway, the highway so far as it lies between those buildings is a "new street." Ib.

"Laying out new street" — By-laws — Penalties — Injunction.]—The by-laws of an urban authority, framed under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, made certain provisions with respect to the laying out of new streets, as to level, width, construction, and the like. By-law 97 provided that every person who should offend against the foregoing by-laws should be liable to penalties; and by-law 98 that if any work, to which any of the by-laws relating to new streets and buildings might apply, should be begun or done in contravention of any such by-law, then, if such person should fail to shew sufficient cause why such work should not be removed, altered, or pulled down, the sanitary authority should be empowered, subject to any statutory provision in that behalf, to remove, alter, or pull down such work. The defendants owned a piece of land within the jurisdiction of the urban authority and abutting on two public highways, H. Lane and T. Road, the latter being a main road. On this land they erected certain houses without removing the fence on either side, but making the necessary openings here and there so as to provide means of entrance to and exit from the houses. They had not attempted to alter or interfere with the roadway either of H. Lane or T. Road. The plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from erecting or continuing the erection of any building upon, and from laying out any new street intended for use as a carriage-road, upon or in connection with the defendants' land in contravention of the above by-laws; and for an order on the defendants to remove, alter, or pull down all the works begun or done by the defendants contrary to the by-laws; or, alternatively, a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to remove, alter, or pull down the same:—Held, first, that, apart from the merits of the case, the by-laws could not be enforced in the High Court by an action by the plaintiffs for an injunction without the Attorney-General being a party to the action; and, secondly, that the defendants were not laying out or constructing a new street within the meaning of the by-laws. Att.-Gen. v. Ashbourne Recreation Co. (72 L. J. Ch. 67; [1903] 1 Ch. 101) considered and approved. Devonport Corporation v. Tozer, 72 L. J. Ch. 411; [1903] 1 Ch. 759; 88 L. T. 113; 52 W. R. 6; 1 L. G. R. 421; 67 J. P. 269—C.A.

— Part of Reserved Strip Thrown into Road.]—The appellant purchased a piece of land which abutted on and fronted for a considerable distance an old occupation road. He obtained a right of way for himself, his purchasers and tenants, for foot and vehicular traffic over the road. He divided his land into plots, and sold four of them; but he reserved a strip of land, six feet wide, extending along the whole front of the plots for sale, between the plots and the road. Houses were built upon the plots sold, and when they were being built the appellant took down the hedge between the reserved strip and the road opposite these plots, and threw these portions into the road:—Held, that this was not evidence that the appellant intended to make or lay out a new street within the meaning of by-laws which required notice to the local authority before any person should "intend to make or lay out any new street." Fellowes v. Sedgley Urban Council, 70 J. P. 412; 4 L. G. R. 970—D.

— Replacing Fences by Wall.]—The by-laws of a borough required that in the laying out of certain streets the width of the same should be thirty-six feet at the least. In a certain road within the borough to which the by-law would be applicable the appellant's property was bounded by a wooden fence from which to the wall on the other side of the road the distance was less than thirty-six feet. The appellant removed such fence, substituting a wall on the same site:—Held, that in so doing he had not laid out a new street contrary to the by-law. Bushell v. Creer, 64 J. P. 600—D.

Channelling — By-law — Unreasonableness.]—A by-law of a local authority which requires that a person who constructs a new street, over a certain width, shall construct it in a certain way—namely, "with channels not less than 12 inches wide and 6 inches deep either of granite cubes laid on a bed of cement concrete at least 6 inches in thickness, or otherwise in a suitable manner and with suitable materials"—is not void, either as being inconsistent with section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and sections 6 and 7 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, inasmuch as those sections deal with different persons—namely, the persons called upon to pay for the making up of roads, who have a right of appeal—or for uncertainty, inasmuch as the by-law only sets up a standard, and then gives a reasonable latitude if that standard is not necessary. Leyton Urban Council v. Chew, 76 L. J. K.B. 781; [1907] 2 K.B. 283; 96 L. T. 727; 71 J. P. 355; 5 L. G. R. 837—D.

Naming—Name put up by Local Authority—Obliteration by Owner—Right of Owner to Name].

—The owner of a building estate submitted to the local authority plans of proposed new streets, one of which was called thereon "M. Avenue," and the plans were approved by the local authority, and in an agreement and correspondence between the owner and the local authority the proposed street was referred to by that name. On the street being formed the owner put up that name at one end thereof by means of a notice-board affixed to a post. Subsequently the local authority passed a resolution that the street should be called "C. Avenue," and, notwithstanding the objection of the owner, put up that name on a house at the end of the street belonging to him. The owner thereupon caused the name "C. Avenue" to be obliterated, and was convicted by the Justices of an offence under section 64 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847. On an appeal by Case stated, —Held, that the section gave the local authority in the first instance the right to put up the name of the street; that they had not determined that it should be called "M. Avenue," but "C. Avenue"; that in proceedings against him under the section the owner was not entitled to take the objection that "C. Avenue" was not the proper name of the street; and that he had been rightly convicted. Semble, that the section does not give the local authority a right to alter the well-known name of an old street. Collins v. Hornsey Urban Council, 70 L. J. K.B. 802; [1901] 2 K.B. 180; 84 L. T. 839; 49 W. R. 620; 65 J. P. 600; 20 Cox C. 8—D.

Air-space and Ventilation—One "domestic building" — Occupation — Communication.]—Defendants were proposing to erect a long construction on a strip of land extending for about a hundred yards from D. Road, within the district to which the by-laws of an urban district council applied, along the Great Northern Railway. The erection consisted of three blocks of stables and coach-houses, with lofts above joined by two lower brick and slate "lean-to's," which were also suitable to be fitted as stables. There was communication from end to end leading to a garden and the termination of the stables remote from D. Road. On the remaining side there was a paved yard and fence. There was ventilation, but no "air-space" on the side towards the railway. The by-laws of the urban sanitary authority required an open space of twenty-four feet in front and two hundred square feet, exclusively belonging to such building, in the rear of any new domestic building. If the stables and coach-houses fronted on D. Road the by-laws had been complied with. The council asserted that the erection constituted more than one building not fronting on D. Road, and that the defendants' plans infringed the by-laws as to laying out new streets:—Held, that the erection constituted one building, and that the by-laws as to air-space were not infringed. Att.-Gen. v. Melville, 93 L. T. 612; 4 L. G. R. 166; 70 J. P. 17—Exekewich, J.

Deviation — Public Benefit — Recoupment — Land not Actually Required for Works.]—By a private Act of Parliament a corporation were authorised (inter alia) to make certain "street works" within the limits of lateral deviation shewn on their deposited plans; and to take "for the purpose of the street works the lands shewn on the deposited plans in connection therewith and which they may require for the purposes thereof respectively":—Held, on the construction of the entire Act, that it did not authorise the corporation to take land shewn on the plans, but not actually required for street works, for the purpose of re-selling the same at a profit. Donaldson v. South Shields Corporation, 68 L. J. Ch. 162; 79 L. T. 685—C.A.

Refusal—Grounds of — Mandamus to Local Authority.]—A prerogative writ of mandamus will not be granted to compel a local authority to approve plans of a proposed building which the local authority has in good faith refused to approve upon the ground that the building would contravene the provisions of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, by being brought forward beyond the front main wall of the building on one side thereof in the same street. Reg. v. Eastbourne Corporation, 83 L. T. 338; 64 J. P. 724—C.A.

Rejection of Plans with Undertaking Indorsed Thereon—New Plans Submitted and Approved—Whether Undertaking Binding as to New Plans.]—Certain building plans which had indorsed thereon a particular undertaking were submitted to a borough council for approval, but were rejected. Subsequently new plans were submitted and approved:—Held, that the undertaking indorsed on the rejected plans could not be held to apply to the approval plans. Hall v. Eastbourne Corporation, 69 J. P. 369—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Conversion of Existing Building — "New dwelling-house."]—By section 63 of the Eastbourne Improvement Act, 1885, it was provided (inter alia) that the conversion into two or more dwelling-houses of any building constructed originally as one dwelling-house, and the conversion into one dwelling-house of two or more buildings constructed originally as separate dwelling-houses should be deemed to be the erection of a new building. By a by-law made by the corporation it was provided that no new dwelling-house should be let or occupied until duly certified. Certain buildings originally constructed as a block of three shops were subsequently altered to one shop with one dwelling-house over same, and then divided into three shops, with three separate dwellings over same:—Held, that this re-conversion constituted a "new dwelling-house" within the meaning of the Act and by-law. Ib.

Plans Null and Void if Work Specified Thereon not Commenced within Three Years—Deposit of Plans shewing Number of Houses—Some Houses Commenced before and some after Expiration of Three Years from Deposit—Necessity for Fresh Deposit.]—A local Act provided that the deposit with the corporation of building plans should be null and void if the execution of the work specified thereon was not commenced within three years from the date of such deposit. A builder, having deposited a plan shewing thereon a number of houses proposed to be erected by him, commenced some of them within the period of three years from the date of the deposit of the plan, and commenced others after the expiration of that period:—Held, that the plan deposited could not be treated as one plan for the whole of the buildings shewn thereon, but as a number of plans for the different buildings, and that therefore such deposit was null and void as regards that portion of the work which was not commenced until after the expiration of the three years. Harrogate Corporation v. Dickinson, 78 L. J. K.B. 262; [1904] 1 K.B. 468; 90 L. T. 41; 68 J. P. 202; 2 L. G. R. 525—C.A.

Subsequent Change of Character—Building used for the Purposes of Habitation.]—Plans of a new building were deposited with a sanitary authority in May, 1894, describing the building otherwise than as a dwelling-house, and were duly approved and passed. On March 28, 1898, plans of alterations to the building described as “revised plans of proposed domestic conversion,” were also deposited with the borough surveyor, but were never either approved or disapproved in writing by the sanitary authority. The proposed alterations were carried out before October 3, 1898. Between October 24 and November 8 the occupier’s wife and child lived on the premises. On December 14, 1898, the occupier was charged before the magistrates with wilfully using within the above-mentioned dates the premises for the purpose of habitation by a person other than a person placed therein to take care thereof, and the family of such person, contrary to section 33 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890. It was contended on behalf of the defendant that the alterations to the premises set out in the plans deposited on March 28 were for the conversion into dwelling-houses of buildings not originally constructed for human habitation within the meaning of section 159 of the Public Health Act, 1875; that the sanitary authority within one month should have signified in writing their approval or disapproval of the same, pursuant to section 158 of that Act; and that the sanitary authority not having signified such approval or disapproval no proceeding could be taken against the defendant under section 33 of the Act of 1890. The magistrates upheld that contention, and dismissed the case:—Held, on appeal to the Divisional Court, that section 33 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, had been contravened, and that the case must go back for a conviction. Fulford v. Blatchford, 80 L. T. 627; 19 Cox C.C. 308—D.

Water Tower Erected under Special Act—District Council’s By-laws under Public Health Act, 1875—Notices by Water Company to District Council.]—A water company, empowered by their special Act merely to erect a high-service water tower in a particular situation, are not exempt from the by-laws of a district council made under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring the delivery of certain notices before building has been commenced. Uckfield Rural Council v. Crowborough Water Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 1009; [1899] 2 Q.B. 664; 81 L. T. 539; 48 W. R. 63—D.

Approval of Building Plans—Power of Local Authority to Contravene By-laws.]—A local authority empowered to make by-laws has no power to sanction a contravention of by-laws properly so made; and therefore the approval by a local authority of building plans which contravene the by-laws made by that authority is illegal and inoperative. McIntosh and Pontypridd Improvements Co., In re (61 L. J. Q.B. 164), approved and followed. Yabbicom v. King, 68 L. J. Q.B. 560; [1899] 1 Q.B. 444; 80 L. T. 159; 47 W. R. 818; 63 J. P. 149—D.

An Act of Parliament contained a proviso relating to building plans “approved” by the local authority for the district to which the Act applied:—Held, that the proviso related only to plans legally approved by the local authority, and did not extend to plans to which, under the circumstances above set out, an actual but illegal approval had been given. Ib.

Repeal of By-laws by New By-laws—Approval of Plan under Old By-laws—Part of Work Carried out under Old By-laws—Right to Complete Work according to Approved Plan—“Work commenced” before Date of New By-laws.]—A street plan comprising a number of streets, including a terrace, was deposited by an owner of a building estate with the local authority and was approved, and the terrace and some, but not all, of the streets had been formed according to the plan. A house plan for a number of houses in the terrace was afterwards approved by the local authority, and after some of these houses had been built the local authority repealed their by-laws, under which these plans had been approved, “except as regards any work commenced” before the date of the new by-laws. Before the repeal of the old by-laws a builder gave notice of his intention to build a number of houses in the terrace to the construction of which the local authority had given their approval, and he had put in some foundations. After the new by-laws came into force the builder commenced to erect one of the houses which was in accordance with the old by-laws, but was not in accordance with the new by-laws as to the thickness of the party-walls. Upon a summons against the builder for unlawfully erecting the building without complying with the new by-laws, the Justices found that the building was not “work commenced” before the new by-laws, and convicted the builder:—Held, that the approval of the plans of the building scheme and of the proposed terrace of houses and the carrying out of part of the work under the plans did not confer an absolute right to complete the work in accordance with the plans and by-laws then in force, and did not entitle the builder to say that, because some of the work had been commenced before the repeal of the by-laws, a building commenced after such repeal was “work commenced” before such repeal, so as to exempt him from the operation of the new by-laws; that the question whether work had been commenced or not within the meaning of the repealing by-law is a question of fact for the Justices, and that there was evidence before them upon which they could properly find that the building was not work commenced, and that the builder was properly convicted. White v. Sunderland Corporation, 88 L. T. 592; 67 J. P. 199; 1 L. G. R. 483—D.

— Whether Fresh Plans Requisite.—In 1894 two building plans were deposited by the defendant with, and approved by, the local authority. The local Act (inter alia) provided that the deposit of plans should be null and void if the execution of the buildings shewn therein was not proceeded with within three years from the date of such deposit. In 1901 the by-laws which were in operation when the plans were deposited by the defendant were repealed and new by-laws substituted, which provided (inter alia) that the former by-laws should continue to apply to works already commenced, and to buildings in respect of which plans had been approved prior to the new by-laws becoming operative. Subsequent to the new by-laws coming into force the defendant (who had by that time completed certain of the works shewn on the plans) commenced to erect the remaining buildings shewn on the plans:—Held, that as regards such later buildings, the deposit of the plans was null and void, as the work had not been commenced within three years from the deposit, and as the plan of each house, &c., although included in the two plans deposited, must be considered a separate plan. Harrogate Corporation v. Dickinson, 88 L. T. 299; 67 J. P. 100; 1 L. G. R. 275—Wright, J.

Statutory Duty to Decide whether Plans should be Approved—Action against Local Authority for Maliciously Refusing to Approve Plans.—An action will not lie against a local authority for maliciously refusing to approve building plans which have been submitted to them under the provisions of a statute which confers on them the duty of deciding whether such plans should be approved. Davis v. Bromley Corporation, 77 L. J. K.B. 51; [1908] 1 K.B. 170; 71 J. P. 513; 5 L. G. R. 1229; 97 L. T. 705; 24 T. L. R. 11—C.A.

(ii.) Building Line.

Erection of House beyond—Statutory Penalty—Rights of Adjoining Owners—Indictable Offence.—Section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, in forbidding the erection of a building beyond the building-line of a street without the written consent of the urban authority, has created a statutory offence, and provided a penalty for a breach of the section. The urban authority alone has the power of exacting the penalty for the breach, for the section has not created rights in individuals, but general rights for the benefit of the inhabitants of a particular borough or district, and an individual therefore has no right of action under the section. Mullis v. Hubbard, 72 L. J. Ch. 593; [1903] 2 Ch. 431;

88 L. T. 661; 51 W. R. 571; 67 J. P. 281; 1 L. G. R. 769—Farwell, J.

Erection of, beyond Front Main Wall of Building on Either Side—Dismissal of Information—Justices Equally Divided—Subsequent Information for Continuing Offence.—Where Justices are equally divided upon the hearing of an information laid under section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, for erecting a building in a street beyond the front main wall of the building on either side thereof, the proper course for the Justices to take is to adjourn the case in order that a re-hearing may be had before a reconstituted bench. If, however, the Justices dismiss the information, a subsequent information for continuing the offence will not lie against the same party if the circumstances remain the same. As long as the dismissal of the first information stands, it exists as a decision between the same parties upon the same subject-matter given by a competent tribunal, and the second bench of Justices has no power to re-open the hearing. Kinnis v. Graves, 67 L. J. Q.B. 583; 78 L. T. 502; 46 W. R. 480; 19 Cox C.C. 42—D.

Bringing Forward of Houses beyond the Front Main Wall of House “on either side thereof”—House Brought Forward beyond House on one Side, but not beyond House on the other Side.—Section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, which, in urban districts, prohibits the erection &c. of a building in any street beyond the front main wall of the house or building on “either side thereof” in the same street, without the consent of the urban authority, is infringed, if a house or building is erected &c. without such consent beyond the front main wall of the adjoining house on one side, although it does not project beyond the front main wall of the adjoining house on the other side. Anderson v. Richards, 4 L. G. R. 404; 70 J. P. 231—D.

Part of Front Wall “taken down to be rebuilt or repaired”—Removal of Stone Sill to Enlarge Window-frame—Work done Contrary to Owner's Instructions.—Section 17 of the Bristol Improvement Act, 1847, provides that where any part of the front or external wall, &c., of a house or building already erected in any street, &c., “shall be taken down to be rebuilt or repaired,” the entire of such wall shall be built or rebuilt or repaired, as the case may be, so as to be carried up perpendicularly, save for certain projections, and to range with the general line of the street, or be erected or built in such other situation as may be determined as in the section provided. The respondents, desiring to alter one of the front windows of an ancient beerhouse belonging to them, situated in a street in Bristol, employed a master-builder to carry out the work. In doing the work a workman employed by the master-builder, without instructions from the respondents or the master-builder, and contrary to their intentions, removed the stone sill of the window and replaced it with brickwork:—Held, without deciding whether the stone sill was part of the front or external wall of the beerhouse, within the meaning of the above section, that the sill, having been removed by mistake and contrary to the intention of the parties, had not been “taken down to be rebuilt or repaired,” and therefore that the section did not apply. Yabbi- come v. Bristol Brewery, 67 J. P. 261; 1 L. G. R. 477—D.

Waterworks.—The Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, is an "Act for improving the sanitary condition of towns and populous districts," within the meaning of section 93 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Therefore, if the Act of 1847 is incorporated by the special Act of a waterworks company, the company is liable to be convicted upon an information under section 3 of the Act of 1888 for erecting a building in a street beyond the front main wall of the house or building on either side thereof, inasmuch as the effect of section 93 of the Act of 1847 is to make the company subject to the provisions of the Act of 1888. Grand Junction Waterworks v. Hampton Urban Council (No. 2), 67 L. J. Q. B. 903; 79 L. T. 176—D.

Infringement—Statutory Remedy—Penalty—Conviction—Subsequent Action by Attorney-General for Injunction—Laches—Mandatory Order to Pull Down.—The penalty prescribed by section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, for a breach of the prohibition in the first part of the section against infringing the building-line is not the only remedy for the offence. It is a public general Act, and an injunction will lie at the suit of the Attorney-General on behalf of the public to restrain the infringement of the building-line, and in a proper case a mandatory order to pull down will be made, even although the offender has been previously convicted and fined under the section for the offence by a Court of summary jurisdiction. Att.-Gen. v. Ashbourne Recreation Ground Co. ([1903] 1 Ch. 101) followed. Att.-Gen. v. Wimbledon House Estate Co., 73 L. J. Ch. 593; [1904] 2 Ch. 34; 91 L. T. 163; 68 J. P. 341; 2 L. G. R. 828; 20 T. L. R. 489—Farwell, J.

— Pulling Down New Building not in Accordance with By-laws.—Where the by-laws as to new buildings made under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, provide for the pulling down of a new building erected in contravention of such by-laws, the local authority may cause a new building so erected to be pulled down, although no plans of such building have been deposited and the local authority have consequently not disapproved plans of the building. The power of the local authority to pull down a new building under such by-laws does not cease on the expiration of six months from the completion of the building. Fairbrass v. Canterbury Corporation, 67 J. P. 181; 1 L. G. R. 181—D.

Bringing Forward House—Written Consent of Local Authority to Plans.—Plans were deposited with an urban authority by a builder which shewed an intended bringing forward of certain windows in a house beyond the front main wall of the houses on either side thereof. Attention was not specifically called to the proposed projection, but the plans were submitted to the urban authority's surveyor and to two committees, by whom they were approved, such approval being stamped on the plans, which were also signed by the chairmen of the two committees. Such approval was confirmed by the urban authority:—Held, that there had been a "written consent" of the urban authority within the meaning of section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888. Merrett v. Charlton Kings Urban Council, 67 J. P. 419—D.

Continuing Offence—Retaining Control.—A person who erects a new building in contravention of a by-law made under section 157 of the Public Health Act, 1875, cannot be convicted of the continuing offence, under section 158 of that Act, consisting in the continued existence of the building in such a form or state as to be in contravention of the by-law, unless he retains such control over the building as renders him in fact responsible for the continued existence of the building in that state. Pomeroy v. Malvern Urban Council, 89 L. T. 555; 1 L. G. R. 825; 67 J. P. 375—D.

— Sale of Building—Liability of Purchaser.—By section 3 of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, "It shall not be lawful in any urban district, without the written consent of the urban authority, to erect or bring forward any house or building in any street, or any part of such house or building, beyond the front main wall of the house or building on either side thereof in the same street, nor to build any addition to any house or building beyond the front main wall of the house or building on either side of the same." "Any person offending against this enactment shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s. for every day during which the offence is continued after written notice in this behalf from the urban authority":—Held, that a purchaser of a building erected in contravention of the section, who allowed it to remain in the same state after written notice from the urban authority, was not a "person offending" against the enactment, and could not be convicted of allowing the offence to continue. Blackpool Corporation v. Johnson, 71 L. J. K. B. 485; [1902] 1 K. B. 646; 87 L. T. 28; 20 Cox C. C. 276—D.

"Owner"—Premises Let at a Rack-rent.—F. held certain premises in the city of Dublin under a lease from A. at the yearly rent of 34*l.* The poor-law valuation was 38*l.* F. had sublet portions of the premises to weekly tenants, and received from these lettings 107*l.* a year. F. was herself in occupation of the residue of the premises, the letting value of which was estimated at 19*l.* 10*s.* a year:—Held, that F. was the "owner" of the premises within the meaning of section 2 of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, where the definition of "owner" is the same as in section 4 of the English Act of 1875. Rice v. White, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 8—K. B. D.

— Change of Ownership before Demand for Payment.—At the date of the making and publishing of an order for the paving &c. of a street the defendant was an owner of lands, subject to a mortgage, adjoining the street in question, and he continued as owner for more than a month after the last publication of the order. The defendant never executed the required works, and his share of their estimated expense was demanded from him by the plaintiffs. At the time of making such demand the defendant had ceased to be owner, the mortgagees having entered into possession and receipt of rents:—Held, that the defendant was liable for the amount demanded notwithstanding that he had ceased to be owner when the demand was made. Belfast Corporation v. Hill, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 105—K.B. D.

Lands and Heritages "fronting and abutting" on Street—Railway.—A railway line ran alongside a private street on an embankment at a height considerably above the level of the street. The line was fenced from the street by a wall at the bottom of the embankment, built by the railway company on their own ground. The corporation served a notice on the company as the "owner of lands and heritages fronting or abutting" on the street, to make up and complete the street. The railway company contended that the street was a private street of which they had no beneficial use and that they had no right of access thereto:—Held, that the railway company being owners of lands which in fact fronted and abutted on the street in question, they were liable to contribute to its construction and maintenance. Caledonian Railway v. Edinburgh Corporation, 3 F. 645—Ct. of Sess.

Service of Notice on "Owner" — Affixing Notice on Land.—The name and address of the owner of a strip of land being unknown to the clerk who had charge of the service of notices (although known to the local authority's surveyor), a notice to "the owner" of a strip of land requiring the street on which the strip abutted to be sewered, &c., was served under section 267 of the Public Health Act, 1875, by posting same on a conspicuous part of the said strip of land:—Held, that the notice was properly served. Sharpley v. Bear, 67 J. P. 442—D.

No Objection to Provisional or Final Apportionment — Subsequent Objection.—Where statutory notices in connection with private street works were served on estate agents as "owners" within the meaning of section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and they took no objection to the final or provisional apportionment of expenses,—Held, that an objection by them after the completion of the works and the final apportionment made, that a wall fronting the street on which the work was done was the property of other persons, was taken too late, and that they were liable for their proportion of the expenses. Wallasey Urban Council v. Walker, 70 J. P. 199; 4 L. G. R. 1042—Bray, J.

Sufficiency of Notice.—Under the Blackburn Improvement Act, 1882, s. 3, a "backroad" is defined as "a road upon which the backs alone of buildings abut." In a notice under the Act requiring the owners to make up certain roads, two roads were described as "backroads between E. Street and K. Street." On one side of each of these two roads the sides and not the backs of houses in E. Street and K. Street abutted:—Held, that as no one could be misled by the misdescription the notice was sufficient. Blackburn Corporation v. Sanderson, 71 L. J. K.B. 590; [1902] 1 K.B. 794; 86 L. T. 304; 66 J. P. 452—C.A.

Limitation of Time—Summary Remedy—Alternative Procedure.—By the Blackburn Improvement Act, 1882, s. 232, damages &c. incurred by the corporation in making up the roads may be recovered summarily before Justices, subject to a limitation of six months imposed by reference to the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 11, "or, if the corporation think fit, in the Superior Courts or any Court of competent jurisdiction":—Held, that the limitation of six months is not applicable to proceedings in the High Court. Ib.

Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell (46 L. J. Ex. 432; 1 Ex. D. 514) and West Ham Local Board v. Maddams (40 J. P. 470) distinguished; and Hammersmith Vestry v. Lowenfeld (65 L. J. Q.B. 662; [1896] 2 Q.B. 278) doubted. Ib.

If in an Act of Parliament power is conferred to take remedy in divers Courts, as a general rule that remedy will, in each Court, be subject to the lex fori of that Court, including the limitation of actions. Ib.

Charge on Premises—Enforcement of Charge—Sale of Premises—Owner Unknown—Action against Unnamed "owner of premises"—Vacant Plots—Substituted Service—Defect in Title.—The plaintiff council, who were entitled to a charge under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on certain premises for certain expenses, were unable to ascertain who was the owner of the premises. With the object of enforcing the charge they commenced an action on the equity side of the County Court expressed to be against "the owner" of the property (describing it), and obtained an order for substituted service of the summons in the action by the publication of a notice of the plaint in certain newspapers, which was done. An order was then made in the action declaring the expenses in question to be a charge on the premises, and giving the council leave to sell the premises for the purpose of enforcing the charge. And by a subsequent order it was declared that upon such sale the owner would be a trustee for the purchaser within the Trustee Act, 1893, and the council were appointed to convey the premises for the estate of the said owner therein. The premises were put up for sale by auction accordingly, and defendant, who was the highest bidder, entered into a written agreement to purchase the premises. The defendant subsequently ascertained the circumstances under which the council had been empowered to sell, and refused to complete the purchase, on the ground that the council could give no title to the premises as against the true owner:—Held, that the defendant's objection to the title was well founded, and that specific performance of the contract of sale could not be ordered at the instance of the council, and also, on the particular facts, that there had been no waiver of the defect of title on the part of the defendant. Wealdstone Urban Council v. Evershed, 3 L. G. R. 722; 69 J. P. 258—D.

Work Undertaken by Local Authority—Time when Expenses become a Charge on Premises—Outgoings.]—Where default is made by an owner in complying with a notice under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to do certain paving works in respect of his property, and the local authority has undertaken the works, the expenses incurred by the local authority for such works first become, within the meaning of section 257 of the Act, a charge on the premises upon the completion of the works. Where, therefore, the owner has agreed to sell the property and to pay the outgoings up to the date of completion, the expenses are payable by the purchaser if the works are not completed till after that date, though at that date an agreement for their execution has been entered into by the local authority and the works are in progress. Stock v. Meakin (69 L. J. Ch. 401; [1900] 1 Ch. 688) followed. Trubbs v. Wynne (66 L. J. Q.B. 116; [1897] 1 Q.B. 74) distinguished. Allen and Driscoll's Contract, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 614; [1904] 2 Ch. 226; 91 L. T. 676; 52 W. R. 681; 68 J. P. 469; 2 L. G. R. 959; 20 T. L. R. 605—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J.—Highett and Bird's Contract, In re (72 L. J. Ch. 220; [1903] 1 Ch. 287), was decided on the assumption that the vendor was in the same position as if he had expressly contracted to make a good title. Ib.

Highway not Repairable by Inhabitants—Urban Authority—Dedication—Carriage-way—Footway.]—An urban authority making good under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, a street not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large has no power to alter the width of the carriage-way or footway forming such street. Robertson v. Bristol Corporation, 69 L. J. Q.B. 590; [1900] 2 Q.B. 193; 82 L. T. 516; 48 W. R. 498; 64 J. P. 389—C.A.

Trespass—Arbitration—West Hartlepool Extension and Improvement Act, 1870.]—By a local Act (the material provisions of which were substantially the same as those of the Public Health Act, 1875) commissioners were created, having duties with regard to streets and buildings within a certain area. In 1878 it was proposed to lay out an estate within such area for building, and plans were submitted to and approved by the commissioners. By an agreement between them and the defendant, he was, on completion of certain roads, to throw eighteen feet of his land into those roads, so as to increase the width to thirty-six feet (which was done), but not to make the roads wider. In 1887 the powers of the commissioners passed to the plaintiff corporation. In 1892 the corporation by an order required the defendant to sewer, drain, level, flag, and metal the roads (being the eighteen feet width which was not on his land), so far as his premises fronted, adjoined, or abutted thereon. The defendant had done the necessary work of sewerage and paving on the eighteen feet portion of his land which he had, as agreed, thrown into the roads for the purpose of making them thirty-six feet wide. The order not having been complied with, the corporation executed the work themselves, and on making request for payment the defendant's agent disputed that the property was liable. A summons was accordingly taken out by the corporation to have the sums expended declared a charge on the property:—Held, that half of each of the roads was a "street" within the meaning of the Act, so as to bring it within the power of the corporation to sewer and pave it compulsorily, at the expense of the adjoining owners, in case of their not complying with a proper notice to do so; that the notice was properly made and served on the defendant; that entry on lands in obedience to the order did not constitute a trespass; and that, as the defendant did not rest his defence on a wrong apportionment, there was no question within the jurisdiction of an arbitrator to decide, and his decision was unnecessary. West Hartlepool Corporation v. Robinson, 77 L. T. 387; 46 W. R. 218; 62 J. P. 35—C.A.

Work done by Urban Authority on Default of Frontagers—Departure from Work Specified in Notice—Sewer Increased in Size for Purpose of Serving Adjacent Area—Recovery of Expenses.]—An urban authority gave notice, under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to the frontagers on a street, requiring them to lay two sewers—a surface-water sewer and a soil sewer—in the street. On the default of the frontagers the authority laid the soil sewer in accordance with the requirements of the notice, and a surface-water sewer of larger dimensions than those required by the notice, in order that the latter sewer might serve to carry off water from the adjacent part of the district as well as from the street itself; and they apportioned on the frontagers, as the expenses incurred in sewerage the street, the amount it would have cost to lay both sewers in accordance with the notice:—Held, that the authority were entitled to recover the amounts so apportioned. Acton Urban Council v. Watts, 1 L. G. R. 594; 67 J. P. 400—Kekewich, J.

Owner Required by Local Authority to do Work which they are Liable to do—Work done as a Volunteer—Right of Owner to Recover Cost.]—The owner of a house, who was enlarging his premises, was required by the local authority's surveyor (amongst other things) to take up and relay the back drain of the house (which was in fact a sewer), and to construct an interception chamber or manhole; and these works the owner, upon being told that they must be done, though no actual steps were taken to enforce their execution, agreed to do under protest, and did do under the direction and by order of the surveyor of the local authority, but without any legal proceedings being taken against him, and without serious threat of such proceedings. The liability in law for carrying out these works rested on the local authority. In an action by the owner to recover the cost of the works from the local authority, on the ground that he was compelled by them to do works which the local authority were compellable by law to do,—Held, that the owner in the execution of these works was acting as a volunteer and not under compulsion, and was therefore not entitled to recover, although without legal proceedings, or the threat of such, there may be sufficient compulsion to prevent a person being regarded as a volunteer. Ellis v. Bromley Rural Council, 81 L. T. 224; 63 J. P. 711—Ridley, J.

Covenant to Maintain Road until "taken to" by Local Authority.]—The defendant in the course of developing certain building land, in the year 1888, formed a road on the boundary between his property and land belonging to the plaintiff, and laid a sewer under it. The plaintiff contributed towards the expense, and in consideration of such contribution the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff that the plaintiff should not be under any liability to contribute to the maintenance or repair of the road or sewer, or any works connected therewith, but that the same should be wholly maintained by the defendant until the same should be taken to by the parish or some other local authority. In 1900 the local authority made the road up under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, at the expense of the frontagers, and afterwards declared it a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled under the covenant to recover from the defendant the share of the expense of making up the road apportioned on the plaintiff under the section. Moore v. Todd, 67 J. P. 238; 1 L. G. R. 113—Bigham, J.

Apportionment of Expenses—Functions of Surveyor—Remedy of Frontager.]—The sole function of a surveyor or arbitrator appointed in reference to the apportionment of paving expenses is to apportion among the various frontagers the figure which is given to him, and upon which the notice is given, and which the local authority have decided to by the proper amount. Where the local authority have no jurisdiction to direct the works ordered, the Justices can entertain an objection by a frontager, but where the objection goes not to the whole jurisdiction, but only to a part, and the local authority may have come to a wrong decision as to a part, that decision, although it may be wrong, being within their jurisdiction, the Justices have no power to disregard. The frontager's remedy is by appeal to the Local Government Board. Hanwell Urban Council and Smith, In re, 68 J. P. 496; 2 L. G. R. 1350—Channell, J.

Proceedings before Magistrates—Injunction—Jurisdiction—Rules of Supreme Court, Order XXV. rule 5.]—Under the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888, s. 3, the Legislature having provided a mode of legal proceeding before magistrates in case of any offence against its enactments, the Court will be very slow to exercise its jurisdiction (if any exists, as to which quære) to grant an injunction restraining a local authority from pursuing such statutory remedy, or to make a declaratory order under Order XXV. rule 5, inconsistent with a right to pursue the statutory remedy, in a case where it is not shewn that any trespass on the part of the local authority is either threatened or intended. Auckland (Lord) v. Westminster Local Board (41 L. J. Ch. 723; L. R. 7 Ch. 597), Kerr v. Preston Corporation (46 L. J. Ch. 409; 6 Ch. D. 463), and Stannard v. St. Giles', Camberwell, Vestry (51 L. J. (5) Frontagers.

Notice to Frontagers—Apportioned Expenses—Arbitration.]—The service of a notice to sewer upon all the frontagers of a street being a condition precedent under section 150, the omission to serve one of the frontagers is a valid objection to the subsequent proceedings. But where the question of the apportioned expenses of sewerage have been referred to arbitration under the Act, such objection must be taken before the arbitrators, and it is too late to take it in an action to enforce payment of the amount found due by the award. Handsworth Urban Council v. Derrington, ante, col. 1372.

Objections by Frontagers.]—The appellant council obtained the sanction of the Conservators of Epping Forest to convert an old path, which was subject to the Epping Forest Act, 1878, into a new street, on the terms that they, the appellants, should make, repair, and maintain such street. Acting under the powers of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, the appellants made the new street and apportioned the expenses on the frontagers, of whom the respondent was one. No objection was made by the respondent under section 7 of the Act of 1892:—Held, that the new street was made by the appellants under the statute and not under any agreement with the Epping Forest Conservators, and therefore that the respondent was liable for the apportioned amount of expenses, and further that any objection that the road was not a "street" within the meaning of the Act could only be dealt with by being raised at the proper time under section 7. Woodford Urban Council v. Henwood, 64 J. P. 148—D.

Street Repairable by Inhabitants at Large—Completion by Paving, Kerbing, and Flagging—Frontager.]—Section 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which imposes upon urban authorities the duty of causing all streets repairable by the inhabitants at large to be levelled, paved, metalled, flagged, channelled, altered, and repaired as occasion may require, has not the effect of repealing section 20 of the Ashton-under-Lyne Improvement Act, 1849, which empowers the corporation to call upon the frontagers in any street which is not completed to their satisfaction, to complete it, and, in default of the frontagers doing the work, authorises the corporation to do the work and recover the expense from them. Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation v. Pugh, 67 L. J. Q.B. 32; [1898] 1 Q.B. 75; 77 L. T. 583; 46 W. R. 100; 61 J. P. 171—aff'd.

Effect of General or previous Special Act.]—Section 340 of the Public Health Act, 1875, expressly reserves the powers given by local Acts, and sub-section 2 of that section, which provides that a local authority shall not be exempt from the performance of any duty under the Act by reason of any local Act, has not the effect of depriving the corporation of their right to call upon the frontagers to do the work under the local Act. Id.

Section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which casts the entire maintenance of main roads upon the county council, does not repeal section 53 of the Huddersfield Improvement Act, 1871, which empowers the corporation to call upon frontagers to make and repair footways. Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation v. Pugh (67 L. J. Q.B. 32) followed. Lodge v. Huddersfield Corporation (No. 1), 67 L. J. Q.B. 568;

Lands "fronting or adjoining" Streets—Railway—Bridge Carrying Street over Railway.]—

The Greenock Corporation Act, 1893, s. 34, enacts that "the proprietors of all lands and heritages in" an uncompleted street (that is, a street of which, inter alia, the causeway had not been made), "or fronting or adjoining both sides of the line of such street," shall pay and relieve the corporation of the expense of the completion of the street in proportion to the length of the frontage of their properties. In 1884 a railway company acquired house property in an old but uncompleted street in Greenock, and demolished the houses on both sides and excavated the ground for the purpose of their line, which ran under the street at right-angles to it. For the portion of the street excavated a bridge with parapets and steps giving access to the railway station underneath was substituted. The bridge with the parapets was the property of the company. In 1903 the corporation decided to complete the formation of the street by causewaying the carriage-way, &c.:—Held, that the railway company were liable, as proprietors of adjoining property, under section 34 of the Act, to pay the expense of the formation of the street so far as carried by the bridge. Great Eastern Railway v. Hackney Board of Works (52 L. J. M.C. 105; 8 App. Cas. 637) distinguished. Cameron v. Caledonian Railway, 6 F. 763—Ct. of Sess.

Agreement as to Making up of Roads—

Whether Ultra Vires.]—By a deed made between an urban authority and the owners and frontagers on certain roads it was agreed that such roads should be accepted by the urban authority as public highways repairable by the inhabitants at large, but the urban authority was to have the same power of requiring the frontagers to sewer, level, and pave those roads when their land was actually occupied for building purposes as if the roads had not been accepted by the urban authority as public highways. Subsequently the urban authority adopted the Private Street Works Act, 1892:—Held, first, that if the deed meant that the urban authority undertook not to enforce the Private Street Works Act, 1892, as against the frontagers on those roads it was ultra vires; and secondly, that if the deed did not bear this did not preclude the urban authority from recovering the apportioned expenses from the frontagers. Folkestone Corporation v. Rook, 71 J. P. 550—D.

Road Taken Over by Local Authority by Agreement—Reservation of Powers—Liability of Frontagers.]—

Under an agreement made in 1879 between a railway company, certain property owners, and the local authority, it was agreed that a road should be dedicated to the public and taken over by the local authority as a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, but that the local authority should retain the same powers of requiring the respective owners and occupiers for the time being of land fronting, adjoining, or abutting on the road to sewer and make up, &c., all or such parts of the road, carriage-way, or footway as were not already sewered and made up, and their rights under the Public Health Act, 1875, and a local Act were also reserved to the local authority. At the date of the agreement, the road was properly made up, but the footway was not paved. The local authority having decided, under the powers conferred by the Private Street Works Act, 1892, to pave the footway, they served notices of apportionment on the frontagers:—Held, that the frontagers were not liable, as the road was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and the powers which the local authority attempted to enforce did not apply to such a highway, and the local authority could not, under the agreement, make the frontagers liable. Folkestone Corporation v. Marsh, 94 L. T. 511; 4 L. G. R. 382; 70 J. P. 113—D.

Recovery of Expenses—Agreement to Widen

Street—No Consideration Amounting to Purchase—No Conveyance to Corporation—Liability for Expenses.]—A lane forming a highway, repairable by the inhabitants at large, was widened by throwing into it strips of land in pursuance of an agreement made in 1883, between the urban authority and the then owners of the soil, providing that, for the purpose of amicably settling disputes as to the extent of public rights over the lane, the owners, so soon as they should lay out the land for building, should lay out the lane as a road forty feet wide. The urban authority subsequently made up the whole road as widened under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and apportioned part of the expenses upon the defendant as a frontager. On a summons asking for a declaration of charge upon the defendant's land for these expenses,—Held, that the agreement of 1883 was not a purchase by the corporation under section 154 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and that the defendant was liable under the last paragraph of section 150. Evans v. Newport Sanitary Authority (59 L. J. M.C. 8; 24 Q.B. D. 264) applied. Portsmouth Corporation v. Hall, 97 L. T. 43; 5 L. G. R. 536; 71 J. P. 299; 23 T. L. R. 449—Joyce, J. Reversed, 71 J. P. 564—C.A.

Indemnity by Local Authority to Frontager—

Whether Effective for all Time.]—Two frontagers in a street, which was not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, having paid a portion of the expenses incurred by the local authority in making part of the causeway, the local authority passed this resolution (a copy of which was delivered to the two frontagers): "Resolved that an indemnity be given to J. I. and E. S. against liability on account of further expenses that may be occasioned in connection with New Street":—Held, that this was not evidence of a bargain that there was to be an indemnity for all time, and therefore that the local authority were not precluded when, many years after the date of the resolution, they put in force the Private Street Works Act, 1892, from including the premises of the two frontagers in making the provisional apportionment. Dodworth Urban Council v. Ibbotson, 67 J. P. 132—D.

Surveyor's Certificate of Total Cost—Conclu-siveness of.]—Where an arbitration is held under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the arbitrator is bound by the certificate of the urban authority's surveyor as to the total cost of the work to be apportioned among the frontagers, and he can only enquire into the correctness of the apportionment. Cawston and Bromley Urban Council, In re, 64 J. P. 760—D. And see col. 1405.

(6) Private Street Works.

Paving Expenses—Liability of Owner of Premises Fronting Street—Recovery of Expenses—Summary Remedy—Owner of the Premises "when the works are completed."—Expenses incurred by a local authority under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, in sewerage and paving a street, not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, may be recovered under section 257 of the Act in a summary manner from the owner of premises fronting the street, notwithstanding that after the works have been completed, but before the date of service of a demand for his proportion of such expenses, he has agreed to sell and has conveyed the premises to a purchaser. Dictum of Cockburn, C.J., in Reg. v. Swindon Local Board (4 Q.B. D. 305) disapproved. Millard v. Balby-with-Hexthorpe Urban Council, 74 L. J. K.B. 45; [1905] 1 K.B. 60; 91 L. T. 730; 53 W. R. 165; 69 J. P. 13; 2 L. G. R. 1248; 21 T. L. R. 8—C.A.

— Liability of Owner of Adjoining Premises—Owner in Default—Owner "when the works are completed."—When expenses have been incurred by a local authority under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, in paving a street not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, an apportioned part of those expenses may be recovered under section 257 of the Act in a summary manner from a person who, when the works are completed, is the owner of premises adjoining the street, although when notice was given to do the work he had not become the owner and had parted with his ownership before demand was made for payment of the apportioned part. East Ham District Council v. Aylett, 74 L. J. K.B. 471; [1905] 2 K.B. 22; 92 L. T. 420; 53 W. R. 492; 69 J. P. 205; 3 L. G. R. 541; 21 T. L. R. 406—D.

Premises Fronting on Street but Outside Boundary of District.—Where the boundary-line between the districts of two local authorities runs along the kerb of the footpath on one side of a street, the local authority in whose district the carriage-way is has no power under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, or otherwise, to apportion upon the frontagers whose premises are in the other district a share of the expenses incurred by that local authority under the section in the execution of works to the carriage-way or the footpath within their own district. Hornsey Corporation v. Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, 75 L. J. K.B. 348; [1906] 1 K.B. 521; 94 L. T. 700; 54 W. R. 528; 70 J. P. 140; 4 L. G. R. 581; 22 T. L. R. 346—D.

Service of Notice on "Owner."—A local authority, acting under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, paved and sewered a street and apportioned the expenses upon the frontagers. The documents required by sections 6 and 12 to be served upon the owners of the premises charged were served upon the mortgagor of certain premises, the local authority not being aware that the premises had been mortgaged, and that the mortgagee was in possession. The local authority claimed a charge upon the premises for the expenses, and threatened to sell the same to raise the amount:—Held, that the mortgagee of the premises, being in possession, was the "owner" within the meaning of the Act, and that, as he had not been served, the defendants were not entitled to sell. Maguire v. Leigh-on-Sea Urban Council, 95 L. T. 319; 70 J. P. 479; 4 L. G. R. 979—Kekewich, J.

Notice of Objection to Provisional Apportionment—Highway Repairable by Inhabitants at Large.—Upon a notice of objection to a provisional apportionment given by an owner of premises to an urban authority under section 7, sub-section (a) of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, evidence may be given by the owner of the premises that the alleged street or part of a street is a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large for the purpose of shewing that the alleged street does not come within the definition of "street" contained in section 5 of the Act. Carey v. Beahill Corporation, 73 L. J. K.B. 74; [1904] 1 K.B. 142; 90 L. T. 58; 68 J. P. 78; 2 L. G. R. 367—D.

Objection of Owners that Street is a Highway Repairable by Inhabitants at Large—Objection Allowed by Justices—Second Proposal for same Street—Res Judicata.—The Justices of the city of Wakefield in 1898 disallowed, on the objection of the owners, a scheme of the corporation for private street works in a street in the city, on the ground that the street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and no appeal was taken from the order. In 1901 a fresh scheme was prepared, and the same objection taken. A Court of summary jurisdiction refused to hear an application on the matter on the ground that it was res judicata:—Held, that the decision of the Court of summary jurisdiction was correct. Reg. v. Hutchings (50 L. J. M.C. 35; 6 Q.B. D. 800) distinguished and explained. Wakefield Corporation v. Cooke, 73 L. J. K.B. 88; [1904] A.C. 31; 89 L. T. 707; 52 W. R. 321; 68 J. P. 225; 2 L. G. R. 270; 20 T. L. R. 115—H.L. (E.)

Resolution of Urban Authority—Objection—"Insufficient or unreasonable"—Jurisdiction of Justices.—A Court of summary jurisdiction, upon the hearing of a frontager's objection under section 7 (d) of the Private Streets Works Act, 1892, to the resolution of an urban authority to pave and channel a street, have no power, when determining whether the proposed work as specified in the plans and estimates is "insufficient or unreasonable," to consider the width of the street and the fact that in their view the street should be widened as well as paved. Mansfield Corporation v. Butterworth, 87 L. J. Q.B. 709; [1898] 2 Q.B. 274; 78 L. T. 527; 46 W. R. 650; 62 J. P. 500—D.

The word "insufficient" in section 7 (d) means insufficiency of the proposed work to carry out the object specified, and not that the proposed work ought to include something else. "Unreasonable" means an unreasonable scheme of work with reference to the street itself, and not that the scheme is unreasonable because it does not go so far as to provide that the street shall be widened. Ib.

Semble, that the street must be taken to have been "severed to the satisfaction of the urban authority," within the meaning of section 6 of the Act. Ib.

Memorial to Local Authority by Frontagers—Memorial not Adjudicated on as Objection—Proceedings de novo by Local Authority.]—The plaintiffs resolved to execute private street works under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, and the usual proceedings were taken accordingly. Within the period prescribed for taking objection to the provisional apportionment certain of the frontagers presented a memorial to the plaintiffs stating, inter alia, that they would prefer that the street should not be taken over by the plaintiffs and that the proposed works were unreasonable and unnecessary, and praying that the plaintiffs would make further enquiry before carrying out the works. The plaintiffs did not cause the questions raised by the memorial to be brought as objections before a Court of summary jurisdiction, but, after enquiry, modified their scheme as to the works to be done, and caused all the steps prescribed by the Act to be taken afresh with reference to the modified scheme as if it had been an original scheme. The works comprised in the modified scheme were executed, and a final apportionment of the expenses was made:—Held, on the ground that the memorial did not contain any effective objection to the provisional apportionment, that the proceedings were validly taken, and that the plaintiffs could recover the sums apportioned by the final apportionment. Southampton Corporation v. Lord, 67 J. P. 189; 1 L. G. R. 824—C.A.

Semble (per MATHEW, L.J.), that, even had the memorial contained an effective objection, the plaintiffs could have recovered, on the ground that it is competent to the local authority to drop a scheme for private street works under the Act, after objection has been taken to the provisional apportionment, and, without having the objection determined, to proceed de novo with reference to the same street. Ib.

Recovery of Expenses—Matters that could have been Raised by Objection.]—It is no defence to proceedings for the recovery of the expenses of private street works under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, to shew that the provisional or final apportionment includes a sum representing the cost of a sewer previously laid by one of the frontagers in a portion of the street. If a frontager desires to question the validity of proceedings under the Act on such a ground he must do so by way of objection to the apportionment. Teddington Urban Council v. Vile, 4 L. G. R. 782; 70 J. P. 381—D. And see Portsmouth Corporation v. Hall, 6 L. G. R. 16; 71 J. P. 664; 24 L. T. R. 76.

Apportionment of Expenses—Summary Proceedings—Improper Execution of Works—Negligence of Surveyor—Jurisdiction of Justices.]—In a summons under section 14 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, the magistrate has no jurisdiction to enquire whether the works have been properly executed or whether the surveyor to the local authority has been negligent in passing them. Hayles v. Sandown Urban Council, 72 L. J. K.B. 48; [1903] 1 K.B. 169;

88 L. T. 61; 51 W. R. 348; 67 J. P. 177; 1 L. G. R. 187—D.

Apportioned Expenses—Action by Local Authority for Declaration of Charge and Power of Sale—Competency of Action.]—The provisions of section 13 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, do not preclude a local authority from maintaining an action asking for a declaration of charge on premises included in the final apportionment in respect of private street works, an order for enquiries as to incumbrances, and an order enabling the local authority to apply for a sale of the premises for the purpose of enforcing their charge. West Ham Borough Council v. Sharp, 76 L. J. K.B. 307; [1907] 1 K.B. 445; 96 L. T. 280; 71 J. P. 100; 5 L. G. R. 634—D.

Service of Copy of Resolution Approving Provisional Apportionment.]—Expenses apportioned upon premises in a street under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, cannot be recovered from the owner of the premises unless a copy of the resolution of the local authority approving the provisional apportionment has been served upon him pursuant to the provisions of the Act. Wirral Rural Council v. Carter, 72 L. J. K.B. 332; [1903] 1 K.B. 646; 89 L. T. 171; 51 W. R. 414; 67 J. P. 81; 1 L. G. R. 206—D.

Service on "Owner" not Described by Name.]—Service upon a reputed owner in occupation of the premises is not sufficient. Semble, per CHANNELL, J., a copy of the resolution addressed and sent to the "owner" of the premises, without naming him, at the premises, is effectively served upon the owner under the Act. Ib.

Final Apportionment Charge—Vendor and Purchaser—"Outgoings"—Liability of Vendor—Covenants for Title.]—The Private Street Works Act, 1892, which has to be read and construed as one with the Public Health Act, 1875, makes no alteration in the time when a charge for street works by an urban authority takes effect under that Act—namely, at the date of the completion of the works. Where, therefore, works have been completed under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, before the date of a contract for the sale of land which is liable for part of the expenses of such works, the vendor will be required to pay the apportioned amount of the expenses, although the final apportionment is not made until after the date of the contract. Stock v. Meakin, 69 L. J. Ch. 401; [1900] 1 Ch. 683; 82 L. T. 248; 48 W. R. 420—C.A.

The charge for such works is an "outgoing" which the vendor is liable to discharge under the usual clause in a contract for sale for the payment of "outgoings" by the vendor, and is also an incumbrance which the vendor is liable for under the covenant against incumbrances implied by a conveyance "as beneficial owner." Ib.

Railway Company—Exemption of Land of, under Local Act—Land of Railway Company used "solely as a part of their line of railway or sidings."]—Land of a railway company used as a depository for ashes and cinders produced by their engines is not land used by the company "solely as a part of their line of railway or sidings" within a section of a local Act exempting railway companies from liability to contribute to the expense of private street works in respect of land belonging to them and so used. Carlisle Corporation v. Saul, 97 L. T. 514; 71 J. P. 502; 5 L. G. R. 1128—Phillimore, J.

A railway company may be exempt under section 22 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, from liability to contribute to expenses of private street works under that Act, in respect of land belonging to them and abutting on the street, although, for the moment, the land is not physically used for the purposes of their line of railway, siding, station, or works; but, in order to escape liability in such a case, it is incumbent on the railway company to give evidence that the land will in the future be used solely for those purposes. Rea v. Jones, 5 L. G. R. 722—D.

Resolutions—Objections—Amendment—Jurisdiction of Justices.—Under sub-section 1 of section 8 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, the Justices have power to amend a scheme for street works resolved upon by an urban authority under section 6 of the Act, so as to alter the scheme from one for making up the whole of the road into a scheme for making up that portion of the road only which is a private road, leaving the other portion not made up. Twickenham Urban Council v. Munton, 68 L. J. Ch. 601; [1899] 2 Ch. 603; 81 L. T. 136; 47 W. R. 660—C.A.

The Justices have, when acting under the powers of the sub-section, a discretion to say whether or no they will adjourn the hearing of the objections to the proposals of the urban authority, and direct further notices to be given, so as to allow other persons affected an opportunity of objecting. Id.

Objection to Proposal of Local Authority—Decision of Justices that Street is Highway Repairable by Inhabitants at Large—Second Proposal as to same Street—Res Judicata.—In 1898 the Corporation of Wakefield acting under section 29 of the Wakefield Corporation Act, 1887 (sections 29, 30, and 31 of which are in all material respects identical with sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892), approved a scheme for private street works upon part of a street within their district. Objection was taken under section 30 by the frontagers that the street was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. A Court of summary jurisdiction under section 31 determined that the objection was valid. In 1900 the corporation under section 29 approved a fresh scheme for works upon a larger part of the same street. Objection was taken under section 30 by the frontagers upon the same ground as on the previous occasion. A Court of summary jurisdiction under section 31 determined that the matter was res judicata, and refused to hear evidence upon the merits of the objection:—Held, on Case stated, that the determination of the Court of summary jurisdiction was correct. Reg. v. Hutchins (50 L. J. M.C. 85; 6 Q.B. D. 800) distinguished and explained. Wakefield Corporation v. Cooke, 72 L. J. K.B. 345; [1903] 1 K.B. 417; 83 L. T. 225; 51 W. R. 305; 67 J. P. 121; 1 L. G. R. 337—C.A.

Appeal to Quarter Sessions.—An appeal will lie to quarter sessions from the decision of Justices under section 8 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, upon the objections of an owner to the proposals of an urban authority upon any of the grounds set out in section 7. Pearce v. Maidenhead Corporation, 76 L. J. K.B. 591; [1907] 2 K.B. 96; 96 L. T. 639; 71 J.P. 230; 5 L. G. R. 622—D.

Charge on Premises—Payment by Tenant for Life—Settled Land—Incumbrance.—The charge provided for by section 17 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, is intended to enable the limited owners of premises charged with expenses incurred under the Act to raise money for the payment to the local authority of these expenses; it does not affect the right of a tenant for life who has himself paid the local authority to keep alive for his own benefit the charge constituted by section 13 of the Act. Pizzi, In re; Scrivener v. Aldridge, 76 L. J. Ch. 87; [1907] 1 Ch. 67; 95 L. T. 722; 71 J.P. 58; 5 L. G. R. 86—Neville, J.

Telegraph Company Laying Wires or Tubes under Street—Jurisdiction of Highway Authority—"Difference"—Former Jurisdiction of Magistrate or County Court Judge to Arbitrate.—By the Telegraph Act, 1892, the statutory power which a stipendiary magistrate or County Court Judge had to hear and determine an appeal from the refusal of a highway authority to permit a telegraph company licensed by the Postmaster-General to break up a street for the purpose of laying wires or tubes has been rescinded; and the increased power given to such local authorities by that Act to veto the laying down of wires or tubes under any street within their district is now final. National Telephone Co. v. Tunbridge Wells Corporation, 83 L. T. 525; 48 W. R. 636; 64 J. P. 756—D.

Telephone Company—Delegation of Powers by Postmaster-General—Consent of Local Authority—Refusal of Consent—Arbitration by County Court Judge—Jurisdiction.]—The Postmaster-General delegated certain powers to the N. T. Company under the Telegraph Acts, and the company made an agreement with the corporation of T. W. to exercise those powers within the borough in respect of certain specified works. It was provided by the agreement that, except in the case of the specified works, the company should not exercise any of the powers conferred on the Postmaster-General by the Acts, in respect of which the consent of the corporation was necessary, without the further written consent of the corporation. The company applied for the consent of the corporation to further works, but the consent was refused. The company then applied to the County Court Judge to arbitrate, under section 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, which provides that any difference arising between the Postmaster-General and a local authority shall be referred to the County Court Judge as an arbitrator:—Held, that the County Court Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the application of the company, inasmuch as the corporation had an absolute right to refuse their consent to the proposed work and had not consented thereto. National Telephone Co. v. Tumbidge Wells Corporation, 85 L. T. 368—C.A. Affirming, 48 W. R. 686; 64 J. P. 756—D.

Obstruction to Public Place—Statutory Right—Right of Local Authority to Remove Obstruction.]—The appellants, in exercise of an alleged statutory right, placed their wires across the streets of which the respondents were the duly appointed guardians. The appellants failed to prove the existence of the statutory right, and the respondents removed the wires, whereupon the appellants brought an action for damages:—Held, that, even apart from evidence of the respondents' power to prohibit the stretching of wires across the streets or to remove them if placed without their consent, the action failed for want of proof of authority so to place the wires. National Telephone Co. v. St. Peter Port, Guernsey (Constables), 69 L. J. P.C. 74; [1900] A.C. 317; 82 L. T. 398—P.C.

(hb) Tramways.

Local Authority Created by Statute—Powers—Purchase of Tramways—Running of Omnibuses—Ultra Vires.]—Where a corporation is the creation of statute its powers are confined to such as are expressly, or by necessary implication, conferred by the statute. Thus the London County Council, constituted by the Local Government Act, 1888, and having thereunder and in virtue of other statutes the power of acquiring and working tramways, is not entitled to run a service of omnibuses, such service not being a necessary incident of the business of a tramway company. London County Council v. Att.-Gen., 71 L. J. Ch. 263; [1902] A.C. 165; 86 L. T. 161; 50 W. R. 497; 66 J. P. 340—H.L. (E.)

Section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which provides that the council of a county is to "be in the like position in all respects, as the council of a borough divided into wards," does not confer upon such county the powers of a corporation created by charter, but merely assimilates the procedure of the one with that of the other. Ib. And see TRAMWAYS.

(ii) Water Supply.

Waterworks—Expenses of Construction and Maintenance—Liability for—Contributory Place—Persons Taking and Using Water Supply.]—Where a district council provides a supply of water to a contributory place under the power conferred by section 51 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is not incumbent upon the council (although semble that it has a discretion) to repay the instalments of principal of, and interest on, a loan contracted for the provision of the supply by means of water rates and water rents charged solely upon the consumers of the water. The cost of construction and maintenance of the necessary works and of the supply generally falls within the category of special expenses mentioned in section 229 of the Act. No distinction is made by that section between capital and current expenditure. In relief of both is to be carried to the account any sum which can practically and reasonably be raised by water rates and water rents; and the balance, so far as it is capable of being estimated by unbroken pence in the pound in a rate upon the contributory place, is to be charged upon and paid by the contributory place. Horn v. Sleaford Rural Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 724; [1898] 2 Q.B. 358; 78 L. T. 722; 46 W. R. 555; 62 J. P. 502—D.

Cost of Providing Supply to House—Limit as to Amount—Remedy of Owner.]—The limitation as to the cost of providing a water supply to a house contained in section 3 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, does not apply to section 62 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Where, under section 62 of the Act of 1875, an owner is required by the local authority to obtain a water supply from an unreasonable distance, the remedy of the owner is by way of appeal to the Local Government Board under section 268 of that Act. West Lancashire Rural Council v. Ogilvy, 68 L. J. Q.B. 215; [1899] 1 Q.B. 377; 80 L. T. 162; 47 W. R. 363; 63 J. P. 166—D.

Riparian Proprietor—Water Supply of District—Right to Flow of Water—"Injurious affect."]—A local authority has no right either as riparian proprietor or under section 332 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to interfere with the common-law right of a lower riparian proprietor to the accustomed flow of water to his land, even though such interference causes no actual damage; and an injunction will be granted to restrain such interference. Roberts v. Gwyrfael Rural Council, 68 L. J. Ch. 757; [1899] 2 Ch. 603; 81 L. T. 465; 48 W. R. 51; 64 J. P. 52—C.A.

The local authority "injuriously affect" a stream or the supply of water contained in a stream within the meaning of section 332 if their acts amount to such an interference with the common-law right. Ib.

"House."]—Justices found that certain premises were not a house within section 62 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (which enables the local authority in case a house is not supplied with water to give the owner notice to obtain such supply, and, failing compliance with such notice, the local authority is authorised to recover water rates as if the owner had demanded a supply of water):—Held, that, the question being one of fact, the Court would not interfere with the Justices' decision. Wootten v. Bishop, 96 L. T. 705; 5 L. G. R. 760; 71 J. P. 334—D.

Water-supply to Adjoining District—Contract for Supply—Enlargement of District—Sanction of Local Government Board.—The sanction of the Local Government Board required by section 61 of the Public Health Act, 1875, for the supply of water by a local authority to the local authority of an adjoining district, is a sanction merely to the supply, and not to the terms of the agreement under which such supply is to be furnished. The sanction can be properly limited to particular places in a district. Soot-hill Upper Urban Council v. Wakefield Rural Council, 74 L. J. Ch. 703; [1905] 2 Ch. 516; 93 L. T. 711; 3 L. G. R. 1208; 69 J. P. 447; 21 T. L. R. 766—C.A.

Prior to 1895 the plaintiffs made certain contracts with the defendants for the supply of water, the sanction of the Local Government Board under section 61 of the Public Health Act, 1875, being obtained for the supply to particular places within the defendants' district. In 1895 it was contemplated that the plaintiffs should furnish a larger supply for the defendants' whole district, and a new agreement was made whereby the plaintiffs agreed to deliver and the defendants to take for the supply of their district, or such part thereof as they might wish to supply, or any place outside their district which they might contract to supply, the quantities agreed on, the minimum being largely increased beyond the minimum under the previous contracts. Clause 9 provided that unless within six months the sanction of the Board to the agreement should be obtained or found to be unnecessary, the agreement should be void. The Board having refused to give a general sanction to the extended area contemplated by the agreement,—Held, that the previous sanctions were limited to the particular places, and that, no sanction having been given to the extended area contemplated by the agreement, clause 9 applied and the agreement was void. Ib.

Pollution—User—No Proprietary Title or Licence.—The proprietor of a hydropathic establishment held entitled to recover damages from the defendant council in respect of their negligence in polluting the water supply to his establishment, although he had no proprietary title to, or any leave or licence to use, the said water. Fergusson v. Malvern Urban Council, 72 J. P. 101—Lawrance, J.

Water Rate—Amount Chargeable—Extension of Borough Boundaries—Right of Corporation to Differentiate the Water Rate.—A corporation, under a Waterworks Act, were entitled to charge for the supply of water for domestic use to any dwelling-house a sum not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the net rateable value, and they were also empowered, if there were a deficiency in the amount of the water account for any year, to make up the deficiency out of the general district rate. The corporation, whose boundaries were extended by an extension order, had been charging a uniform water rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. over the whole borough, but for certain reasons they reduced it in the old borough to 5 per cent., while retaining it in the added part at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.:—Held, that the corporation had no power so to differentiate the water rate, but must charge the same water rate over the whole borough. Northampton Corporation v. Ellen, 87 L. T. 335; 66 J. P. 744—Bigham, J.

"Rates" in Added Part not to Exceed a Specified Sum—Whether Water Rates are Included as "Rates."—An article of the extension order provided that the general district rates to be levied in the added part should not in any one year for a number of years exceed such an amount in the pound as, when added to the poor rate and to the borough rate "and any other rate made by the corporation" in the same year would make up a certain specified total on each pound of the rateable value:—Held, that the water rate was not a "rate" within the meaning of the words "any other rate" in this article, but was merely the price to be paid for the water supplied, and that the water rate therefore, was not to be included in the computation of such total. Ib.

Public Well—Licence to take Water.—A local authority, in whom a public well is vested by section 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875 has no power to grant a licence to abstract water from the well for the purpose of bottling and selling, so as to sensibly diminish the supply of water to riparian proprietors along a stream which is fed by the well. Mostyn v. Atherton, 68 L. J. Ch. 629; [1899] 2 Ch. 360 81 L. T. 356; 48 W. R. 163—Byrne, J. See also WATER.

Supply to Local Authority in Bulk.—See WATER.

8. STATUTORY POWERS, ACTS DONE IN EXERCISE OF

Officer of County Council—Act done by Direction of Council in Pursuance of Statutory Duty—Passing over Disputed Right of Way.—An officer of a county council, to which the duties of a district council as to a public right of way within their district under section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, had been duly transferred under sub-section 4 of that section by the direction of the council drove along the way in assertion of the public right to use it as a public highway. The owner of the land over which the way ran having brought an action for trespass against the officer, judgment was obtained by the defendant:—Held, that the action was commenced for an act done in pursuance or execution, or intended execution, of an Act of Parliament, within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and that the judgment carried costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client under that section. Greenwell v. Howell, 69 L. J. Q.B. 461; [1900] 1 Q.B. 535; 82 L. T. 183; 4 W. R. 307—C.A.

Damage by "Full compensation"—Legal Proceedings—Party and Party Costs—Solicitor

Client Costs.—Where a person against whom a local authority has instituted legal proceedings under the Public Health Act, 1875, obtains judgment therein with costs, the provision of section 308 of the Act, that "full compensation shall be made to such person by the local authority," does not entitle such person, the costs having been taxed as between party and party and paid to him by the local authority, to recover, in an arbitration under the section to settle the amount of compensation, the difference between party and party costs and all the expenses reasonably and properly incurred by him throughout the proceedings. Barnett v. Eccles Corporation, 69 L. J. Q.B. 834; [1900] 2 Q.B. 423; 83 L. T. 66; 64 J. P. 692—C.A. And see PUBLIC AUTHORITIES ACT.

9. RATES AND RATING.

Meeting of Owners and Ratepayers of Borough—Demand for Poll.—A ratepayer who seconds a demand for a poll "demands" a poll within the meaning of rule 6 of Schedule III. of the Public Health Act, 1875. Re v. Dover (Mayor); Bradley, Ex parte, 72 L. J. K.B. 210; [1903] 1 K.B. 668; 88 L. T. 296; 67 J. P. 81; 1 L. G. R. 266—D.

"Expenses incurred."—The expression "expenses incurred" in section 232 of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878 (corresponding to section 229 of the Public Health Act, 1875), means actual or estimated expenses. Re v. Local Government Board, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 206—C.A.

General District Rate—Valuation List—Reduction of Rate—Time when Cause of Complaint for Non-payment Arises.—Where, in view of a particular assessment of premises to the poor rate, a reduction has been made in the valuation list upon which a general district rate has been based, and the figures of the general district rate have been amended in accordance with the reduction, the rate so amended becomes from that date the instrument rendering the ratepayer liable to pay the reduced amount. If he neglect to pay it, a cause of complaint under section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, arises within six months from the date of the amendment, and not within six months of the making of the general district rate. Keeton v. Sheffield Coal Co., 70 L.J. K.B. 374; [1901] 2 K.B. 26; 84 L. T. 387; 49 W. R. 349; 65 J. P. 341—D.

Retrospective Charges included in Estimate—Validity—Right of Appeal.—Where an urban authority in pursuance of section 218 of the Public Health Act, 1875, before proceeding to make a general district rate, causes an estimate to be prepared of the money required for the purposes in respect of which the rate is to be made, and the estimate contains items for retrospective charges and expenses incurred more than six months before the making of the rate, contrary to the provisions of section 210 of the Act, an appeal lies against the rate. Smith v. Southampton Corporation, 71 L. J. K.B. 639; [1902] 2 K.B. 244; 87 L. T. 171; 50 W. R. 651; 67 J. P. 5—D.

Improvement of Drainage System—Differential Rate.—A drainage board purporting to exercise powers conferred upon them by a local drainage Act and the Sewers Acts levied within their district drainage rates based upon a differential classification of the rateable properties in accordance with the quantum of supposed benefit derived from the drainage by each property, apart from its contiguity with other properties:—Held, that such rates should be equal rates upon all properties benefited, and that the board had no power to make such differential classification. Metropolitan Board of Works v. Vauxhall Bridge Co. (26 L. J. Q.B. 253; 7 E. & B. 964) commented on. Knighit v. Langport Drainage Board, 67 L. J. Q.B. 432; [1898] 1 Q.B. 588; 78 L. T. 260; 46 W. R. 392; 62 J. P. 245—D.

Annual Sums Raised to Support County Lunatic Asylums Fund—County and County Borough—Proportions in which Contributions to be Divided—"Assessable value"—"Rateable value."—Sums required to be raised annually for the purposes of a county lunatic asylums board constituted by a local Act of Parliament, and to be divided between the county itself and each of its county boroughs, are, during the continuance of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, to be raised, in accordance with section 24 of the Lancashire County (Lunatic Asylums) Act, 1891, in proportion to the rateable values of the county and county boroughs as ascertained by section 33 of the Local Government Act, 1888, and not in proportion to the assessable values of the county and county boroughs as ascertained by the Act of 1896 and the regulations of the Local Government Board issued under it. Lancashire Asylums Board v. Manchester Corporation, 69 L. J. Q.B. 234; [1900] 1 Q.B. 458; 82 L. T. 1; 48 W. R. 356; 64 J. P. 101—C.A.

Limit Imposed by Local Act—Alteration of Boundaries—Extension of Jurisdiction.—By the Crediton Improvement Act, 1836, after defining the limits of the town of Crediton for the purposes of the Act, the commissioners appointed thereunder were authorised to levy an annual rate on the occupiers of dwelling-houses within the limits of the Act not exceeding 2s. 1d. in the pound, and all persons assessed under the Act were released from liability for the repairs of highways without the limits of the Act. By the Public Health Act, 1875, the district within the local Act became an urban district, and the commissioners became the urban authority. The expenses incurred by them in the execution of the Sanitary Acts were, at the time of the passing of the Public Health Act, 1875, payable out of rates in the nature of general district rates leviable by them throughout the whole of their district. At the time of the passing of the Local Government Act, 1894, the parish of Crediton was partly within and partly without the urban district of Crediton, but by a Confirmation Order of the Local Government Board in 1894 the urban district was extended so as to include the part of the parish outside the former urban district, and it was provided that the district should be deemed to have been extended before the passing of the Act of 1894. The appellant was the occupier of a dwelling-house within the limits of the Improvement Act of 1836. In 1896 the Crediton Urban District Council made a rate for the whole district, including the added area, headed the "Crediton Improvement Rate for the year ending Midsummer, 1897." The rate exceeded the amount in the pound limited by the Improvement Act. It was made to defray expenses to be incurred by the council under the Public Health Act, 1875, including the purposes for which rates were leviable under the Improvement Act; and was for the repair of highways, both within the limits of the Improvement Act and also in the added area:—Held, that the rate was a good one, and was rightly headed. Hill v. Crediton Urban Council, 80 L. T. 861—C.A.

Limit and Exemption under Local Act—Limit Removed by Public Act.—By section 40 of the Bingley Improvement Act, 1867, the amount of the improvement rates that may be made by the commissioners without the consent of the ratepayers should not exceed 4s. in the pound, and with their consent 5s., provided that in respect of so much of any rate which might be made without the consent of the ratepayers as exceeded 2s. 6d. in the pound, or with their consent 3s. 6d., the occupier of any land used as a canal or towing path for the same or as a railway should be assessed in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the net amount of the annual value thereof. By section 227 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is enacted that any limit imposed on or in respect of any rate by any local Act of Parliament shall not apply to any rate required to be levied for the purpose of defraying any expenses incurred by an urban authority in the execution of this Act:—Held, that this did not affect the rights of canal and railway owners to be rated in respect of one-fourth of the annual value only. Bingley Urban Council v. Midland Railway, 80 L. T. 725—D.

Exemption—Agricultural Land—Market Garden—Glass-houses—Buildings.—The occupier of a market garden covered with glass-houses is not an occupier of agricultural land within the meaning of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, and is not entitled to the exemption conferred by that Act upon the occupiers of agricultural land. Smith v. Richmond, 68 L. J. Q.B. 898; [1899] A.C. 448; 81 L. T. 269; 48 W. R. 115; 63 J. P. 804—H.L. (E.)

Non-occupation—House Used in Summer—Furniture Removed during Winter—Fittings Left in House—Intention of Returning to House.—The respondent took a lease of a house and furnished it for the purpose of receiving boarders. She did not reside in the house, and in December, 1900, she removed from the house all her furniture and effects, except certain fixtures, fittings, and things which she had hired from the previous tenant. She intended to return to the house in the following summer, and in May she returned and refurnished the house, but, with the exception of the fittings and things left therein, the house was empty from December, 1900, to May, 1901. The respondent claimed exemption from a general district rate for the period from December, 1900, to May, 1901, on the ground that during that period the house was "unoccupied" within the meaning of section 211, sub-section 2 of the Public Health Act, 1875:—Held, that the proper inference of law was that the respondent had the beneficial occupation of the house during the whole of the period, and was therefore not entitled to the exemption in section 211, sub-section 2 of the Act in favour of unoccupied premises, but was liable to the rate for the whole period. Gage v. Wren, 87 L. T. 271; 67 J. P. 32—D.

Building used exclusively for Education of Poor—Institution to Board and Instruct Children.—By the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893, s. 36, it is provided that no person shall be rated to the general rate in respect of any building used for the education of the poor exclusively:—Held, that an institution for the reception of pauper children from the age of two to sixteen years, sent by poor-law guardians and others, where they were received, clothed, maintained, instructed, and provided with medical attendance, was not a building used for the education of the poor exclusively. Hadfield v. Liverpool Corporation, 80 L. T. 566—D.

Land Used as a Railway—Goods Station at Distance from Railway—Access by Licence over Tramway.—By section 36 of the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893, no person occupying land used only as a railway made under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance shall be rated in respect of the same to the general rate in any greater proportion than one-fourth part of the net annual value thereof. A railway company purchased land in Liverpool under statutory powers authorising them to acquire it for the purpose of extending the stations, sidings, warehouses, coal wharves, depôts, and other accommodation of the company, for mineral, goods, and cattle traffic, and erected thereon and occupied a covered shed, inside which were a number of railway lines running alongside platforms used for the purpose of loading and unloading railway waggons with goods, all the lines being used for the conveyance of goods sent by the public by rail to or from the premises. The premises were situate half a mile from the company's railway, and the goods conveyed to and from the premises were carried from and to the railway in railway waggons drawn by locomotives over a tramway laid by the company across a public highway under a licence granted by the Liverpool Corporation under the powers of the Liverpool Improvement and Waterworks Act, 1871, and over lines of rail belonging to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, which the board, under the powers of their Consolidation Act of 1858, permitted the company to use:—Held, that the premises were not "land used only as a railway made under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance" within the meaning of section 36 of the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1893. Williams v. London and North-Western Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 531; [1900] 1 Q.B. 760; 82 L. T. 287; 64 J. P. 372—C.A.

Tramroad Constructed under Special Acts to Connect Street Tramways—"Railway."—The appellants constructed under special Acts of Parliament certain street tramways and also a "tramroad" on lands their exclusive property except where it passed over certain roads by level crossings. The tramroad connected the street tramways, and the tramways and tramroad were worked together as one continuous route. The special Acts provided that for the purpose of certain of the provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which was incorporated so as to apply to the tramroad only, the tramroad should "be deemed to be a railway," and the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts were applied to the tramroad and tramway "as if the tramroad and tramway were railways": Held (BUCKLEY, L.J., dubitante), that the appellants were in respect of the tramroad entitled to the partial exemption from general district rates conferred by section 211, sub-section 1 (b) of the Public Health Act, 1875, on "a railway constructed under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance." Blackpool and Fleetwood Tramroad Co. v. Thornton Urban Council, 76 L. J. K.B. 492; [1907] 1 K.B. 568; 96 L. T. 209; 71 J. P. 177; 5 L. G. R. 422; 23 T. L. R. 267—C.A.

— Light Railway—Reduced Assessment—Land used as Railway Constructed under any Act of Parliament—General Enactment Relating to Railways.—A light railway authorised by a Light Railway Order (made by the Light Railway Commissioners in pursuance of the powers conferred on them by the Light Railways Act, 1896) is a railway "constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament" within the meaning of section 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and is entitled to the benefit of the reduced assessment thereby conferred, section 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875, falling under the description of "the general enactments relating to railways" contained in section 12, sub-section 2 of the Light Railways Act, 1896. Wakefield and District Light Railway v. Wakefield Corporation, 76 L. J. K.B. 634; [1907] 2 K.B. 256; 96 L. T. 622; 71 J. P. 254; 5 L. G. R. 595; 23 T. L. R. 404—C.A.

Lines of rails laid on a public highway in respect of which the light railway company is rated constitute "land used only . . . as a railway" for the purpose of such reduced assessment. Id.

— Shop Closed during Winter—Stock Removed—Fixtures and Articles Left in Shop—Occupation—Liability.—The respondent held certain premises under a lease or licence for a term of years, and had entered into possession and used the premises as a shop. As the business was remunerative only during the summer, the respondent at the end of the summer locked up and left the shop with the intention of not re-opening the same for business until the beginning of the following summer, and during this interval he had not in fact returned to the shop, and no one lived therein. Before he left he removed all his stock, but left in the premises certain fixtures and other articles. He was entitled under his lease to occupy the premises and carry on his business continuously throughout the year except for certain hours during the night. A general district rate was made for the half-year during the whole of which the shop was so closed in the winter. The respondent having objected to pay the rate made in respect of the shop on the ground that in law the premises were unoccupied by him during the time the shop was closed,—Held, that the respondent was in occupation of the premises during the time they were so closed, and was liable to pay the half-year's rate accordingly.

Southend-on-Sea Corporation v. White, 83 L. T. 408; 65 J. P. 7—D.

— Warehouse—Intermittent User—Interval of Non-user during Period of Rate—Liability of Warehouseman during Interval.—Local Acts for the making of improvements in a city provided that the corporation should have power to levy and recover rates, but that an occupier who had not been in occupation during the whole period of a rate should be liable to pay a portion of it only proportionate to the time during which he had been in occupation. During the currency of certain yearly rates levied under the Acts, warehousemen, who had been duly rated to the rates in respect of a block of warehouses all under their management and control, on a certain date gave notice to the rating authority that they had on that date gone out of occupation of one of the warehouses, and on a subsequent date during the year gave notice that they had re-opened the warehouse on that date. During the interval between these dates a bill was posted on the warehouse stating that it was to let; the supply of water under pressure for working the hydraulic lift in the warehouse was cut off, the warehousemen thus saving charges which would otherwise have been payable to the hydraulic company, but the supply could have been turned on again at a moment's notice; and the weights, scales, and trucks for weighing and trucking goods were removed to an adjoining warehouse whence they could easily be got; but the warehousemen were at all times throughout the interval prepared to receive applications for the hire of storage room, and ready and willing to re-open the warehouse and receive goods into it, provided that enough goods were offered to fill half its capacity:—Held, that the warehousemen were in occupation of the warehouse during the interval, and therefore were not exempt from liability to pay the portion of the rates applicable to the interval, and that a distress warrant should issue to compel them to pay that portion of the rates. Bootle Overseers v. Liverpool Warehousing Co. (85 L. T. 45) distinguished. Rev. v. Melladew, 76 L. J. K.B. 262; [1907] 1 K.B. 192; 96 L. T. 189; 71 J. P. 125; 5 L. G. R. 177; 23 T. L. R. 207—C.A.

— Waterworks—Reservoir—"Land covered with water."—A reservoir of a water company is "land covered with water," within the meaning of these words in section 211, sub-section 1 (b) of the Public Health Act, 1875, and the water company is therefore entitled to be assessed in respect of the same for the purpose of a general district rate in the proportion of one fourth part only of the net annual value thereof. Hampton Urban Council v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 72; [1900] A.C. 3; 81 L. T. 547; 48 W. R. 209; 64 J. P. 260—H.L. (E.). And see Smith's Dock Co. v. Tynemouth Corporation, 77 L. J. Recovery—Summary Procedure—Demand—Time—"Rate made under this Act."—A person from whom a sum of money is due to a local authority under an agreement for the supply of water made under section 56 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is a person assessed to a "rate made under this Act" within the meaning of section 256, and may therefore, if in default for fourteen days after demand in writing, be summoned before a Court of summary jurisdiction. Elliott v. Russell, 72 L. J. K.B. 15; [1902] 2 K.B. 748; 88 L. T. 204; 51 W. R. 269; 67 J. P. 158—D.

For the purposes of section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, the matter of complaint arises at the date of the demand, and the summons may be taken out within six months from that date. Ib.

Recovery of Rate—Want of Publication—Rate under Local Act Assimilated to Poor Rate.]

—It is a good defence to proceedings for the recovery of a poor rate to prove that the rate has not been duly published. Rea v. Newcombe (4 Term Rep. 368) followed. The Derby Corporation Act, 1901, enables the Corporation of Derby to make an order for the levy of general district rates in like manner as the borough rate, and provides that in such case the general district rate shall be made, assessed, and levied in the same manner and under the same provisions as the poor rate (but subject to the exemptions applicable to general district rates), and either as a separate rate or together with the poor rate, and that if such an order is made the poor rate shall be recoverable in the manner in which general district rates are recoverable under the Public Health Act:—Held, that a rate made under these provisions, comprising both poor rate and general district rate, was in the same position as regards publication as a poor rate, and therefore that on proceedings for the enforcement of the rate evidence to prove that it had not been duly published was admissible. Le Feuvre v. Miller (26 L. J. M.C. 175; 8 E. & B. 321) distinguished. Beeson v. Derby Overseers, 89 L. T. 47; 67 J. P. 282; 1 L. G. R. 624—D.

—Judgment by Consent Two Years after Accrual of Cause of Action—Delay Excused—Renewal of Debt by Judgment—Mandamus.]—In May, 1895, a rural district council incurred a liability to an urban district council for a supply of water to a contributory place within their district, but refused payment on the ground that the urban council had committed a breach of the contract under which the water was supplied. After a long correspondence the urban council, on March 9, 1897, brought an action to recover 93*l.* The rural council counter-claimed for the breach of contract, and in the result judgment was signed on May 15, 1897, by the urban council by consent for 63*l.* The rural council having declined to issue their precept to the overseers of the contributory place to which the water was supplied for the purpose of raising the money to satisfy the judgment, on the ground that a rate for that purpose would be retrospective, the urban council on October 25, 1897, applied for a mandamus to compel them to do so:—Held, that as there is no prohibition, express or implied, in the Public Health Act, 1875, against making a rate for special expenses under section 230 of that Act to provide for a liability for which judgment is not obtained until after the end of the rating year in which the liability is incurred, and no principle of law that such a rate cannot be made, the Court had power to grant a mandamus to the rural council to issue their precept, and that as the circumstances of the case shewed a sufficient excuse for the delay in bringing the action, and the motion for a mandamus was made in due time after the amount of the debt was first ascertained by judgment, the mandamus ought to be granted. Reg. v. Leigh Rural Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 562; [1898] 1 Q.B. 836; 78 L. T. 604; 46 W. R. 471; 62 J. P. 355—C.A.

—Rural District Council Extending into Several Petty Sessional Divisions—Right of Council to Take Proceedings for Recovery of Rate in any Division.]—A rural district council can prefer a complaint to the Justices of any petty sessional division in which any portion of their district is situate to recover contributions in respect of a rate levied under the Public Health Act, 1875, from overseers of any parish in the rural district, although such particular parish may not be situate within the petty sessional division in which the application is made, or although the overseers may not be resident therein. Caistor Rural Council v. Taylor, 97 L. T. 281; 71 J. P. 310; 5 L. G. R. 767—D.

—Rate Payable in Instalments—Rateable Value of Premises Reduced after Payment of First Two Instalments—Right to Deduct from Subsequent Instalment Amount Overpaid.]—By a local Act it was provided that the corporation might levy any rate they were authorised to make either in one sum or by any number of instalments, and all the powers, rights, and remedies of the corporation for levying and recovering any such rate should extend and apply to each instalment as if the same were a separate rate. After the respondents had paid two instalments of a rate a reduction was made in the gross estimated rental and rateable value of the respondents' premises, and the rates were accordingly altered:—Held, that the various instalments were all part of the same rate, and that in paying the third instalment of the rate the respondents were entitled to deduct the difference between what they had actually paid in the first and second instalments, and what they would have paid if those instalments had been calculated on the reduced rateable value. Hastings Corporation v. Queen's Hotel Co., 97 L. T. 310; 5 L. G. R. 1158; 71 J. P. 369—D.

10. ACCOUNTS AND AUDIT.

Right to See Accounts—Delay.]—The Court refused to issue a mandamus directing an urban council to grant inspection of its accounts after the lapse of a year from the date when they were audited, where the applicant for such inspection could shew no substantial reason for seeing the accounts and there was no suggestion that he had been surcharged or otherwise injured. Rea v. Fleetwood Urban Council, 68 J. P. 314; 2 L. G. R. 1209—D.

Audit of Accounts—Inspection—"Persons interested"—Ex-member of Urban Authority—Adjudication of Bankruptcy.]—An ex-member and ex-chairman of the finance committee of an urban authority, who had become disqualified as a member by being adjudicated bankrupt, claimed under section 247, sub-section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, as a "person interested," the right to inspect the accounts of the authority when deposited prior to the audit, on the ground that if any irregular or illegal payments were disclosed he might be liable to be surcharged. A Court of summary jurisdiction found that, as a former chairman of the finance committee, the applicant would have been a person interested and entitled to see the accounts had he not been a bankrupt, but that the adjudication of bankruptcy deprived him of this right:—Held, that, upon this finding, the mere fact of bankruptcy was not a reason for depriving the applicant of a right to which he was otherwise entitled, since the accounts themselves might affect the dividend he had to pay. Marginson v. Tildesley, 67 J. P. 226; 1 L. G. R. 333—D.

District Council—Expenses of Conveyance in Performance of Duties—Repairs—Surcharge.—An urban district council, having purchased an omnibus for the purpose of conveying the members of the council about the district when performing their ordinary duties, expended certain moneys in repairing such omnibus. The district auditor having surcharged this amount,—Held, that such surcharge was right. Rex v. Dolby, 87 L. T. 27; 66 J. P. 521—D.

Surcharge—Local Authority not Accepting Lowest Tender—System of Checking Quantities Delivered—Certiorari—Jurisdiction of Court.—The Court, upon an application for a writ of certiorari by a person aggrieved by the disallowance of an auditor under section 247 of the Public Health Act, 1875, has wider powers than in the ordinary case of a certiorari, and has jurisdiction to deal with matters of fact as well as of law. Rex v. Carson Roberts; Lawrence, Ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 1113; [1907] 2 K.B. 878; 96 L. T. 733; 71 J. P. 288; 5 L. G. R. 1017; 23 T. L. R. 491—D.

The district auditor, under section 247 of the Public Health Act, 1875, disallowed and surcharged certain payments made by the finance committee of a local authority, for shingle, and by the highways committee in respect of a contract for the supply of certain goods, upon the grounds that the shingle as delivered by the contractors must have been short in weight, the deliveries not having been, in his opinion, properly checked, and that the tender for the supply of the goods which was accepted was not the lowest tender, and he disallowed the amount which he estimated as the loss to the ratepayers therefrom. The highways committee stated that they had accepted the tender which they considered the most advantageous. Upon an application for a writ of certiorari to bring up and quash the disallowance,—Held, that with regard to the shingle there was no evidence of short delivery or of anything beyond possibly a lax method of keeping a check upon the amount delivered, and there was no evidence that the payments were illegal; and with regard to the contract for the supply of goods, inasmuch as the highways committee had bona fide come to the conclusion that the tender accepted was the most advantageous one, the disallowance was wrong. Ib. On appeal, 77 L. J. K.B. 281; [1908] 1 K. B. 407; 98 L. T. 154; 72 J. P. 81; 6 L. G. R. 268.

Time for Recovering Sums Certified by District

Auditor to be Due by Officers or Members of Local Authority—“Determination” of Appeal by Local Government Board.—The nine calendar months within which proceedings to recover sums, certified by a district auditor to be due in the accounts of officers or other persons, have to be taken under the provisions of section 9 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1849, commence to run, where there has been an appeal to the Local Government Board, from the date of the final determination of the appeal by that Board. If, therefore, the Board has been asked to reconsider its first determination and has done so, the nine months run from the date of such reconsideration. Brooks v. Dolby, 66 J. P. 532—D.

Auditor—Urban Sanitary Authority—Remuneration—Duties.—Where the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of a borough, acting by the council, are an urban sanitary authority under section 6 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the elective auditors of the borough, being by section 246 of that Act auditors to the urban sanitary authority, are entitled to remuneration under that section for auditing the accounts of the urban sanitary authority. Their duties in this respect are not confined to seeing that there are vouchers in respect of items for which the urban sanitary authority claims credit; but they must make a reasonable examination to see that the payments made are made within the duties of such authority. Thomas v. Devonport Corporation, 69 L. J. Q.B. 51; [1900] 1 Q.B. 16; 81 L. T. 427; 48 W. R. 89; 63 J. P. 740—C.A.

11. APPEALS.

Appeal to Local Government Board—Local Act.—Section 31 of the Portsmouth Corporation Act, 1883, which provides that any person aggrieved by any order, determination, or decision of the corporation under the Act may appeal to quarter sessions, or may appeal to the Local Government Board “under the provisions of” section 268 of the Public Health Act, 1875, gives an alternative appeal to the Local Government Board in the case of every order, determination, or decision of the corporation under the Act of 1883, and not merely in cases similar to those in which there is an appeal to that Board under section 269 of the Act of 1875—that is, in cases where the corporation are empowered to recover summarily any expenses incurred by them, or to declare such expenses to be private improvement expenses. *Rex v. LODGING-HOUSE KEEPER.

Liability for Loss of Boarder's Goods.]—The plaintiffs were guests in the defendant's boarding-house for reward. There was only one key to their bedroom door, and this key, they were told, they were not to take away, as the servants required it for getting into the room; they were also refused a second key, being told that they need be under no apprehension, as every one in the house was known. There were no keys to a chest of drawers in the plaintiffs' bedroom, and, although they asked for a key, this was not supplied. The female plaintiff locked some valuable jewellery in a satchel in one of the unlocked drawers, and during her absence from the room in the daytime the jewellery was stolen by another guest, who, it subsequently appeared, was well known to the police as a thief. The defendant was not aware of the character of this guest, but he had been admitted by the defendant without any reference or introduction or enquiry as to his respectability. At the close of the plaintiffs' case, DARLING, J., held that there was no case to go to the jury, being of opinion that a boarding-house keeper was under no duty to take care of his guests' goods, and was only liable for misfeasance:—Held, that the evidence raised a question for the jury whether there was a failure of reasonable care on the part of the defendant to which the loss of the plaintiffs' jewellery was attributable, and that there must be a new trial. Scarborough v. Cosgrove, 74 L. J. K.B. 892; [1905] 2 K. B. 805; 93 L. T. 530; 54 W. R. 100; 21 T. L. R. 754—C.A.

Per COLLINS, M.R., and MATHEW, L.J. A boarding-house or lodging-house keeper undertakes by implication of law, although nothing is expressed, to take due and reasonable care of a guest's baggage brought to the boarding-house or lodgings, and is liable for the negligence of a servant in the course of his employment where by such negligence the guest's baggage is lost. Judgments of LORD CAMPBELL, C.J., and COLERIDGE, J., in Dunsey v. Richardson (23 L. J. Q.B. 217; 3 E. & B. 144) approved. Holder v. Southby (29 L. J. C.P. 246; 8 Q. B. (N.S.) 254) not followed. Culpe's Case (8 Co. Rep. 32a; 1 Sm. L.C. (14th ed.), 119) explained. Id.

Per ROMER, L.J.—A person who carries on the business of a boarding-house keeper for reward is bound to carry it on with reasonable care, having regard to the nature and normal conduct of the business as known to the guest or as represented to the guest by him; and if by reason of a breach of that duty the luggage of the guest is lost, the boarding-house keeper is liable for the loss to the guest. And see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. JURISDICTION IN LUNACY.

Conditional Devise—Election to Take Under or Against Will—Power of Judge to Order Committee to Exercise on Behalf of Lunatic.—The Court in Lunacy has power under its general jurisdiction to direct the committee of a lunatic to elect on behalf of the lunatic to take under a conditional devise in a will, even, if compliance with the condition should involve the alienation of an interest of the lunatic in other real estate, provided that it is, in the opinion of the Court, for the benefit of the lunatic to make such election. Sefton (Earl), In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 518; [1898] 2 Ch. 378; 78 L. T. 765; 47 W. R. 49—C.A.

The alienation of the lunatic's interest in real estate under such circumstances is not contrary to the statute De Prerogativa Regis (17 Edw. 2, c. 10) according to the true construction of that statute. Ib.

The powers conferred on the Judge in Lunacy by Part 4 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, do not include the power to direct the committee to make such an election; but the sections in that part of the Act are enabling sections, and do not prevent the exercise of the general jurisdiction of the Court in such a way. Ib.

In considering what is for the benefit of the lunatic in such a case the Court should not look merely at his pecuniary benefit, but act for him as if he were of sound mind, and actuated by such motives as a reasonable man would be. Ib.

Jurisdiction of Master—Stock in Joint Names of Lunatic and Another—Lunatic a Retired Trustee—Vesting Order—“Management and administration.”—L. and another person were jointly entitled to certain funds as trustees of a settlement. In 1887 L. retired from the trust, and a new trustee was appointed. The trust property was then transferred to the new trustees, with the exception of a sum of 430l. 11s. 8d. Consols, which was overlooked. L. became a lunatic in 1896. The present trustees of the settlement applied for a vesting order of the 430l. 11s. 8d. Consols:—Held, that what was proposed to be done could not properly be described as a matter in the administration or management of the lunatic's estate, and the Master had no jurisdiction to make the order. Fuller, In re (69 L. J. Ch. 738; [1900] 2 Ch. 651), distinguished. Langdale, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 38; [1901] 1 Ch. 3; 83 L. T. 451; 49 W. R. 177—C.A.

Alien Domiciled in United States—Temporary Residence in England—Inquisition—Jurisdiction.—There is jurisdiction to direct an inquisition as to the lunacy of an alien domiciled abroad who is temporarily resident in this country, although all the property of the alleged lunatic, except such personal chattels and cash (if any) as he may have brought with him, is situate abroad. Burbridge, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 271; [1902] 1 Ch. 426; 86 L. T. 331—C.A.

Foreign Subject—English Personalty—Declaration of Lunacy—“Tuteur”—Right to Give Valid Discharges.—Where there has been a judicial declaration of the status of lunacy by a foreign Court of competent jurisdiction, and the tuteur appointed by the Court on the lunatic's behalf has the latter's property vested in him, so that he has the right to retain and deal with, without becoming the actual owner of, the lunatic's property, an application on behalf of the lunatic and his tuteur for the transfer and payment of his personal property situate in England to the tuteur properly may be and generally ought to be granted. The rule equally applies whether the claim is by a creditor against a debtor, or is to a trust fund in Court. Thiery v. Chalmers, Guthrie & Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 122; [1900] 1 Ch. 80; 81 L. T. 511; 48 W. R. 148—Kekewich, J.

Foreign Subject Resident in France—Declaration of Lunacy by French Court—Appointment of Curator by Family Council—Resolution of Council Authorising Curator to get in Lunatic's Personalty in England—Approval of Resolution by French Court—Property not Required for Maintenance—Exercise of Discretion—Transfer to Curator.—Where a person, who was born in Spain, but had acquired an American domicile and had for many years been resident in France, was declared a lunatic by the French Court, and a curator of his person and estate was, according to the law of France, appointed by his family council, and was authorised by resolution (which was subsequently approved by the French Court) to get in the lunatic's personalty in England, the English Court, in the exercise of their discretion and on the application of the curator, made an order under section 134 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, for the transfer to him of stocks and securities in this country of very considerable value belonging to the lunatic, although the same were not required for the maintenance of the lunatic, who was stated to be a millionaire, the bulk of his property being in France. De Larragoiti, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 433; [1907] 2 Ch. 14; 96 L. T. 862—C.A.

2. PETITION FOR RECEPTION ORDER.

Libel—Absolute Privilege.—Proceedings before a Justice of the peace, acting as the judicial authority under the Lunacy Act, 1890, upon a petition under the Act for the reception of an alleged lunatic, are judicial proceedings, so that statements in the statement of particulars accompanying the petition are absolutely privileged. Hodson v. Pare, 68 L. J. Q.B. 309; [1899] 1 Q.B. 455; 80 L. T. 13; 47 W. R. 241—C.A.

3. INQUISITION.

Right to Traverse.—A lunatic so found by inquisition is entitled to traverse the inquisition as a matter of right, but the Lords Justices should satisfy themselves that the application is bona fide, and that the alleged lunatic is competent to judge of what he is doing in making his application for a traverse, and is capable of exercising a volition in the matter. Cumming, In re (21 L. J. Ch. 753; 1 De G.M. & G. 537), followed. Gilchrist, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 63; [1907] 1 Ch. 1; 95 L. T. 739—C.A.

Lunatic so Found by—Limited Finding—Incapacity only to Manage Affairs—Action by Committee—Committee Joined as Plaintiff.—A person of unsound mind who is found by inquisition, under section 98, sub-section 2 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to be incapable only of managing his affairs, but not of managing himself, or of being dangerous to himself or to others, has yet been found a lunatic within the meaning of the Lunacy Act, 1890. Should an action be commenced in the name of such a person the committee must, according to the practice of the Court, be joined as co-plaintiff. Townshend (Marquis) v. Robins, 77 L. J. Ch. 167; [1908] 1 Ch. 201; 97 L. T. 884—Swinfen Eadler, J.

Examination of Lunatic by Medical Officer—Order by Justices for Payment of Reasonable Remuneration to Medical Officer—Reasonable Expenses.—Under section 14 of the Lunatic Asylums (Ireland) Act, 1875 [cf. section 285 of the Lunacy Act, 1890], Justices cannot make an order for payment to a medical officer of a sum "for loss of time" as well as for professional services in the examination of a lunatic. Rez v. Delvin Union, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 15—K.B.D.

The words "other reasonable expenses" in the same section are not confined to expenses of the medical officer, but include expenses of the police incurred in connection with the conveyance of the lunatic prior to his committal (MADDEN, J., dissentiente). Ib.

4. COMMITTEE.

Appointment by Foreign Court—Payment to Foreign Committee—Discretion of Court.—A committee appointed by a foreign Court of the estate of a lunatic residing within its jurisdiction, but domiciled in England, cannot recover, as of right, personal property of the lunatic situate in England. But the English Court has a discretion, and may exercise the discretion by paying over the property to such a committee without requiring evidence that the whole of such money is needed for the maintenance of the lunatic. New York Trust and Securities Co. v. Keyser, 70 L. J. Ch. 330; [1901] 1 Ch. 666; 84 L. T. 43; 49 W. R. 371—Cozens-Hardy, J.

5. ACTS OF LUNATIC.

Contract to Purchase Real Estate—Voidable Contract—Completion of Purchase by Committee—Conversion.—A contract by a person of unsound mind for the purchase of an estate is voidable. If the purchase is completed by the committee by the direction of the Master in Lunacy a conversion is effected, and, on the death of the lunatic intestate, the estate descends to his heir. Baldwyn v. Smith, 69 L. J. Ch. 386; [1900] 1 Ch. 588; 82 L. T. 616; 48 W. R. 346—Byrne, J.

Power of Attorney—Execution by Person of Unsound Mind—Validity.—Where a power of attorney is executed by a person of unsound mind, it must be treated as invalid unless it be proved to have been executed in a lucid interval. "Daily Telegraph" Newspaper Co. v. M'Laughlin, 73 L. J. P.C. 95; [1904] A.C. 776; 91 L. T. 233; 20 T. L. R. 674—P.C.

Special Power of Appointment—Marriage

Settlement—Committee—Power to Exercise—Fiduciary Character.—Where a special power of appointment in favour of children is by a marriage settlement vested in the husband and wife jointly, and the wife has become lunatic, there is power under section 128 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to authorise the committee of the lunatic's estate to join on her behalf in exercising the power, for such a power is vested in the lunatic "in the character of trustee" within the words of that section. So held, by the COURT OF APPEAL (COZENS-HARDY, L.J., dissenting). A., In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 648; [1904] 2 Ch. 328; 91 L. T. 238; 53 W. R. 172—C.A.

Power of Disposition—Deed made in Lucid Interval—Validity.—A lunatic so found is, until the inquisition has been superseded, absolutely incapable of making a valid deed disposing of his property even in a lucid interval, as such a deed would conflict with the rights and powers of the Crown and of the committee over the lunatic's property. Sir Benjamin Wright, Ex parte (1 Vern. 155), considered. Walker, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 86; [1905] 1 Ch. 160; 91 L. T. 713; 53 W. R. 177—C.A.

6. PROPERTY.

Personal Estate Ordered to be Expended in Repairs or Permanent Improvement of Real Estate—Jurisdiction to Order Charge on Realty—Delay—Apportionment of Costs between Realty and Personality.—In exercising jurisdiction under section 118 of the Lunacy Act, 1890 (which enables the Judge to order moneys expended under his order for the permanent improvement of the lunatic's property to be a charge upon the improved property), the Court can take into consideration what is fair between the persons respectively entitled to the real and personal estate as well as what is for the benefit of the lunatic himself. If this jurisdiction is not taken into consideration at the time when the order authorising the expenditure is made, the Court can afterwards exercise it on an independent application; but if the jurisdiction is taken into consideration at the time when the order authorising the expenditure is made, it cannot be afterwards re-exercised. Gist, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 251; [1904] 1 Ch. 398; 90 L. T. 35; 52 W. R. 422—C.A.

An application by the next-of-kin or heir asking the Court to exercise its jurisdiction under section 118 in respect of moneys expended under a former order should be made without undue delay. Ib.

Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Speaking generally, it is a good rule that the Master, in making an order for improvements, should either take into consideration section 118 at the time, and express that he has done so, or should state that the order is to be without prejudice as to how the expenditure ought to be ultimately borne. If neither course is adopted, a clear and strong case must be made to induce the Court to exercise its jurisdiction afterwards under section 118. Ib.

In the administration in lunacy of a large agricultural estate, having a rental of over 3,000*l.*, the Court considered that moneys expended under former orders out of the personal estate—first, in converting a malthouse into cottages; secondly, on a new iron pit-wheel; and thirdly, on new roofs to barns—might properly be regarded as ordinary expenses in the due management of the lunatic's property, and were not such as to call for a charge on the real estate under section 118 at the instance of the prospective next-of-kin, especially where the application for the charge was not made till some years after the expenditure. Ib.

Where the costs in the lunacy of proceedings relating as well to the real as to the personal estate had for many years been directed to be paid out of the personal estate alone, the Court refused an application by the next-of-kin to charge one moiety of the amount so paid upon the real estate. Ib.

Seizure of Goods after Notice of Summons or Appointment of Receiver.]—The property of a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition does not come under the protection of the Court in Lunacy from the moment when a summons for the appointment of a receiver of his property is taken out under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, but from the moment when some order is made shewing that the Court has taken the property under its protection. Clarke, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 234; [1898] 1 Ch. 336; 73 L. T. 275; 46 W. R. 337—C.A.

The Court in Lunacy cannot prevent a judgment creditor from issuing execution against the lunatic's property or deprive him of the fruits of such execution, if the creditor can reach it by ordinary writs of execution without interfering with the possession of an officer in the Court in Lunacy. The property in goods seized under a fi. fa. remains in the debtor till sale, but subject to the security of the execution creditor. Ib.

Lunatic Tenant for Life—Consent to Sale by Trustees of Settlement—Consent Required by Settled Land Act—Person of Unsound Mind not so Found—Quasi-committee—Consent of Quasi-committee on Behalf of Lunatic.]—The consent of a tenant for life required by section 56, subsection 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to the exercise of a power of sale by the trustees of a settlement is not given by him in the character of trustee, nor as a check upon the power of sale within the meaning of section 128 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, and the Judge in lunacy has therefore no jurisdiction under section 128 to authorise the quasi-committee of a lunatic tenant for life to give the consent on behalf of the lunatic. Baggs, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 612; [1894] 2 Ch. 416n.), followed. De Moleyn's and Harris's Contract, In re, 77 L. J. Ch. 9; [1908] 1 Ch. 110; 97 L. T. 680—Joyce, J.

Property at English Bank—Person of Unsound Mind in Belgium—Right of Foreign Sue.]—In 1856 G., a German, intermarried with M., and went to reside at Brussels, where he died in 1892. M. took out administration to him in this country, and obtained the transfer of G.'s property into her name. In 1897 M. became of unsound mind, and D. was appointed her administrateur provisoire by the Belgian Court of First Instance. D. obtained administration de bonis non to G., and was authorised by the Belgian Court of First Instance to bring this action on behalf of M. The bank declined to give up to D. property held by it for M., on the ground that D. could not give it a proper discharge. M. was joined as a co-plaintiff, suing by D. as her next friend:—Held, that the bank could not be ordered to deliver the property to D. Didisheim v. London and Westminster Bank, 81 L. T. 108—North, J.

Lunatic Resident out of Jurisdiction—Stock Standing in Name of Lunatic—Transfer—Discretion of Court.]—Where stock is standing in the name of a person residing out of the jurisdiction of the Court who has been declared lunatic, the person in whom the property of the lunatic has been vested according to the law of the place where he resides is not entitled as a matter of right to an order under section 134 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, for a transfer of the stock into his name. The section gives the Judge in Lunacy a discretion whether, and under what circumstances, he will make such an order. Knight, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 136; [1898] 1 Ch. 257; 77 L. T. 773; 46 W. R. 289—C.A.

Property in England—Lunatic Domiciled in France—Transfer to French Tuteur.]—Where there has been a judicial declaration of the status of lunacy and the applicant on the lunatic's behalf for the transfer to him of property belonging to the lunatic has the latter's property vested in him in the sense that he has the right to retain and deal with, without becoming the actual owner of, the lunatic's property, the application may properly be and generally ought to be granted. The Court accordingly granted the application of the duly appointed tuteur of a person domiciled in France and there declared lunatic, though not so found in England, for the transfer to him of personal property of the lunatic in England. Thierry v. Chalmers, [1900] 1 Ch. 80; 81 L. T. 511; 48 W. R. 148—Kekewich, J.

Order to Seize Money in Savings' Bank—Power of Justices to State Case.]—An order under section 299 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, can be made to seize money standing in the lunatic's name in the Post-Office Savings' Bank. Justices under that section are not a Court of summary jurisdiction, and have therefore no power to state a Case. Beihel, In re, 80 L. T. 492; 63 J. P. 453; 19 Cox C.C. 262—D.

Judgment Creditor—Charging Order—Fund in Court in Chancery Division.]—Where a person beneficially entitled to a testator's estate has been found a lunatic and a committee of the estate appointed, and an action has been subsequently brought for the administration of the estate of the testator, under which various sums have been paid into Court in the Chancery Division to the credit of the action, the Court will decline to order the transfer of the funds to Lunacy without first providing for the claim of a judgment creditor who has obtained a charging order upon the funds in Court. Brown, In re; Llewellyn v. Brown, 69 L. J. Ch. 234; [1900] 1 Ch. 489; 82 L. T. 83; 48 W. R. 461; 64 J. P. 327—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Practice—Transfer of Stock—Title of Order.]—Orders made under section 133 of the Lunacy

Act, 1890, directing the transfer of stock of a lunatic ought to be intituled "In the matter of the Lunacy Acts, 1890 and 1891," as well as in the matter of the particular lunacy; but orders made under section 116, sub-section 1 (d), following form 1 (e) in the schedule to the Rules in Lunacy, 1892, need not be so intituled. Purvis, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 281; [1904] 1 Ch. 373; 90 L. T. 394—Vaughan Williams, L.J.

Payment of Estate Duty—Charge—Realty.
—See Hole, In re; Davies v. Witts, 74 L. J. Ch. 689; post, REVENUE.

7. MAINTENANCE.

Allowance Paid in Advance—Committee of Person—Death of Lunatic—Liability to Account.]
—Where an allowance made under an order in lunacy for the maintenance of the lunatic has as a mere matter of convenience between the committees of the estate and person been paid quarterly in advance to the committees of the person, the lunatic's executors after his death are entitled as against the committees of the person to an enquiry as to what sum out of the moneys last advanced before the death should be allowed for the maintenance of the lunatic up to the date of his death. The committees of the person cannot properly claim to retain the whole sum paid to them without accounting, if the lunatic has died before the expiration of the whole period in respect of which the payment was made. Strangeways v. Read, 67 L. J. Ch. 581; [1898] 2 Ch. 419; 79 L. T. 245; 46 W. R. 671—Romer, J.

Maintenance of Lunatic's Children—No Committee Appointed—Sale of Lunatic's Business while Lunatic was under Restraint—Application of Lunatic's Estate, with consent of Wife, by Third Party for Maintenance and Education of Lunatic's Children—Refusal of Lunatic on his Release to Ratify this Expenditure—Right to Recover Proceeds of Sale of Business.]—The plaintiff, who had carried on a draper's business, was confined in a lunatic asylum from 1882 to 1894, but no committee of his estate had been appointed. In 1888 the plaintiff's business was sold by the defendant, and the proceeds of the sale were with the authority and consent of the plaintiff's wife expended by the defendant in the maintenance of the plaintiff's children (not of tender years) while he was in the asylum. The plaintiff upon his release in 1894 refused to ratify what had been done, and brought an action against the defendant to recover the proceeds of sale of the business:—Held, that the plaintiff not being legally liable to maintain the children while in the asylum, and no committee having been appointed of his estate who might have sanctioned such expenditure, the plaintiff could recover the proceeds of the sale of his business as money had and received to his use. Healing v. Healing, 51 W. R. 221—Ridley, J. And see PAUPER, next col. and col. 1441.

S. ALLOWANCE TO NEXT-OF-KIN.

Administration—Lunatic Intestate—Allowances to Presumptive Next-of-kin—Death of one of Presumptive Next-of-kin in Lifetime of Intestate—Liability of Children to bring Allowances to Parent into Hotchpot.]—Under various orders in lunacy allowances were made to the presumptive next-of-kin of a lunatic. The orders provided that the persons to whom such allowances were made should bring them into account in the event of their surviving the lunatic. The lunatic died a bachelor and intestate. One of the presumptive next-of-kin, to whom allowances had been made, died in the lifetime of the lunatic, leaving children:—Held, that the children took per stirpes under the Statute of Distributions as representing their parent, but were under no obligation to bring into account the allowances made to her. Gist, In re; Gist v. Timbrill, 75 L. J. Ch. 657; [1906] 2 Ch. 280; 95 L. T. 41; 22 T. L. R. 637—C.A. Affirming, 54 W. R. 104—Swinfen Eady, J.

9. DEBTS OF LUNATIC.

Statute-barred Debt.]—The Court will not pay debts contracted by a lunatic before he became of unsound mind, when such debts are barred by the Statute of Limitations. So held on section 95 of the Lunacy (Ireland) Act, 1871, which corresponds to section 116, sub-section 5 of the Lunacy Act, 1890. Kenrick, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 480—L.C.

10. BANKRUPTCY OF LUNATIC.

Death—Undertaking by Solicitor for Payment—Enforcement.]—In the bankruptcy of A., who was a lunatic, a claim of 1,000*l.* was made by K. for services rendered to the bankrupt, which claim had been allowed by the trustee in bankruptcy and paid in full. The estate being realised, the whole of the creditors were paid in full, leaving a surplus over. The official solicitor, having been appointed committee of the estate in lunacy, applied for an order on K. to refund the 1,000*l.*, and K. gave an undertaking that he would refund same. After the undertaking had been given the bankrupt died, and K. thereupon contended that the official solicitor was no longer in a position to enforce the undertaking, as the only person entitled to the 1,000*l.* was the lunatic's executrix, who it was said had acquiesced in the payment:—Held, that the official solicitor was entitled to enforce the undertaking and that the money should be paid into the bankruptcy estates account, the Court directing that it should not be paid out to the executrix without notice to K. Aytoun, In re; Official Solicitor, ex parte, 20 T. L. R. 252—Bucknill, J.

11. PAUPER.

Maintenance—Arrears—Debt—Claim in Administration of Deceased Lunatic's Estate.]—A pauper lunatic who had been maintained by the guardians since November 1, 1889, became entitled on October 14, 1895, to a sum of money as one of the next-of-kin of an uncle. The guardians, in February, 1898, applied in lunacy for the appointment of a receiver of the fund and payment thereof of the cost of the lunatic's maintenance for the then preceding six years. On January 31, 1899, an order was made in lunacy appointing a receiver and directing him to pay to the guardians 95*l.* 14*s.* for the maintenance of the lunatic from October 14, 1895, to February 14, 1899, and to apply the balance for the future maintenance of the lunatic. The lunatic died on June 29, 1899:—Held, that the claim of the guardians for the maintenance of the lunatic for the part of the six years prior to October 14, 1895, was a valid legal debt and was not affected by the order in lunacy, and the guardians could enforce their claim against the lunatic's estate now that she was dead. Taylor, In re; Edmonton Union v. Deeley, 70 L. J. Ch. 332; [1901] 1 Ch. 480; 84 L. T. 35—C.A.

— Expenses of—Limit of Charge—Pauper Lunatic Settled in Parish outside Asylum Area.—

The visiting committee of a lunatic asylum are not entitled under section 283 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to fix a greater sum than 14s. to be charged for the expenses of the lodging and maintenance of pauper lunatics in the asylum, even in the case of pauper lunatics other than those sent from or settled in a parish or place within the county or borough to which the asylum belongs. Fitch v. Bermondsey Guardians, 73 L. J. K.B. 985; [1904] 2 K.B. 709; 91 L. T. 655; 53 W. R. 153; 68 J. P. 538; 2 L. G. R. 1241—D.

— Out-union Patient—Amount Chargeable.—

The visiting committee of a lunatic asylum are not empowered under sub-section 3 of section 283 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to fix a weekly sum, not exceeding 14s., in respect of the maintenance in the asylum of out-county pauper lunatics, in addition to the weekly sum already fixed by them, under sub-section 1, in respect of the maintenance of each pauper lunatic in the asylum; but where they have, under sub-section 1, fixed a weekly sum of less than 14s. in respect of each pauper lunatic, they have power to differentiate between in-county and out-county pauper lunatics by fixing the maximum weekly sum of 14s. in respect of out-county pauper lunatics. Fitch v. Bermondsey Guardians, 74 L. J. K.B. 250; [1905] 1 K.B. 524; 92 L. T. 843; 53 W. R. 303; 3 L. G. R. 300; 69 J. P. 102; 21 T. L. R. 206—C.A.

Summary Reception Order—Jurisdiction of Justice—Place where Pauper Resides.—Where a pauper who is living in a workhouse locally situate outside the union to which he is chargeable becomes a lunatic, a Justice sitting in such union is, by virtue of section 56 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844, a "Justice having jurisdiction in the place where the pauper resides," within the meaning of section 14 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, and has therefore jurisdiction to make a summary reception order with regard to the lunatic. Reg. v. Bell, 69 L. J. Q.B. 622; [1900] 2 Q.B. 891; 82 L. T. 711; 64 J. P. 789; 19 Cox C.C. 515—D.

12. LUNATIC TRUSTEE.

Power of High Court to Appoint New Trustee and Make Vesting Order.—On an application for the appointment of a new trustee of a settlement in lieu of a surviving trustee of unsound mind, and for a vesting order as to a sum of Consols standing in his name,—Held, that, while there was power under the Trustee Act, 1893, to appoint a new trustee in such case, there was semble no power to make a vesting order, and that application ought therefore to be made to the lunacy jurisdiction. J. M. In re, [1899] 1 Ch. 79; 79 L. T. 459—Stirling, J.

Jurisdiction of Master—Stock in Joint Names of Lunatic and Another—Lunatic a Retired Trustee—Vesting Order.—"Management and administration."—L. and another person were jointly entitled to certain funds as trustees of a settlement. In 1887, L. retired from the trust, and a new trustee was appointed. The trust property was then transferred to the new trustees, with the exception of a sum of 430l. 11s. 3d. Consols, which was overlooked. L. became a lunatic in 1896. The present trustees of the settlement applied for a vesting order of the 430l. 11s. 3d. Consols:—Held, that what was proposed to be done could not properly be described as a matter in the administration or management of the lunatic's estate, and the Master had no jurisdiction to make the order. Fuller, In re (69 L. J. Ch. 738; [1900] 2 Ch. 551), distinguished. Langdale, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 38; [1901] 1 Ch. 3; 83 L. T. 451—C.A.

The powers of administration and management conferred on the Masters by sub-section 1 of section 27 of the Lunacy Act, 1891, are not confined to the powers of management and administration contained in the group of sections (116–130) so headed in the Lunacy Act, 1890, but extend to any powers of management and administration properly so called in the Act of 1890. Dicta in Browne, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 729, 732, 733; [1894] 3 Ch. 412, 417, 419), followed. Id.

Trustee Criminal Lunatic—Vesting Order—Jurisdiction.—Although by virtue of section 340 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the Lords Justices have no power to make a vesting order of the trust property under that Act in the case of a criminal lunatic who is a trustee, there is jurisdiction to make such an order under section 5 of the Trustee Act, 1850. The powers of the Lords Justices under the Trustee Act, 1850, are, notwithstanding the repeal of section 5 by section 342 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, preserved, as regards criminal lunatic trustees, by the saving clause in the same section. R., In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 421; [1906] 1 Ch. 730; 94 L. T. 494; 54 W. R. 578—C.A.

Trustee of Unsound Mind—Vesting Order—Transfer of Stock—Form of Order—Costs.—An order made under section 136, sub-section 1 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, in the form approved by the Court in Gregson, In re (62 L. J. Ch. 764; [1893] 3 Ch. 233), vesting in a person the right to call for a transfer, and to transfer into his own name a sum of Government stock standing in the name of a lunatic trustee and directing him to transfer the same into his own name accordingly, is not an order appointing a person to make a transfer of stock within the meaning of section 137 of the Act of 1890, and it is not necessary to appoint an officer of the bank to make the transfer. C. M. G., In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 468; [1898] 2 Ch. 324; 78 L. T. 669—C.A.

13. EVIDENCE.

Order of Master in Lunacy in England.—The order of a Master in Lunacy in England is prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein, and if uncontradicted ought to be regarded as sufficient evidence, being made by a competent tribunal in a matter within its jurisdiction, not only in this country, but in all his Majesty's dominions. Harvey v. Regem, 70 L. J. P.C. 107; [1901] A.C. 601; 84 L. T. 849—P.C.

14. PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND NOT SO FOUND.

(a) Detention.

"Lawfully detained"—Appointment of Person to Act as Committee—Jurisdiction.—A person of unsound mind not so found who is detained in an asylum under the Idiots Act, 1886, is "lawfully detained" within the meaning of section 116, sub-section 1 (c) of the Lunacy Act, 1890, and there is therefore jurisdiction to appoint a person under section 116 to exercise the powers of a committee in the case of such a person. Watkins, In re (65 L. J. Ch. 636; [1896] 2 Ch. 336), considered and distinguished. Whalley, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 323; [1906] 1 Ch. 565; 94 L. T. 423; 54 W. R. 349—C.A.

—Powers of Administration—Order Appointing Receiver—Determination of Detention.—An order appointing a receiver and manager of the property of a person of unsound mind not so found, made under section 116, sub-section 1 (c) of the Lunacy Act, 1890, on the ground that such person was "lawfully detained as a lunatic though not so found by inquisition," does not come to an end by reason of the person ceasing to be under detention. A further order is required to discharge it, and the Court will not make such an order unless satisfied that the person in question has ceased to suffer from the delusions which caused the detention. B. A. S., In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 453; [1898] 2 Ch. 392; 78 L. T. 638—C.A.

(b) Maintenance.

Beneficiary of Unsound Mind not so found by Inquisition—Absolute Interest—Jurisdiction of Chancery Division—Payment of Income to Person undertaking to Apply it for Benefit of Beneficiary.—A lady who was absolutely entitled to a fund in the hands of trustees under the trusts of a settlement was of unsound mind, but not so found by inquisition, and she was in confinement in an institution in Germany, having been placed there by her father in accordance with the requirements of the German law. The fund consisted of a sum of India Stock and money invested on mortgage. The lady, by a next friend, applied by an originating summons in the Chancery Division for directions as to her maintenance:—Held, that on the stock being transferred into Court, and the deeds of the mortgaged property being deposited in Court, the interest on the stock should, until further order, be paid to the sister of the plaintiff, who was one of the trustees, upon her undertaking to apply it and the interest on the mortgage debt for the maintenance, comfort, and benefit of the plaintiff. Carr's Trusts, In re; Carr v. Carr, 73 L. J. Ch. 459; [1904] 1 Ch. 792; 90 L. T. 592; 52 W. R. 595—C.A.

Claims of Wife and Family.—A Judge in Lunacy may, in the exercise of his discretion, apply property belonging to a person of unsound mind not so found in payment for his maintenance in a pauper lunatic asylum in relief of the rates, although the property may not be more than sufficient to maintain the family of the person of unsound mind. Tye, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 153; [1900] 1 Ch. 249; 81 L. T. 743; 48 W. R. 276—C.A.

Section 299 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, enables Justices to make summary orders in certain cases to recover expenses against a lunatic's estate, but does not affect the jurisdiction of the Judges in Lunacy. Id.

(c) Property.

Direction to Get in Estate—Receiver.—An order made in an ex parte application under the Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 116, directing a person in the name and on behalf of a lunatic not so found to receive and give a discharge for his property, does not affect the legal or equitable rights of other parties against that property—as, for instance, a vendor's lien thereon for unpaid purchase-money. Winkle, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 541; [1894] 2 Ch. 519), explained. Davies v. Thomas, 69 L. J. Ch. 643; [1900] 2 Ch. 462; 83 L. T. 11; 49 W. R. 68—C.A.

Person Incapable of Managing his own Affairs—Person Appointed to Exercise Powers of Committee—Tenant for Life—Power of Sale—Exercise by Quasi-Committee.—Where persons are appointed under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to exercise as regards a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition the powers of the Act exercisable by a committee of the estate under order of the Judge, and the person of unsound mind is tenant for life of land for which notice to treat has been given by a railway company, the Judge in lunacy has no power under the provisions of the Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 116, 120, and 128, to authorise the quasi-committee to exercise on behalf of the person of unsound mind the power of sale conferred on a tenant for life by section 7 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, or that conferred by the Settled Land Act, 1882, in respect of the land so required by the railway company. Baggs, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 612; [1894] 2 Ch. 416n.), and Salt, In re (65 L. J. Ch. 152; [1896] 1 Ch. 117) considered and followed in preference to X., In re (63 L. J. Ch. 613; [1894] 2 Ch. 415). S. S. B., In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 522; [1906] 1 Ch. 712; 94 L. T. 599; 54 W. R. 429; 22 T. L. R. 461—C.A.

The power of sale given to a tenant for life by the Settled Land Act, 1882, is not a power vested in him "in the character of trustee" within the meaning of section 128 of the Lunacy Act, 1890. Id.

—Order for Payment of Debt in Priority—Subsequent Death of Debtor and Administration of his Estate in High Court—Effect of Lunacy Order.—H. was a person not detained as or found lunatic, but found to be incapable of managing his affairs through mental infirmity arising from disease. In 1898 a Master in lunacy made an order, under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, that H.'s wife should be authorised to do such things as the Masters should approve of for the purpose of protecting his estate and to exercise the powers of a committee of his estate. In 1902 an order was made in lunacy that H.'s wife should apply certain funds in payment to his creditors of a dividend of 6d. in the pound on their debts. In 1904 an order was made in lunacy that B. & Co., who had not previously claimed, should be admitted as creditors in respect of a certain debt, and should participate in future dividends out of H.'s estate, and should rank in priority to other creditors to the extent of 6d. in the pound upon that debt. Before effect could be given to the order of 1904 H. died, and proceedings for the administration of his estate were taken in the Chancery Division of the High Court:—Held, that the jurisdiction in lunacy ended at the death of H.; that the order of 1904 did not bind the High Court when administering his estate; that on the death of H. his creditors were entitled to have his assets collected and distributed according to their rights as creditors on the estate of a deceased person irrespective of the fact that up to his death his estate was subject to the jurisdiction in lunacy; and that the claim of B. & Co. to priority therefore failed. Hunt, In re; Silicate Paint Co. v. Hunt, 75 L. J. Ch. 801; [1906] 2 Ch. 295; 95 L. T. 600—Buckley, J.

— Mental Infirmary—Receiver—Surety Bond—Death of Lunatic—Subsequent Receipts by Committee—Default—Account—Surety's Liability.—Where a receiver of the estate of a person declared incapable of managing his affairs through mental infirmity entered into a surety bond and received moneys subsequently to the death of the lunatic and made default in payment of the same, the surety is not liable for the moneys so received by the receiver, inasmuch as the latter was not accountable for the same in the lunacy in his character of receiver, his right and duty in that respect having terminated with the death of the lunatic. Walker, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 580; [1907] 2 Ch. 120; 96 L. T. 864—C.A.

Foreign Domicil—Personalty in England—Conflict of Laws—Belgian Law—“Administrateur provisoire”—Right to Recover Property in England—Prerogative of Crown—Costs.—A person of unsound mind, domiciled and resident abroad, suing by his next friend, may recover money and securities belonging to him in England, and if no lunacy proceedings have been taken here his right to recover by such an action will not be affected by the prerogative jurisdiction of the Crown over the property of lunatics. Didisheim v. London and Westminster Bank, 69 L. J. Ch. 443; [1900] 2 Ch. 15; 82 L. T. 738; 48 W. R. 501—C.A.

If a curator has been duly appointed by the Courts of the country where the person of unsound mind is residing, with authority to sue for and give a good discharge for his property, the Courts of this country have no discretion, but are bound to recognise that authority, and if the title of the plaintiff is clear to make an order for the recovery of the property. Ib.

Persons holding property belonging to the person of unsound mind in this country will be sufficiently protected by the order of the Court for payment or delivery, but are entitled to require such an order before handing over the property, and, in a proper case, will be allowed their costs of defending an action brought for establishing the plaintiff's title to recover the property. Barlow's Will, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 795; 86 Ch. D. 287), considered and distinguished. Ib.

(d) Trustee.

Jurisdiction of Master—Person Lawfully Detained as a Lunatic, though not so Found by Inquisition—Management and Administration—Exercise of Power of Committee—Appointment of New Trustee—Vesting Order—Real Estate.—Where the last surviving trustee of a settlement who has the power to appoint new trustees is lawfully detained as a lunatic, though not so found by inquisition, and the power of appointing new trustees has been exercised in his name by a person appointed for that purpose under section 128 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the Masters in Lunacy have, by virtue of subsection 1 of section 27 of the Lunacy Act, 1891, jurisdiction under section 129 of the Act of 1890 to make a vesting order respecting the trust property, whether real or personal, such as could have been made by the High Court under the Trustee Act, 1893, if the appointment of new trustees had been made thereunder. Fuller, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 738; [1900] 2 Ch. 551; 83 L. T. 208; 49 W. R. 90—C.A.

MALICE.

Lawful Act Done with Bad Motive.—An act which does not amount to legal injury is not actionable because it is done with a bad motive. Brown v. Edinburgh Magistrates, [1907] S. C. 256—Ct. of Sess. And see infra.

MALICIOUS PROCEEDING AND FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Action, Cause of—Legal Injury—Day by Day Hiring—Representation Inducing Master to Dismiss Servant.]—Boiler-makers in common employment with the respondents, who were shipwrights working on wood, objected to work with the latter on the ground that in a previous employment they had been engaged on iron-work. The appellant, an official of the Boiler-makers' Union, in response to a telegram from one of the boiler-makers, came to the yard and dissuaded the men from immediately leaving their work, as they threatened to do, intimating that if they did so he would do his best to have them deprived of the benefits of the union, and also fined; they must wait till the matter was settled. The appellant then saw the managing director, to whom he said that if the respondents, who were engaged from day to day, were not dismissed, the boiler-makers would leave their work or be called out. The respondents were thereupon dismissed:—Held, by six of their Lordships as against three, that no actionable wrong had been committed by the appellant. Allen v. Flood, 67 L. J. Q.B. 119; [1898] A.C. 1; 77 L. T. 717; 46 W. R. 258; 62 J. P. 595—H.L. (E.)

By LORD WATSON.—Although the rule may be otherwise with regard to crimes, the law of England does not take into account motive as constituting an element of civil wrong. The existence of a bad motive, in the case of an act which is not in itself illegal, will not convert that act into a civil wrong for which reparation is due. Ib.

Dicta in this regard of LORD ESHER (then BRETT, L.J.) in Bowen v. Hall (50 L. J. Q.B. 305; 6 Q.B. D. 333) and in Temperton v. Russell (62 L. J. Q.B. 412; [1898] 1 Q.B. 715) disapproved. Ib.

Dicta of LORD ESHER, M.R., and LOPES, L.J., in Temperton v. Russell, that it is actionable maliciously to induce a person not to enter into a contract, disapproved. Ib.

Actionable Wrong—Combination to Prevent Person being Employed—Trade Union.]—A combination between two or more persons to induce others not to employ a particular person nor to permit him to be employed, even if the acts are maliciously done and with an intention to injure such person, is not actionable if no civil injury results to him in consequence, for a conspiracy to do certain acts gives a right of action only where the acts agreed to be done, and in fact done, would, had they been done without preconcert, have involved a civil injury to the person against whom they were directed. Allen v. Flood (supra) discussed. Huttly v. Simmons, 67 L. J. Q.B. 213; [1898] 1 Q.B. 181.—Darling, J.

Maliciously Inducing Servant to Break Contract of Service—Maliciously Preventing Persons from Entering into Contracts.]—An action is maintainable by an employer against persons who, to his damage, maliciously conspire to induce his servants to break their contract of service, and also for conspiring together to injure him by preventing persons from entering into contracts with him. Allen v. Flood (67 L. J. Q.B. 119; [1898] A.C. 1) distinguished. Temperton v. Russell (62 L. J. Q.B. 412; [1898] 1 Q.B. 715) followed. Leatham v. Craig, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 667—C.A.

Adjudication of Insolvency—Reasonable and Probable Cause—Functions of Judge and Jury.]—In an action for malicious prosecution it is for the plaintiff to prove the absence of reasonable and probable cause; and it is for the Judge, and not for the jury, to decide, as matter of inference from facts found by the jury, whether or not there was such cause. Cox v. English, Scottish, and Australian Bank, 74 L. J. P.C. 62; [1905] A.C. 168; 92 L. T. 483—P.C.

The appellant was largely indebted to the respondents, who gave him notice that a writ would be issued against him. The respondents, sending from place to place, failed in their efforts to serve the writ or obtain definite information of the appellant's movements. The appellant's solicitor told the respondents they would have to issue the writ, of which he declined to accept service, that a distraint would be put in for the appellant's rent, and that the latter would file his petition. Then, on the respondents' application and an affidavit of belief that the appellant had left his dwelling-house with a view to delay his creditors, the appellant was adjudged insolvent:—Held, that the appellant had failed to prove the absence of reasonable and probable cause for making the application. Ib.

Presentation of Bankruptcy Petition.]—Whether an action will lie for maliciously and without reasonable cause presenting a petition in bankruptcy against an individual without the averment of special damage, quære. Wyatt v. Palmer, 68 L. J. Q.B. 709; [1899] 2 Q.B. 106; 80 L. T. 689; 47 W. R. 549—C.A.

Corporation—Limited Company—Liability to be Sued.]—An action for malicious prosecution will lie against a limited company or corporation. Edwards v. Midland Railway (50 L. J. Ex. 281; 6 Q.B. D. 287) followed. Stevens v. Midland Counties Railway (23 L. J. Ex. 328; 10 Ex. 352) not followed. Judgment of LORD BRAMWELL in Abrath v. North-Eastern Railway (55 L. J. Q.B. 457; 11 App. Cas. 247) commented on. Cornford v. Carlton Bank, 68 L. J. Q.B. 196; [1899] 1 Q.B. 392; 80 L. T. 121.—Darling, J. Affirmed on other grounds, 68 L. J. Q.B. 1020; [1900] 1 Q.B. 22; 81 L. T. 415—C.A.

False Imprisonment—Public-house Manager—Implied Authority to Arrest—Liability of Master.]—The implied authority of a public-house manager to give into custody a person whom he suspects of stealing the property of the proprietor is not unlimited. The implication only arises where the arrest is reasonably necessary for the protection of the employer's property, or for its recovery if it is being wrongfully taken away. Hanson v. Waller, 70 L. J. K.B. 231; [1901] 1 K.B. 390; 84 L. T. 91; 49 W. R. 445—D.

Evidence—Signing Charge Sheet.]—The act of signing a charge sheet is prima facie referable to the prosecution and not to the imprisonment of the person charged. Sewell v. National Telephone Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 196; [1907] 1 K.B. 557; 96 L. T. 483; 23 T. L. R. 226—C.A.

In an action for false imprisonment the only evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiff was that after the plaintiff had been taken into custody by a police officer on a charge of felony, and while he was still in such custody, the defendants by their authorised agent signed the charge sheet:—Held, that the Judge at the trial had rightly withdrawn the case from the jury and entered judgment for the defendants. Austin v. Dowling (39 L. J. C.P. 260; L. R. 5 C.P. 534) followed and applied. Ib.

Conspiracy to Injure Master.]—See CONSPIRACY.

MANDAMUS.

When granted—Alternative Remedy—Neglect of Guardians to Appoint Vaccination Officer—Power of Local Government Board to Appoint.]—The court will not refuse a mandamus on the application of the Local Government Board commanding the guardians of a parish to perform the duty of appointing a vaccination officer, imposed upon them by section 5 of the Vaccination Act, 1871, on the ground that, owing to the guardians having failed for twenty-eight days after receipt of a requisition of the Local Government Board in that behalf to appoint the officer, the Local Government Board (assuming that by statute they have then power to do so) may themselves make the appointment. Reg. v. Leicester Guardians, 68 L. J. Q.B. 945; [1899] 2 Q.B. 632; 81 L. T. 559—D.

Alternative Remedy Inadequate.]—Where a right of appeal given by a statute is not so adequate a remedy as mandamus, a mandamus ought to issue to compel the performance of a duty. Reg. v. Stepney Borough Council, 71 L. J. K.B. 238; [1902] 1 K.B. 317; 86 L. T. 21; 50 W. R. 412; 66 J. P. 183—D.

Refusal to Produce Minutes of Burial Board to Ratepayer—Application not Bona fide—Ultior Motive.]—A ratepayer named Hatton made an application to the District Council of Wimbledon, being the burial board, for his solicitors to inspect and take copies of these minutes. Those solicitors were acting for a company, who for another matter wished to obtain inspection of those books. The board refused to allow the solicitors to inspect, on the ground that the ratepayer alone was the person to whom they were bound to produce the books, and that the present application was not made bona fide, but for another purpose, that was indirectly obtaining inspection on behalf of the company for whom the solicitors were also acting:—Held, that the Court would not in the exercise of their discretion make absolute this rule for a writ of mandamus, as the application was not made bona fide for the purpose of the ratepayer, but for another purpose. Reg. v. Wimbledon Urban Council; Hatton, ex parte, 77 L. T. 599; 62 J. P. 84—D.

Valuation List in Metropolis—Hereditaments Exempt from Poor Rate, but Liable to other Rates—Insertion of Rateable Value in List—Duty of Assessment Committee—Right of Rating Authority to Mandamus—Alternative Remedy.]—Certain hereditaments in the City of London were by statute exempt from poor rate, but not from the consolidated rate. In the valuation list for the parish in which the hereditaments were situated they were duly described, and in the column for gross value their gross value was entered, but in the column for rateable value their rateable value was not entered, the word “exempt” being there entered in place thereof. The Corporation of the City, as the rating authority for levying the consolidated rate, having applied for a mandamus to compel the assessment committee to enter the rateable value of the hereditaments in the list,—Held, that a mandamus ought not to issue, inasmuch as there was another legal and effective remedy in the right of appeal given by section 32 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869; or, if the corporation was not entitled to avail itself of that right of appeal, in the means provided by the Act as a whole for safeguarding the rights of all parties interested in the correctness of the list. Rea v. City of London Union; London Corporation, Ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 1087; [1907] 2 K.B. 764; 97 L. T. 346; 71 J. P. 377; 5 L. G. R. 819; 23 T. L. R. 502—C.A.

Semble, that in such a case the overseers and the assessment committee had a duty to insert the rateable value of the hereditaments in the list. Ib.

Disobedience—Attachment—Delay in Commencing and Carrying out Sewerage Scheme.]—The Corporation of Worcester having disobeyed a peremptory writ of mandamus issued on the application of the Local Government Board, and requiring the corporation to execute certain works, the Courts ordered writs of attachment against certain members of the council to issue, but to lie in the office for a limited period, which had been extended from time to time. The Court now, on an application of the corporation, which the Local Government Board did not oppose, being satisfied that the works were being proceeded with with due diligence, ordered the writs to remain in the office, and the matter to stand over generally, with liberty to apply. Reg. v. Worcester Corporation, 3 L. G. R. 468; 69 J. P. 296—D.

Service of Writ on Members of Corporation—Delay in Commencing and Carrying out the Works Ordered.]—In July, 1897, a peremptory writ of mandamus, ordering a municipal corporation to carry out a sewage scheme, was duly served upon ten members of the city council, which numbered forty-eight members, and the original writ was handed to one of the ten members so served, but was afterwards lost. The corporation being in default, an order of the Court to return the writ, with an authenticated copy of the original writ attached, was, in March, 1903, served upon each of the then members of the council:—Held, that there had been such service of the peremptory writ of mandamus upon the whole of the members of the council, as constituted in March, 1903, as to render them individually liable to attachment for disobedience to it. Held also, on the facts, that there had been such delay in carrying out the works as amounted to disobedience to the writ. Reaz v. Worcester Corporation, 2 L. G. R. 51; 68 J. P. 180—D.

Costs — Rule for Mandamus — Cause Shewn against Rule by Crown — Discharge of Rule — Right of Crown to Costs.—The doctrine of the common law that the Crown neither pays nor receives costs remains unaltered in relation to the prerogative writ of mandamus. Reaz v. Canterbury (Archbishop) (No. 2), 71 L. J. K.B. 932; [1902] 2 K.B. 503; 86 L. T. 450; 50 W. R. 476; 66 J. P. 455—D.

Costs of Opposing Rule.—Upon the argument of a rule nisi for a mandamus to licensing Justices, the Court has jurisdiction to grant costs to a person who successfully opposes the rule being made absolute notwithstanding the decision of the House of Lords in Boulter v. Kent Justices (66 L. J. Q.B. 787; [1897] A.C. 556), that licensing Justices are not a Court of summary jurisdiction. Reg. v. Yorkshire (W.R.) Justices; Shaw, ex parte, 67 L. J. Q.B. 279; [1898] 1 Q.B. 503; 78 L. T. 47; 46 W. R. 334; 62 J. P. 197—D.

Fair and Market on Same Day.—The two franchises of fair and market are separate and distinct, and of equal dignity. There is no question between them of a greater and less estate, such as is essential to merger; and it is therefore possible for the two franchises to co-exist on the same day. Newcastle (Duke) v. Workson Urban Council, 71 L. J. Ch. 487; [1902] 2 Ch. 145; 86 L. T. 405—Farwell, J.

Unlicensed Change of Fair Days—Neglect to Levy Fair Tolls—Forfeiture or Surrender of Fair Tolls.—Although it may be true that an unlicensed change of fair days does not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the fair franchise, but only constitutes a ground of forfeiture of which the Crown may, or may not, take advantage, yet an unlicensed change of fair days precludes a lord who is entitled by his subordinate franchise of toll to levy fair toll on the original fair days from levying such toll on the altered days. Middleton (Lord) v. Power (19 Ir. R. Ch. 1) distinguished. Ib.

Fair Toll—Stallage.—A fair toll is payable to the owner of a franchise of fair toll in respect of goods sold in his fair, or brought into his fair for sale, whether he be owner of the soil or not, and has nothing to do with the ownership of the soil. Stallage, on the contrary, is paid in respect of some usage of the soil, and can be exacted only by the owner of the soil. Ib.

2. TITLE TO HOLD.

Immemorial User within Manor — Presumption of Market without Metes or Bounds—New Streets—Dedication Subject to Market Rights.—The Whitechapel hay and straw market was an ancient market held within the parish of Whitechapel and belonging to the lord of the manor of Stepney. No grant of any franchise could be produced, so that the title of the lord of the manor was by prescription. Of old, the market had always been held in the High Street, but the evidence shewed that in more modern times the market, having increased in size, had extended into certain adjoining streets. When statutes were passed authorising the construction of tramways in those streets, provisions were inserted preserving to the salesmen, as against the tramway company, their right to place market carts in these streets during market hours. The borough council claimed the right to exclude the market carts from these streets, and in 1904 they issued orders directing that whenever the High Street was full the market carts should be deflected into certain back streets:—Held, that the market must be presumed to be a market without metes or bounds which might extend within the limits of the parish as the exigencies of the market might require. Gingell v. Stepney Borough Council, 75 L. J. K.B. 777; [1906] 2 K.B. 463; 95 L. T. 146; 70 J. P. 503; 4 L. G. R. 1092; 22 T. L. R. 688—Swinfen Eady, J.

The fact that the adjoining streets in which the salesmen claimed the right to place their carts were of recent construction, having been made under statutory powers at dates subsequent to 1840, did not prevent their being liable to be used for the purpose of the market. They must be taken to have been dedicated to the public subject to the exercise of the market franchise. Ib.

Manor Market without Metes and Bounds—New Streets—Dedication Subject to Market Rights.]—The Whitechapel hay and straw market was an ancient market belonging to the lord of the manor of Stepney, in which manor the parish of Whitechapel was comprised. No grant of any franchise could be produced, so that the title of the lord of the manor was by prescription. Of old the market had always been held in the High Street, but the evidence shewed that in more modern times the market, having increased in size, had extended into certain adjoining streets. Pursuant to Acts passed in 1840 and 1865 respectively, two existing streets within the parish adjoining the High Street were widened and altered so as to include additional land, and an entirely new street was constructed within the parish, adjoining the High Street, on land that had previously been built upon. On these previously existing and new streets the market had in fact been held for years. The Stepney Borough Council claimed the right to exclude the market carts from these new streets, and in 1904 they issued orders that whenever the High Street was full the market carts should be deflected into certain back streets:—Held (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), that the fact that the three streets last mentioned were of recent construction did not prevent their being liable to be used for the purpose of the market, inasmuch as they must be presumed to have been dedicated to the public subject to the exercise of the market franchise. Gingell v. Stepney Borough Council, 77 L. J. K.B. 847; [1908] 1 K.B. 115; 97 L. T. 598; 71 J. P. 486; 6 L. G. R. 180; 23 T. L. R. 759; 24 T. L. R. 148—C.A.

Limits—New Streets Made under Statutory Authority—Dedication—Market Rights.]—An ancient manor market for hay and straw, which was without metes and bounds, was held in the parish of Whitechapel. The market was held in High Street, and for many years the market carts had stood in some of the adjoining streets when High Street was overcrowded. In 1840 and 1865 two statutes were passed authorising a public body to make three new streets running into High Street, and both those statutes provided that all the land which should be laid open into the streets should form part of the streets, and should be used by the public accordingly. One of the new streets was a widening and extension of an old street which adjoined High Street, and the others were either in whole or in part new streets constructed on land which had before then been private property. Since the new streets were made carts attending the market were placed therein. In an action by hay and straw salesmen for a declaration of their right to use the new streets adjoining High Street for the purpose of the market,—Held, by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and BUCKLEY, L.J. (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), that the market extended into High Street and the adjoining streets; and that, upon the evidence of user, the new streets must be taken as having been dedicated to the public subject to the market rights over them. Gingell v. Stepney Borough Council, [1908] 1 K.B. 115; 97 L. T. 598; 71 J. P. 486; 23 T. L. R. 759; 24 T. L. R. 148—C.A.

3. DISTURBANCE.

Infringement of Market Rights—Injunction.]—A person to whom horses were consigned for sale sold them in a field within a short distance of a market. The consignor objected to the horses being sold within the market, and it appeared that no sale would have taken place elsewhere than where it did take place:—Held, that in the circumstances no case had been made out for an injunction to prevent the salesman interfering with the market rights. Wilcox v. Steel, 67 J. P. 261—Kekewich, J.

Rival Market—Accommodation—Motives of Seller.]—In the case of a mere sale outside a market, the question whether it was the motive of the seller to evade the market tolls is of importance in determining whether there has been a disturbance of the market or not, but where the sale really amounts to the establishment of a new rival market on the market day, taking advantage of the concourse of people at the lawful market, the motive of the seller is irrelevant. Wilcox v. Steel, 73 L. J. Ch. 217; [1904] 1 Ch. 212; 89 L. T. 640; 2 L. G. R. 105; 68 J. P. 146; 20 T. L. R. 78—C.A.

The plaintiff was the lessee of the right to hold a market once a week to buy and sell horses and all sorts of cattle, tolls being taken from those selling there. The defendant, an auctioneer, who had held sales of cattle and horses in the market, paying tolls to previous lessees of the market, held a sale on a market day in the neighbourhood of the plaintiff's market of a number of horses which had been consigned to him for sale, which sale he invited people in the market to attend. There was evidence that the defendant's object in holding this sale was not to evade payment of the market tolls, but that the horses would not have been consigned to him for sale at all if they were to be sold in the plaintiff's market:—Held, that the acts of the defendant amounted to a disturbance of the plaintiff's market. Ib.

Disturbance of.]—See Stevens v. Chown, 70 L. J. Ch. 571; post, STATUTE.

4. TOLLS.

Right to.]—Toll is not incident to a fair or market, but owes its origin to a separate grant, and exists as a subordinate franchise appurtenant to the fair or market, differing in this respect from the Court of Piepowder, which is incident to a market. Statement to the contrary in Viner's Abridgment, tit. "Market," F. 7 and 8, considered and dissented from. Newcastle (Duke of) v. Workson Urban Council, 71 L. J. Ch. 487; [1902] 2 Ch. 145; 86 L. T. 405—Farwell, J.

Preferential Tolls—Power to Remit.]—There is no rule of law against preferential market tolls. So long as the lord of the market toll does not exceed the maximum sum that he is entitled to demand—that is, a reasonable amount, where no sum is specified by his charter—he is entitled to remit the whole or any part of the toll to whomsoever he pleases. Reasoning in Hungerford Market Co. v. City Steamboat Co. (30 L. J. Q.B. 25; 3 E. & E. 365) applied. Ib.

Infringement—Injunction.—By letters patent in the sixteenth year of his reign James I. granted a right to a Friday market for the town of W. By an Act of 48 Geo. 3, after reciting the letters patent, it was enacted that it should be lawful for the person entitled to keep the market to take tollage of markets holden on Wednesday and Saturday. On June 13, 1887, the market rights were conveyed and assigned to the W. Local Board. In 1888 by-laws were made regulating the use of the market-place. By-law 15 provided that a market for the sale of goods, meat, fish, poultry, provisions, fruit, vegetables, plants, flowers, hardware, furniture, apparel, and all other goods, merchandise, and marketable commodities should be held on every day except Sunday, Christmas Day, and Good Friday. By a charter in the fifty-fourth year of Henry 3, a Tuesday market in P. was granted, which became vested in Queen's College, Oxford, who conveyed to the plaintiff. Under section 19 of the Local Government Act, 1899, a scheme was made for W. and an Order in Council was made extending the boundaries of W. so as to include P. No provision was made for charging tolls, but power to do so was given by the Woolwich Borough Council Act, 1903, s. 4. The plaintiffs asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants from hawking, selling, or offering or exposing for sale within the borough of W. (except in their own dwelling-houses or shops) any articles or commodities usually sold in public markets except in a market-place of the borough of W., and after payment of the tolls payable to the plaintiffs. Some of the defendants claimed a right to sell in the market without paying toll, and proved that they had sold without paying toll for a number of years:—Held, that as the right to take tolls was not given by the charter, but by the Act of 1903, no right was acquired by non-payment of tolls for a considerable period. No trace of the defendants acquiring a right adverse to the rest of the world could be discovered, and an injunction must be granted. Woolwich Corporation v. Gibson, 92 L. T. 538; 69 J. P. 361; 3 L. G. R. 961; 21 T. L. R. 421—Swinfen Eady, J.

Carts Used for Delivery of Mineral Waters to Customers—Exposure to Sale of Commodities in Public Street.—A mineral-water cart used for delivery of goods from a distant manufactory to customers in an urban district, in which a local Act is in force, is not liable to a toll imposed by such local Act upon every cart "used for exposing or in which shall be exposed to sale any article commodity or thing" brought into any public market-place or public street. Newton-in-Makerfield Urban Council v. Lyon, 69 L. J. Q.B. 230; 81 L. T. 756; 48 W. R. 222—D.

Selling Fruit and Vegetables in Public Streets—Hawker's Licence.—An itinerant vendor of fruit and vegetables in the public streets of an urban district possessing a market, who holds a hawker's licence, is entitled to the exemption from market tolls afforded by section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, although no hawker's licence be needed for the sale of such articles, for in so vending his wares he does not act in breach of his licence. Llan-dudno Urban Council v. Hughes, 69 L. J. Q.B. 303; [1900] 1 Q.B. 472; 82 L. T. 147; 48 W. R. 366; 64 J. P. 357; 19 Cox C.C. 456—D.

Manufacturer of Mineral Waters Calling on Customers.—By a by-law of the borough of D., "every person or persons who shall hawk or expose about the town for sale" certain articles shall pay a toll. The respondent, who was in the employ of a manufacturer of mineral waters at R., brought into the borough of D. a van laden with mineral waters. He called at the houses and shops of regular customers to sell and deliver to them any mineral waters they might require. The goods were not cried in the streets, and no effort was made to attract casual customers:—Held (dissentiente DARLING, J.), that the respondent had not hawked or exposed about the town for sale the mineral waters, within the meaning of the by-law. Philpott v. Allright, 94 L. T. 540; 70 J. P. 287; 4 L. G. R. 1013; 21 Cox C.C. 123—D.

Person Travelling with Horse and Cart—Selling Oil to Customers—Absence of Previous Orders.—A person who travels with a horse and cart carrying a cask of oil, and calls at the houses of customers in compliance with their request, and delivers oil there without having received previous orders for any specified quantities, is a "hawker" within the definition of that term in section 2 of the Hawkers Act, 1838, and is required to take out a licence under section 3. O'Dea v. Crowhurst, 68 L. J. Q.B. 655; 80 L. T. 491; 63 J. P. 424; 19 Cox C.C. 260—D.

Agreement to Sell Goods then Outside Market Limits, followed by Delivery Within Limits.—G. was charged on summons with having sold, or exposed for sale, on June 13, 1904, within the limits of a market, a quantity of potatoes, which were tollable articles. It appeared that on June 9 G. had agreed with M., within the limits of the market, to supply him with 1 cwt. of potatoes, no price being agreed on. The potatoes were not at the time within the limits of the markets, but were delivered within such limits on June 13:—Held, that G. was not guilty of an offence within section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847. Gracey v. Banbridge Urban Council, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 209—K.B. D.

5. LOCAL AUTHORITY.

By-laws—Competency to Enact.—A by-law, enacted by a local authority under statutory powers, that sale rings established by the local authority shall be used only for public sales by auction on conditions equally applicable to all bidders and buyers, and not for private sales, or for sales to any limited number of persons, or for sales in which any class of the public are excluded from bidding or buying, held (LORD SHAND dissenting) to be valid and intra vires. Scott v. Glasgow Corporation, 68 L. J. P.C. 98; [1899] A.C. 470; 81 L. T. 302; 64 J. P. 132—H.L. (Sc.)

6. PENALTIES.

Recovery of Penalties—Party Aggrieved.—The servant of a retail dealers' association may take proceedings to recover penalties for a contravention of section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847. He is "a party aggrieved" within the meaning of section 253 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Ross v. Taylerson, 62 J. P. 181—D.

2. CONTRACT OF SERVICE.

Agreement to "engage and employ"—Duty to Find Employment—Representative Salesman.—In an agreement by a firm of cotton-yarn merchants to engage and employ a servant as representative salesman for a fixed period, whereby the firm agreed to pay a fixed yearly salary and the servant agreed to devote his whole time to the business of the firm,—Held (STIRLING, L.J., doubting), that there was no obligation on the firm to find employment for the servant as representative salesman. Turner v. Goldsmith (60 L. J. Q.B. 247; [1891] 1 Q.B. 544) distinguished. Turner v. Sawdon, 70 L. J. K.B. 897; [1901] 2 K.B. 653; 85 L. T. 222; 49 W. R. 712—C.A.

Commercial Traveller—Refusal by Employer to Send on Journey—Travelling Expenses.—A commercial traveller was engaged for a term. By the contract he was to travel in certain countries, and was to receive a salary of 500*l.* and a fixed allowance per day as travelling expenses. During the continuance of the engagement his employers found that owing to a fall in prices, it was no longer profitable to take orders in the countries travelled by him. They thereupon refused to send him on further journeys, and refused to pay him the allowance for travelling expenses or any part thereof, but continued to pay him his salary. He sued them for damages for the injury done to the goodwill of his trade connection by their refusal to send him on journeys, and for the loss of the proportion of his allowance for travelling expenses which by economy he was able to save when travelling:—Held, that the action would not lie. Lagerwall v. Wilkinson, 80 L. T. 55—Bigham, J.

Shipping Agent—Engagement "for one year certain"—Termination of Contract.—By letter dated December 29, 1891, the manager of the N. B. Railway appointed S., a coal exporter, to be "agent for this Company as from 1st ulto

(for the purpose of attending to the Company's interests in connection with their shipping trade to Hamburg at Bo'ness, Burntisland, and Methil), at a salary of 450*l.* per annum, for one year certain." S.'s duty as agent was to endeavour to get coal taken by the railway company's lines to the ports named, and shipped thence to Hamburg. On December 7, 1892, the contract was renewed "for another year." Thereafter S. continued to discharge the duties of agent until 1900 without formal reappointment. He always received his salary in one sum*for each year ending October 31. On January 2, 1901, the railway company gave S. notice that his services would not be required after three months from that date. In an action by S. against the company for payment of the balance of his salary to October 31, 1901,—Held, that the contract between the pursuer and the defenders was a yearly contract, and therefore that the defenders were not entitled to terminate it, after a year had begun, on three months' notice. Stevenson v. North British Railway, 7 F. 1106—Ct. of Sess.

Agreement for Five Years—Illness of Servant—Right of Employer to Terminate Agreement—Substantial Period of Agreement Unexpired.]—By an agreement, made in August, 1903, the defendants agreed to employ the plaintiff for a period of five years as their works manager. The agreement contained no provision enabling the defendants to terminate the agreement before the end of the five years. Towards the end of 1905 the plaintiff became ill and was absent from work from time to time. In January, 1906, his illness became more serious, and shortly afterwards he was medically examined and was told that he must have complete rest for a considerable time and undergo special treatment. It did not appear from the certificate of the doctor given at the time that the plaintiff would never be able to resume his work. As, by reason of his ill-health, the plaintiff continued to be absent from work, the defendants gave him notice in April, 1906, terminating the agreement, and they appointed one of their staff to act as works manager. By the middle of May, 1906, the plaintiff recovered and was fit for work. In an action by him for damages for breach of contract,—Held, that he was entitled to recover, inasmuch as the circumstances were not such as to justify the defendants in thinking that the plaintiff would never be able to perform a substantial part of the unexpired period of the agreement. Storey v. Fulham Steel Works, 23 T. L. R. 306—Channell, J. Affirmed, 24 T. L. R. 89—C.A.

Confidentiality—Use by Servant after Leaving Service of Information Obtained during Service.]—A person who had been agent of a friendly society was held not entitled, after he had left the society's service, to give written lists of the members of the society to the officials of a rival society. Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society v. Houston, 3 F. 42—Ct. of Sess.

—Right of Property in Lists of Customers—Procuring Breach of Contract—Injunction—Damages.]—By an agreement in writing dated April 1, 1902, B. entered into the service of W. S. & Co., and agreed not at any time without the consent in writing of

W. S. & Co. to "divulge or make known any of the trusts, secrets, accounts, or dealings of or relating to the business of the company." On September 21, 1905, B. wrote to K. & Co., asking if they had a vacancy for a traveller, and stated he could introduce some excellent accounts. On September 30 B. left W. S. & Co. and entered into the service of K. & Co., and communicated to them lists of the customers of W. S. & Co., and called on these customers and induced many of them to transfer their custom from W. S. & Co. to K. & Co. K. & Co. had notice of the agreement:—Held, that an injunction must be granted against both defendants, restraining them from acting in breach of the agreement, and that the lists of customers made by B. must be given up to W. S. & Co., and that W. S. & Co. were entitled to damages against both B. and K. & Co. Summers v. Boyce, 97 L. T. 505—Swinfen Eady, J.

3. BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Continuance of Employment—Damages—Waiver.]—On the hearing of a complaint under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, for damages for breach of contract by the appellants against the respondent, a miner, it was admitted that the appellants had continued, since the date of such breach, to employ the respondent upon the terms of such contract:—Held, that that amounted to no waiver or release with regard to the claim for damages. Wynnstay Collieries v. Edwards, 79 L. T. 378; 62 J. P. 823—D. And see CONTRACT, col. 537, and MALICIOUS PROCEEDING, col. 1445.

4. SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.

Negligence of Servant—Evidence of Existence of Relationship—Admission—Offer to Pay Money after Accident.]—The plaintiff was knocked down and injured by a runaway pony attached to a trap which had been driven by M. The pony and trap were the property of B. The plaintiff sued M. and B. for damages. At the trial a witness for the plaintiff gave evidence of a statement made by M. after the accident to the effect that he had been driving the pony and trap and had left them standing in the street when the pony was startled and ran away. He also proved that after the accident, and after the plaintiff had been brought to the hospital, M. claimed the pony and trap and took them away. The plaintiff's daughter proved that B. called on her after the accident and said he was very sorry that they were his pony and trap, and that if she took her father home he would pay all expenses. In cross-examination it appeared that this offer to pay the expenses was made after the plaintiff's daughter had said to B. that she believed he had lent M. the pony and trap, to which B. merely replied "Humph." Neither B. nor M. was produced at the trial. Counsel for B. asked the Judge for a direction in his favour, which was refused, and the Judge asked the jury to find whether M. was acting as the servant of B. within the scope of his authority. The jury answered this question in the affirmative, and found 250*l.* damages against the defendants:—Held, that there was no evidence to support the finding; that no presumption of the relationship of master and servant arose from the fact of M. driving B.'s pony and trap; that the offer to pay expenses was made on the basis of B. having lent the pony and trap to M., and could not be treated as an admission of liability on another hypothesis; that the evidence offered being at least equally consistent with a state of facts on which B. would not be liable, he was entitled to a non-suit or a direction in his favour, and that the verdict and judgment entered thereon against him should be set aside. Powell v. M'Glynn and Bradlaw, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 154—C.A.

Bailment—Locatio Operis Faciendi—Theft by Servant of Bailee—Liability of Bailee.—A jobmaster let to a silversmith a brougham, in order that the traveller of the silversmith might be driven about London in search of orders by a driver supplied by the jobmaster. It was in the contemplation of the parties to the contract that the brougham would contain valuable samples, and that it would be a part of the duty of the driver to take care of its contents during the necessary absences of the traveller from it. The jobmaster supplied a driver whom he reasonably supposed to be trustworthy, but during a necessary absence of the traveller the driver stole the contents of the brougham:—Held, in an action by the silversmith to recover from the jobmaster the value of the stolen goods, that, as the jobmaster had taken reasonable care to perform his duty of supplying a trustworthy servant, he was not liable for the loss caused by the crime of his servant, which was outside the scope of his employment. Abraham v. Bullock (86 L. T. 796) distinguished. Cheshire v. Bailey, 74 L. J. K.B. 176; [1905] 1 K.B. 237; 92 L. T. 142; 53 W. R. 322; 21 T. L. R. 180—C.A.

Hire of Chattel—Liability of Bailee to Bailor for Tortious Act of Servant.—The bailee of a chattel for hire is not, in the absence of want of due care on his part, liable to the bailor for damage caused to the chattel by the tortious act of the bailee's servant whilst acting outside the scope of his employment. Coupe Co. v. Maddick (60 L. J. Q.B. 676; [1891] 2 Q.B. 413) considered and distinguished. Sanderson v. Collins, 73 L. J. K.B. 358; [1904] 1 K.B. 628; 90 L. T. 243; 52 W. R. 354; 20 T. L. R. 249—C.A.

Driver—Coachman Hired from Livery Yard.—The owner of a brougham and horse, with its harness, kept them at a livery stable. He had no coachman, but hired a driver from the livery-stable keeper at a certain weekly sum. The livery-stable keeper paid the driver's wages. The owner of the equipage supplied the driver with a full suit of livery clothes, and there was evidence that the driver had been approved of by the owner. The horse was new to London life, and had only been driven a few times in the brougham by the driver; its peculiarities and characteristics were unknown both to the livery-stable keeper and also to the driver:—Held, that the inference to be drawn from the circumstances was that the driver was the servant, not of the livery-stable keeper, but of the owner of the equipage, who was liable for injuries caused to a third person through the negligence of the driver whilst driving the equipage. Jones v. Scullard, 67 L. J. Q.B. 895;

Passenger Standing on Driver's Platform—Consent of Driver—Violation of Rules.—The plaintiff got on to a tramcar belonging to the defendants. The car being crowded both inside and on the back platform, the plaintiff travelled on the driver's platform, the driver making no objection to his doing so. During the journey the car ran off the line owing to the points being set wrong, and the plaintiff was thrown off and sustained injuries in respect of which he sued the defendants. No one else in the car was hurt. In his evidence the plaintiff stated that he had travelled on the driver's platform some six times previously, without objection, and had always paid his fare, but this was controverted. The servants of the defendants had orders not to allow any one on the front or back platform, and notices were placed inside the cars that it was forbidden to stand there. The jury found that the servants of the company had no authority from the company to allow the plaintiff to stand on the driver's platform; that the plaintiff stood on that platform with the permission of the defendant's servants; that such permission was not with the consent of the company and was in violation of their rules; that the plaintiff was travelling on the platform as a passenger intending to pay his fare; that the notice alleged to be posted in the car was not brought to the plaintiff's attention or seen by him; and that reasonable notice was not given to the public of the company's rule that passengers should not occupy the platform. They further found that the accident was caused by the company's negligence in the driving of the tramcar, and awarded damages to the plaintiff:—Held, that the findings of the jury negatived any authority in the driver to permit the plaintiff to stand on the front platform, whether derived from course of service, or scope of employment; that such permission was not an act of agency, but was a personal indulgence outside course of service or scope of employment; and that the company were not liable. Byrne v. Londonderry Tramway Co., [1902] 2 Ir. R. 457—C.A.

Purchase of Motor Car—Car being Driven for Delivery to Purchaser.—The defendant purchased and paid for a motor car in London, and the vendor agreed to provide a driver to drive the car to a certain place outside London and deliver it there, as the defendant's driver did not know the locality and had no experience of the class of car purchased. While the car was being driven by the driver supplied by the vendor from London to the place named for delivery it collided with and damaged a motor bicycle, owing to the negligence of the driver. At the time the defendant, his driver, and his son were in the car. In an action in the County Court by the owner of the bicycle against the defendant to recover for the damage to the bicycle, the Judge held that the driver of the car, though he was the general servant of the vendor, was at the time under the control of the defendant, who had the property in and possession of the car, and that therefore the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the negligence of the driver:—Held, that the decision was right. Jones v. Scullard (67 L. J.

— Delegation of Duty—Negligence.—A motor car, after having been repaired by the defendants, was sent back to the owner under the charge of a driver who was in the employment of the defendants. The driver received instructions from the defendants not to give up the driving to any one. At one stage of the journey a man not in the employment of the defendants accompanied the driver, who, hearing a noise at the back of the car, entrusted the driving to his companion while he himself went to the back of the car to see the cause of the noise. His companion, while driving, negligently drove the car against the plaintiff's van. In an action to recover damages in the County Court the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. The Divisional Court held that, as there was no necessity for keeping the car going while the driver examined the machinery, and therefore for entrusting the driving to the driver's companion, the defendants were not liable for the negligence of the latter. Upon appeal, Held, that, as the question of the necessity to entrust the driving of the car to a third person was not raised in the County Court nor by the notice of appeal to the Divisional Court, it could not be raised afterwards, and the verdict and judgment for the plaintiff must stand. Harris v. Fiat Motors, 23 T. L. R. 504—C.A.

— Omnibus driven by Conductor.—On the trial of an action for negligence against an omnibus company it was proved by the plaintiff's witnesses that the omnibus by which the plaintiff was run down and injured had just finished one of its journeys, and was coming down an incline at the rate of eight miles an hour while making a slight détour for the purpose of coming to the starting-place facing the right way for commencing a fresh journey, and that it was being driven by the conductor, who was not the regular driver:—Held, that the Judge was right in withdrawing the case from the jury at the close of the plaintiff's case, on the ground that there was no evidence that the person who was driving the omnibus was acting within the scope of his authority. Beard v. London General Omnibus Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 895; [1900] 2 Q.B. 530; 83 L. T. 362; 48 W. R. 658—C.A.*

— Master Letting out Engine, Trolley, and Driver—Hirer to have Control of Driver—Negligence of Driver while Engaged in Work of Hirer.—The defendants let out on hire at a certain sum per week a traction engine, trolley, and driver for the engine, and they paid the driver, who took his orders from the hirers and went with the engine wherever they told him to go. Under the terms of the hiring agreement, which had been continued from week to week for several months, the defendants were to supply the hirers with motors, trolleys, and drivers, and to provide oil and do the necessary repairs, and the hirers were to have control over the engines, trolleys, and drivers, and were to provide coal. The driver got his orders from the hirers, and did whatever they told him to do. While the driver was proceeding in charge of the engine along the road with a trolley of coals a collision occurred through his negligence, causing personal injuries to the plaintiff:—Held, that, although the engine driver was paid by and was in the general service of the defendants, he was at the time of the accident in the particular service of the hirers, and was under their control with reference to the work which was then being done, and therefore the defendants were not liable for the consequences of his negligence. Dewar v. Tasker, 95 L. T. 87; 22 T. L. R. 303—D.

— Servant Lent to Another—Control over Servant—Negligence—Hire of Engine and Driver.—The defendants hired out an engine to another person, and they supplied a driver for the engine. They paid the driver, supplied the oil for the engine, and kept it in repair. The evidence shewed that the person to whom the engine was hired could direct where the engine should go and what loads it should haul, and that the defendants never knew where the engine was sent to or what it carried. While so hired, the engine, by the negligence of the driver, injured the plaintiff:—Held, that, on the facts, the defendants, who appointed and paid, and who could dismiss the driver, had control over him at the time of the injury, and were therefore liable to the plaintiff. Dewar v. Tasker, 23 T. L. R. 259—C.A.

Servant Working for Another Person—Use of Master's Plant by Servant.—The Harvey Engineering Co. contracted to remove and repair an iron shaft belonging to the defendants. In the course of the work of removal the pursuer, one of the servants of the Harvey Engineering Co., was injured through the breaking of the chain attached to a winch belonging to the defendants, which was being used to raise the shaft on to a barrow. The pursuer sued the defendants for damages, alleging that Hill, a sawyer in their employment, was instructed by the defendants to assist the Harvey Engineering Co.'s workmen in the removal of the shaft; that in so doing Hill "remained in the service of the defendants and continued to be subject to their control"; that Hill made use of a steam winch and chain belonging to the defendants for the purpose of raising the shaft on to a barrow; that while the shaft was being so raised the chain broke and the shaft fell on the pursuer and injured him; that the chain was obviously unsound and unfit for the work; and that "the accident was accordingly due to the fault of the defendants. The plant in question was supplied by them or by their employee for whom they were responsible, and it was their duty to inspect it and to see that it was sufficient for the purpose. It is a general and well recognised custom of trade that when machinery is being removed from premises for repair the occupiers of the premises give the use of their plant for the purpose, and that any employee deputed by them to assist in the operation has authority to use their plant":—Held, that the action was not maintainable in respect that at the time of the accident Hill was in the employment of the Harvey Engineering Co. in the sense that he was under their control, and not under that of the defendants; and that the pursuer did not aver that the Harvey Engineering Co. had contracted with the defendants for the use of the winch and chain. Donovan v. Laing (63 L. J. Q.B. 25; [1893] 1 Q.B. 629) followed. M'Fall v. Adams, [1907] S.C. 367—Ct. of Sess.

Libel by Servant—Liability of Master—Voluntary Association.]—A master is liable for a libel written by his servant while acting within the scope of his employment, although without special instructions. So held, where the master was a voluntary association? Ellis v. National Free Labour Association, 7 F. 629—Ct. of Sess.

False Imprisonment—Public-house Manager—Implied Authority to Arrest—Liability of Master.]—The implied authority of a public-house manager to give into custody a person whom he suspects of stealing the property of the proprietor is not unlimited. The implication only arises where the arrest is reasonably necessary for the protection of the employer's property, or for its recovery if it is being wrongfully taken away. Hanson v. Waller, 70 L. J. K.B. 281; [1901] 1 K.B. 390; 84 L. T. 91; 49 W. R. 445—D.

Station-master—Detention of Passenger.]—The plaintiff, a passenger on the defendants' line, alighted at the station next before that for which his ticket was issued. He refused to give up his ticket, alleging that he was breaking his journey, but offered his name and address. The station-master thereupon locked the only door leading out of the station and detained the plaintiff a considerable time until his ticket was given up. On new trial motion in an action against the company for false imprisonment:—Held, that the locking of the door being an act of a class ordinarily within the scope of the station-master's authority, and having been done under circumstances that rendered it unjustifiable in the course of the servant's employment, and for the purposes of the railway company, his employers, the company, were responsible. Farry v. Great Northern Railway, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 352—Q.B. D.

Tramway Conductor—Alleged Counterfeit Coin—Giving into Custody.]—The plaintiff Knight was travelling in one of the defendant company's trams and tendered 6d. in payment of the fare, and received 4d. change. Shortly after the conductor alleged it was counterfeit, and, on the plaintiff refusing to give another, the conductor gave him in charge. An inspector of the company, who happened to be passing, sent the conductor down to charge the plaintiff, and went on with the tram. The next morning the magistrate dismissed the charge, the sixpence turning out to be a good one. Another inspector of the company was present in Court during the proceedings. In an action against the tramway company for malicious prosecution and false imprisonment,—Held, that there was no evidence to shew that the conductor acted within the scope of his authority express or implied, or that the defendant company ratified his proceedings. Knight v. Metropolitan Tramways Co., 78 L. T. 227—Bruce, J.

Boy Cleaning Machine—Person in Charge Starting Machine—"Allowing" Boy to be in Machine—Injury—Liability.]—A young person employed in a factory by a person in charge of a self-acting machine, was ordered by the person in charge of the machine to clean a part of the machine, and for this purpose the boy was obliged to go into the space between the fixed and traversing portions of the machine. When the order was given the machine was properly stopped; but while the boy was still in this space the person in charge of the machine, thinking the boy was clear of the space, started the machine, whereby the boy received injuries from which he died:—Held, that, as the person in starting the machine was acting under the belief that the boy was clear of the space, the boy was not "allowed" by him to be in the prohibited space at the time of the accident, within the meaning of sub-sections 2 and 3 of section 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and that the employers, the occupiers of the factory, were not liable in consequence thereof to a fine under section 83 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, though such occupiers would have been liable for an "allowance" by their servant. Crabtree v. Fern Spinning Co., 85 L. T. 549; 50 W. R. 167; 66 J. P. 181; 20 Cox C.C. 82—D.

5. FACTORIES AND WORKSHOPS.

(a) What are.

Gangway of Ship—Regulations—Breach of.]—Part II. section 4 of the Regulations of October 24, 1904 (made by the Secretary of State under section 79 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901), contains a regulation as to the use of a gangway when a ship is lying at a quay:—Held, that this regulation applied only in the case of persons employed in loading or unloading or coaling the vessel, and did not affect the liability at common law of the shipowner to third parties. O'Brien v. Arbib, [1907] S.C. 975—Ct. of Sess.

"Factory"—Beer-bottling Works—Washing and Filling Bottles—"Adapting for sale"—Mechanical Power—"in aid of" Manufacturing Process.]—Premises used solely for the purpose of washing beer-bottles by manual labour with the aid of mechanical power, and filling them with beer by manual labour only, are not a factory within the meaning of section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. Law v. Graham, 70 L. J. K.B. 608; [1901] 2 K.B. 327; 84 L. T. 599; 49 W. R. 622; 65 J. P. 501; 19 Cox C.C. 709—D.

—Beer-bottling Stores—Mechanical Power—Manufacturing Process—Adapting for Sale—Non-textile Factory.]—Bottling stores used for aerating and bottling beer, where carbonic-acid gas and beer are mixed together by mechanical power and then put into bottles by a tap, the nozzle of which is pulled down by hand into the neck of the bottle, the beer flowing from the tap and filling the bottle by the pressure of the gas, come within the definition of a non-textile factory in section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, and it is an offence to employ a young person in such beer-bottling stores beyond the period permitted by section 13 of that Act or section 36 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. Law v. Graham (70 L. J. K.B. 608; [1901] 2 K.B. 327) distinguished. Hoare

v. Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 380; 86 L. T. 417; 50 W.R. 396; 66 J. P. 342—D.

— Making and Finishing of Bricks—Girl under Age of Sixteen.]—Bricks after being baked were taken to dipping-sheds, and after being placed in a preparing solution were dipped in glaze and scraped and knifed. They were then stacked, and ultimately baked with a view to setting the glaze. They were then polished, and stacked until wanted for sale:—Held, that this constituted the “finishing of bricks” within the Act. Squire v. Stanley, 84 L. T. 535; 65 J. P. 467; 19 Cox C.C. 695—D.

— “Tenement factory”—Supply of Mechanical Power from Several Sources—Buildings “situate within the same close or curtilage” — Fire-escapes.]—A building is not a “tenement factory” within the meaning of section 149, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in which the mechanical power employed in the different parts of the building occupied by different persons is derived from separate sources situated upon these parts respectively, inasmuch as mechanical power is not “supplied to” different parts of such a building within the meaning of the sub-section. Brass and London County Council, In re, 73 L. J. K.B. 841; [1904] 2 K.B. 336; 91 L. T. 344; 53 W.R. 27; 68 J. P. 365; 2 L. G.R. 809; 20 T. L. R. 464—D.

Semble, that adjoining premises consisting of two factories, the one in part superimposed upon the other, and a builder's store, approached by separate entrances, cannot properly be described as “buildings situate within the same close or curtilage” within the definition of “tenement factory” in section 149, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. Ib.

— “Workshop”—Room for Repairing Articles used by a Person in his Business—Fishing-boat Owner—Room for Repairing Fishing Nets—Manual Labour Exercised “by way of trade or for purposes of gain.”]—A fishing-boat owner occupied a warehouse with a chamber over it, in which persons in his employ repaired fishing nets belonging to his fishing boats and used by him in his fishing business, and no nets were repaired in this room except those which belonged to him and were used by him in his own fishing business. Upon an inspector of factories visiting the premises he found four persons engaged in manual labour in mending or repairing these nets:—Held, on the authority of Nash v. Hollinshead (70 L. J. K.B. 571; [1901] 1 K. B. 700), that, as the labour employed in the room was employed in the repairing of nets belonging to the employer and solely used by him in his own business, there was no manual labour exercised “by way of trade or for purposes of gain” within the meaning of the definition of “workshop” in section 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and that therefore the room was not a “workshop” within the meaning of the Act. Curtis v. Shinner, 95 L. T. 31; 70 J. P. 272; 22 T. L. R. 448—D.

— Underground Bakehouse in Use before 1901 Continued after January 1, 1904—Necessity for Certificate of District Council.]—Section

101 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, absolutely prohibits the use of underground bakehouses after January 1, 1904, unless certified as structurally suitable for the purpose by the local authority. Evans v. Gallon, 2 L. G. R. 1004; 68 J. P. 537—D.

— “Workshop”—Omission to Affix Abstract of Act—“Manual labour” —“Article.”]—Premises belonging to retail florists consisted of a shop in front and a room at the back. In this room crosses, wreaths, and bouquets were made by employees, and floral decorations arranged. In doing this work wire was used, and rubber tubing, made to resemble the bark of trees, attached to frames. This work was not merely incidental to the business done in the shop:—Held, that the production of these crosses &c. was the exercise of “manual labour” by way of trade in the making or adapting for sale of articles within the meaning of section 149, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and that consequently the room in which it took place was a “workshop” within the Act, and the notice mentioned in section 128, sub-section 1 (a) must be affixed therein. Hoare v. Green, 76 L. J. K.B. 730; [1907] 2 K.B. 315; 96 L. T. 724; 71 J. P. 341; 23 T. L. R. 483—D.

— Underground Bakehouse—Place Underground “used” as a Bakehouse on January 1, 1896.]—A place underground had been used as a bakehouse for about fifteen years down to October, 1895, when the premises of which it formed part became vacant. The landlord then had the premises, including the bakehouse, put into repair, and while the work of repair was in progress a notice was exhibited upon the premises to the effect that they were to let as baker's premises. The repairs were completed by Christmas, 1895, but the premises remained unoccupied until February, 1896, when they were let to a baker, who entered into possession and used the bakehouse for the purposes of his business. By sub-section 3 of section 27 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, “a place underground shall not be used as a bakehouse unless it is so used at the commencement of this Act”—that is, January 1, 1896:—Held, that the place in question was “used” as a bakehouse within the meaning of the above exception, and was therefore not a place underground the use of which as a bakehouse was prohibited by the Act. Schwerzerhof v. Wilkins, 67 L. J. Q.B. 476; [1893] 1 Q.B. 640; 78 L. T. 229; 62 J. P. 247; 19 Cox C.C. 22—D.

— Certificate of Suitability—Alterations—Apportionment of Expenses.]—By a lease made in 1903 premises were let for a term of twenty-one years at a yearly rent of 50*l.* as an underground bakehouse. The lease contained a covenant that the lessee would during the term “pay all existing and future taxes, rates, duties, assessments, impositions and outgoings of every description for the time being payable either by landlord or tenant in respect of the premises respectively (except landlord's property tax).” The certificate of suitability required by section 101 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, could not be obtained unless structural alterations were made in the premises:—Held, that the expenses of the alterations were “impositions and outgoings” within the meaning of the covenant, and therefore that they must be borne by the lessee. Monk v. Arnold (71 L. J. K.B. 441; [1902] 1 K.B. 761) considered. Goldstein v. Hollingsworth, 73 L. J. K.B. 826; [1904] 2 K.B. 578—D. And see LANDLORD AND TENANT—OUTGOINGS, cols. 1232–3.

— Structural Alterations—Covenant to Pay Outgoings—Recovery of Expenses—Jurisdiction of High Court.—A lease of an underground bakehouse contained a covenant by the lessee to pay all outgoings which might be imposed upon the demised premises or upon the landlord or tenant in respect thereof. During the lease the district council refused to certify under section 101, sub-section 8 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, that the premises were suitable for the purpose of being used as an underground bakehouse, on the ground that structural alterations were necessary. The defendant, who was assignee of the lease, applied under the same sub-section to a Court of summary jurisdiction to apportion, and that Court apportioned, the expenses between the lessors and lessee. The plaintiffs, assignees of the reversion, having made the necessary structural alterations, claimed to recover the expense of so doing from the defendant:—Held, that the expenses were not recoverable by means of an action in the High Court, the only remedy of the plaintiffs being under section 101, sub-section 8 of the Act. Horner v. Franklin (74 L. J. K.B. 291; [1905] 1 K.B. 479) applied. Goldstein v. Hollingsworth (73 L. J. K.B. 826; [1904] 2 K.B. 578) and Morris v. Beal (73 L. J. K.B. 880; [1904] 2 K.B. 585) considered. Stuckey v. Hooke, 75 L. J. K.B. 504; [1906] 2 K.B. 20; 94 L. T. 723; 54 W. R. 509; 70 J. P. 393; 4 L. G. R. 815; 22 T. L. R. 508—C.A.

— Room for Repairing Articles Used by a Person in his Business—Fishing-boat Owner—Room for Repairing Fishing Nets—Manual Labour Exercised “by way of trade or for purposes of gain.”—A fishing-boat owner occupied a warehouse with a chamber over it in which persons in his employ repaired fishing nets belonging to his fishing boats and used by him in his fishing business, and no nets were repaired in this room except those which belonged to him and were used by him in his own fishing business. Upon an inspector of factories visiting the premises he found four persons engaged in manual labour in mending or repairing these nets:—Held, on the authority of Nash v. Hollinshead (70 L. J. K.B. 571; [1901] 1 K.B. 700), that, as the labour employed in the room was employed in the repairing of nets belonging to the employer and solely used by him in his own business, there was no manual labour exercised “by way of trade or for purposes of gain” within the meaning of the definition of “workshop” in section 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and that therefore the room was not a “workshop” within the meaning of the Act. Curtis v. Shinner, 95 L. T. 31; 70 J. P. 272; 21 Cox C.C. 210; 22 T. L. R. 448—D.

(b) Fencing Machinery.

Machinery outside Factory Precincts.—Machinery used for crushing mortar was erected on a piece of ground where the respondents were erecting a new sheet mill. It was within the close, curtilage, and precincts of the respondents' factory, but was used solely by the respondents for a purpose other than the manufacturing process or handicraft carried on in their factory. An accident having occurred owing to the machinery in question being unfenced, the respondents were summoned for not having same securely fenced. The Justices being of opinion that the piece of ground did not form part of the respondents' factory, and was not otherwise a “factory,” dismissed the summons:—Held, that on the facts the Justices were right. Lewis v. Gilbertson, 91 L. T. 377; 68 J. P. 323; 20 Cox C.C. 677—D.

Engine-house in Workhouse for Generating Electrical Energy—Public Building.—Upon the premises of a workhouse under the control of the appellants were an engine-house and machinery used for the purpose of generating electrical energy for the lighting of the workhouse and for other purposes. The machinery included an engine, which was not securely fenced:—Held, that the engine-house was a “factory” within the meaning of section 149, sub-section 1 (a) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the workhouse being a “public building” within Part I. (20) of the Sixth Schedule, and that the appellants were therefore properly convicted of not having securely fenced the engine. Mile End Old Town Guardians v. Hoare, 72 L. J. K.B. 651; [1903] 2 K.B. 483; 89 L. T. 276; 67 J. P. 395; 1 L. G. R. 732; 20 Cox C.C. 536—D. And see cols. 1486, 1479.

(c) Fire Escapes.

“Factory”—Adjoining Houses Connected by External Gangway.—Adjoining houses were let upon separate leases by the same owner to the same tenant, who occupied them for the purposes of a manufacturing business. Regarded separately, one of the houses would have been a “factory” and the other a “workshop” within the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. In the former house more than forty persons and in the latter less than forty persons were employed. The buildings were connected by an external iron gangway joining the first-floors; certain processes commenced in the one house were finished in the other, and the two were used by the tenant as one set of manufacturing premises:—Held, that, under these circumstances, an arbitrator, to whom a dispute between the owner and the local authority as to the provision of means of escape from fire under section 14 of the Act had been referred, was amply justified in holding that the two buildings constituted a single “factory” within the meaning of the Act. London County Council and Tubbs, In re, 1 L. G. R. 746; 68 J. P. 29—D.

— Covenant to Pay “Outgoings”—Recovery of Expenses—County Court.—The owner of a factory within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891 (which is re-enacted by section 14 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901), who, in compliance with the requirements of a sanitary authority, incurs expenses in providing means of escape in case of fire, must apply to the County Court under the same sub-section in order to recover the expenses or any part thereof from the occupier. His only remedy against the occupier is in that Court, and he cannot sue in the High Court even when the occupier has expressly covenanted with him to pay all outgoings in respect of the premises constituting the factory. Horner v. Franklin, 74 L. J. K.B. 291; [1905] 1 K.B. 479; 92 L. T. 178; 69 J. P. 117; 3 L. G. R. 423; 21 T. L. R. 225—C.A.

The County Court Judge, when the matter comes before him, is entitled to consider the terms of the tenancy, but he is also bound to consider what may be just and equitable under all the circumstances of the case. Ib.

Observations of CHANNELL, J., in Monk v. Arnold (71 L. J. K.B. 441; [1902] 1 K.B. 761), on this point approved. Goldstein v. Hollingsworth (73 L. J. K.B. 826; [1904] 2 K.B. 578) and Morris v. Beal (73 L. J. K.B. 830; [1904] 2 K.B. 585) doubted by ROMER, L.J. Ib.

— Expense of Works—Liability as between Owner and Occupier—Jurisdiction of County Court.—Where the lessor of a factory to which section 7, sub-section (2) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, applies has, pursuant to that sub-section, provided the means of escape in case of fire for the persons employed in the factory, the County Court has jurisdiction under the last clause of the sub-section, on the application of the lessor, to apportion the expense between the lessor and the lessee in such manner as appears to the Court just and reasonable in all the circumstances, notwithstanding that the lease contains a general covenant to pay outgoings. Monk v. Arnold, 71 L. J. K.B. 441; [1902] 1 K.B. 761; 86 L. T. 580; 50 W. R. 667—D.

(d) Employment of Young Persons and Children.

Working during Prohibited Hours—Work done for Amusement—Liability of Occupier.—Where a young person does any work in a factory during meal-times, the occupier of the factory is liable to be convicted under section 83 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1873, although he may not in fact have employed the young person to do the work. Prior v. Slaithewaite Spinning Co., 67 L. J. Q.B. 615; [1898] 1 Q.B. 881; 78 L. T. 532; 46 W. R. 488; 62 J. P. 358; 19 Cox C.C. 54—D.

The fact that a young person who is found oiling machinery during meal times is doing so merely for his own amusement, and not under orders, does not prevent it from being "work" within the meaning of the Act. Ib.

Boy Cleaning Machine—Person in Charge Starting Machine—"Allowing" Boy to be in Machine—Injury—Liability.—A young person employed in a factory by a person in charge of a self-acting machine, was ordered by the person in charge of the machine to clean a part of the machine, and for this purpose the boy was obliged to go into the space between the fixed and traversing portions of the machine. When the order was given the machine was properly stopped; but while the boy was still in this space the person in charge of the machine, thinking the boy was clear of the space, started the machine, whereby the boy received injuries from which he died:—Held, that, as the person in starting the machine was acting under the belief that the boy was clear of the space, the boy was not "allowed" by him to be in the prohibited space at the time of the accident, within the meaning of sub-sections 2 and 3 of section 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and that the employers, the occupiers of the factory, were not liable in consequence thereof to a fine under section 83 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1873, though such occupiers would have been liable for an "allowance" by their servant. Crabtree v. Fern Spinning Co., 85 L. T. 549; 50 W. R. 167; 66 J. P. 181—D.

Child employed in Meal-times—Dismissal of Information.—A child was employed in a factory where the meal-time was from 5.30 to 6 p.m. Work was stopped for the day at 5.30, and the child was employed after that time in wiping the spindles of a machine in a room where the under-manager and several overlookers were present. Notices were exhibited calling attention to the provisions of the Factory Acts against working in meal-times. The Justices dismissed an information against the masters for employing a child in meal-time, on the ground that they had used every possible means to carry out the provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901:—Held, that it could not be said that the masters had used due diligence to enforce the Act within section 141. Quære, whether the information could have been dismissed within section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1849. Rogers v. Barlow, 94 L. T. 519; 70 J. P. 214—D.

Full Time—Half Time—By-laws as to School Attendance—Total Exemption—Partial Exemption—Effect of Certificate of Previous Due Attendance.—Where the by-laws made by the school authority of a district apply to children between thirteen and fourteen years of age and make no provision for total exemption from the obligation to attend school upon a child obtaining a certificate of previous due attendance of a certified efficient school, a child of the age of thirteen who has obtained such a certificate cannot lawfully be employed full time in a factory or workshop, notwithstanding the provisions of section 71 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. Stevenson v. Goldstraw; Same v. Craig, 75 L. J. K.B. 565; [1906] 2 K.B. 298; 95 L. T. 111; 4 L. G. R. 868; 70 J. P. 340—D.

A child of the age of twelve who has obtained a certificate of previous due attendance at a certified efficient school, may by virtue of the provisions of section 68 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, lawfully be employed as a half-timer in a factory or workshop, although the by-laws of the school authority make no provision for the partial exemption of children from the obligation to attend school. Ib.

(e) Hours of Employment.

Young Persons—Exhibition of Notice—Newspaper Stall at Country Railway Station—"Shop."—A newspaper stall, consisting of a board laid on trestles, at a country railway station, at which a boy is employed for a few hours daily, his principal place of employment being at the bookstall of the railway junction two miles distant, is not a "shop" within the Shop Hours Act, 1892, and the notice required by section 4 of that Act need not be exhibited upon it. Smith v. Kyle, 71 L. J. K.B. 16; [1902] 1 K.B. 286; 85 L. T. 428; 50 W. R. 319; 66 J. P. 101; 20 Cox C.C. 54—D.

Employment before Statutory Hour.—Two women, weavers in a linen factory, twenty minutes before 6 A.M. (the statutory hour for beginning work), voluntarily dusted and otherwise regulated their spinning looms for their own satisfaction and comfort in accordance with a practice known to the occupiers of the factory. Adequate provision for the cleaning and regulation of the looms by other persons had been made by the occupiers of the factory. The occupiers being charged with a contravention of sections 23 and 24 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901.—Held, that the women had not been employed before the statutory hour. Paterson v. Duke, 6 F. (Just. Cas.) 53—Ct. of Justy.

Employment after Legal Period—"Workshop"—Shop Used for Operation of Adapting for Sale.]—A shop in which, during several hours after the ordinary shop hours have ceased, an operation is carried on which is not incidental to the shop business, but is for the purpose of adapting an article for sale, is capable of being a "workshop" within the meaning of section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. Fullers, Lim. v. Squire, 70 L. J. K.B. 689; [1901] 2 K.B. 209; 85 L. T. 249; 49 W. R. 683; 65 J. P. 660—D.

Overtime—Polishing, Cleaning, Wrapping, and Packing up—Part of Factory in which Work "Overtime" is Allowable.—The overtime work of "polishing, cleaning, wrapping, or packing up goods" allowed in textile and non-textile factories by clause (4) of the Second Schedule of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, must be performed in a warehouse or room adapted to that purpose, and cannot be performed in any part of the factory in which any manufacturing process or handicraft has previously been carried on during ordinary working hours. Smith v. Sibray Hall & Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 822; [1903] 2 K.B. 707; 89 L. T. 353; 52 W. R. 218; 67 J. P. 390; 1 L. G. R. 874; 20 Cox C.C. 542—D. And see SHOPS, infra.

6. SHOPS.

Early Closing.—4 Edw. 7 c. 31 is the Shop Hours Act, 1904.

Seats for Assistants.—62 & 63 Vict. c. 21 is the Seats for Shop Assistants Act, 1899.

Shop Clubs.—2 Edw. 7 c. 21 is the Shop Clubs Act, 1902.

Early Closing—Order Fixing Hour for Closing on One Day of the Week—Ultra Vires—Reasonableness.—A local authority will not be restrained from proceeding with an order made under the Shop Hours Act, 1904, after it has been sent to the Home Office for confirmation. Att.-Gen. v. Brighton Corporation, 77 L. J. Ch. 6; 71 J. P. 535; 6 L. G. R. 51; 24 T. L. R. 33—Joyce, J.

Semble, such an order need not fix the hours for closing on every day of the week, but may fix the hour for closing on one day only. Ib.

Semble, the order need not provide for the different requirements of different shopkeepers in the same trade. Ib.

Offence against Shop Hours Act—Effect of Duly Confirmed Order under the Act.—At the hearing of a complaint charging an offence against the Shop Hours Act, 1904, and a duly confirmed order purporting to have been made thereunder, evidence is not admissible to prove that certain steps preliminary to the making of the order have not been taken as required by the Act, inasmuch as the Act provides that a closing order made by a local authority and confirmed by the central authority is to have "the effect of an Act of Parliament." Hamilton v. Fyfe, [1907] S.C. (J.) 79—Ct. of Justy.

Hours of Employment—"Licensed public-houses of any kind"—"Person wholly employed as a domestic servant."—A licensed hotel and restaurant, although of a very high class, is a "shop" within the meaning of the definition contained in section 9 of the Shop Hours Act, 1892, inasmuch as it is a licensed public-house of a very superior kind. A page-boy employed at such an hotel is not within the exception contained in the Act as a "person wholly employed as a domestic servant." Therefore a master who employs a page-boy under the age of eighteen years in or about such an hotel for a longer period than seventy-four hours, including meal-times, in any one week, or fails to keep exhibited the notice required by the Act, is liable to the penalty imposed by section 5 of the Act. Savoy Hotel Co. v. London County Council, 69 L. J. Q.B. 274; [1900] 1 Q.B. 665; 82 L. T. 56; 48 W. R. 351; 64 J. P. 262; 19 Cox C.C. 437—D.

Rules of Club Existing before Commencement of Shop Clubs Act—No Person Leaving to have Claim on Fund—Existing Rules Continued after Commencement of Act—Rules not Registered.—The plaintiff when he entered the defendants' service agreed to contribute to a provident fund controlled by the defendants, to which they required all their employes to contribute rateably. One of the rules provided that no person dismissed from or leaving the defendants' service should have any claim on the provident fund. In 1902, subsequent to the passing of the Shop Clubs Act, 1902, the defendants issued a new form of servants' agreement, declaring that such servant was to be a voluntary subscriber to the provident fund, and they passed a resolution cancelling the rule by which all employes were required to contribute to the provident fund. The plaintiff, who left the defendants' service in 1903, claimed a declaration that the defendants could not discharge the members of the compulsory provident fund without their assent, and deprive them of their rights thereunder, and that the transfer of such funds for the benefit of the new provident fund to be supported by voluntary contributions was illegal; and alternatively, on his own behalf, he asked that his share of the funds of the compulsory provident fund might be ascertained and paid to him.—Held, that although the rules of the provident society were not registered under the Shop Clubs Act, 1902, there was nothing in that Act to abrogate the existing rules of the society, and that, as by one of the rules no member leaving or being dismissed should have any claim upon the funds, the action failed. Balchin v. Ebury (Lord), 20 T. L. R. 60—Kekewich, J.

7. DOMESTIC SERVICE.

First Month's Service—Custom to Determine by Fortnight's Notice.]—A custom that either master or servant may determine domestic service at the end of the first month by notice given at or before the expiration of the first fortnight, is not in itself unreasonable; but inasmuch as such a custom has not yet been so fully established that judicial notice can be taken of it, it must be proved in each case as a question of fact. Moult v. Halliday, 67 L. J. Q.B. 451; [1898] 1 Q.B. 125; 77 L. T. 794; 46 W. R. 318; 62 J. P. 8—D.

8. WAGES.

Deductions—Waiver by not Claiming at End of Each Week.]—By an agreement made between the respondents and the appellant the wages were to be at the rate of 24s. per week, and so in proportion for any less period than a week. The wages were to be at the rate of 24s. per week at the least. During the employment, owing to various causes the appellant was not employed for certain periods, and no wages were paid to him in respect of those periods, but the wages were settled up at the end of each week, when the deductions were made:—Held, that the appellant could not recover the amount of these deductions at the end of the employment, as it was a claim that could be waived, being a claim for damages and not a liquidated debt. Stoddart v. Mitchell, 85 L. T. 686; 66 J. P. 103—D.

Superannuation Fund—Railway Company—Dismissal of Servant for "dishonesty"—Dishonesty outside Company's Service.]—The defendant company's servants were obliged to contribute a certain percentage of their wages to the company's superannuation fund, and the company contributed to the fund a sum equal to the amount subscribed by the contributors. By rule 5 of the rules of the superannuation fund, "any contributing member dismissed the service for dishonesty or retiring to avoid such dismissal shall forfeit all his contributions":—Held, that "dishonesty" included dishonesty outside the service of the company as well as dishonesty towards the company. Thayre v. London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, 22 T. L. R. 240—Jelf, J.

Claim for, by Niece in Position of Adopted Daughter.]—A niece who would otherwise have had to earn her own living, at the request of her aunt came to live with her in the position of an adopted daughter. During the last three years of her life the aunt suffered from senile dementia, and required constant attendance and nursing. She was efficiently nursed by the niece, and but for her services two nurses would have had to be employed. After her aunt's death the niece claimed remuneration:—Held, that in the absence of an express agreement the niece was not entitled to remuneration for the services rendered by her. Russel v. McClymont, 8 F. 821—Ct. of Sess.

Becoming Due Daily—Fortnightly Payment—Refusal to Work—Forfeiture—Breach of Contract.]—The plaintiff was engaged as a putter by a colliery company, and his work consisted in drawing coal in tubs underground. The amount earned by him depended upon the number of tubs drawn by him, and his wages were paid fortnightly upon the Friday following the end of the fortnight, the total amount of work done each day by him being ascertained daily. On the day preceding pay day a pay note was handed to each workman. On a certain occasion upon receipt of the pay notes a dispute arose between one of the putters and the company, and as a consequence upon the following day the putters, including the plaintiff, declined to work, and laid the pit idle. They were then informed by the masters that they had broken their contract, and that all wages earned since the conclusion of the previous fortnight would be forfeited. On the Monday following the putters presented themselves prepared to work, but were told that they would not be allowed to resume unless they signed on afresh. Subsequently, by arrangement, they resumed work without prejudice on the following day. The plaintiff sued the defendants to recover the amount of the wages forfeited by the defendants for the four days' work done by him after the conclusion of the fortnight in respect of which the disputed pay note was given, and also claimed damages for breach of contract on the ground that the refusal to allow him to work on the Monday was a breach by the defendants of their contract with him, it being common knowledge that laying the pit idle for a day or two was a common practice, and did not amount to a repudiation of their contract by the putters:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages for breach of contract, as the masters were justified in dismissing him in consequence of his refusal to work; but that as each day's wages became due daily, although they were not paid over to him until the expiration of a fortnight, he was entitled to recover the wages for the four days upon which he had worked before his dismissal. Parkin v. South Hetton Coal Co., 97 L. T. 98; 23 T. L. R. 408—D.

Sick Pay—Right to Wages during Time of Illness.]—The plaintiff, a railway employee, upon entering the company's service, signed an undertaking to abide by the rules of the company. One of these rules required him to join the railway company's friendly society, which was independent of the company, but to the funds of which the company contributed. By the rules of the society a member was entitled to sick pay during illness, but not if he was receiving wages from the company. The plaintiff became ill in February, 1905, and received sick pay until September, when he received notice terminating his employment. In an action by the plaintiff claiming wages from the company from February to September,—Held, that he was not entitled to wages during that period. Niblett v. Midland Railway, 96 L. T. 462; 23 T. L. R. 240—D.

Truck Act—Jurisdiction of Justices.—The jurisdiction of Justices under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, is not ousted by the provisions of section 1 of the Truck Act, 1896, and proceedings may be taken before Justices to recover a penalty under a contract between an employer and a workman, although particulars under section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Truck Act, 1896, have not been supplied to the workman. Buxton Lime Firms Co. v. Howe, 69 L. J. Q.B. 498; [1900] 2 Q.B. 282; 82 L. T. 422; 48 W. R. 472; 64 J. P. 503—D.

— Payment of Wages Otherwise than in Current Coin—Agreement by Workman to Accept Portion of Wages in Scrip of Employing Company.—The plaintiff was employed by the defendants as a machinist at 22s. per week. In October, 1894, he (along with his fellow-workmen) signed an agreement by which his wages continued to be 22s., of which, however, 2s. per week was to be satisfied by shares of the defendant company, his employers. The plaintiff was paid 20s. down to April 24, 1897, when he served notice on the defendants that he would not accept the reduced cash wages, and from that date until February, 1899, he was paid 22s. a week in cash. In February, 1899, he left the defendants' employment, and sued them for 12l., the difference between the 20s. and 22s. a week from the date of the agreement in October, 1894, to April 24, 1897:—Held, that the agreement was void under the Truck Acts, and that the defendants were liable to pay so much of the plaintiff's wages as had not been paid in current coin of the realm; and that there was nothing in the concurrence of the other workmen or in the plaintiff's own conduct to prevent him from recovering. Glasgow v. Independent Printing Co., [1901] 2 Ir. R. 278—C.A.

— Payment in Full—Part to be Handed Back.—The respondent, a manufacturer employing several workmen, had since the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, adopted the practice of paying his workpeople their wages fortnightly in full, but at the time of such payment a slip of paper was handed to each workman on which was written a sum equal to twopence in the pound on the amount of the wages handed to the workman, and the sum so indicated on the paper was then handed back by the workman to the respondent's cashier. This system was explained and was understood by the workmen as being intended to provide for the insurance premiums which the employer himself paid to cover his own liability in respect of accidents under the Workmen's Compensation Act. In accordance with this system the respondent paid a workman his wages (2l. 5s.) in full, and at the same time handed him a slip of paper on which was written 4½d., which the workman then paid back to the respondent:—Held, that there was not a payment of a part of the wages otherwise than in current coin, and that the respondent had committed no offence against section 3 of the Truck Act, 1891. Owner v. Hooper, 89 L. T. 130; 67 J. P. 406; 20 Cox C.C. 518—D.

— Deductions—"Workman."—The respondents, lace manufacturers, were the occupiers of a factory. After lace had been removed from the machines it had to go through a process called clipping, which was performed by women clippers. The general course of business was for the clippers to apply to the manufacturers for lace, and to take it home to be clipped. The clippers were not employed exclusively by any one firm, but might take lace from different firms. They might execute the work themselves or give it to other persons to execute, or might return it unexecuted. The clippers were responsible in case of non-return of the lace. They were paid weekly, and if any damage had been done to the lace a deduction was made in respect thereof. In accordance with this practice, two women clippers applied to and obtained lace from the respondents, took it home, and subsequently returned it clipped but damaged, and a reasonable sum was deducted in respect of the damage from the amount due to them from the respondents:—Held, that the clippers did not come within the definition of "workman" in section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, inasmuch as they were not bound by contract to execute any part of the work personally, and that therefore the provisions of section 2 of the Truck Act, 1896, had no application. Squire v. Midland Lace Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 614; [1905] 2 K.B. 448; 93 L. T. 29; 53 W. R. 653; 69 J. P. 257; 21 T. L. R. 466—D.

— Fines on Breach of Rules—Good Order and Decorum—Acts Causing or Likely to Cause Damage to Employer.—A rule posted in a factory workroom that all workers shall observe "good order and decorum" is sufficiently specific to cover the case of female workers dancing during their dinner hour in a workroom in which they are privileged to dine, where such dancing raised dust likely to cause damage to the machines at which they worked and to the materials upon which they had to work. Squire v. Bayer, 70 L. J. K.B. 705; [1901] 2 K.B. 299; 85 L. T. 247; 49 W. R. 557; 65 J. P. 629—D.

A fine imposed upon the breach of such a rule, and under such circumstances, is in respect of "an act or omission" causing or likely to cause damage to the employer within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 (c) of the Truck Act, 1896. Id.

— Damages Awarded by Court for Breach of Contract—Deduction of Damages by Master.—The deduction by an employer from the wages of a workman of damages awarded by a Court of competent jurisdiction to be paid to the employer for breach of contract is a violation of section 3 of the Truck Act, 1891, which requires payment of the entire amount of wages in coin. Williams v. North's Navigation Collieries, 75 L. J. K.B. 384; [1906] A.C. 136; 94 L. T. 447; 54 W. R. 485; 70 J. P. 217; 22 T. L. R. 372—H.L. (E.)

— Weekly Wage for Specified Hours—Bonus for Full-time Work—Failure to Put in Full Time—Deduction of Bonus.—A workwoman was employed at 8s. per week of 55½ hours, with a bonus of 2s. per week for full attendance, and that alone. Printed rules posted in the factory, admittedly read by the workwoman, provided, inter alia, that "any person absent without reason, and not assigning satisfactory reason, shall lose bonus." The workwoman being absent for a quarter of a day without sufficient reason, 2s. 4d. was deducted from the weekly sum of 10s. which would otherwise have been payable to her. No question being raised as to the 4d. (representing the quarter of a day's wages),—Held, that the deduction of the 2s. bonus was not an offence under the Truck Acts. Deane v. Wilson, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 405—K.B. D.

9. DISMISSAL OF SERVANT.

Without Notice—Negligence of Workman—Forgetfulness.—The forgetfulness of a servant in the performance of an important part of his duty need not be habitual in order to amount to negligence justifying his dismissal without notice. A single act of forgetfulness may, under certain circumstances, be sufficient. Baster v. London and County Printing Works, 68 L. J. Q.B. 622; [1899] 1 Q.B. 901; 80 L. T. 757; 47 W. R. 639; 63 J. P. 439—D.

Power of Master to Dismiss Servant on Two Months' Notice or Two Months' Salary—Wrongful Dismissal without Notice—Right to General Damages beyond Two Months' Salary.—By an agreement the defendants were entitled to terminate the plaintiff's employment with them at any time by giving him two months' notice in writing or two months' salary in lieu of notice. The plaintiff having been wrongfully dismissed,—Held, that the defendants were not liable for more damages than two months' salary merely because they had not a good reason for dismissing him. Baker v. Denkera Ashanti Mining Corporation, 20 T. L. R. 37—Grantham, J.

Misconduct—Secret Commission—Dismissal without Notice.—The plaintiff entered into an agreement with the defendants, a tannery company, to serve them as manager, and undertook to give his whole time and attention to the business. As part of his duty he was consulted by the defendants, and advised them as to the insurance of their premises. Without the defendants' knowledge he accepted an agency from an insurance company and received commissions from it in respect of insurances effected by the defendants through the plaintiff upon their premises with the insurance company. The agreement having expired, he subsequently entered into a fresh agreement with the defendants upon the same terms as to giving his whole time and attention to the business and advising the defendants as to the insurances upon their premises. At the expiration of this agreement he remained in the defendants' service without any fresh agreement being entered into. He continued during the whole time he acted as the defendants' manager, without the knowledge of the defendants, to act as agent for the insurance company and to receive commissions from it upon insurances effected through him upon the defendants' premises:—Held, that the acceptance by the plaintiff of the agency and the receipt by him of the secret commissions was misconduct which entitled the defendants to dismiss the plaintiff without notice, although under his contract of service he would otherwise have been entitled to six months' notice of the determination of his employment. Swale v. Ipswich Tannery, 11 Com. Cas. 88—Kennedy, J.

Wrongful Dismissal—Plea of Justification—

Functions of Judge and Jury.—There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify the dismissal of a servant. The question is one of fact for the jury. But it is for the Judge to decide whether there is any evidence to justify dismissal, and if there be no such evidence he should not submit to the jury any issue of fact. He may also direct, guide, and assist the jury by informing them of the nature of the acts which in law would justify dismissal, and of the materiality of facts to the issues raised. Clouston v. Corry, 75 L. J. P.C. 20; [1906] A.C. 122; 93 L. T. 706; 54 W. R. 382; 22 T. L. R. 107—P.C.

Servant Occupying House as Part of Remuneration—Ejection from House.—When a servant has the occupation of a house as part of the remuneration for his services, he has on his dismissal (whether wrongful or not) no longer a title to possession, and is therefore not entitled to recover damages from his former master for having removed the servant's furniture from the house, the master having allowed the servant a reasonable time for removing it. Sinclair v. Tod, [1907] S.C. 1038—Ct. of Sess.

Procuring—Representation Inducing Master to Dismiss Servant.—Boiler-makers in common employment with the respondents, who were shipwrights working on wood, objected to work with the latter on the ground that in a previous employment they had been engaged on ironwork. The appellant, an official of the Boiler-makers' Union, in response to a telegram from one of the boiler-makers, came to the yard and dissuaded the men from immediately leaving their work, as they threatened to do, intimating that if they did so he would do his best to have them deprived of the benefits of the union, and also fined; they must wait till the matter was settled. The appellant then saw the managing director, to whom he said that if the respondents, who were engaged from day to day, were not dismissed, the boiler-makers would leave their work or be called out. The respondents were thereupon dismissed:—Held, that no actionable wrong had been committed by the appellant. Allen v. Flood, 67 L. J. Q.B. 119; [1898] A.C. 1; 77 L. T. 717; 46 W. R. 253; 62 J. P. 595—H.L. (E.)

By LORD WATSON.—Although the rule may be otherwise with regard to crimes, the law of England does not take into account motive as constituting an element of civil wrong. The existence of a bad motive, in the case of an act which is not in itself illegal, will not convert that act into a civil wrong for which reparation is due. Id.

Dicta in this regard of LORD ESHER (then BRETT, L.J.) in Bowen v. Hall (50 L. J. Q.B. 305; 6 Q.B. D. 333) and in Temperton v. Russell (62 L. J. Q.B. 412; [1893] 1 Q.B. 715) disapproved. Dicta of LORD ESHER, M.R., and LOPES, L.J., in Temperton v. Russell, that it is actionable maliciously to induce a person not to enter into a contract, disapproved. Id.

Servant of Local Authority—No Special Contract.—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, col. 1307.

10. PENSION.

"Retiring with consent of the directors"—Clerk Required to Resign.]—The plaintiff, when he entered the service of the defendant bank, signed a form of rules dealing with retiring allowances to the officers of the bank. The second rule provided that each officer retiring with the consent of the directors should receive an allowance of one-third of the annual amount of his salary at the time he so retired. Rule 5 provided that no retiring allowance whatever was to be granted to any officer who was dismissed from the service of the bank. In consequence of his having indorsed a certain promissory note the plaintiff was called upon for an explanation, and eventually the secretary of the bank wrote a letter to the plaintiff which contained these words, "You are required to resign your appointment in the bank forthwith," whereupon the plaintiff sent in his resignation:—Held, that the plaintiff had not retired "with the consent of the directors" so as to entitle him to claim a retiring allowance under the rules. Stephenson v. London Joint-Stock Bank, 20 T. L. R. 8—C.A.

11. INJURIES TO SERVANTS.

(a) Negligence of Master.

Neglect of Statutory Duty—Penalty—Right of Action—Common Employment.]—Where a person is injured in consequence of the occupier of a factory having failed to fence or to maintain the fencing of machinery, as required by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, an action for damages will lie against the occupier notwithstanding that a penalty is imposed for breach of the statutory duty. Groves v. Wimborne (Lord), 67 L. J. Q.B. 862; [1898] 2 Q.B. 402; 79 L. T. 284; 47 W. R. 87—C.A.

To such an action founded upon the breach of the statutory duty the defence of common employment—namely, that the failure to fence was due to the negligence of a fellow servant of the plaintiff in the employment of the occupier of the factory—is not applicable. Ib.

Fencing Machinery—Dangerous Portion Unfenced—Carelessness and Wilful Disobedience to Orders—Accident to Employé.]—The carelessness and wilful disobedience to the foreman's orders of a factory hand, who has been injured by an unfenced machine, afford no answer to summary proceedings, under section 82 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, against the occupier of the factory for having neglected to fence the machine. Blenkinsopp v. Ogden, 67 L. J. Q.B. 537; [1898] 1 Q.B. 783; 78 L. T. 554; 46 W. R. 542—D.

Claim under Workmen's Compensation Act—Workmen's Option as to Remedy—Estoppel—Infant.]—An infant apprentice sustained personal injuries in consequence of the negligence of his employers in not fencing machinery. A claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, was sent in to the employers on behalf of the infant, and they paid him compensation in accordance with the Act during his incapacity for work.

Subsequently he commenced a common-law action of negligence against them:—Held, that the infant was not precluded from maintaining the action by the fact that he had exercised the option given to him by section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by claiming compensation under the Act, there being nothing in the Act forming an exception to the general rule that an infant is not bound by a contract made by him which is not for his benefit. Stephens v. Dudbridge Ironworks Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 739; [1904] 2 K.B. 225; 90 L. T. 838; 52 W. R. 644; 68 J. P. 437; 20 T. L. R. 492—C.A.

Negligence of Servant—Implied Duty of Jobmaster—Driver's Duty to Take Care of Carriage.]

—A manufacturing jeweller hired from a jobmaster a carriage with a horse and driver at an agreed weekly sum for the express purpose of sending his traveller with a stock of jewels to go round to his customers. One day, while making his rounds, the traveller went into an hotel and left the carriage, with a stock of jewels inside it, in the charge of the driver. Before leaving the carriage the traveller locked the door. The driver then went into a coffee-house, leaving the carriage unattended in the street. A thief drove the carriage away and stole the jewels. The jeweller brought an action against the jobmaster to recover the value of the stolen jewels:—Held, that it was the duty of the defendant to provide a driver who should take ordinary care of the carriage during the temporary absence of the traveller, and that the theft of the jewels was the natural and ordinary result of a breach of such duty, so as to make the defendant liable for the loss suffered by the plaintiff. Abraham v. Bullock, 86 L. T. 796; 50 W. R. 626—C.A.

Contract to Supply Carriage and Driver to Commercial Traveller—Goods Left in Carriage—Obligation to Take Care of Carriage during Temporary Absence of Traveller—Larceny by Coachman—Liability of Jobmaster for Loss.]

The plaintiff, a wholesale jeweller, entered into a contract with the defendant, a jobmaster, for the hire of a brougham and driver for the use of the plaintiff's traveller, and the brougham was fitted up for the purpose of such use. The traveller left the brougham in the street for the purpose of getting his lunch, and while he was away the contents of the carriage were stolen, with the connivance of the coachman:—Held, that the defendant was liable because there was an obligation on him, by virtue of the contract, to provide a careful and trustworthy driver who would safeguard the contents of the brougham during intervals when the traveller would be necessarily absent, and that the defendant was not the less liable because the breach of contract was occasioned by a criminal act on the part of the defendant's servant. Abrahams v. Bullock (50 W. R. 626) followed. Cheshire v. Bailey, 52 W. R. 631; 20 T. L. R. 561—Walton, J. Reversed, 21 T. L. R. 130—C.A.

Lift Accident—Servant Injured—Lack of Knowledge of Danger by both Master and Servant—Defect in Lift.]—Where a lift, defective through the absence of an inner gate, has become dangerous owing to cleaning with oil by the order of a fellow-servant given with the sanction of the master, and there is a neglect to give the servant working the lift proper directions as to its working, the master will be liable if such servant working the lift is injured, even although the danger is not known to the master or his superintendent, and is not known to the servant so injured. Lloyd v. Woolland, 87 L. T. 73—Bruce, J.

Where a plan of a lift is put in, but no evidence as to defective construction is given, the jury are entitled to form their own opinion as to the construction of such lift. Id.

Nursing Association—Negligence of Nurse Supplied.—A voluntary association for the supply of trained nurses supplied a nurse to attend at a surgical operation performed by a medical man, making a charge for the services of the nurse which was payable to the association. In the course of the operation the nurse negligently applied to the patient a hot-water bottle so hot that it caused injury to the patient by burning. By the rules of the association the nurses, who were paid a fixed salary, were appointed and discharged by the house committee in consultation with the superintendent. Any nurse infringing the rules was liable to dismissal without notice. Each nurse was responsible to the superintendent, and was to conform to her instructions in all matters pertaining to work and conduct. Only such cases were to be undertaken as were attended by a medical man, whose instructions the nurse was to follow implicitly:—Held, in an action against the members of the house committee to recover damages for the injury done to the patient, that, upon the true construction of the contract between the association and the patient, the association did not undertake to nurse the patient, but merely to supply the patient with a competent qualified nurse, and that the nurse when engaged in nursing the patient passed under the control of the medical man, and the relation of master and servant did not exist between the association and the nurse for the purpose of the nursing of the patient so as to make the association liable for the negligence of the nurse. Hall v. Lees, 73 L. J. K.B. 819; [1904] 2 K.B. 602; 91 L. T. 20; 53 W. R. 17; 20 T. L. R. 678—C.A.

Defect in Ship Existing before Voyage Started—Defect not Self-evidently Capable of Remedy by Crew.—In an action for damages by an engineer on board a cargo-boat against the owners, the pursuer averred that about four o'clock on a morning in February—it being very dark at the time—he was requested by the mate, who was at the wheel, to go forward and call a sailor to relieve him; that, in going forward, he fell into the hold through the middle hatches, which were uncovered, and was injured; that the reason of these hatches being uncovered was that (as the pursuer had since learned, though he was unaware of it at the time) the forward thwartship beam at the mouth of the hold was bent and twisted, with the result that the centre fore-aft beam between the two thwartship beams was too short and would not catch in the socket in the forward thwartship beam, so that the middle hatches, which should have rested on the centre beam, could not be put on; that it was the duty of the defenders to see that the equipment of the boat was safe and seaworthy, and in particular that the beams on which the hatches rested were in good order; that the defenders failed in their duty, with the result that a trap existed on the boat which formed a danger to their employees; and that the defenders knew, or should have known, the defective state of their boat, as it had been in the same condition for a considerable time previously and a similar accident had in consequence occurred on a previous voyage:—Held, that, as the pursuer had averred that the vessel was not properly equipped when the voyage commenced, and as the defect alleged was not an obvious defect which could be easily remedied by those on board, the pursuer had stated a relevant case. Tyrrrell v. Paton, 8 F. 112—Ct. of Sess.

Ship's Hold Unventilated—Gang Employed by Agent of Defendants.—The defendants, Stephenson, Clarke & Co., were coal contractors, and contracted to supply coal to the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway. They ship coal at Cardiff in vessels belonging to the London, Antwerp, and Continental Steam Navigation Company to be carried to Newhaven. The defendants have to unload the coal there, and engage agents to employ a gang to carry out the work. One of their agents, Weeks, had a gang unloading the Bluebell, amongst whom was the plaintiff Carter. Owing to the hold of the Bluebell not being properly ventilated there was an accumulation of gas, and when the hatch was removed a violent explosion took place, and the plaintiff was injured:—Held, that the injury was caused by the defective "plant" of the defendants Stephenson, Clarke & Co. Carter v. Clarke, 78 L. T. 76—D.

Failure to Provide Proper Appliances—Danger Known to Servant—Risk Voluntarily Incurred.—In an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, to recover damages at common law for the death of a workman who had been killed while descending from an elevated tramway on which he had been working for the defendants, his employers, the jury found that the defendants did not exercise due care to have the tramway in a proper condition so as to protect their servants working upon it against unnecessary risk; that it was dangerous to descend from the tramway without the means of a ladder; that the deceased had the same means of knowing that it was dangerous as the defendants had; that he knew that it was dangerous; and that he had not been guilty of contributory negligence:—Held, that the defendants were liable, for the mere knowledge on the part of the deceased of the risk of the defect—the want of the ladder—did not necessarily involve his consent to undertake it. Williams v. Birmingham Battery and Metal Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 918; [1899] 2 Q.B. 338; 81 L. T. 62; 47 W. R. 680—C.A.

Option to Workman to Proceed against Third Party—Exercise of Option—Subsequent Claim against Employers—"Proceed at law."—An injured workman claimed damages at common law against a person other than his employers, and without having taken legal proceedings received a payment in settlement of his claim:—Held, in a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by the workman against his employers, that he had "proceeded" against a third party within the meaning of section 6 of the Act, and that therefore he had exercised his option and was barred from claiming compensation against his employers. Held, also, that a claim in the receipt granted by him reserving a right to claim compensation from his employers did not prevent this result. Oliver v. Nautilus Steam Shipping Co. (72 L. J. K.B. 857; [1903] 2 K.B. 639) distinguished. Mulligan v. Dick, 6 F. 126—Ct. of Sess.

Common-law Action for—Whether or not Barred by Receipt of Compensation—“Proceeding.”—The plaintiff met with an accident through the negligence of the defendants, on whose ship he was working under the orders of his employers. The plaintiff gave notice of his accident to his employers and signed receipts for money received from them “on account of compensation which may be or become due to me under the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897”; but after giving the first receipt, in pursuance of advice given to him by the delegate of his trade union, the plaintiff said he could only accept payments “without prejudice.” The plaintiff subsequently refused to accept any further payments from his employers, and brought this action against the defendants, in which negligence was admitted and the damages agreed subject to the question of the defendants’ liability under section 6 of the Act:—Held, that the plaintiff had not so exercised his option under section 6, of proceeding against his employers for compensation under the Act, as to be debarred from maintaining his common-law action against the defendants. Randall v. Hill’s Dry Dock &c. Co. (69 L. J. Q.B. 554; [1900] 2 Q.B. 245) discussed. Oliver v. Nautilus Steam Shipping Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 857; [1903] 2 K.B. 639; 89 L. T. 318; 52 W. R. 200; 9 Asp. M.C. 436—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—If there is a payment and a receipt of money under the Act of 1897, and that receipt is in no way qualified, that is sufficient to bring the case within the operation of section 6 and to put the workman in the position of having proceeded against his employer for compensation and recovered it. Ib.

Per ROMER, L.J.—Proceedings by a workman against his employer should not be held to irrevocably bind the workman in the exercise of his option under section 6, unless they have resulted in some compensation, as such, being paid to and received by the workman in such a manner as to bind both parties. Ib.

Instruction of Infant in Use of Machine by Foreman.—Where an employer employs a competent foreman, whose duty it is, either by reason of express directions or by reason of directions implied from the nature of his employment, to give proper instructions to an infant workman in the working of a machine, the employer is not liable to the infant workman at common law for the negligence of the foreman in omitting to give proper instructions. There is no difference between an adult workman and an infant workman in respect of the nature of the employer’s implied contractual liability under the doctrine of common employment, but the method and extent of instruction required may vary according to the age and known disabilities of the workman.

Cribb v. Kynoch (76 L. J. K.B. 948) approved. Young v. Hoffman Manufacturing Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 993; [1907] 2 K.B. 646; 97 L. T. 230; 23 T. L. R. 671—C.A.

(b) Common Employment.

Injury to Servant—Negligence of Fellow-servant—Theatrical Employees—Chorus-singer and Scene-shifter—Agreement for Service—Clause Excluding Employers’ Liability Act, 1880.—The plaintiff was engaged as a chorus-singer by the defendants, who were the proprietors of a theatre, on the terms of a written agreement which excluded the operation of the Employers’ Liability Act, 1880. As the plaintiff was leaving the stage at the close of a performance, some object, the nature of which could not be ascertained, fell upon and injured her. At the time of the accident the scene-shifters were engaged in removing the scenery in her immediate neighbourhood. There was some evidence to show that the object which fell was an old piece of scenery which had been in the theatre for years; but it did not appear that the accident had been caused by the negligence of the defendants or of any person for whom they were responsible. The plaintiff having brought an action for damages against the defendants,—Held, that the doctrine of common employment applied and that she could not recover. Burr v. Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, 76 L. J. K.B. 459; [1907] 1 K.B. 544; 96 L. T. 447; 23 T. L. R. 299—C.A.

Though the doctrine of common employment depends upon an implied undertaking by the servant to take the risk of injuries caused by the negligence of his fellow-servants, which implied undertaking may be excluded by the express terms of the agreement for service, yet the mere fact that the agreement for service contains an express term excluding the operation of the Employers’ Liability Act, 1880 (which does away with the doctrine of common employment in the cases to which the Act applies), does not exclude the implied undertaking in a case to which the Act does not apply. Ib.

—Negligence of Forewoman—Infant—Dangerous Employment—Defence of Common Employment—Liability of Master at Common Law.—A servant takes upon himself the risk of negligence on the part of his fellow-servants, whatever position they hold, so long as they are fellow-servants. To this rule there is no exception to the effect that the master has a personal duty to perform, which, in dangerous employments and in the case of an infant, he cannot delegate to others. Cribb v. Kynoch, 76 L. J. K.B. 948; [1907] 2 K.B. 548; 97 L. T. 181; 23 T. L. R. 550—D.

Injury to Person Voluntarily Assisting Servant.—A carter employed by a railway company left his lorry at his employers’ goods station in charge of a boy ten years of age. The boy was not in the employment of the railway company, but was assisting the carter at his request. While the boy was in charge of the lorry he was injured, owing to the negligence of another carter, also employed by the railway company. In an action by the boy against the railway company,—Held, that the boy having voluntarily assisted one of the railway company's servants was, as regards claims of damages against the company, in no better position than a servant employed by the company, and that the defence of common employment applied. Potter v. Faulkner (31 L. J. Q.B. 30; 1 B. & S. 800) followed. Lunnie v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway, 8 F. 546—Ct. of Sess. And see cols. 1496-1497.

Statutory Duty to Secure Roof of Mine.]—A miner, who had been injured by a fall of shale from the roof of a roadway in a mine, sued his employers, the mine owners, at common law for damages. It was proved that about eight days before the accident there had been an extensive fall of shale from the roof at the place of the accident, and that nothing had been done prior to the accident to support the roof at this place. The jury found for the pursuer, and awarded damages. The defenders sought to set aside the verdict on the ground—first, that there was no fault on the part of the defenders, as they were proved to have appointed a competent manager; and secondly, that if there was fault on the part of the manager, it was the fault of a person in common employment with the pursuer:—Held, that there was fault on the part of the defenders in not having the roof made secure as required by section 49, rule 21 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887; and secondly, that, there being a duty imposed by statute on the mine owners to have the roof made secure, the defence of common employment was not available to them. Bett v. Dalmeny Oil Co., 7 F. 787—Ct. of Sess.

(c) Employers' Liability Act, 1880.

"Workman"—Hairdresser.]—A hairdresser is not a "workman" "engaged in manual labour" within section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875. Reg. v. Louth Justices, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 714—Q.B. D.

—Sempstress.]—A sempstress who works at a sewing machine and heats irons on a stove and irons materials is a person "engaged in manual labour" within the definition of "workman" in section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and therefore entitled to the benefit of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. Maynard v. Peter Robinson, Lim., 89 L. T. 136—D.

—Bargeman—"Workman" or "Seaman".]—The plaintiff was employed to assist in loading and unloading and in navigating a sprit-sail barge plying only on the Thames, though capable of going coasting voyages, and registered as a British ship, the captain of the barge and the plaintiff being the only hands employed on the barge. In the course of his employment the plaintiff sustained personal injury:—Held, that the plaintiff was a "seaman" within section 13 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and not a "workman" within section 10 of that Act, and section 8 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and therefore that he had not a right to compensation under the latter Act. Corbett v. Pearce, 73 L. J. K.B. 885; [1904] 2 K.B. 422; 90 L. T. 781; 68 J. P. 387; 20 T. L. R. 473—D.

— Workman Employed in Coal Mine by In- dependent Contractor—Liability of Mine Owner.]

—The plaintiff's husband was employed to work for him as a sinker by an independent contractor, who had contracted with the defendants, the owners of a coal mine, to sink a shaft for them in their mine. The plaintiff's husband was killed while working in the mine. In an action by the plaintiff under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, to recover damages in respect of the death of her husband,—Held, that the statutory control given to the mine owner by the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, and the rules thereunder, over persons working in the mine, for the purpose of enforcing the prescribed regulations for carrying on the mining operations without danger, did not alter the relationship between the contracting parties inter se, and consequently the plaintiff's husband was not a workman in the defendants' employment within the meaning of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Marrow v. Flimby and Broughton Moor Coal and Fire-Brick Co., 67 L. J. Q.B. 976; [1898] 2 Q.B. 588; 79 L. T. 397—C.A.

Injury to Servant—Compensation—Employment in Coal Mine by Independent Contractor—Contract with Owners of Colliery by Signing Conditions of Employment—Liability of Owners—"Workman".]

—A workman employed by an independent contractor, who had contracted with the owners of a colliery to sink a shaft therein, signed the record book of the colliery containing the conditions of employment for all persons employed at the colliery directly or indirectly. The conditions provided that every workman employed by a contractor at the colliery should, in consideration of being employed at the colliery, be bound as between himself and the owners by the terms of the conditions. During the work of sinking an escape of gas occurred, which ignited and so burned the workman that he died. In an action by the legal personal representative of the workman under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, to recover compensation for his death, the contractor gave evidence that if the manager of the mine had given him an order relating to the work he would have obeyed and would have expected his workman to obey it:—Held, that there was no evidence to go to the jury that the deceased man was a "workman" in the service of the owners of the colliery within the meaning of section 8 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875. Marrow v. Flimby and Broughton Moor Coal and Firebrick Co. (67 L. J. Q.B. 976; [1898] 2 Q.B. 588) followed. Fitzpatrick v. Evans, 71 L. J. K.B. 302; [1902] 1 K.B. 505; 86 L. T. 141; 50 W. R. 290—C.A.

Defect in Plant—Movable Machine—Breakage during Use—Order not to Use Again—Injury to Workman Moving it.]

—A movable machine in a glass-bottle factory was usually kept in a corner of the factory, and when required for use was brought forward to the furnaces. While being used near the furnaces a breakage of the machine occurred, which rendered it unsafe to move it in its broken condition. A foreman examined the machine and gave orders that it was not to be used again, as a new one had been ordered. On the next day the foreman allowed the machine to be moved to its position in the corner of the factory, and in the course of its removal a lever fell from it and injured the foot of one of the workmen engaged in the work:—Held, in an action by the workman for compensation under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, that there was evidence on which the County Court Judge was justified in finding that the machine was plant connected with or used in the business of the employer within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Act. Thompson v. City Glass Bottle Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 145; [1902] 1 K.B. 233; 85 L. T. 661—C.A. And see Greenwood v. Greenwood, 97 L. T. 971—D., and NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER, supra.

— Plant Used by but not Belonging to Employer—Defect in—Duty of Employer—Stevordore and Shipowner.—Under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, s. 1, sub-s. 1, the employer is liable for injury to a workman caused by any defect in the condition of the plant used in his business, as well where the plant so used is the property of a third person for whom the employer is working, and who supplies it for the purpose, as where it is the property of the employer, or is hired by him. If, therefore, the employer uses plant so supplied without enquiry or inspection, there is prima facie evidence to go to the jury of negligence within section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act. Biddle v. Hart, 76 L. J. K.B. 418; [1907] 1 K.B. 649; 97 L. T. 66; 28 T. L. R. 262; 10 Asp. M.C. 469—C.A.

Defect in Condition of "Ways"—Open Joists in Floor of House in Course of Construction.—The open joists of a floor of a house in course of construction across which a labourer has to pass in carrying out an order by his foreman, do not constitute a "way" in the sense of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. M'Gowan v. Smith, [1907] S.C. 548—Ct. of Sess.

Person Intrusted with Superintendence.—A firm of stevedores employed two squads of dock labourers in loading a steamer at the same hatch, one squad being under the superintendence of M'Neilly, its foreman, who acted as hatch-mouth man for the lowering of goods from a shore crane, and the other under the superintendence of its foreman Murray, who acted as hatch-mouth man for the conveying of goods from the ship's winch. Falconer, one of M'Neilly's squad, who was injured by the fall of a piece of wood from the ship's winch, raised an action under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, against the stevedores as responsible for Murray, through whose fault he alleged the accident happened. It was proved that Murray was generally employed by the defenders as a labourer, but that he was occasionally selected to act as a hatch-mouth man; that at the time of the accident his duties were to superintend the lowering of goods into the hold, and to take the chain of the winch ashore, and to attach the hook to the goods; that he had complete control over his squad, and could dismiss any members of it; and that he was paid by the hour, but received higher wages than the men under him:—Held (LORD YOUNG dissentiente), that Murray was a person ordinarily engaged in manual labour, and could not be regarded as a person having superintendence entrusted to him in the sense of the Act. Falconer v. M'Cabe, 8 F. 210—Ct. of Sess.

Notice of Injury.—In an action for damages under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, against a limited company at the instance of a workman in its employment,—Held, that a notice of the injury addressed to the company, inclosed in an envelope directed to A. B., who was the company's cashier, and was in charge at one of the offices of the company, and delivered at that office, was duly served on the company in accordance with the requirements of section 7 of the Act. Duncan v. Fife Coal Co., 7 F. 958—Ct. of Sess.

Orders or Directions to which Workman is Bound to Conform.—For sub-section 3 of section 1 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, to be applicable it is necessary that the order from conforming to which the injury to the workman resulted should be particular to the effect of superseding the exercise of the workman's own private judgment and discrimination, and substituting therefor the behest of the person to whose directions he is bound to conform. Canavan v. Green, 8 F. 275—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, the orders or directions from conforming to which the injury resulted need not be the causa causans of the accident, but may be only the causa sine qua non, and they may be express or implied, and need not be given at the precise time of the accident. Ib.

Withdrawal of Claim for Compensation—Subsequent Action under Employers' Liability Act, 1880.—A workman who withdraws notice of injury and request for arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, upon the employer objecting that the workman's claim is not within that Act, is not debarred from bringing an action in respect of the same injury under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, inasmuch as the workman has not exercised his "option" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Act of 1897. There is no real option where there is no liability under the Act of 1897. Rouse v. Dixon, 73 L. J. K.B. 662; [1904] 2 K.B. 628; 91 L. T. 436; 68 J. P. 406; 20 T. L. R. 553—D.

Edwards v. Godfrey (68 L. J. Q.B. 66; [1899] 2 Q.B. 333) is a decision upon section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, only, and no expressions in the judgments in that case ought to be adopted as laying down any general principle. Ib. And see NEGLIGENCE.

Driver of a Motor Omnibus—"Artificer"—"Handicraftsman"—Person Engaged in Manual Labour—Workman.—The plaintiff was in the employ of an omnibus company as the driver of a motor omnibus. According to the evidence his duty was not only to drive the omnibus, but also to start it by means of the starting handle after working the pump to get pressure up. Spanners and wrenches were supplied to him, and he was expected, if anything occurred on the road, to put it right if he could:—Held, that on the evidence he was a workman within the definition of section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and therefore entitled to the benefit of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. Cook v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (56 L. J. Q.B. 309; 18 Q.B. D. 683) distinguished. Smith v. Associated Omnibus Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 574; [1907] 1 K.B. 916; 96 L. T. 675; 71 J. P. 239; 23 T. L. R. 381—D.

(d) Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1897, 1900.

Statute.—63 & 64 Vict. c. 22 is the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1900.

(1) "Workman," who is.

Certificated Manager under Mines Regulation Acts—Receipt of Fixed Yearly Salary.—A certificated manager of a mine, appointed under the Mines Regulation Act, 1887, who is paid a fixed yearly salary, but does not do any manual labour, is not a "workman" within the meaning of that term as defined in section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Simpson v. Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron, and Coal Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 847; [1905] 1 K.B. 453; 92 L. T. 282; 53 W. R. 390; 21 T. L. R. 209—C.A.

Contractor—Piecework—Member of Squad.—A firm of shipbuilders entered into an arrangement with a squad of skilled workmen called "platers," under which the latter did certain work in connection with "frames," for which they were paid weekly by the hands of their leader a fixed sum per frame. This sum the squad, after paying the wages of certain helpers or unskilled workmen employed by them, divided among themselves. The squad were bound to work continuously all the working hours recognised in the yard, and when these were exceeded they were paid a certain sum per hour extra. Their work was done in the yard, and was supervised generally by the foreman of the shipbuilders. The necessary plant and materials were supplied by the shipbuilders. The squad were subject to printed rules and regulations "to be observed by the workmen in the employment of" the shipbuilders. One of the squad was accidentally killed while at work in the yard:—Held, that the deceased was a workman in the employment of the shipbuilders as employers in the sense of the Act. M'Cready v. Dunlop, 2 F. 1027—Ct. of Sess.

Independent Contractor.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, upon a claim by the dependants of a man who was killed by an accident while at work upon the premises of the respondents, the evidence was that the deceased man worked for the respondents at breaking steel and clearing cinders, that he was paid by tonnage, and that he had five or six men working under him whom he employed and paid on his own account:—Held, that the County Court Judge was justified in finding that the deceased man was not a "workman" in the employment of the respondents within the meaning of the Act. Vamplew v. Parkgate Iron and Steel Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 575; [1903] 1 K.B. 851; 88 L. T. 756; 51 W. R. 691; 67 J. P. 417—C.A.

H. and P., two labourers, agreed in writing with a quarrymaster to excavate the "tirr" or surface earth from a new part of the quarry at the rate of 7½d. per cubic yard. P. was then working at the quarry, but H. had not previously worked there. They were joined by a third man, on the footing that he should get an equal share of what they received for the work. The three did the work by their own manual labour, with the assistance of a man whom they engaged at fixed wages. The quarrymaster supplied the tools and plant, but exercised no control over the method of working, and the men were not tied down to hours. Payments on account were made by the quarrymaster to H. and P. (the receipts being signed by H.) practically weekly, the amount of the payment being calculated on a rough estimate of the work done. H. was killed while engaged in the work:—Held (dissentiente LORD YOUNG), that he was not a "workman" within the meaning of the Act, but an independent contractor. Hayden v. Dick, 5 F. 150—Ct. of Sess.

Sub-contractor.—The applicant tendered to the respondent for the supply of labour and tools to carry out the bricklaying work upon the respondent's building for a certain sum. He worked on the job as a foreman bricklayer, but he received no wages:—Held, that he was not a "workman," but a sub-contractor, and therefore not entitled to claim compensation in respect of injuries sustained by him while engaged on the work. Simmons v. Faulds, 65 J. P. 371—C.A.

Contractor — "Undertaker."—An estate owner, through his factor, engaged a man to quarry from a quarry on the estate stone blocks for wire fences and farm buildings to meet estate requirements, in such quantities as the factor should direct. He was to be paid five shillings a day, though in fact he was not paid daily, and might employ assistants, to be paid through him, at the same rate. The estate forester visited the quarry and kept a note of the days on which the quarryman worked. The tools were supplied partly by the quarryman and partly by the estate. The quarryman was told where he was to work, but was free to choose the part of the quarry where the excavation was to be made. The quarryman, having been injured by an explosion while engaged in his work, claimed compensation under the Act from the estate owner. The sheriff disallowed the claim on the ground that the claimant was a contractor and not a workman:—Held, on a Case stated, in which the only question was whether the claimant was a servant or workman within the meaning of the Act, that the claimant was a servant or workman. Paterson v. Lockhart, 7 F. 954—Ct. of Sess.

Whether a workman can at the same time be a contractor and a workman within the meaning of the Act, quære. Ib.

Quære (per LORD M'LAREN), whether a landed proprietor who works a quarry on his estate for estate purposes is an "undertaker" in the sense of the Act. Ib.

Practical Chemist—University Graduate.—By an agreement in writing between a company of chemical and dye manufacturers and one B., who held the degree of master of science, the duration of which agreement was to be five years, B. agreed to give his whole time to serve the company and endeavour to promote its success, to obey all orders in such work as might be allotted to him, to put at the disposal of the company the results of his work, whether they might lead to the improvement of existing methods of manufacture or concern the production of new bodies, the company being entitled to make use of the work or research and their results as they might think fit; and the company agreed to pay B. a yearly salary of 200*l.* for the first year, rising by annual increases to 260*l.* for the fifth year payable by monthly instalments, and a commission on net profits of inventions, improvements, or discoveries which should justify a patent being taken out. B. did no research work. His work, in fact, consisted of manual labour involving scientific knowledge. He was employed on sulphur colours, his duties being to see that the daily manufacture was carried out, to turn on steam, to place the taps for blowing over liquor in boxes, to take samples to the laboratory to test, and, where the colours were important, to charge the pan himself. He was dressed like the ordinary workmen, and worked amongst the chemicals like them, but his name was not in the wages book like theirs, and his hours were somewhat later than theirs:—Held (FARWELL, L.J., dissenting), that B. was not a "workman" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Bagnall v. Levinstein, 76 L.J. K.B. 234; [1907] 1 K.B. 531; 96 L.T. 184; 23 T.L.R. 165—C.A.

Partner Working on Partnership Work.—It was arranged between three partners, who had entered into a partnership for the working of a mine, that if any of the partners should work in the mine he should be paid as an ordinary workman. One of the partners acted as working foreman, and was constantly engaged in manual labour in the mine, receiving in respect of his work weekly wages independently of anything he might be entitled to as a partner. While so employed he by accident received an injury which caused his death:—Held, that, as he was a partner in the firm, the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, did not apply to him, and the firm were not liable to pay compensation in respect of his death. Ellis v. Ellis & Co., 74 L.J. K.B. 229; [1905] 1 K.B. 324; 92 L.T. 718; 53 W.R. 311; 21 T.L.R. 182—C.A.

The owner of a ship floating in a dock is not the "occupier" of the dock within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory Act, 1895. The word "dock" in that Act means the solid structure and body of the dock, not the water space within its limits; and a ship floating in a dock is not "premises within the same or forming part thereof." A seaman, therefore, doing the ordinary work of a seaman on a ship so situated is not, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, entitled to compensation for injury sustained in the course of such work. (LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD dissenting.) Raine

v. Jobson & Co. (70 L.J. K.B. 771; [1901] A.C. 404) distinguished. Ib.

"Employment in agriculture"—Farm Carpenter—Occasionally Assisting in Agricultural Work.—The applicant was engaged on a farm as farm carpenter and keeper. As carpenter he attended to the necessary repairs on the farm, and for about three months in the year he acted as gamekeeper, keeping down rabbits, &c. He lent a hand at hay and corn harvest, and occasionally assisted in threshing, in rick-making, and in mangold-carting. He never did ploughing. Having met with an accident on the farm, he claimed compensation. The County Court Judge, being of opinion that the applicant's employment came within the protection of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1900, as being employment in agriculture, made an award in his favour:—Held, that the question whether the applicant's work was "employment in agriculture" was a question of fact, and that on the evidence before him the County Court Judge was entitled to come to the conclusion he did. Smith v. Coles, 75 L.J. K.B. 16; [1905] 2 K.B. 827; 93 L.T. 754; 54 W.R. 81; 22 T.L.R. 5—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J.—"Employment in agriculture" is not necessarily limited to persons mainly employed in the course of a particular year in the manual operations of tilling, sowing, and reaping. Ib.

Workman Mainly Employed in Agriculture, but Occasionally in Other Work.—A workman in the employment of the owner of a portable threshing mill, driven by a traction engine, in the capacities of assistant thresher and traction-engine driver, was injured while the threshing mill was being drawn by the traction-engine from a farm on which threshing had been finished to another farm where his employer had contracted to thresh on the following day:—Held (dubitante the LORD JUSTICE CLERK), that the workman was entitled to compensation, inasmuch as he was a person employed mainly in agricultural work—that is, threshing—and partly or occasionally in other work, within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1900. Per LORD TRAYNER, that, apart from sub-section 3, the workman was entitled to compensation, as he was injured in the course of his employment as a thresher, the transit between one farm and another not forming any break in the course of that employment. Proctor v. Cumiskey, 6 F. 832—Ct. of Sess.

(2) Accident in Course of Employment.

Question of Fact.—The question whether the death of a workman resulted from or has been accelerated by an accident is a pure question of fact. Warnock v. Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., 6 F. 474—Ct. of Sess.

"Accident."—The word "accident" in section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, involves the idea of something fortuitous and unexpected. Hensley v. White, 69 L.J. Q.B. 188; [1900] 1 Q.B. 481; 81 L.T. 767; 48 W.R. 257; 63 J.P. 804—C.A.

Contravention of Orders.—The question whether a servant who violates his master's order is or is not acting in the course of his employment depends on whether the order is or is not one limiting or defining the scope of the servant's employment. Whitehead v. Reader, 70 L. J. K.B. 546; [1901] 2 K.B. 48; 84 L. T. 514; 49 W. R. 562; 65 J. P. 408—C.A.

Jar bringing on Gout.—A workman, employed as a smith at the engineering works of the appellants, was holding a flatter on an anvil for a fellow-workman to strike the flat end of the flatter. The fellow-workman made a bad stroke and struck the rod or round part of the flatter and jarred the workman's hand, causing it to swell and bringing on gout in the hand. The workman had previously been attended for gout in the hand and elbow by a doctor, who was of opinion that the swollen hand was caused by gout brought on by the jar, and who also certified that the workman was suffering from a weak hand caused partially by the injury:—Held, that the injury to the workman was caused by an "accident," and that the provisions of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, applied so as to entitle the workman to recover compensation under the Act. Lloyd v. Sugg & Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 190; [1900] 1 Q.B. 481; 81 L. T. 768; 48 W. R. 257—C.A.

Strain of Unusual Exertion.—A woman, who was employed as a box maker, was ordered to work upon boxes which were larger and heavier than those upon which she had previously worked. When she had finished some of the boxes and was working upon another, she suffered internal injury from the strain of the unusual exertion. The County Court Judge found that the injury did not arise from an "accident" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897:—Held, that the Judge had properly found that the injury did not arise from an "accident" within the meaning of the Act. Roper v. Greenwood, 83 L. T. 471—C.A. And see col. 1498.

Moving Frozen Planks.—A workman was employed by the defendants in the work of lifting and removing planks from a stack of timber. One night there was rain and frost, and the planks became frozen together, the planks lower in the stack being more firmly frozen together than those above; on the next day the workman began the work in the morning, and lifted and removed planks all day; about 4 P.M., while trying to lift a plank, he ruptured himself. The workman claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and the County Court Judge found that the injury was caused by the lifting of the plank, and was an injury by "accident" within the meaning of the Act:—Held (dismissing the appeal), that there was evidence of something fortuitous and unexpected upon which the County Court Judge might properly find that the injury was caused by "accident" within the meaning of the Act. Timmins v. Leeds Forge Co., 83 L. T. 120—C.A.

Accident Occurring after Workman had been Suspended from Work.—Workman Remaining.—The applicant, who was employed as a gang-boy in a pit, was suspended from work, and ordered by the deputy-manager to go to the pit-bottom, where it was the usual practice for disputes to be settled by the under-manager. This order to go to the pit-bottom was given about 1.30 P.M. The applicant disobeyed the order and remained in a "pass-by" in the workings till 3.40 P.M., when a part of the roof fell and injured him. It was against the rules for workmen to remain in the workings when not at work; but it was admitted that in the ordinary course the applicant could not have been taken up the shaft till four o'clock. The County Court Judge found that, although the applicant had not been guilty of serious and wilful misconduct, he was not entitled to compensation, as the accident, having happened two hours after he had been suspended from work and in a place where he had no right to be, did not arise out of and in the course of his employment:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the County Court Judge could so find. Smith v. Normanton Colliery Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 76; [1903] 1 K.B. 204; 88 L. T. 5; 51 W. R. 209; 67 J. P. 381—C.A.

Missile Thrown in Anger by One Fellow-workman at Another.—One of a large number of boys employed in the coach-painting department of the works of a railway company, while engaged in his work, received an injury by a blow from a piece of iron thrown in anger by one of two other boys in the same employment at the other, neither of them being at the time engaged upon his work:—Held, that the accident causing the injury did not arise out of the employment of the injured boy within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Armitage v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 71 L. J. K.B. 778; [1902] 2 K.B. 178; 86 L. T. 883; 66 J. P. 613—C.A.

Workman Seized with Epileptic Fit—Fall into Hold of Ship—Proximate Cause of Accident.—A workman was employed on a wharf and was engaged in the discharge of coal from the hold of a ship. His duty was to stand on a staging close to the open hold, direct the course up and down of a bucket in which the coal was being discharged, and give the necessary signals to the crane-man. While so engaged he was suddenly seized with an epileptic fit, and the result was that he fell into the hold and was seriously injured. It appeared that on previous occasions he had been subject to fits:—Held, that the workman's injuries were caused by an accident "arising out of and in the course of his employment," and that he was entitled to compensation. Wilkes v. Dowell & Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 572; [1905] 2 K.B. 225; 92 L. T. 677; 53 W. R. 515; 21 T. L. R. 487—C.A.

Engine-driver Injured by Stone Wilfully Thrown at Engine—Risk Incident to Employment.—An engine-driver while driving an engine was injured by a stone thrown wilfully by a boy from a bridge under which the railway passed:—Held, that the injury was due to an accident arising out of and in the course of the engine-driver's employment, inasmuch as the risk of being struck by stones thrown at trains is one to which engine-drivers are specially exposed. Armitage v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (71 L. J. K.B. 778; [1902] 2 K.B. 178) and Falconer v. London and Glasgow Engineering and Iron Shipbuilding Co. (3 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (5th. Ser.) 564) considered. Challis v.

London and South-Western Railway 74 L. J. K.B. 569; [1905] 2 K.B. 154; 93 L. T. 830; 53 W. R. 618; 21 T. L. R. 486—C.A.

Blood-Poisoning.]—A workman, having a blistered finger, was handling oil and red lead in the ordinary course of his employment, and, in so doing, failed to keep the red lead from the blistered finger, which accordingly became inflamed and was seriously injured:—Held, that he had not suffered any injury by “accident” within the rule laid down in Hensey v. White (69 L. J. Q.B. 188). Walker v. Lilleshall Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 192; [1900] 1 Q.B. 481; 81 L. T. 769; 48 W. R. 257; 64 J. P. 85—C.A.

A miner was employed in hewing coal, and while so employed a piece of coal worked itself into his knee, with the result that blood-poisoning set in and the workman died:—Held, that his death was the result of an “injury by accident” within section 1 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. Thompson v. Ashington Coal Co., 84 L. T. 412; 65 J. P. 356—C.A.

A workman, who was employed in a colliery, died from blood-poisoning resulting from an injury to his finger. He was working at night, and on the evening of the accident he left his home, which was just over a mile from the pit, with his finger well. He arrived at the pit with his finger uninjured. He arrived home early next morning with his finger crushed. He continued to work for some days, when blood-poisoning set in, and he died. His widow claimed compensation under the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, but the County Court Judge held that he was not entitled to draw the inference that the accident arose in the course of his employment, as it might have occurred on the way home:—Held, that the Judge was at liberty to draw the inference that the accident arose in the course of the employment. Per SIR GORELL BARNES, P.: The probability was that the accident happened at the time when the workman was at the pit, because accidents did happen there, rather than at the time when in the ordinary course of life accidents did not happen. Mitchell v. Glamorgan Coal Co., 23 T. L. R. 588—C.A.

The applicant, a caulker in the employment of shipbuilders, was seized with paralysis caused by lead poisoning, and became totally incapacitated for work. In the course of his work, in which he had been employed by the shipbuilders for a period of two years before he became incapacitated, he had to smear either with red or white lead certain places between the plates of ships into which water-tight shoes were put. The poisoning was such as might be expected from the nature of the work. It might be caused either by inhalation, or by eating food without having removed the lead from the hands, or by absorption through the skin. Only a small proportion of cases of poisoning of this description occurred amongst an number of persons working with red or white lead. The poisoning could not be traced to any particular day, and its development was a gradual process, and generally took a considerable time:—Held, that the lead poisoning could not be described as an “accident” in the popular and ordinary use of that word so as to entitle the applicant to compensation for personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. Fenton v. Thorley & Co. (72 L. J. K.B. 787; [1903] A.C. 443) and Brintons, Lim. v. Turvey (74 L. J. K.B. 474), considered. Steel v. Cammell, Laird & Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 610; [1905] 2 K.B. 232; 93 L. T. 357; 53 W. R. 612; 21 T. L. R. 490—C.A.

Anthrax Contracted from Infected Wool.]—A workman who died of anthrax contracted from the wool on which he was working held to have died from an “accident arising out of and in the course of” his employment, within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. (LORD ROBERTSON dissenting.) Brintons, Lim. v. Turvey, 74 L. J. K.B. 474; [1905] A.C. 230; 92 L. T. 578; 53 W. R. 641; 21 T. L. R. 444—H.L. (E.)

Tortious Act of Stranger.]—A was in the employment of B, a contractor, as foreman of sewage works. Certain pipes which had been laid in the street in the course of the work were wantonly broken. B directed A to protect the pipes, and while A was so engaged further damage was done, for which A, under B’s direction, demanded payment from the wrongdoers. This led to an altercation, in the course of which B was struck and fell, and A on going to his rescue was stabbed, and died:—Held, that A’s death was not caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Collins v. Collins, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 104—C.A.

Workman Falling Out of Train while Travelling—Onus of Proof.]—In an arbitration under the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, the burden is upon the applicant to prove that the injury was caused by accident arising “out of” as well as “in the course of” the employment of the workman, and if the applicant leaves the case in doubt as to whether those conditions are fulfilled or not, the evidence being equally consistent with their being fulfilled or not fulfilled, he has not discharged the burden of proof. Pomfret v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 72 L. J. K.B. 729; [1903] 2 K.B. 718; 89 L. T. 176; 52 W. R. 66—C.A.

A workman in the employ of a railway company was in the course of his employment travelling in an ordinary compartment of a passenger train. Persons travelling in the same compartment gave evidence that they saw him put the window down and place his basket in the rack, standing close to the door with his face towards it, but that they did not see him do anything else, until, when the train had travelled three hundred yards only from the place at which he entered it, they heard a crash, and he had disappeared. The workman was found lying close to the rail suffering from injuries which caused his death:—Held, that, there being evidence that the workman was simply passing as an ordinary passenger might pass, and acting as an ordinary passenger might act, in a train upon a railway, there was evidence on which the County Court Judge was justified in finding that the accident arose “out of” as well as “in the course of” his employment. Id.

Voluntary Attempt by Workman to Rescue

Fellow-workman.]—A steamship was moored to a quay in a dock discharging her cargo under a stevedore who had contracted with her owners to unload her. The labourers in the employment of the stevedore were each appointed to work in connection with a particular hold of the vessel, either on board her or on the quay. One of the labourers who was employed on the quay to discharge cargo from the after-hold, and who did not require, in the performance of his duty, to go on board the vessel, on being informed that one of his fellow-workmen employed in the forehold was lying there in an unconscious condition owing to inhaling noxious gas, offered to attempt a rescue, and after a handkerchief had been tied round his mouth he was lowered into the forehold, where both he and the man he had attempted to rescue were suffocated by carbonic-acid gas. In doing what he did the workman acted without instruction from his employer—the stevedore—who had gone for rescue appliances:—Held, that the workman met his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. (LORD KYLLACHY dissenting.) London and Edinburgh Shipping Co. v. Brown, 7 F. 488—Ct. of Sess.

Assisting in Emergency.]—A clerk employed at engineering works, whose duty it was to weigh and record all articles sent out from the works, met with an accident, which resulted in his death, while helping workmen to carry a heavy article to the weighing-machine. It was found in fact that his duty in relation to articles sent out was "confined to weighing the articles, which it was the duty of other employees to carry to the weighing-machine":—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment, and that his widow was entitled to compensation. Goslan v. Gillies, [1907] S.C. 68—Ct. of Sess.

A labourer, employed in a steam joinery shop, whose duties were not connected with the management of the machinery, met with a fatal accident while assisting a machineman to replace some loose belting upon the machinery while in motion. It was found in fact that the foreman might have ordered the deceased to assist in replacing the belting, but no such order had been given:—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the labourer's employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Act. Menzies v. McQuibban, 2 F. 732—Ct. of Sess.

The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, applies to the case of a workman engaged in an employment within that statute, who, on an emergency, does in his master's interest an act outside the scope of that employment, and is injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of so doing. Rees v. Thomas, 68 L. J. Q.B. 539; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1015; 80 L. T. 578; 47 W. R. 504—C.A.

Accident Occurring in England—Employer Resident in Scotland—Application for Arbitration—Jurisdiction of County Court.]—Where a workman resident in England is engaged by an employer resident in Scotland, and during the engagement meets with an accident in England, the Judge of the County Court within whose district the accident happens has jurisdiction under the Second Schedule, paragraph (9) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to hear an arbitration for the settlement under the Act of the compensation due to the workman. Rees v. Owen, 71 L. J. K.B. 770; [1902] 2 K.B. 436; 87 L. T. 298; 51 W. R. 168—D.

Strain.]—A workman while engaged in the course of his employment in replacing a derailed coal hutch on the rails severely strained his back:—Held, that he had been injured by an "accident" within the meaning of the Act. Stewart v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., 5 F. 120—Ct. of Sess.

Injury by over-strain or over-exertion sustained by a man in doing his work is injury by "accident" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Stewart v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., Ltd. (5 Fraser, 120), approved. Hensley v. White (69 L. J. Q.B. 188; [1900] 1 Q.B. 481), Lloyd v. Sugg & Co. (69 L. J. Q.B. 190; [1900] 1 Q.B. 481), Walker v. Lilleshall Coal Co. (69 L. J. Q.B. 192; [1900] 1 Q.B. 481), and Roper v. Greenwood (83 L. T. 471) disapproved. Fenton v. Thorley, 72 L. J. K.B. 787; [1903] A.C. 443; 89 L. T. 314; 52 W. R. 81—H.L. (E.)

Workman Injured Internally while Lifting Beam.]—A workman in normal health was engaged in the course of his duty in removing a beam from a loom. He was in the act of lifting the beam on to his shoulder, when, finding it was not evenly balanced, he gave it an extra lift, or hitch up, and in doing so ruptured several fibres of the muscles of his back, which incapacitated him for work:—Held, that he had sustained personal injury by "accident" within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Boardman v. Scott, 71 L. J. K.B. 3; [1902] 1 K.B. 43; 85 L. T. 502; 50 W. R. 184; 66 J. P. 260—C.A.

Employment in Coal Mine—Gradual Injury to Hand and Knee.]—One coal miner was incapacitated for work by "beat hand," and another by "beat knee." "Beat hand" is an injury caused by an abscess gradually produced by the jar, friction, or pressure to the hand caused by using the pick; and "beat knee" is an injury caused by an abscess in the knee gradually developed by long-continued kneeling whilst at work. Both are common injuries in the ordinary course of work in a coal mine:—Held, that the injuries were not caused by "accident" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Marshall v. East Holywell Coal Co., 93 L. T. 360; 21 T. L. R. 494—C.A.

Fellow-workman Pulling Brush Away.]—M., a workman, was oiling with a brush a machine at which he was working. The brush was not the brush belonging to the machine, and M. knew this. While M. was so engaged, C., a fellow-workman to whose machine the brush belonged and who required it for his work, came up angrily, said the brush was his, and took hold of it. M. asked C. to wait a moment, but C. pulled the brush out of M.'s hand, and in doing so unintentionally injured M.'s hand by drawing it across a sharp piece of iron:—Held, that the injury to M. was caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and that he was therefore entitled to compensation. McIntyre v. Rodger, 6 F. 176—Ct. of Sess.

Act Done for Workman's Own Pleasure.]—A workman in the employment of a railway company as a platelayer was occasionally engaged in the duty of collecting tickets, and on one occasion, after having completed the collection of tickets, got on to the footboard of a carriage to speak to a passenger. It was found as a fact that he got on to the footboard not for any object of his employers, but only for his own pleasure. In getting off the train after it had started he fell between the platform and the train, and was killed:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of his employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897; that to render an employer liable to pay compensation, the accident must arise not only "out of," but also "in the course of" the employment, and consequently that the railway company were not liable. Smith v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 68 L. J. Q.B. 51; [1899] 1 Q.B. 141; 79 L. T. 638; 47 W. R. 146—C.A.

Servant's Amusement.]—Two servants of the defendant company took two horses out of the defendants' stables to ride them to a neighbouring forge to be shod, and raced the horses furiously along the public road, vying with each other who should get there first. The plaintiff's horse took fright, and the plaintiff was thrown out of her trap and injured:—Held, that the defendants were liable for the negligence of their servants, inasmuch as—the first and main purpose of the servants being in the ordinary course of their employment and for their employers' benefit—the existence of a secondary object—the servants' own amusement—did not exonerate their employers. Gracey v. Belfast Tramway Co., [1901] 2 Ir. R. 322—Q.B. D.

Leaving Work to Get a Drink.]—A miner left the pithead, where he was working, to get a drink of water, and was killed by a runaway hutch when he was returning:—Held, that he was killed "in the course of his employment" within the meaning of the Act. Keenan v. Flemington Coal Co., 5 F. 164—Ct. of Sess.

Lightning—Death of Workman from—Increased Risk of Employment owing to Position of Workman.]—A workman who was employed upon a building exceeding thirty feet in height, which was being constructed by his employers by means of a scaffolding, was struck by lightning and killed when he was working on the scaffold about twenty-three feet above the level of the ground. The County Court Judge held, having heard evidence upon the point, that the workman was under the circumstances exposed to a substantial and abnormally increased risk owing to the position in which he had to work, and awarded compensation to his widow under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897:—Held, that there was evidence to justify the County Court Judge in coming to the conclusion that the workman was killed by an accident arising out of, as well as in the course of, his employment. Andrew v. Failsforth Industrial Society, 73 L. J. K.B. 510; [1904] 2 K.B. 32; 90 L. T. 611; 52 W. R. 451; 68 J. P. 409; 20 T. L. R. 429—C.A.

Workman not in Good Health—Acceleration of Death by Injury.]—On February 28, 1902, a workman who was then affected with nephritis, a disease which was likely to prove fatal to him, though probably not for a few years, received an injury in the course of his employment which so lowered his system that the disease from which he was suffering was accelerated in its operation, and he died on May 8, 1902:—Held that the workman's death resulted from the injury. Golder v. Caledonian Railway, 5 F. 123—Ct. of Sess.

—Where a workman in attempting, in the ordinary course of his duty, to start an engine by turning a wheel, ruptured some blood-vessels in his stomach and died shortly afterwards, and it was shewn that his internal organs were not in their natural state, it was held that his death, not being occasioned by anything fortuitous or unforeseen, was not caused by an "accident" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 1. Hensley v. White, 63 J. P. 804—C.A.

Walking on Railway Line.]—A fish porter, in the employment of a fish stevedore, who had a contract with a railway company for the portage of fish delivered at one of their stations, left the siding where the trucks were customarily discharged, and going along the line of railway was run down and killed by a railway engine near a shunter's bothy, to which the fish-porters were in the habit of going in order to find out the number of fish boxes that were in transit. The sheriff found, in fact, that the fish porters had no right to walk along the railway, that they had never been instructed by any one to go to the bothy to find out the number of fish boxes that were in transit, and that the information was not of any use to them, or to their employer, the fish stevedore, in their work:—Held, that the deceased had not been killed through an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Hendry v. Caledonian Railway, [1907] S.C. 732—Ct. of Sess.

Engine-driver Crossing Railway Line before Commencement of Duty.]—An engine-driver was required to be on duty at an engine-shed each morning at 7.45 A.M. To reach the engine-shed his usual and proper mode of access to the railway company's premises was by a gate, from which a path led direct to the engine-shed without involving crossing the rails. On the morning of the accident he left his house considerably earlier than was necessary, so far as his duties were concerned; and when he reached the gate referred to, instead of turning to the left and going direct to the engine-shed, he went in the opposite direction to a signal-box standing in the middle of the lines of rails, in order, for his own purposes, to make certain enquiries of the signalman. Having made these enquiries, he left the signal-box and went in the direction of the engine-shed, and in crossing the rails he was fatally injured:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment, and that therefore the company were not liable to pay compensation to his dependants. Benson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 73 L. J. K.B. 122; [1904] 1 K.B. 242; 89 L. T. 715; 52 W. R. 248; 68 J. P. 149; 20 T. L. R. 139—C.A.

Miner Going to His Work.]—A miner, while proceeding above ground to his work, slipped and broke his leg upon rails belonging to the mine leading to the doorway of a horizontal passage by which the mine was entered, at a spot distant between nine and thirteen feet from the doorway:—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the workman's employment. Mackenzie v. Coltness Iron Co., 6 F. 8—Ct. of Sess.

Workman Killed whilst Going to Work.—A workman living near and usually employed at King's Cross was ordered to work four miles distant at an engine-shed near Hornsey. He was carried by his employers free of charge to Hornsey every morning and back every evening. While on his way from Hornsey Station to the shed, shortly before his day's work began, he was run over by a train and killed:—Held, that the man's employment commenced at King's Cross, and that the accident arose "out of and in the course of his employment" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Holmes v. Great Northern Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 854; [1900] 2 Q.B. 409; 83 L. T. 44; 48 W. R. 681; 64 J. P. 532—C.A.

A workman employed in the renovation of the interior of a church found the church door locked on his arrival in the morning, and was unable to unlock the door. To gain access to his work he climbed the iron railing of a neighbouring schoolyard, which enabled him to scale the churchyard wall and enter the church by a window. The railing was topped by spikes, one of which pierced his foot, from the effects of which injury he died:—Held (LORD MONCREIFF dubitante), that the accident did not arise "out of and in the course of the employment" of the workman. Gibson v. Wilson, 3 F. 661—Ct. of Sess.

— Licence to Pass over Railway.—A workman employed by contractors, in the course of the execution of a contract made by them with a railway company, in ballasting a siding near the company's line of railway, was, while going to his work, killed by accident by a train upon the railway about one hundred and fifty yards from the place where his work lay, and seven minutes before the time for the commencement of his work. The employers had obtained the licence of the company for their workmen to go to the work by getting upon the railway at a certain gate, from which a footpath led by the side of the railway to the work without crossing the main line or going upon it, several sidings intervening between the path and the main line, and they had instructed the workmen to go to the work by this gate:—Held (ROMER, L.J., dissentiente), that it was no part of the employers' contract with the workman that he should go to the work by the railway, and that the employers owed no duty to him while he was passing along the railway, over which they had no control; and that in the circumstances, as the workman had not at the time of the accident arrived at the place where his work lay, and as the time for the commencement of his work had not arrived, the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the workman's employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Brydon v. Stewart (2 Macq. H.L. 80) and Tunney v. Midland Railway (L. R. 1

C.P. 291) discussed. Holness v. Mackay, 68 L. J. Q.B. 724; [1899] 2 Q.B. 319; 80 L. T. 831; 47 W. R. 531—C.A.

Workman Returning from Work.—A workman, employed at a coal mine, had finished his day's work, and was proceeding home along a private line of railway occupied by the colliery, when he was run over and killed at a point two hundred and thirty yards distant from the place where he worked:—Held (LORD YOUNG dissentiente), that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Caton v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron Co., 4 F. 989—Ct. of Sess.

Employment on or in or about a Mine.—Per the LORD JUSTICE CLERK,—The accident did not happen "on or in or about a mine" within the meaning of the Act. Id.

Accident Occurring Twenty Minutes before Time for Actual Commencement of Work.—A workman, in accordance with his usual practice, arrived on his employers' premises about twenty minutes before the time for actually beginning work, the train by which he travelled each morning—the only practicable one—taking him thus early to his destination. In giving up his time-ticket immediately after arrival to a night watchman, who said he would deposit it for him at the proper place, the workman sustained injuries by falling into a hole. To the knowledge of the foreman, a number of the workmen arrived equally early and spent the time till the moment for beginning work in a mess cabin on the premises, which was provided by the employers:—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the workman's employment. Sharp v. Johnson & Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 566; [1905] 2 K.B. 139; 92 L. T. 675; 53 W. R. 597; 21 T. L. R. 482—C.A.

Accident Happening during Dinner-hour—Dinner-hour Excluded in Calculating Wages—Workman not Obligated to Spend Dinner-hour on Employer's Premises.—A workman was paid by the hour for the number of hours he was actually at work, the daily dinner-hour being excluded from the calculation, and the wages paid weekly. During the dinner-hour the workman was at liberty either to leave the employer's premises or to remain upon them and take his dinner there. The workman was injured by an accident after he had sat down on the premises to eat his dinner. In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge held that, as the workman had sat down for the purpose of eating his dinner, the accident did not arise "out of and in the course of the employment":—Held, that the fact that the workman was not actually paid for and was not obliged to remain on the employer's premises during the dinner-hour did not necessarily take the case out of the Act. Blövelt v. Sawyer, 73 L. J. K.B. 155; [1904] 1 K.B. 271; 89 L. T. 658; 52 W. R. 508; 68 J. P. 110; 20 T. L. R. 105—C.A.

Unskilled Labourer Cleaning Machinery in Factory—Violation of Rules.—If a person is employed in a factory to do purely unskilled labour, and is expressly forbidden to touch any of the machinery, and he meets with an accident in attempting, in violation of such orders, to clean a certain machine, such accident is not one "arising out of and in the course of the employment" within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, so as to entitle him to compensation from his employer. Lowe v. Pearson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 122; [1899] 1 Q.B. 261; 79 L. T. 654; 47 W. R. 193—C.A.

Engine-driver Crossing Line.]—An engine-driver in the employment of a railway company having brought a train into a station belonging to the company about 10 P.M. was ordered to take his engine into a particular bye in the station, there to await his next duty, which was to take a train out of the station at 11 P.M. Having taken his engine into the bye, he left the engine and crossed over four or five sets of rails to ask a traffic regulator in the company's employment why he had been sent to that particular bye, which was not his usual bye. He then crossed two more sets of rails to a point about twelve or thirteen yards further from his engine, where he spoke for a moment or two to another of the company's employees. This conversation was merely a casual conversation, and had nothing to do with his duties as an engine-driver. Immediately afterwards, while recrossing the last-mentioned lines of rails on his way back to his engine, he was knocked down and killed by a train that was being shunted:—Held, that the accident was one arising out of and in the course of his employment. Goodlet v. Caledonian Railway, 4 F. 986—Ct. of Sess.

Watchman Using Shanty—Cooking Food at Night.]—The applicant was a watchman in the employment of a borough council, and was employed to watch at night some sewer work, his duty being to look after tools and traffic lamps, and to prevent accidents. There was a watch-box for him to sit in. The tools were kept in a shanty which was constructed of scaffold poles, trestles, planks, and a tarpaulin. Upon the night in question there was a fire outside the watch-box, but as it was raining the applicant lighted a fire in the shanty and proceeded to cook his food there. While so engaged the shanty fell down and injured him. The evidence shewed that the workmen were in the habit of having their food in the shanty in the daytime, and there was no evidence that the applicant was expressly prohibited from making use of the shanty, though the borough engineer gave evidence that the applicant had no business in the shanty at all, and that he would discharge a watchman if he had a fire in the shanty at night. In proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge found that the applicant was not properly in the shanty, having regard to his duties, and that therefore the accident did not arise out of the employment:—Held, that, in the absence of a prohibition against the applicant using the shanty, the evidence shewed that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, and the Act applied. Morris v. Lambeth Borough Council, 22 T. L. R. 22—C.A.

Workman Returning Home by Short Cut Across Railway Siding.]—A workman employed at a coal mine proposing to go home by crossing a railway siding on the premises of the mine owners, and by trespassing along a railway, was injured while crossing the siding. There were two exits provided for leaving the mine, neither of which crossed the siding. The workman was aware that the short cut was not the proper exit, but there was no express prohibition against workmen leaving the mine at this spot:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the workman's employment. Haley v. United Collieries, [1907] S.C. 214—Ct. of Sess.

Roadman Mounting Steam-roller—Accident Arising Out of and in the Course of the Employment.]—A roadman in the employment of a county road authority was injured when stepping down from a steam road roller belonging to the employers. The accident occurred before 7 A.M., the roadman's hour for beginning work. He had gone on to the roller for the purpose of breaking up the boiler fire so as to get up steam by 7 A.M. It was not part of his duty to do so, his employment being solely to sweep and put "blinding" on the road. He had privately arranged with the engineman to break up the fire so as to save the engineman and fireman, who had gone to their homes for the night, from returning before 7 A.M.:—Held, that the accident did not arise "out of and in the course of" the workman's employment. McAllan v. Perthshire County Council, 8 F. 783—Ct. of Sess.

Starting Engine—No part of Applicant's Duty to Start or Stop Engine.]—The applicant was employed as a brow girl at the respondent's colliery pit, and her work as such was to pick out rubbish from the coal as it was slowly moved along on a belt to the wagons. It was found as a fact by the County Court Judge that it was no part of the duty of the girls who did this work to start or stop the engine which worked the band, and that the applicant on the occasion in question was told by the other girls not to touch the engine. The man whose duty it was to start the engine being at the moment absent, the applicant started the engine herself, and, her dress catching in the wheel, she was drawn in and seriously injured:—Held (MATHEW, L.J., dissenting), that as the County Court Judge had found as a fact that it was no part of the applicant's duty to stop or start the engine, and as there was evidence to justify such finding, the accident did not arise out of or in the course of her employment with the respondents. Per MATHEW, L.J., that there was no evidence to support the finding that it was no part of the applicant's duty to touch the engine. Lowe v. Pearson (68 L. J. Q.B. 122; [1899] 1 Q.B. 261) followed. Losh v. Evans, 51 W. R. 243—C.A.

Girl Leaving Threshing-machine.]—A girl, employed as a farm-servant by the defender, was engaged on the platform of a steam threshing-machine, her duty being to pass the sheaves to the millman. She was specially directed to remain at her place, and warned of the danger of moving about; but, notwithstanding this, she, in the absence of the millman, attempted to step across the opening through which the mill was fed with sheaves, in order to speak to another servant. In attempting to cross her foot slipped and she was caught in the machinery and injured. For the performance of her work she did not require to speak to the other servant or to leave her place:—Held, that the accident was one not "arising out of and in the course of" her employment, and also that she had been guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct." Callaghan v. Maxwell, 2 F. 420—Ct. of Sess.

Accident Caused by Fellow-workmen Engaged in Horse-play.]—A workman in the course of his employment in a "factory" within the meaning of the Act met with an accident caused by his fellow-workmen, who at the time were not engaged at their work, but were indulging in horse-play:—Held (LORD MONCREIFF dissenting), that the accident was not one arising "out of" the employment in the sense of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Act, and that the injured workman was not entitled to compensation under the Act. Falconer v. London and Glasgow Engineering &c. Co., 3 F. 564—Ct. of Sess.

Riding on Tram against Orders.]—A fireman in a coal pit employed to report to the colliery office on the state of the mine was riding, in breach of his orders, upon a tram laden with ashes and drawn by a horse in the direction of the office. The horse bolted, and the man ran to check it, in attempting which he fell and was run over by the tram:—Held, that he was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Rees v. Thomas, 68 L. J. Q.B. 539; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1015; 80 L. T. 578; 47 W. R. 504—C.A.

Ascending by Hoist against Orders.]—A workman engaged in the process of filling scrap iron into barrows was killed owing to the defective condition of a hoist in which he was ascending to a furnace platform in order to procure hand-leathers which were necessary to his work. The furnace platform could be reached either by a fixed iron ladder or by the hoist in question. Workmen were forbidden to ascend by the hoist, a notice to that effect being posted on a wall close by, and at the time of the accident the hoist had been rendered especially dangerous by recent alterations. There was no finding that the deceased knew of the notice, and it was stated that there was no proof that his attention was directed to the changed condition of the hoist. It was further stated that some of the workmen knew of the notice and that some did not, but that all of them used the hoist:—Held, first, that the workman was killed in the course of his employment; and secondly, that the arbitrator was right in holding that the deceased had not been guilty of serious and wilful misconduct. Logue v. Fullerton, 3 F. 1006—Ct. of Sess. See SERIOUS AND WILFUL MISCONDUCT, infra.

Servant under General Control of Master—Special Control of Another—Negligence of Servant—Liability of Master.]—The defendant agreed with a firm of ironworkers to supply them daily with vans in complete working order, with horses, and men to drive and take charge of them. The vans, horses, and all necessaries were agreed to be the property of the defendant. The men in the defendant's employ and all charges and claims in reference to vans, horses, and men were to be paid for by the defendant, and he was to be responsible for the same. The hirers were only to be responsible for the hire. The man in charge of a horse and van so supplied, in delivering an iron girder by the direction of the hirers, was guilty of negligence, causing personal injury to the plaintiff:—Held, that under the agreement the man remained under the control and in the service of the defendant, who was therefore liable. Waldock v. Winfield, 70 L. J. K.B. 925; [1901] 2 K.B. 596; 85 L. T. 202—C.A.

Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. (46 L. J. C.P. 283; 2 C.P.D. 205) and Donovan v. Laing, Wharton, and Down Construction Syndicate (63 L. J. Q.B. 25; [1893] 1 Q.B. 629) distinguished. Ib.

Burden of Proof.]—The burden of proving that an accident arose out of and in the course of the workman's employment lies on the plaintiff; but the burden of proving serious and wilful misconduct lies on the defendant. McNicholas v. Dawson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 470; [1899] 1 Q.B. 773; 80 L. T. 317; 47 W. R. 500—C.A.

A workman employed by the defendants to attend to a steam engine within a shed and to a mortar pan outside the shed worked by the steam engine and used to grind mortar for a building, was seen to start the engine. Very shortly afterwards he was found involved in the machinery, whereby he was killed. The shed had two doors, one of which was safe; the other, a small one, used occasionally for ventilating the shed, was dangerous by reason of proximity to a revolving shaft, and the man had been forbidden to use it. It appeared that the man was approaching the small door when he met with an accident:—Held, that there was evidence that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment. Ib.

(3) Buildings and Scaffolding.

Building Less than Thirty Feet in Height on which Machinery is being used.]—The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, applies to employment on, in, or about a building less than thirty feet in height on which machinery driven by mechanical power is being used for the construction, repair, or demolition thereof. Mellor v. Tomkinson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 214; [1899] 1 Q.B. 374; 79 L. T. 715; 47 W. R. 240; 63 J. P. 55—C.A.

Building Exceeding Thirty Feet in Height—Part of Building Below Ground—Foundations.]—The question whether or not a building exceeds thirty feet in height, in proceedings under the Act, is one of fact for the determination of the arbitrator. Whether in estimating the height of a building for the purposes of the Act the foundations are to be taken into account, quære. Halstead v. Thomson, 3 F. 668—Ct. of Sess.

Measurement.]—In an arbitration before the County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the question whether a building "exceeds thirty feet in height" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act, is a question of fact to be determined by the County Court Judge, having regard to the particular circumstances existing at the time of the accident to the workman. McGath v. Neill, 71 L. J. K.B. 58; [1902] 1 K.B. 211; 50 W. R. 162; 66 J. P. 180—C.A.

The height of a building is not necessarily and under all circumstances its height only above the ground level. Ib.

— Construction by means of a "Scaffolding"
— Loose Planks Resting on Trestles in Room for Purpose of Plastering Walls and Ceiling.—In the construction of a dwelling-house, which was roofed in and exceeded thirty feet in height, to enable the workmen employed in doing the plastering work to reach the ceilings and tops of the walls in the rooms, which were about nine feet in height, trestles with loose planks laid across the tops of the trestles were being used. A workman standing on the top landing of the house doing the plastering work of the walls of the staircase as far as he could reach from the floor of the landing fell over the staircase and was killed:—Held (COLLINS, L.J., dissenting), that the house was being constructed by means of a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that the dependants of the workman were entitled to compensation under the Act. Maude v. Brook, 69 L. J. Q.B. 322; [1900] 1 Q.B. 575; 82 L. T. 39; 48 W. R. 290; 64 J. P. 181—C.A.

— Building More than Thirty Feet in Height
— Demolition of Building Less than Thirty Feet in Height.—At the side of an inn standing in a street was a beerhouse. The wall between the inn and the beerhouse was a party wall, and there was internal communication between them by means of a doorway in the wall. The inn and beerhouse belonged to the same person, and were used by him for the common purpose of his business as an innkeeper. The inn exceeded, but the beerhouse was less than, thirty feet in height. During the demolition of the beerhouse, for the purpose of enlarging the inn, a workman sustained personal injury. He claimed compensation from his employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897:—Held, that, as the building which was being in fact demolished did not exceed thirty feet in height, the workman was not engaged at the time of the injury in an employment to which the Act applied. Rixson v. Pritchard, 69 L. J. Q.B. 494; [1900] 1 Q.B. 800; 82 L. T. 186—C.A.

In the construction of a cottage which was roofed in and exceeded thirty feet in height, to enable the workman employed in doing the plastering work to reach the ceilings and tops of the walls in the rooms, a platform had been erected composed of trestles with loose boards laid across the tops of the trestles. A workman using this platform was injured. In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the arbitrator found that this platform did not constitute a scaffolding within the meaning of section 7:—Held, that the question was a question of fact, and that the Court would not interfere with the finding. Maude v. Brook (69 L. J. Q.B. 322; [1900] 1 Q.B. 575) discussed. Ib.

— "Constructed or repaired"—"Scaffold- ing."—By section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the Act is to apply to employment by undertakers "on in or about any building which exceeds thirty feet in height and is either being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding":—Held, that "construction" in the sense of the Act is not limited to original construction; that it includes reconstruction; that it may be partial just as repair is partial; and that whenever new material is put into a building so that it becomes an integral part of the structure the building is "being constructed" within the meaning of the Act. Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers & Co., 70 L. J. K.B. 150; [1901] A.C. 49; 84 L. T. 1; 49 W. R. 380—H.L. (E.)

The question whether a temporary staging is a "scaffolding" within the Act is a mixed question of fact and law. When the facts are ascertained the question becomes one of law, on which the Court is bound to express an opinion. Ib.

The appellant's husband was killed whilst at work in a building over thirty feet high, which was being strengthened by the addition of iron stays, by falling from a removable platform formed by boards lashed on ledgers lashed to iron columns and supported in the middle by trestles:—Held, that she was entitled to compensation, as the building was "being constructed," and the platform constituted a "scaffolding" within the meaning of the Act. Ib.

— Extension of Existing Building.—A contractor contracted with the owners of an electrical generating station for the erection of an extension of the station upon adjoining land, the intention being that the walls of the extension should be joined on to the end wall of the existing building, which exceeded thirty feet in height, and that doorways should be made so that the extension and the existing building should become one building. A workman employed by the contractor upon the extension was injured by accident in the course of and arising out of his employment, before the walls of the extension were thirty feet in height, and before the end wall of the existing building had been dealt with, save only that trenches for the footings of the walls of the extension had been excavated up to it, and the footings had been put in and were in absolute contact with it:—Held, that the workman was, in the circumstances of the case, employed about a building exceeding thirty feet in height within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Hartley v. Quick, 74 L. J. K.B. 257; [1905] 1 K.B. 359; 92 L. T. 191; 21 T. L. R. 207—C.A.

— Fall while Silicating Wall.—A workman was killed by falling from a ladder while engaged in silicating the wall of a house over thirty feet in height. The work of silicating consisted in washing or cleaning stones in the walls of a house which had begun to decay, and in painting or covering them with a preparation known as silicate, for the purpose of preserving them. This kind of work was usually done by means of a scaffold suspended by a rope from the roof of the house, but occasionally, when the work was limited to certain portions of the house (as it was in the case in question); it was more conveniently done by means of ladders. It did not appear whether the ladders on which the deceased and his fellow-workmen were working were fastened to the wall or to each other, or that they were otherwise than placed against the wall in the usual way:—Held, that the ladder from which the deceased fell was not a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act—dissenting LORD TRAYNER, who held that while a ladder was not per se a scaffolding, the ladder in question was, in the circumstances, a scaffolding pro hac vice. Campbell v. Sellars, 5 F. 900—Ct. of Sess.

— Building Intended to Exceed Thirty Feet.]—Personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment was caused to a workman employed on a building being constructed by means of a scaffolding. At the time the injury was caused the building did not in fact exceed thirty feet in height, but it was intended that it should exceed that height:—Held, that the employment of the workman did not come within the terms of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that the employer was not liable to pay compensation. Billings v. Holloway, 68 L. J. Q.B. 16; [1899] 1 Q.B. 70; 79 L. T. 396; 47 W. R. 105—C.A.

Building "being constructed"—Building Completed and in Use—Removal of Scaffolding.]—A building in the construction of which scaffolding is used is not completely "constructed" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act until the scaffolding has been removed, and the removal of the scaffolding is a part of the work of construction. Frid v. Fenton, 69 L. J. Q.B. 436; 82 L. T. 193—C.A.

A chimney shaft exceeding thirty feet in height was constructed in such a position that access to the work could only be obtained from a lower level than that on which the shaft was placed, and it was necessary for the purpose of doing the work to erect a staging from the lower level. After the shaft had been erected and the inside scaffolding, by means of which it was erected, had been removed, a workman was injured while removing gear used in the construction from the staging to the lower level, the shaft then being in working order and in actual use:—Held, that the employment of the workman at the time of the accident was on, in, or about a building "being constructed by means of a scaffolding," within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Ib.

— "Undertakers"—Scaffolding—Building.]—Certain work of construction was being done under a contract to a building exceeding thirty feet in height by means of a scaffolding which the contractor erected. Another contractor was doing certain woodwork alterations in the building under an independent contract with the owner which did not require the use of a scaffolding, and none was supplied by him. A workman in the employment of the woodwork contractor was injured by an accident while engaged on the woodwork of the building. It appeared that the workman had previously made some use of the scaffolding as a matter of convenience, but it was in no way necessary for his work, and at the time of the accident he was not using it. In proceedings against his employer to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, —Held, that it was not necessary that the scaffolding should have been put up by the undertaker in whose employment the workman was; that it was sufficient if the building was being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding; and that the workman was entitled to compensation. Fletcher v. Hawley, 21 T. L. R. 191—C.A. See UNDERTAKERS, infra.

Building being Repaired by means of a Scaffolding—Ladder.]—A slater's labourer, employed about a building exceeding thirty feet in height which was being repaired, was carrying slates up a ladder to the roof of the building for the purpose of the repair, when the ladder slipped and he fell to the ground. Upon the hearing of an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in respect of the injuries thereby received, the County Court Judge found as a fact that the building was not being repaired by means of a scaffolding:—Held, that on the true construction of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1897, the County Court Judge was not debarred from finding that the ladder was not "a scaffolding" within the meaning of the sub-section. Marshall v. Rudeforth, 71 L. J. K.B. 781; [1902] 2 K.B. 175; 86 L. T. 752; 50 W. R. 596; 66 J. P. 627—C.A.

— Ordinary Pair of Painter's Steps.]—A workman was injured by a fall from an ordinary pair of painter's steps on which he had been standing for the purpose of painting the wall of a house, which exceeded thirty feet in height, above the height he could reach when standing on the ground. On the hearing of an arbitration upon a claim by the workman for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge was of opinion that the steps, though used by the workman to support him while doing his work, afforded no evidence that the house was being repaired by means of a scaffolding, and made an award in favour of the employers:—Held (STIRLING, L.J., dissenting), that there was evidence upon which the Judge might find that the house was being repaired by means of a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act. Elvin v. Woodward, 72 L. J. K.B. 468; [1903] 1 K.B. 838; 88 L. T. 671; 51 W. R. 518; 67 J. P. 413—C.A.

Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers & Co. (70 L. J. K.B. 150; [1901] A.C. 49), Veazey v. Chattle (71 L. J. K.B. 252; [1902] 1 K.B. 494), and Marshall v. Rudeforth (71 L. J. K.B. 781; [1902] 2 K.B. 175) considered. Ib.

— Ladder.]—A workman was injured, in the course of his employment, while engaged in whitewashing the interior of a building over thirty feet in height. Part of the work was done by the workmen standing on the rungs of an ordinary ladder placed against the walls of the building, thus using the ladder as a kind of platform. The County Court Judge found that a ladder was not a "scaffolding" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and refused to award compensation;

—Held, that the Court could not say as a matter of law that a ladder when so used must necessarily be a "scaffolding" within the meaning of the Act, and, the County Court Judge having drawn his conclusion of fact, the Court could not interfere with his decision. Crowther v. West Riding Window Cleaning Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 71; [1904] 1 K.B. 232; 52 W. R. 374; 68 J. P. 122—C.A.

— Crawling Board on Roof of House.—For the purpose of executing repairs to the roof of a building exceeding thirty feet in height a "crawling board" was carried to the roof by a workman and his fellow-workman. The crawling board was a scaffold-board, about eighteen feet long and ten inches wide, with pieces of wood nailed across the upper surface at intervals of a foot or two, and at one end a piece of wood, about three inches thick and nine inches deep, was nailed to the underneath surface so as to form a hook, to be placed over the ridge of the roof, to hold the crawling board and keep it fixed. The crawling board was used to enable the workman to pass safely over the roof and to stand on while doing his work. The workman and his fellow, having reached the roof by means of a ladder placed against the side of a building, pushed the crawling board along the roof. As the workman was going over the roof along the crawling board, which was being supported at one end by his fellow-workman standing on the top of the ladder, in order to hook the crawling board over the edge of the roof, the crawling board slipped, and the workman fell and was injured:—Held (STIRLING, L.J., dissenting), that the building was being repaired by means of a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that the Act applied to the workman's employment. Wood v. Walsh (68 L. J. Q.B. 492; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1009) considered. Veazey v. Chattle, 71 L. J. K.B. 252; [1902] 1 K.B. 494; 85 L. T. 574; 50 W. R. 263; 66 J. P. 389—C.A.

"Repair"—by Painting.]—The expression "repair" in section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, does not include merely "painting" the outside of a building which exceeds thirty feet in height. Wood v. Walsh, 68 L. J. Q.B. 492; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1009; 80 L. T. 345; 47 W. R. 504; 63 J. P. 212—C.A.

Repair by Means of "Scaffolding"—Ladder.—Repairs done by means of a ladder are not repairs done "by means of a scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1; nor are repairs to a building which exceeds thirty feet in height done by means of a ladder placed outside the building with one end of a plank tied to a rung of the ladder and the other end resting on a window-sill, repairs done "by means of a scaffolding" within the meaning of the same sub-section. Id.

— Whitewashing Inside Ceiling and Walls of School-house.—The inside walls and ceiling of a school building were being whitewashed under a contract for that purpose by a firm of painters, decorators, and contractors:—Held, that the building was "being repaired" within the meaning of section 7, subsection 11 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Dredge v. Conway, Jones & Co., 70 L. J. K.B. 494; [1901] 2 K.B. 42; 84 L. T. 345; 49 W. R. 518—C.A.

Wood v. Walsh & Sons (68 L. J. Q.B. 492; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1009), in so far as it decided that the "painting" of the building in that case was not "repair" of the building within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is in effect overruled by the decision of the House of Lords in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers & Co. (70 L. J. Q.B. 150; [1901] A. C. 49), col. 1508. Id.

— Painting and Whitewashing—Scaffolding.—The word "repair" in section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, may include painting, whitewashing, and dubbing the ceiling and walls of the interior of a building where the painting and whitewashing is portion of the work necessary to finish the building. "Scaffolding" includes an internal staging arranged with planks resting on the step of a ladder and upon one of the roof principals, in the centre of a room. Wood v. Walsh (68 L. J. Q.B. 492; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1009) dissented from. Reddy v. Broderick, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 328—C.A.

Scaffolding not in Use nor Erected at Time of Accident.—In the construction of a building, scaffolding, consisting of trestles and planks, was used from time to time from the beginning to the end of the job. During the construction an accident happened to a workman at a time when the scaffolding, although its component parts were there, was neither in use nor erected:—Held, that at the time of the accident the building was being constructed by means of a scaffolding within section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Halstead v. Thomson, 3 F. 668—Ct. of Sess.

"Scaffolding"—Ladder.]—An ordinary ladder resting against the wall of a building, if used for the purpose of enabling a workman, by standing on the rungs, to perform work upon the building at a height from the ground, may constitute a "scaffolding" within section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. O'Brien v. Dobbie, 74 L. J. K.B. 268; [1905] 1 K.B. 346; 92 L. T. 721; 53 W. R. 374; 21 T. L. R. 218—C.A.

— Ladder.—A ladder used in the ordinary way by a painter in painting beams in a building over thirty feet in height is not a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. McDonald v. Hobbs, 2 F. 3—Ct. of Sess.

— Trestles and Boards.—The question what constitutes a scaffolding within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is a question of fact. Ferguson v. Green, 70 L. J. K.B. 21; [1901] 1 K.B. 25; 83 L. T. 461; 49 W. R. 105; 64 J. P. 819—C.A.

In the construction of a cottage which was roofed in and exceeded thirty feet in height, to enable the workman employed in doing the plastering work to reach the ceilings and tops of the walls in the rooms, a platform had been erected composed of trestles with loose boards laid across the tops of the trestles. A workman using this platform was injured. In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the arbitrator found that this platform did not constitute a scaffolding within the meaning of section 7:—Held, that the question was a question of fact, and that the Court would not interfere with the finding. Maude v. Brook (69 L. J. Q.B. 322; [1900] 1 Q.B. 575) discussed. Ib.

(4) Engineering Work.

"Construction"—Mechanical Power.]—A contracted with B to erect a machine on the third floor of B's building. C, who was in the employment of A, had to superintend the carrying out of the work. The machine was delivered in parts at B's building; and the heavy parts of the machine were raised to the third floor by pulleys, while the lighter parts were carried up by the lift, to work which mechanical power was required. When all the parts were on the third floor, and whilst C was engaged in erecting the machine, for which no mechanical power was required, a piece slipped and injured C:—Held, the erecting of the machinery was a distinct and separate part of the contract from the delivery of the parts on to the third floor. The erection alone constituted the "construction" within the meaning of the statute, and, as no mechanical power was required for that purpose, the injured workman was not entitled to compensation under the Act. Murphy v. O'Donnell, 54 W. R. 149—C.A.

Adding New Storey to Building—Steam Winch Used.]—A steam winch was used in the work of adding a new storey to a building:—Held, that the work was an "engineering work" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Cosgrove v. Partington, 64 J. P. 788—C.A.

Repair of Road by Steam-roller.]—Where a steam-roller is used for the purpose of repairing a road, the operation is an engineering work within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Chambers v. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners ([1899] 2 Q.B. 132) distinguished. Middlemiss v. Berwickshire County Council, 2 F. 392—Ct. of Sess.

A road was being repaired by means of a steam-roller and a water-cart. In the course of the work the steam-roller was taken to a piece of road some little distance from where the water-cart was, and there used in rolling the road, water not being required at that particular spot. The driver of the water-cart was directed to water a piece of the road some further distance off from where the roller was at work, and while he was yoking his horse it bolted, with the result that he was run over and killed:—Held, that he was employed in an "engineering work" at the time of the accident. Ib.

Construction of Reservoir and Laying of Pipes for Water-supply of Town—Reservoir being Constructed by Means of Machinery Driven by Steam Power—Injury to Workman Engaged in Laying Pipes Six Hundred Yards from Reservoir.]—The expression "engineering work" in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that the Act shall apply only to employment "on in or about," amongst other things, an "engineering work," refers not to the character of the labour which the workman is performing, but to the character of the physical thing or area upon which his labour is bestowed. Atkinson v. Lumb, 72 L. J. K.B. 460; [1903] 1 K.B. 861; 88 L. T. 789; 51 W. R. 516; 67 J. P. 414—C.A.

A reservoir was being constructed and a line of pipes therefrom laid down for the water-supply of a town distant about two miles from the reservoir, the whole of the works being executed by a contractor under one contract. Machinery driven by steam power was being used for the construction of the reservoir. A workman in the employment of the contractor was injured while setting up a hand derrick for the purpose of laying the pipes at a point about six hundred yards distant from the reservoir. The land where the pipes were to be laid between the place where the workman was at work and the reservoir had been staked out and a small part of the trench dug at the part farthest from the reservoir, but no pipes had been laid nor other work of laying the pipes done. In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge found as a fact that the construction of the reservoir and laying of the pipes therefrom was one entire work, and that, the construction of the reservoir being an "engineering work" within the meaning of the Act, the whole was an "engineering work":—Held, that, having regard to the finding of the County Court Judge, the workman was employed "on" an "engineering work," and consequently that the Act applied. Ib.

Chambers v. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners (68 L. J. Q.B. 740; [1899] 2 Q.B. 132) and Middlemiss v. Berwick County Council (2 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (5th Ser.) 392) considered. Ib.

Workmen Employed on Board Ship—Ship Moored in Navigable River Alongside Quay—Steam Crane—Employer's Limited Use of—Discontinuance of Use—Accident on Board Ship—"Factory"—Quay—Shipbuilding Yard.]—The appellants, a firm of marine-engine builders, contracted with shipbuilders to construct engines for a steamship which was built at the shipbuilders' yard on the river Wear. When built the ship was towed to the appellants' yard on the other side of the river, where she received the heavier machinery, and was then towed back and moored in the river alongside the shipbuilders' quay. Other parts of the machinery were brought here and put on board by the appellants, some of them by means of a travelling steam crane which belonged to the shipbuilders and was under the shipbuilders' control. Some days after the machinery was all on board, and the use of the crane for the appellants' purpose had been entirely discontinued, a workman employed by the appellants in finishing the engines on board the ship was injured by an accident arising out of such employment:—Held, that the workman was not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, either on the ground that he was employed by the appellants as undertakers in respect of a factory, quay, or shipbuilding yard, or in respect of engineering work. The mere fact that a vessel is berthed alongside a quay which is used for obtaining access to or from the land to the vessel is not enough to bring either the vessel itself or the portion of the quay which it so uses within the definition of a factory under the Act. Harrison v. Oceanic Steam Ship Co. (76 L. J. K.B. 959n) followed. Handford v. Clark, 76 L. J. K.B. 958; [1907] 2 K.B. 409; 97 L. T. 124—C.A.

Repair to Boiler.]—A workman in the employment of a firm of boiler-makers was injured in the course of repairing a boiler in a spinning-mill belonging to a third person. The work in which he was engaged at the time of the accident was all done by hand, and no mechanical power was being used, although there was on the premises steam power available for use:—Held—first, that as the spinning-mill was not a factory occupied by the workman's employers, it was not a factory of which they were the undertakers; secondly, that the work in which the workman was engaged was not an "engineering work" within the meaning of the Act; and thirdly, that the workman was not entitled to compensation. Cooper & Greig v. Adam, 7 F. 681—Ct. of Sess.

Carting for Railway Construction.]—A workman who was employed as a carman to cart sand from a sandpit to a place where a railway was being constructed met with an accident while driving a cart with sand in it, at a place two and a half miles distant from the place where the work of construction was being carried on:—Held, that the accident did not happen "about" the engineering work, within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the word "about" signifying a physical locality. Pattison v. White & Co., 20 T. L. R. 775—C.A.

Making Trench to Connect House Drain with Sewer.]—A workman in the employment of the respondent, who had contracted with the local authority to do the work of connecting house drains with the main sewer in the road, was injured by an accident while engaged in the work of connecting a house drain with the sewer. At the time of the accident the trench for the connecting pipe had been opened across the footway in front of the house, but it had not reached the sewer, and the workman was engaged in making the trench. The sewer had not been touched:—Held, that the work on which the workman was engaged at the time of the accident was "engineering work" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which included work done for the purpose of obtaining access to the sewer as well as the actual work of making the alteration in the sewer. Coles v. Anderson, 69 J. P. 201; 21 T. L. R. 204—C.A.

Hopper Carrying to Sea Mud Dredged by Steam Dredger.]—The words "on or in or about" in section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that the Act shall apply only to employment on or in or about a railway, factory, mine, quarry, or engineering work, are used to indicate locality.

Chambers v. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners, 68 L. J. Q.B. 740; [1899] 2 Q.B. 132; 80 L. T. 586; 47 W. R. 533—C.A.

A workman was employed upon a steam dredger used for dredging a harbour, it being part of his duty to go to sea with the hoppers, into which the mud from the harbour was dredged by the steam dredger, and empty them outside the harbour at sea. The workman was killed by an accident in the course of emptying one of the hoppers outside the harbour at sea:—Held, assuming that the steam dredger was an "engineering work" within the meaning of the Act, that the workman was not at the time of the accident employed "on or in or about" it within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, and therefore the Act did not apply. Ib.

"Railroad"—Construction of Railway Signal-Box.]—A workman was accidentally injured in the course of his employment on the construction of a signal-box on a new line of railway:—Held, that his employment was on, in, or about a work of construction of a "railroad" within the meaning of the definition of "engineering work" in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, so as to entitle him to compensation under the Act. Fullick v. Evans, O'Donnell & Co., 84 L. T. 413—C.A.

Laying of Telephone-wires under Tramway—Opening of Roadway between Up and Down Tram-lines—"Work of alteration of a railroad."—A contractor had contracted with a telephone company to lay a telephone-wire under and across a tramway consisting of two sets of lines—an up and a down line—laid in a public roadway. For the purpose of carrying out the work a trench was dug in the roadway to within a short distance of the outer rail of one of the sets of lines, a tunnel was made under these two rails, including the space between the lines, and then a trench was made in the surface of the intervening space of the roadway between the up and down lines. Another tunnel was made under the other set of rails, and also a trench in the roadway outside these rails. This work did not interfere with either the tramway itself or the working of its traffic. A workman in the employment of the contractor, whilst at work close to and just outside the tramway itself, was killed by a passing tramcar. In proceedings by the widow to recover compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, —Held (ROMER, L.J., dissenting), that, inasmuch as the carrying of the wire under and across the tramway involved the digging of a trench between the up and down lines of the tramway, that constituted an "alteration of a railroad" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Act of 1897, and that the deceased workman was therefore engaged at the time of his death in "engineering work" within the meaning of the definition of that expression so as to entitle the widow to compensation. Adams v. Shaddock, 75 L. J. K.B. 7; [1905] 2 K.B. 859; 93 L. T. 725; 54 W. R. 97; 22 T. L. R. 15—C.A.

Hydraulic Lift under Repair—Machinery of Lift made Use of.]—A workman employed to repair a hydraulic lift, making use of the machinery of the lift itself for the purpose, is engaged on work for the repair of which machinery driven by water-power is used within the meaning of the definition of "engineering work" in section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Tulloch v. Waygood & Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 557; [1906] 2 K.B. 261; 95 L. T. 223—C.A.

Employment on Tramway—"Railway"—"Railroad."—A workman was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment in laying the line of an electric tramway:—Held, that the tramway, though not a "railway," was a "railroad" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and therefore came within the definition of "engineering work," and that the workman was entitled to compensation. Fletcher v. London United Tramways Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 653; [1902] 2 K.B. 269; 86 L. T. 700; 50 W. R. 597; 66 J. P. 596—C.A.

Area of Tramway—Repair of Overhead Electric Wires.—The C. Corporation owned the electric tramways in C., and were under the obligation of keeping the tram-line and overhead wires in proper repair. The applicant was employed by the corporation, and his duty was to attend to the repairs of the overhead wires. On the day of the accident he had repaired the wires at one place, and was proceeding along the tram-route to another place some distance off to do repairs there, when he was injured, and in respect of his injuries he claimed compensation. The County Court Judge, in view of the obligation of the corporation to keep the whole of their tramway system in repair, found that the area of the "engineering work" on which the applicant was employed was co-extensive with the whole area of the tramway, and awarded compensation:—Held, that there was evidence justifying the County Court Judge in so finding. Rogers v. Cardiff Corporation, 75 L. J. K.B. 22; [1905] 2 K.B. 832; 93 L. T. 683; 54 W. R. 35; 70 J. P. 9; 4 L. G. R. 1; 22 T. L. R. 9—C.A.

Unloading Rails for Contractors.—A workman was injured in unloading rails for contractors, who were converting a horse tramway into an electric tramway, at a distance of seven hundred yards from the site of actual operations and fifty yards from part of the tramway so to be converted. He was at work in a railway yard in which by arrangement with the railway company the rails were stacked:—Held (LORD LOREBURN, L.C., and LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD dissenting), that he was not employed "on or in or about an engineering work" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7. Back v. Dick, Kerr & Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 569; [1906] A.C. 325; 94 L. T. 802; 22 T. L. R. 548—H.L. (E.)

Hay-cutter.—A firm of engineers sold a hay-cutting machine to a customer, and undertook to fit it up in the customer's premises and test its working before delivery. In the process of fitting it up one of the engineer's workmen, for the purpose of testing its working, connected it with a revolving shaft driven by electricity, forming part of the customer's plant already in the premises, and while doing so was injured:—Held, first, that the hay-cutter was an engineering work within the meaning of the Act; and secondly, that the workmen's employers were the undertakers for its construction. Reid v. Fleming, 3 F. 1000—Ct. of Sess.

(5) Factory.

Factory of the Undertakers, not of Third Persons.—Employment by the undertakers "on or in or about" a factory in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, means employment by them "on or in or about" their factory, and not that of a third person. Francis v. Turner, 69 L. J. Q.B. 182; [1900] 1 Q.B. 478; 81 L. T. 770; 48 W. R. 228; 64 J. P. 53—C.A.

Not Limited to Premises of Employer.—The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1900, is not limited in its application to employment on or in or about the land or premises of the employer. Smithers v. Wallis, 72 L. J. K.B. 57; [1903] 1 K.B. 200; 87 L. T. 556; 51 W. R. 261; 67 J. P. 381—C.A.

Bakehouse Underground—Place Underground "used" as a Bakehouse on January 1, 1896.—A place underground had been used as a bakehouse for about fifteen years down to October, 1895, when the premises of which it formed part became vacant. The landlord then had the premises, including the bakehouse, put into repair, and while the work of repair was in progress a notice was exhibited upon the premises to the effect that they were to let as baker's premises. The repairs were completed by Christmas, 1895, but the premises remained unoccupied until February, 1896, when they were let to a baker, who entered into possession and used the bakehouse for the purposes of his business. By sub-section 3 of section 27 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, "a place underground shall not be used as a bakehouse unless it is so used at the commencement of this Act"—that is, January 1, 1896:—Held, that the place in question was "used" as a bakehouse within the meaning of the above exception, and was therefore not a place underground the use of which as a bakehouse was prohibited by the Act. Schweitzerhof v. Wilkins, 67 L. J. Q.B. 476; [1898] 1 Q.B. 640; 78 L. T. 229; 62 J. P. 247—D. And see supra, FACTORY AND WORKSHOP.

Beer-bottling Stores — Mechanical Power — Manufacturing Process — Adapting for Sale — Non-textile Factory.—Bottling stores used for aerating and bottling beer, where carbonic-acid gas and beer are mixed together by mechanical power and then put into bottles by a tap, the nozzle of which is pulled down by hand into the neck of the bottle, the beer flowing from the tap and filling the bottle by the pressure of the gas, come within the definition of a non-textile factory in section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, and it is an offence to employ a young person in such beer-bottling stores beyond the period permitted by section 13 of that Act or section 36 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. Law v. Graham (70 L. J. K.B. 608; [1901] 2 K.B. 327) distinguished. Hoare v. Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 380; 86 L. T. 417; 50 W. R. 396; 66 J. P. 342; 20 Cox C.C. 174—D.

"Bottle-washing work" — Hotel Storeroom —Cellar.]—A storeman employed in the wine-cellars of a hotel was injured by the breaking of a bottle which he was corking with his hand. In the cellars there were two small revolving brushes (worked, when desired, by water-power from a tap) for washing the interior of bottles. The cellars were primarily used for storage, and the processes of corking and bottle-washing were ancillary to that object:—Held, that the cellars were not a “bottle-washing work,” and therefore not a factory within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, or of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. Kavanagh v. Caledonian Railway, 5 F. 1128—Ct. of Sess.

Bicycle Exhibition Shed.]—A workman was injured by accident in the course of his employment in a building exceeding thirty feet in height, and in which more than twenty persons, not being domestic servants, were employed for wages, and certain provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, as to notice of accident and the formal investigation of accidents, were by section 105, sub-section 2 of that Act to have effect in the case of such a building as if it were included in the word “factory.” The building contained no machinery or plant worked by mechanical power, but was used for exhibiting and selling bicycles and tricycles, and also for repairing the same:—Held, that the building was not by virtue of section 105, sub-section 2 of the Act of 1901 a “factory,” so as to be brought within the definition of that word contained in section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. Dyer v. Swift Cycle Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 566; [1904] 2 K.B. 86; 90 L. T. 613; 52 W. R. 483; 68 J. P. 394; 20 T. L. R. 429—C.A.

“Bleaching and dyeing works”—Processes not Incidental to Bleaching or Dyeing.]—If any one or more of the processes mentioned in clause 2 of part 1 of the 4th schedule to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, is or are carried on in any premises, such premises are a “factory” within the meaning of the definition of that expression contained in section 93 of the Act, although such processes are not incidental to the operation of bleaching or dyeing. Rogers v. Manchester Central Packing Co., 67 L. J. Q.B. 310; [1898] 1 Q.B. 344; 78 L. T. 17; 46 W. R. 350; 62 J. P. 166; 18 Cox C.C. 698—D.

Employment “about a factory”—Carting Water to Supply Factory.]—A workman was conveying water in a water cart for the supply of a steam engine which was a factory within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, when at a distance of at least 110 yards from the engine injury was caused to him in consequence of the horse drawing the cart running away:—Held, that on these facts it could not be rightly found that the workman was at the time of the accident employed “about” a factory within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act. Fenn v. Miller, 69 L. J. Q.B. 439; [1900] 1 Q.B. 788; 82 L. T. 284; 48 W. R. 369; 64 J. P. 356—C.A.

A firm of contractors were under contract to do all the carting work in connection with a factory. One of the carters in the employment of the carting contractors was injured within the factory when engaged in carting work under this contract. He claimed compensation against the occupiers of the factory as the undertakers in the sense of the Act:—Held, that the carting work in which he was engaged at the time of the accident was not, within the meaning of section 4 of the Act, “merely ancillary or incidental to,” but “was part of the trade or business carried on” by the defenders in the factory, and that they were liable to him in compensation under section 4. Bee v. Owens, 2 F. 439—Ct. of Sess.

Per LORD MONCREIFF.—Under section 4 an undertaker may be liable to the servant of a contractor, although his own employer—the contractor—is not liable to him either under the Act or otherwise. Id.

—Carter Delivering Goods at Distance from Factory—Injury to Workman.]—A carter employed by the occupiers of a factory sustained personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment while delivering goods taken from his employers’ factory upon their dray at a distance of one mile and a-half from the factory. At the hearing of a claim for compensation under the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, a County Court Judge held that the workman was not at the time of the accident employed “about” a factory within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act:—Held, that, as upon the true construction of the word “about” in the sub-section, the question of fact for the County Court Judge was whether the employment was in close propinquity to the factory, and not whether it related to the business of the factory, the decision of the County Court Judge must be upheld. Louth v. Ibbotson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 465; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1003; 80 L. T. 341; 47 W. R. 506—C.A.

—Carter Loading Timber in Street—Proximity to Factory.]—A carter in the employment of the defendants, who were the occupiers of a timber factory, was engaged in loading timber on to one of the defendants’ carts which was standing in the street close to the entrance to the factory. Whilst standing in the cart waiting to complete the loading, a piece of timber tilted up and the carter was thrown on to the road and subsequently died from injuries received:—Held, that loading the timber on carts was part of the business of the factory, and that the accident happened to the carter whilst employed “about” the factory within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, so as to make the employers liable to pay compensation. Powell v. Brown, 68 L. J. Q.B. 151; [1899] 1 Q.B. 157; 79 L. T. 631; 47 W. R. 145—C.A.

Crane Carrying Platform—“Building”—Temporary Wooden Structure to Carry Platform for Crane.]—A wooden structure exceeding thirty feet in height, and consisting of three upright legs which support a platform to carry a crane for the purpose of hoisting up materials to be used in the erection of a building, the structure being removed when the building has been erected, may be a “building” within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. Aylward v. Matthews, 74 L. J. K.B. 336; [1905] 1 K.B.

Dock or Wharf.—The effect of the decision of the House of Lords in Raine v. Jobson & Co. (70 L. J. K.B. 771; [1901] A.C. 404) is to overrule the decision of the Court of Appeal in Hall v. Snowden, Hubbard & Co. (No. 2) (68 L. J. Q.B. 645; [1899] 2 Q.B. 136), and every dock or wharf is therefore a "factory" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Balfrett v. Kemp Brothers, 73 L. J. K.B. 138; [1904] 1 K.B. 517; 90 L. T. 305; 52 W. R. 257; 68 J. P. 196; 20 T. L. R. 162—C.A.

Dock.—Whether the provisions of section 18 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, apply to a dock in which no accident has yet occurred, so as to make it a factory in the sense of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, quere. Hall v. Snowden, Hubbard & Co. ([1899] 2 Q. B. 136) commented on. Bruce v. Henry, 2 F. 717—Ct. of Sess.

— Employer Using Machinery to Unload from Dock.—Employers using machinery in the process of loading or unloading from or to a dock, wharf, quay, or warehouse, are, upon the true construction of section 23, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, occupiers of a factory within the meaning of that Act, and are therefore "undertakers" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Carrington v. Bannister, 70 L. J. Q.B. 31; [1901] 1 Q.B. 20; 83 L. T. 457—C.A.

— Machinery on a Ship Loading from a Barge.—The word "dock" in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and in section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, includes the land bounding the water as well as the water itself. Hennessy v. McCabe, 69 L. J. Q.B. 173; [1900] 1 Q.B. 491; 81 L. T. 575; 48 W. R. 231; 64 J. P. 4—C.A.

Where a ship is loading from a barge floating in, but not part of, a dock, a workman employed on such a ship is not employed on or in or about a dock, and is therefore not employed on or in or about a factory within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Ib.

Machinery on board such a ship used for the purpose of loading from such a barge is not machinery used in the process of loading from a dock, and is therefore not treated as included in the term "factory" in section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and consequently is not a factory within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Ib.

— "Occupiers."—A labourer (not a seaman) was employed to bring the employers' barges, which were kept in the employers' dock at night, from their places in the dock, when the dock gates were opened, alongside vessels in an adjoining river, for the purpose of taking cargo into the barges and bringing it back to the quay of the dock to be there unloaded. In the course of this employment the labourer fell into the dock and was drowned:—Held, that the dock was a "factory," and that the employers were the "occupiers" of it within the meaning of the Act. Hanlon v. North City Milling Co., [1903] 2 Ir. R. 163—C.A. s.p. Fogarty v. Wallis, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 522—C.A.

Dock, Wharf, or Quay—"Occupier"—Actual Use or Occupation.—The defendants were the owners of a ship which entered the dock for the purpose of discharging cargo. They had engaged a workman to assist in discharging the cargo into lighters. As the ship came alongside the quay the workman with the help of others was putting a gangway from the quay-side on to the ship, when he slipped and fell over the edge and was crushed to death between the moving ship and the dock wall. His widow claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897:—Held, that the space of quay alongside the ship was a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Held also, that at the time of the accident the defendants were "occupiers" of such part of the quay within section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and therefore were "undertakers" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and liable to pay compensation under that Act. Merrill v. Wilson, [1901] 1 Q.B. 35; 83 L. T. 490; 49 W. R. 161—C.A.

Machinery on Board Lighter—Dock.—A lighter and machinery thereon, the property of and worked by stevedores, was employed in raising goods from the hold to the deck of a vessel moored between the lighter and a quay, the goods being thereafter transferred to the quay, not by the stevedores, but by dock workmen:—Held (Lord Young dissenting), that section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, did not apply either to the lighter or to the machinery thereon, and that therefore they did not constitute a "factory" in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act; and further, that the process which was being performed by the lighter and its machinery was not one of unloading to a quay in the sense of the Act of 1895. Laing v. Young and Leslie, 3 F. 31—Ct. of Sess.

"Wharf" or "Quay"—Structure Moored in River for Loading and Unloading Vessels—No Connection with Shore.—A floating structure carrying cranes for loading and unloading ships was moored in the river Thames 500 feet from the shore by chains fastened to piles driven into the bed of the river. There was no connection with the shore except by boats:—Held, that the structure was a "wharf" within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Ellis v. Cory, 71 L. J. K.B. 72; [1902] 1 K.B. 38; 85 L. T. 499; 50 W. R. 131; 66 J. P. 116—C.A.

— Accident immediately Outside Wharf.—The applicant, employed by the respondents as a quay labourer at a wharf occupied by them, was assisting in removing girders from the street immediately outside the wharf shed to the side of a steamship belonging to the respondents, which was being loaded. The girders were lifted by a hand-crane on to a hand-truck, by which they were conveyed to the ship's side. While removing the hand-crane from one pile of girders to another pile, both of which lay in the street immediately outside the wharf shed, the applicant was jammed between the platform of the crane and one of the girders and sustained injuries:—Held, first, that as one or more of the provisions in section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, applied to the wharf, it was a factory within the meaning of the Act of 1897; and secondly, the fact that the accident happened on a public street, immediately outside the wharf shed, did not per se exclude a claim for compensation. Hall v. Snowden, Hubbard & Co. (68 L. J. Q.B. 645; [1899] 2 Q.B. 186) disapproved. Strain v. Sloan, 3 F. 663—Ct. of Sess.

Dock, Wharf, or Quay—Timber Yard adjoining Dock.—A piece of land within the ambit of a system of docks was leased by the proprietors of the docks to a firm of timber merchants for the purpose of storing timber. The land was situated about forty yards from the water of one of the timber docks forming part of the dock system. An unfenced dock railway and an unfenced dock road ran along in front of the land between it and the water of the adjoining dock, but otherwise the land was not separated by any fence or physical barrier from the adjoining quay or wharf space, the limits of the piece of land being merely marked off by alley posts. Timber stored on the land had at times been unloaded from the dock in front and brought across the railway and roadway to the land; but for twelve months prior to the date of an accident to a workman employed in moving timber on the piece of land, though timber had been brought to the land from other docks in the dock system, none had been brought from the dock in front:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the County Court Judge, in proceedings for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, might hold that the piece of land was a "dock, wharf or quay" so as to come within the meaning of the word "factory" in section 7 of the Act. Haddock v. Humphrey (69 L. J. Q.B. 327; [1900] 1 Q.B. 609) distinguished. Kenny v. Harrison, 71 L. J. K.B. 788; [1902] 2 K.B. 168; 87 L. T. 318—C.A.

Wharf to which any Provision of Factory Acts is Applied by Factory Act, 1895.—The word "factory" in sub-section 2 of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, does not include a "wharf" unless such wharf is one to which some provision of the Factory Acts is applied by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. Hall v. Snowden, Hubbard & Co. (No. 2), 68 L. J. Q.B. 645; [1899] 2 Q.B. 186; 80 L. T. 554; 47 W. R. 486—C.A.

Engine-house in Workhouse—Fencing Machinery for Generating Electrical Energy—Public Building.—Upon the premises of a workhouse under the control of the appellants were an engine-house and machinery used for the purpose of generating electrical energy for the lighting of the workhouse and for other purposes. The machinery included an engine, which was not securely fenced:—Held, that the engine-house was a "factory" within the meaning of section 149, sub-section 1 (a) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the workhouse being a "public building" within Part I. (20) of the Sixth Schedule, and that the appellants were therefore properly convicted of not having securely fenced the engine. Mile End Old Town Guardians v. Hoare, 72 L. J. K.B. 651; [1903] 2 K.B. 483; 89 L. T. 276; 67 J. P. 395; 1 L. G. R. 732—D.

Fire Escape—Meaning of "Factory"—Adjoining Houses Connected by External Gangway.—Adjoining houses were let upon separate leases by the same owner to the same tenant, who occupied them for the purposes of a manufacturing business. Regarded separately, one of the houses would have been a "factory" and the other a "workshop" within the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901. In the former house more than forty persons and in the latter less than forty persons were employed. The buildings were connected by an external iron gangway joining the first-floors; certain processes commenced in the one house were finished in the other, and the two were used by the tenant as one set of manufacturing premises:—Held, that, under these circumstances, an arbitrator, to whom a dispute between the owner and the local authority as to the provision of means of escape from fire under section 14 of the Act had been referred, was amply justified in holding that the two buildings constituted a single "factory" within the meaning of the Act. London County Council and Tubbs, In re, 1 L. G. R. 746; 68 J. P. 29—D.

—Jurisdiction to require Stair Encroaching on Lower Floors—Award—Validity.—The owner of a building let the second, third, and fourth floors before 1892 to tenants who during their tenancies had carried on businesses each of which was of such a nature as to render the premises in which it was carried on a "factory" within section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, and in each of which more than forty persons were employed. The tenants of the basement and ground and first floors did not carry on businesses of the nature aforesaid:—Held, that the second, third, and fourth floors only were factories within that section; and that under section 7, sub-section 2 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, neither the sanitary authority nor an umpire appointed pursuant to that sub-section had jurisdiction to require the owner to provide as a means of escape in case of fire for the persons employed in such factories a staircase which would encroach upon the lower floors of the building. London County Council v. Lewis, 69 L. J. Q.B. 277; 82 L. T. 195; 64 J. P. 39—D.

Gas Main.—A workman, in the employment of a gas company, engaged in work in connection with a gas main at a distance from the gas works where the gas is manufactured is not employed "on or in or about a factory" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for the gas mains, being used merely for the distribution of the gas, are no part of the "factory"—that is, of the place where the gas is manufactured. Spacey v. Dowlais Gas and Coke Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 5; [1905] 2 K.B. 879; 93 L. T. 685; 54 W. R. 198; 22 T. L. R. 29—C.A.

Locomotive Shed—Employment on, in, or about Factory—Shed Leased by Employers Half a Mile from Factory.—The applicant, who was injured while in the service of the defenders—a firm of engineers, whose works were a factory within the meaning of the Act—as one of a squad of men “working at a locomotive engine,” the property of the defenders, in a shed belonging to and used by a railway company, of which shed the defenders were tenants under an agreement with the railway company. The shed was about half a mile from the defenders’ works, and had no direct connection therewith by rail; it had previously been used on many occasions by the defenders for similar purposes. No steam, water, or other mechanical power was used in the shed:—Held, that the applicant was not employed “on or in or about” the defenders’ factory, and was not entitled to compensation. Ferguson v. Barclay, 5 F. 105—Ct. of Sess.

Machinery.—Machinery in a “factory” as defined by the Factories Acts, 1878 to 1891, or upon premises included in the term “factory” by section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, is itself a “factory” within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7. McNicholas v. Dawson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 470; [1899] 1 Q.B. 773; 80 L. T. 317; 47 W. R. 500—C.A.

Mill Grinding Meal on Farm by Movable Engine and Fixed Mill—Labour for Purposes of Gain.—A movable engine which can be connected by a driving band and fly-wheel with a mill which is fixed in a farmer’s farmyard, and which is used for grinding meal for feeding the stock on the farm, and not for the purposes of gain, is not a “factory” within the meaning of that term in section 7 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. Nash v. Hollinshead, 70 L. J. K.B. 571; [1901] 1 K. B. 700; 84 L. T. 433; 49 W. R. 424; 65 J. P. 357—C.A.

Old Iron Store—Machinery Worked by Hand Power—Sheds Used for Storing Iron—“Factory” —“Warehouse.”—Machinery actuated by hand power is not worked by “steam, water, or other mechanical power,” within the meaning of section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878; and therefore the user of such machinery does not constitute the premises in which it is employed a “factory.” Wilmott v. Puton, 71 L. J. K.B. 1; [1902] 1 K.B. 287; 85 L. T. 569; 50 W. R. 148; 66 J. P. 197—C.A.

A “warehouse,” within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, need not necessarily be in contiguity to water. Ib.

Plumbing Work—Measuring up of Work when Finished—“Building.”—A sub-contract for plumbing work was entered into with certain contractors who had undertaken the erection of a factory exceeding thirty feet in height, and the plumbing work, when finished, was to be measured up. Before the construction of the factory had been completed, and whilst steam pipes, which were a necessary part of the factory, were being put up by means of a scaffolding, a workman of the appellants was employed in measuring up the plumbing work in the factory, and in the course of such employment sustained injuries:—Held, that the measuring up of the plumbing work was part of the work of constructing the factory, and consequently that the workman sustained injuries arising out of and in the course of his employment on, in, or about a building exceeding thirty feet in height, which was being constructed by means of a scaffolding, within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, and was entitled to compensation. Frid v. Fenton (69 L. J. Q.B. 436) applied. Plant v. Wright & Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 331; [1905] 1 K.B. 353; 92 L. T. 720; 53 W. R. 358; 21 L. T. R. 217—C.A.

Refuse Works—Steam Power.—In the “Refuse Dispatch Works” of the Glasgow Corporation certain saleable parts of the city refuse were separated from the unsaleable part by processes in which steam power was used. The sums realised by the sales were applied in reducing the cost of the disposal of the refuse, which fell on the rates:—Held, that these works were a “factory,” and that a workman in the employment of the corporation injured therein was entitled to compensation. Henderson v. Glasgow Corporation, 2 F. 1127—Ct. of Sess.

Repairing Workshop—Repairs merely Incidental to Non-factory Business.—A cable tramway company had a covered shed for their cars 550 feet long and 160 feet wide, and adjoining it a machine-room or workshop 75 feet long and 50 feet wide, which contained lathes, turning-machines, and boring-machines, driven by two electric motors. This workshop was used solely for the repair of the grippers and other parts of the cars. The cars were always brought to the shed for repairs, and were repaired in it. No mechanical power was used in the shed except the power employed to move a travelling platform for moving the cars, which was derived from a steam-engine adjoining the shed. A car-driver was injured when employed in oiling his car in the shed at a point 374 feet distant from the machine-room:—Held (LORD MONCREIFF dissenting), that the machine-room was a factory in the sense of the Act, and that the accident occurred on, in, or about a factory within the meaning of section 93, sub-section 3 (b) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. Mooney v. Edinburgh and District Tramway Co., 4 F. 390—Ct. of Sess.

Grindstone Driven by Gas Engine.—The employer’s premises consisted of a yard in which stones were dressed by manual labour, and included an engine-house, where the workmen’s tools were sharpened on a grindstone driven by a gas engine. No other mechanical power was used in the premises. The claimant, while dressing stones, was struck in the eye by a piece of metal from a chisel, and thereby sustained the injuries for which he claimed compensation:—Held, that the premises were premises in which mechanical power was “used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on therein” within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, s. 93, sub-s. (3), and were therefore a factory within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7, and that the claimant was entitled to compensation. Petre v. Weir, 2 F. 1041—Ct. of Sess.

Threshing Machine Connected with Engine for Haulage Purposes only—Threshing Machine in Transit.—A threshing machine and traction engine in transit to a place where they are to be used for threshing, the engine being connected with the machine for no purpose but that of haulage, do not constitute a “factory” within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, or the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. George v. Macdonald, 4 F. 190—Ct. of Sess.

Whether a traction engine and threshing machine engaged in threshing at a particular place fall within the statutory definition of "factory," quære. Ib.

"Tenement factory"—Notice to Owner of Building to Provide Staircase for Escape from Fire—Right to Enter on Lower Factory to Execute Works for Benefit of Upper Factory.—The effect of section 14, sub-section 2 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, is that the owner of a factory which is in danger can be required to carry out works for the protection of that factory, and that the owner has power to execute works so reasonably required "notwithstanding any agreement with the occupier" of the factory. The Act gives him, as against his tenant, the right to enter and do works required in respect of the property included in his demise, but it gives him no other rights. Whether the works are "reasonably required" or not is to be determined in manner directed by the Act. Toller v. Spiers & Pond, 72 L. J. Ch. 191; [1903] 1 Ch. 362; 87 L. T. 578; 51 W. R. 381; 67 J. P. 234; 1 L. G. R. 193—Buckley, J.

The plaintiff was the owner of a large building, which consisted of a basement, a ground floor, and seven upper floors. The building from the basement up to and including the fourth floor (but with the exception of the second floor) formed one factory (factory A) within the Factory and Workshop Acts, and was occupied by the defendants under leases. The fifth, sixth and seventh floors formed another factory (factory B), and was occupied by F. & Co. under leases. The occupiers of factories A and B respectively provided their own mechanical power from fixed engines on their respective premises. The London County Council had served upon the plaintiff a notice under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, requiring him to carry out certain alterations and additions to the buildings, so as to provide means of escape in case of fire for the persons employed therein. Such alterations consisted in the construction of a new staircase at the southern end of the building and connected with all floors, and certain alterations to existing staircases. The defendants declined to permit the plaintiff to enter upon the premises occupied by them and execute the necessary works:—Held, that factories A and B were separate factories, and that the building did not constitute a "tenement factory" within section 149 of the Act of 1901. Held also, that section 14, sub-section 2 of the Act only enabled the owner of factory A to enter as against the occupier of factory A to do works for the benefit of factory A, but gave him no power to open through factory A an exit for persons employed in factory B. Held, therefore, that the plaintiff had no right as against the defendants to enter and do the works required by the Council. Ib.

Tripe Manufacturer—Steam Power used in Manufacture—"Non-textile factory."—Where in a tripe manufactory cold water was supplied to a boiler by pressure of steam, and steam was used to heat the water in the coppers wherein the tripe was prepared and adapted for sale, it was held that there was a use of steam power rendering the premises a "non-textile factory" within the meaning of section 149, sub-section (1) (c) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901; and that, therefore, a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for compensation by the widow of a deceased workman, who had been killed by an accident in the course of his employment, was enforceable. Petrie v. Weir (2 Fraser, 1041) considered and applied. Doswell v. Cowell, 95 L. T. 38; 22 T. L. R. 628—C.A.

Onus of Proving Course of Employment on Applicant.—A workman was employed, along with other men in the same employment, in putting down a flooring of cement in a house which exceeded thirty feet in height, and was constructed by means of scaffolding. The workman left the house to fetch a pickaxe from his employer's yard. On his way he slipped and fell, receiving injuries in respect of which he claimed compensation. No evidence was given as to the exact spot where the accident happened, or as to how far it was from the building where the applicant was working:—Held, that it lay on the applicant to shew that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment "on, in, or about" the building, and that not having discharged this onus by giving evidence of the exact locality where the accident happened, he was not entitled to compensation. McAdam v. Harvey, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 511—C.A.

(6) "Forestry."

"Forestry"—Workmen Engaged in.—A workman, in the employment of a saw-miller, was employed to cut down growing trees, which had been purchased by his employer, and cart them to the saw-mill, and while so employed was killed by being crushed between a standing tree and the trunk of a tree which he was removing on a cart. The cutting down and removing of the trees was an ordinary part of the employer's business:—Held, that the employment in which the deceased was killed was not "forestry" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1900. Meally v. McGowan, 4 F. 883—Ct. of Sess.

(7) Mines.

Employment "about" a Mine.—A workman employed as a carter at a coal mine sustained fatal injuries while transferring timber to a colliery cart from a railway waggon at a railway siding belonging to and in the occupation of a railway company. The place where the accident occurred was about 400 yards from the pit, the distance being made up of—first, railway siding (123 yards); secondly, the breadth of a public road; and thirdly, a private cart road leading to the pit (259 yards):—Held, that the workman was not injured in the course of employment on or in or about a mine within the meaning of the Act. Coylton Coal Co. v. Davidson, 7 F. 727—Ct. of Sess.

Siding—Private Railway to Main Line.—A mine was connected with a main line of railway by a private line, about a mile and a quarter in length. At a point in this private line about eight hundred yards from the mine there was a drum house and sidings connected therewith. At this point an engine-driver in the employment of the mine-owners was killed in the course of his employment:—Held (the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK dissenting), that the place where the accident occurred was on, in, or about a “mine” within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act. Anderson v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., 7 F. 187—Ct. of Sess.

Siding Adjacent to and Belonging to Mine.]

—A colliery company, owners of a coal mine and siding connecting the mine with a main line of railway, entered into a contract with the owner of a sand-pit situated on the main line to carry sand from the sand pit in railway waggons to the colliery siding, preparatory to removal by the railway company. The haulage was to be done by an engine belonging to the colliery company, and used in connection with their mine and siding. The siding was about eighty yards in length, and served only the one mine. The sand-pit was three hundred or four hundred yards from the siding. In the course of executing this contract the brakeman of the engine, who was in the employment of the colliery company, was killed while uncoupling waggons on the main line at or near the extremity of the siding:—Held, first, that the employment of the deceased was locally “about” a mine in the sense of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897; and secondly (dissentiente LORD ADAM), that a claim for compensation arose, although the work upon which the deceased was employed at the time of the accident was not part of the proper business of the colliery. Monaghan v. United Collieries, 3 F. 149—Ct. of Sess.

Sidings belonging to a Mine.]—The Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7, sub-s. 2, provides that “in this Act, ‘mine’ means a mine to which the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, applies”; and the latter Act, section 75, provides that, “in this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, ‘mine’ includes . . . all the shafts, levels, planes, works, tramways, and sidings, both below ground and above ground, in and adjacent to and belonging to the mine.” The defendants owned a number of collieries, and also a private railway about twelve miles long, not being a “railway” within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. This railway connected all the collieries, and was used for conveying coal from all the collieries, and was the sole means by which coal was conveyed away from them; and there was on this railway a dépôt, with sidings, where coal was stored and distributed to purchasers. An engine-driver employed by the defendants was killed by accident when he was driving the engine of a train carrying coal from one of the collieries to the dépôt; the accident occurred about three-quarters of a mile from the pit mouth of this colliery and close to the sidings of the dépôt:—Held, that the workman was not employed “on or in or about a mine,” within the meaning of the Act, when the accident happened. Turnbull v. Lambton Collieries Co., 82 L. T. 589; 64 J. P. 404—C.A.

(8) Railways.

“On or in or about” a Railway—Private Railway.]—A trading company’s premises were connected by a siding, which was its own property, with a line of railway belonging to a railway company. The siding, which was not constructed or carried on under any Act of Parliament, was used solely for the traffic of the trading company, and for that purpose was used by the railway company by means of its own rolling-stock and servants. A servant of the railway company, while so employed, was accidentally injured at a point on the siding three-quarters of a mile from its junction with the line of railway:—Held, that the accident had not occurred “on or in or about” a railway within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act. Brodie v. North British Railway, 3 F. 75—Ct. of Sess.

— “Public Traffic.”—A smith in the employment of a railway company was injured while shoeing horses belonging to the company. The smithy where the accident occurred, and the stables in which the horses were kept, were both situated in a yard within the area occupied by the railway company as a general station. The yard was separated from the station proper by a fence of sleepers and partly by the stable wall. The horses were used for collecting and delivering goods and for hauling trucks:—Held, that the smithy was “used for the purposes of public traffic” within the definition of “railway” given in section 3 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, and adopted in the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, and that the company were liable to the injured workman. Caledonian Railway v. Breslin, 2 F. 1158—Ct. of Sess.

— Carter Injured at a Point 315 Yards from Railway Station near which his Horse Bolted.]

—A carter, in the employment of contractors who had a contract with a railway company for the cartage of goods to and from a station of the company, had delivered certain goods at the station. This finished his day’s work, and as he was leaving the station with his horse and lorry, on the way to the contractor’s stables, the horse took fright and bolted just outside the gate of the station, and in consequence the carter was injured by the horse and lorry dashing into a shop 315 yards distant:—Held (diss. LORD MONCREIFF), that the carter did not sustain his injuries “on or in or about” a railway, within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act. Bathgate v. Caledonian Railway, 4 F. 313—Ct. of Sess.

— Refreshment-room at Railway Station—

Barmaid.]—A refreshment-room at a railway station is not a part of the station “used for the purposes of public traffic” so as to come within the meaning of the term “railway” in the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873. Milner v. Great Northern Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 427; [1900] 1 Q.B. 795; 82 L. T. 187; 48 W. R. 387; 64 J. P. 291—C.A.

The employment by a railway company of a barmaid at a refreshment-room at their railway station is not an employment “on in or about a railway” within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897. Id.

Work "ancillary or incidental" to Business of Railway Company—Contractors Fitting up Signals—"Undertakers."—A railway company employed a firm of signal-makers to fit up the necessary signals for new sidings, which they were constructing in connection with their existing line. While fitting the signal wires, a workman employed by the signal-makers was knocked down by a train on the main line and killed:—Held, that the work on which the deceased was engaged at the time of the accident was part of the business of the railway company, and was not merely ancillary or incidental thereto, and that the company were, in terms of section 4 of the Act, liable as undertakers to pay compensation. Burns v. North British Railway, 2 F. 629—Ct. of Sess.

— Greasing Wheels of Trucks.]—The applicant, a boy of fifteen, was employed to grease the wheels of railway trucks. At the time when the accident occurred out of which the claim arose, he had finished greasing all the trucks that were ready, and while waiting for more he went to a fire that was close to a lever used for moving points. Seeing an engine coming, and thinking it was necessary that the points should be moved, he pulled the lever for the purpose of opening them; the engine came up and forced the points—which were automatic—open, and the handle of the lever, catching the applicant, threw him against the engine, severely injuring him. It was no part of the applicant's duty to touch the points, but he had not been ordered not to do so. Upon these facts the County Court Judge found that the accident to the applicant "arose out of and in the course of his employment," and that he had not been guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct":—Held, that there was evidence to support these findings. Harrison v. Whitaker, 64 J. P. 54—C.A.

— Carting Contractor.]—A railway company charged a through rate, inclusive of all charges for collection and delivery, for the conveyance of goods by their railway. A firm of carting contractors contracted with the railway company for the collection and delivery from and to the public of goods sent or to be sent by rail, receiving from the railway company in payment of such collection and delivery a proportion of the through rates paid by the public. A servant of the contractors, acting in pursuance of the contract between his employers and the railway company, was fatally injured while he was engaged in transferring goods from a lorry to a goods train for transmission by rail:—Held, that the work in which he was engaged at the time of the accident was part of the work undertaken by the railway company and not merely ancillary or incidental thereto, and that the company were liable to pay compensation. Greenhill v. Caledonian Railway, 2 F. 736—Ct. of Sess.

— Repairing and Painting Railway Station by Contractor.]—The work of building, repairing, and painting the stations of a railway company is "merely ancillary or incidental to and is no part of or process in the trade or business carried on by" the company. Therefore, where the railway company enter into a contract with a contractor for the execution of such work, and a workman in the employment of the contractors sustains injury in the course of executing the work, section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, does not apply, and the company are not, as undertakers within the Act, liable to pay compensation to the workman. Pearce v. London and South-Western Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 683; [1900] 2 Q.B. 100; 82 L. T. 487; 48 W. R. 599—C.A.

Playing in Railway Waggon.]—Some boys employed in steel works were allowed an interval of half an hour for rest between two jobs. During this interval they got into one of a number of waggons that were standing on a steeply inclined line of rails in the yard of the works. After the boys had got into the waggon, the waggons began to move down the incline, and one of the boys jumped off the waggon in order to sprag the wheels. While thus engaged he was fatally injured. The boys had no occasion to be near the waggons, and had repeatedly been warned not to go near them. Held—first, that the accident did not "arise out of" the boy's employment; and secondly, that the accident was attributable to the "serious and wilful misconduct" of the boy. Powell v. Lanarkshire Steel Co., 6 F. 1089—Ct. of Sess.

(9) Ships.

Shipbuilding Yard—Electrical Station—Undertakers of an "engineering work"—"Dock"—Accident in Erection of Gas Engines at Considerable Distance from Dock.]—In the course of the construction of a shipbuilding yard, which was to consist of three dry docks and one wet dock, it became necessary to erect on some part of the yard a station for generating electricity, the use of electricity both for light and power having been decided upon. For this and other purposes ten gas engines were required. A workman in the employment of a gas engine company, which had contracted to supply the gas engines, was injured while working at the gas engine machinery. The place where the accident occurred was at a distance of about 150 yards from the nearest part of any of the docks:—Held (dissentiente KENNEDY, L.J.), that, the accident not having occurred in a "dock" in any proper sense of that word, but at a considerable distance from the nearest part of any of the docks, the workman could not be said to be employed "on, in, or about" an "engineering work"—namely, the "construction of a dock"—within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Rimmer v. Premier Gas Engine Co., 97 L. T. 226; 23 T. L. R. 610—C.A.

— Repair of Ship in a Dock.]—By section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, "factory" has the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891. By section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, the expression "non-textile factory" includes any premises named in Schedule IV. Part II. of the Act, wherein steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there; and Schedule IV. Part II. (24) of the Act is "Shipbuilding yards—that is to say, any premises in which any ships, boats, or vessels used in navigation are made, finished, or repaired." A vessel was taken into a dock enclosed by warehouses and wharves, fitted with cranes for loading and discharging ships, for the purpose of having her interior painted and repaired as she lay afloat, it being the usual and ordinary course for ships to be repaired there. In order to paint the hold it was necessary to discharge the ballast, and while this was being done, concurrently with the repairs, injury was caused to a workman employed in the hold in filling a bucket in which the ballast was being hauled up by the ship's engine and crane and placed in lighters alongside:—Held, that the workman was not employed on, or in, or about a factory within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, by reason of the provisions of section 93 and Schedule IV. Part II. (24) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. Spencer v. Livett, Frank & Son, 69 L. J. Q.B. 338; [1900] 1 Q.B. 498; 82 L. T. 75; 48 W. R. 323; 64 J. P. 196—C.A.

— Dock "near the yard."—Whether a dock two miles distant from a shipbuilding yard is "near the yard" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is a question of fact, and not of law. M'Millan v. Barclay, Curle & Co., 2 F. 91—Ct. of Sess.

Ship.—A., a dock labourer in the employment of a firm of stevedores, was injured while engaged in stowing cargo on board a ship in a public dock. Steam winches on board the ship were used for the purpose of loading her, but steam cranes which were attached to the quays of the dock were not so used. A. claimed compensation from the stevedores as being the occupiers of a dock which was a "factory" within the meaning of the Act:—Held, that the defendants were not liable. Healy v. Macgregor & Ferguson, 2 F. 634—Ct. of Sess.

Ship in Dock.—A steamship lying in a dock is not a factory. A workman employed on a ship lying in a dock is not employed on, in, or about a factory even when the dock itself is a factory in the sense of section 7 of the Act. Flowers v. Chambers ([1899] 2 Q.B. 142) followed. Low v. Abernethy, 2 F. 722—Ct. of Sess.

— Repair of Ship—"Shipbuilding yard."—The mere fact of a steamship lying in a dock, while a workman employed by a firm of engineers is engaged in executing repairs on the boiler, does not make the firm occupiers of the dock in such a sense as to make them undertakers within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act. Whether the definition of "shipbuilding yard" in section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, includes places where ships are repaired but not built, quære. Spencer v. Livett, Frank & Son (69 L. J. Q.B. 338; [1900] 1 Q.B. 498) commented on. Id.

— Labourer on.—A workman employed upon a vessel in a dock is not employed on or in or about the dock so as to be employed "on or in or about a factory" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in cases where the dock is a "factory" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Act. Flowers v. Chambers, 68 L. J. Q.B. 648; [1899] 2 Q.B. 142; 80 L. T. 834; 47 W. R. 513—C.A.

— A workman employed upon a vessel lying alongside a quay in a dock, which is a "factory" within section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, taking in cargo partly from the quay and partly from another ship lying alongside her, is employed "on, in, or about a factory," within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Act. Flowers v. Chambers (68 L. J. Q.B. 648; [1899] 2 Q.B. 142) not followed. Raine v. Jobson (70 L. J. K.B. 771; [1901] A.C. 404) followed. Cattermole v. Atlantic Transport Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 173; [1902] 1 K.B. 204; 85 L. T. 513; 50 W. R. 129; 66 J. P. 4—C.A.

Ship in Dry Dock Undergoing Repair.—Ship-owners took a ship into a dry dock which they had hired for the purpose of repairing the ship. A workman, who had served as ship's carpenter on board the ship during one voyage and was engaged for her next voyage, in the interval between the voyages was employed by the ship-owners in the work of repairing the ship. While engaged in unshackling the ship's cable, in order to turn it end for end, he sustained injuries from which he died:—Held, that the workman was employed in the repair of a ship in or about a "factory" within the meaning of the Act, and that the shipowners were liable to pay compensation. Cayzer, Irvine & Co. v. Dickson, 7 F. 723—Ct. of Sess.

Ship Lying in Dock in Charge of Owners—Contractors for Painting and Plumbing Work—"Actual use or occupation."—A ship, which was being made ready for a voyage, was lying in a dock for repairs in charge of her owners with part of the crew on board. A firm contracted to do the work of plumbing and painting upon her, and sent workmen from their shop on to the ship in the dock to do the work. One of the workmen while painting a hatch fell down the hatchway and was injured:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the County Court Judge was justified, in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in finding that the workman was employed on or in or about a factory, and that the firm had the actual use or possession of that factory within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and were the undertakers in respect thereof within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Bartell v. Gray, 71 L. J. K.B. 115; [1902] 1 K.B. 225; 85 L. T. 658; 50 W. R. 810; 66 J. P. 308—C.A.

Machinery Used for Unloading from Ship to Quay—Workman on Ship.—A workman was employed in unloading bags from a ship in dock to the quay; his work was, with another man, to make up sets of bags in the hold which were laid across a rope stop. When a set was made up the stop was fastened to the hook of the runner of a crane which stood upon the quay and was hoisted from the hold to the quay. While he was making up a set a bag fell upon him from behind, and he was killed. The runner of the crane was not at that time on the ship at all, but was ashore:—Held, that the case was not distinguishable from Woodham v.

Atlantic Transport Co. (79 L. T. 395), and that the workman was employed on, in, or about machinery which was being used in the process of unloading to a quay, and therefore on, in, or about a "factory" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Lawson v. Atlantic Transport Co., 82 L. T. 77—C.A.

"Process of loading or unloading Ship."—A workman, after the actual loading was completed, met with a fatal accident in putting iron crossbeams across the hatchway with the assistance of the ship's winch derrick and fall:—Held (LORD LINDLEY dissenting), that the man was engaged in a "process of loading" within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, which is incorporated with the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, inasmuch as he was doing an act without which the loading would have been incomplete, and that the machinery was a "factory" within the same section. Lyons v. Knowles, 70 L. J. K.B. 170; [1901] A.C. 79; 84 L. T. 65; 49 W. R. 636; 65 J. P. 388—H.L. (E.)

Owners Discharging Ship Alongside Dock Quay—Workman Employed by Shipowners—Injury on Quay—"Factory"—"Undertakers"—Actual Use and Occupation—Gangway for Workmen and Crew—Plant Used in Process of Unloading.—The owners of a ship moored her alongside a dock quay for the purpose of discharging her cargo, other than cattle, by their own workmen, on to the quay, and employed a workman to assist in discharging the cattle into lighters. The workman, while assisting to place a gangway as a means of access for the crew and workmen from the quay to the ship during the discharge of the cargo, fell into the dock and was killed:—Held, that the quay alongside the ship was a factory of which the shipowners were undertakers within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that as the injury was caused to the workman in the course of his employment upon the factory, the shipowners were liable to pay compensation under the Act. Held also, that the gangway was not plant used in the process of unloading to a quay within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. Merrill v. Wilson, 70 L. J. K.B. 97; [1901] 1 K.B. 35; 83 L. T. 490; 49 W. R. 161; 65 J. P. 53—C.A.

"Wharf"—Timber Yard Adjoining Dock Quay.—By the side of the Canada Dock at Bootle is a space running back 150 yards from the water on which timber is landed. On the further side of it is a roadway, and beyond the roadway is a line of offices and a fence with gateways, behind which is a piece of land leased by the owners of the dock to timber merchants for the purpose of storing timber thereon:—Held, that this piece of land is not a "wharf" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. Haddock v. Humphrey, 69 L. J. Q.B. 327; [1900] 1 Q.B. 609; 82 L. T. 72; 48 W. R. 292; 64 J. P. 86—C.A.

Ship-repairing outside Factory.—A riveter was injured in the employment of a firm of ship-repairers, while repairing a ship in a public dock at a distance from his employers' factory of 550 yards in a direct line, and about a mile by road. The employers' factory was not a shipbuilding yard:—Held, that the riveter was not, when he received the injuries, employed "about" a factory in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Barclay, Curle & Co. v. McKinnon, 8 F. 436—Ct. of Sess.

Seaman—Employment on Ship beside Wharf—Employment "about" a "Factory."—A seaman employed as fireman upon a passenger steamship, whilst attending to the boilers in the ordinary course of his duties, was injured by the bursting of a tube in one of the boilers. At the time of the accident the vessel was made fast by ropes to a landing-stage outside the entrance to docks, and gangways were out from the landing-stage to the vessel to enable the passengers to go on board:—Held (COLLINS, M.R., and ROMER, L.J.; MATHEW, L.J., dissenting), that though the landing-stage, being a wharf, might be a "factory," and the seaman's employers, the shipowners, being at the time in occupation of the landing-stage, might be "undertakers" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, yet the case did not come within the Act, for the seaman was not at the time of the accident in fact employed "on" or "in" such factory, nor was he employed "about" it within the meaning of the section, for his employment, though in proximity to the "factory," had no concern or connection with the purposes for which it was at the time being occupied by his employers. Griffin v. Houlder Line, Lim. (73 L. J. K.B. 202; [1904] 1 K.B. 510), distinguished. Owens v. Campbell, 73 L. J. K.B. 634; [1904] 2 K.B. 60; 90 L. T. 811; 52 W. R. 481; 68 J. P. 410; 20 T. L. R. 459—C.A.

Machinery Used in Unloading Ship in Navigable River—Statute—Construction—Reference to Repealed and Re-enacted Provision.—Section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, is repealed by section 161 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and by section 104 of that Act is re-enacted with modification within the meaning of section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889. Consequently section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, must now be construed as referring to section 104 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and the expression "factory" in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, includes machinery used in the process of loading or unloading or coaling any ship in any dock, harbour, or canal. Stevens v. General Steam Navigation Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 417; [1903] 1 K.B. 890; 88 L. T. 542; 51 W. R. 578; 67 J. P. 415—C.A.

Quay—Machinery on Board Ship.—A shipowner was unloading a vessel at a quay by raising the cargo, by means of a steam winch derrick on board the vessel, from the hold to the deck, whence it was wheeled over gangways to the quay. In the course of unloading, a workman employed by the shipowner fell from a ladder in the ship and was killed:—Held, that the accident happened on, or in, or about a "factory" within the meaning of the Act. Reid v. Anchor Line, 5 F. 435—Ct. of Sess.

Workman on Ship Placing Goods in Basket of Crane on Quay—Machinery or Plant used in Unloading to a Quay.—A workman on board a ship lying alongside a quay was in the course of his employment by the owners of a ship^a placing a case of percussion caps in a basket attached to the chain of a crane which was fixed on the quay and was being used in the process of unloading the ship, when the case exploded and killed him:—Held, that on the true construction of section 1, sub-section 1, and section 7, sub-sections 1 and 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and section 23, sub-section (a) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, the owners of the ship were liable to pay compensation, since the injury to the workman arose out of and in the course of his employment about machinery used in the process of unloading to a quay. Woodham v. Atlantic Transport Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 17; [1899] 1 Q.B. 15; 79 L. T. 395; 47 W. R. 106—C.A.

(10) Warehouses.

Dumping Ground Used for Old Materials.]—A yard belonging to a local authority, and used by them as a dumping ground for waste and other materials, is not a "warehouse" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, nor is it a "factory" within that Act, even though the local authority have their own carts made in it and a blacksmith's shop is erected in it. Buckingham v. Fulham Borough Council, 53 W. R. 628; 3 L. G. R. 926; 69 J. P. 297; 21 T. L. R. 511—C.A.

Uncovered Yard Used for Storage of Material.]—A workman while breaking stones was injured by an accident which occurred in a yard, belonging to the P. Corporation. The yard was uncovered, but at the side of it there was a large shed in which implements were kept and work was done in wet weather. The yard was principally used to store materials for the repair of roads and drains and for other works executed by the corporation either on its own account or to a small extent for private individuals, and it contained stones in heaps which the workman was employed in breaking at the time of the accident. No mechanical power was used in the yard. Held, that the yard was not a warehouse in the ordinary sense and was therefore not a factory within the meaning of the Act. M'Ewan v. Perth Magistrates, 7 F. 714—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, the reference to warehouses in section 104, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, is not to warehouses in general, but merely to warehouses used in connection with docks. Id.

Building Used in Connection with Retail Business—Furniture—Materials.]—There is no absolute rule that a building used in connection with a retail business alone cannot be a "warehouse" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Each case must be decided on its own facts. The judgments of COLLINS, M.R., and MATHEW, L.J., in Green v. Britten & Gilson (73 L. J. K.B. 126; [1904] 1 K.B. 350) discussed. Moreton v. Reeve, 76 L. J. K.B. 850; [1907] 2 K.B. 401; 97 L. T. 63—C.A.

Retail Store.]—A trader carried on the business of a drysalter in premises consisting of two rooms on the ground floor and two cellars on the basement. The business to the extent of between 85 and 90 per cent. consisted of retail sales; and in one of the rooms there was a counter over which the goods were sold. In order to meet this trade goods were stored on the premises, including casks of oil, all of which were open and ready for the delivery of small quantities; casks of white lead, of which there were generally ten or twelve on the premises, four, one of each quality, being open for retail sales; small parcels of saltpetre, soda, and varnish; paints, none of which were sold in large quantities; and starch, which was sold in 56 lb. cases. A lorryman having been injured while carrying a cask of white lead, weighing 2 cwt., from the premises to his lorry,—Held, that the premises were not a "warehouse" within the meaning of the Act. Colvine v. Anderson & Gibb, 5 F. 255—Ct. of Sess.

Quære (per LORD M'LAREN), whether the Act applies only to such warehouses as are adjuncts of a dock. Semble (per LORD M'LAREN), if the Act applies to other warehouses they must be ejusdem generis with such warehouses as are usually found in connection with a dock. Id.

Place Used for Storage of Goods Ancillary to Wholesale Business.]—A place where goods are stored, used in connection with, or as ancillary to a wholesale business, is a "warehouse" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Green v. Britten & Gilson, 73 L. J. K.B. 126; [1904] 1 K.B. 350; 89 L. T. 713; 52 W. R. 198; 68 J. P. 189; 20 T. L. R. 116—C.A.

"Occupiers" of Warehouse.]—The owner of six hundred bolls of peas lying in bulk in a grain store belonging to a warehouseman sold two hundred bolls thereof to a firm, who received a delivery order therefor. The grain store was a "warehouse":—Held, that the purchasers were not "occupiers" thereof, and that the dependants of a carter in their employment who was killed by the fall of a bag while taking delivery of part of the peas at the store were not entitled to compensation under the Act. Ramsay v. Mackie, 7 F. 106—Ct. of Sess.

(11) "Undertakers."

"Employer"—"Undertaker."]—An employer who is not also an "undertaker" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is not liable to pay compensation under the Act (LORD TRAYNER dissentiente). Malcolm v. McMillan, 2 F. 525—Ct. of Sess.

A workman in the employment of the occupier of an iron-foundry was sent in the course of his employment to do some work in the repair of a soap work, and while so engaged he fell from a scaffolding and was killed. His widow claimed compensation from her husband's employer, the iron-founder:—Held, that the iron-founder was not, with respect to the accident in question, an undertaker within the meaning of the Act, and therefore was not liable to the claimant in compensation under the Act. Id.

Public Washhouse.]—Semble, per LORD YOUNG, that the "undertakers" of a public washhouse, being built to the order of police commissioners, are such commissioners, and not the tradesmen employed by them. Halstead v. Thomson, 3 F. 668—Ct. of Sess.

Occupiers of Dock—Shipping Agents.]—A workman in the employment of shipping agents, who had contracted with the owners of a vessel lying in a dock to load her, while engaged in removing goods from the quay to the vessel, fell into the hold and was killed:—Held, that the shipping agents were not the occupiers of the dock, and were therefore not "undertakers" within section 7 of the Act, and were therefore not liable under the Act to pay compensation in respect of the workman's death. Bruce v. Henry, 2 F. 717—Ct. of Sess.

Employment "on or in or about a factory."]—The words "a factory" in section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, mean the factory of the undertakers against whom compensation for injury to a workman is sought; and accordingly contractors engaged by millowners to construct a wheel on the premises of the latter were held not to be liable to pay compensation for an accident happening to one of their workmen. Francis v. Turner Brothers (69 L. J. Q.B. 182; [1900] 1 Q.B. 478) approved. Wrigley v. Whittaker, 71 L. J. K.B. 600; [1902] A.C. 299; 86 L. T. 775; 50 W. R. 656; 66 J. P. 420—H.L. (E.)

Cotton-Spinners—Putting Driving-Wheel into Steam Engine in Cotton-Spinning Factory.]—The owners of a cotton-spinning factory entered into a contract with a firm of engineers to put a new driving-wheel into an engine which was used in the factory. A workman who was in the employment of the engineering firm received injuries from which he died whilst engaged in executing the work:—Held, that the workman's widow was not entitled to recover compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, because the work was merely ancillary or incidental to, and no part of or process in, the trade or business carried on by the cotton-spinners, and consequently section 4 of the Act did not apply. S. C. in C.A., 70 L. J. K.B. 538; [1901] 1 K.B. 780; 84 L. T. 415; 49 W. R. 472; 65 J. P. 372. And see Knight v. Cubitt, post, col. 1545.

Contract by Sub-Contractor to Supply, Fix, and Remove Cradles used as Scaffolding—Liability of Sub-Contractor to Indemnify Undertaker.]—The contractor for the repair of a building exceeding thirty feet in height agreed with a sub-contractor that the latter should supply, fix, and remove four travelling cradles which were used as a scaffolding in the process of repairing the building. During the process of removing the cradles (which the arbitrator found to be a substantial part of the process of repairing the building) one of the sub-contractor's workmen was fatally injured:—Held, that the sub-contractor was an "undertaker" for the repair of the building within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and, as such, liable to indemnify the contractor, who had been held liable to pay compensation to the deceased workman's dependants. Per COLLINS, M.R.—A sub-contractor may be an "undertaker" for the repair of a building, although the work done by him may not be a substantial part of the process of repairing. McCabe v. Jopling and Palmer's Travelling Cradle, Lim., 73 L. J. K.B. 129; [1904] 1 K.B. 222; 89 L. T. 624; 52 W. R. 358; 68 J. P. 121; 20 L. T. R. 119—C.A.

Building Constructed Partly by Owner, Partly by Contractor.]—A building contractor was erecting a tenement for himself, doing the work partly by his own workmen and partly by trading firms with whom he had contracts for particular branches of the work:—Held, that he was the "undertaker" of the whole building within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and was therefore liable in compensation in respect of injuries to a workman employed in the construction of the building by one of the trading firms (LORD JUSTICE-CLERK dubit.). Stalker v. Wallace, 2 F. 1162—Ct. of Sess. See also Knight v. Cubitt, post, col. 1545.

Labour Supplied by Contractor on Building being Constructed.]—A person who by agreement with a building owner supplies labourers for brickwork on a building which exceeds thirty feet in height, and is being constructed by means of scaffolding, the labourers while engaged on the building being under the control and supervision of the building owner's own foreman, but being paid their wages by the person who supplied them, is not an "undertaker" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Percival v. Garner, 69 L. J. Q.B. 824; [1900] 2 Q.B. 406; 64 J. P. 500—C.A.

Trial of Machinery under Control of Makers.]—A firm of engineers had erected and practically completed certain ice-making and refrigerating machinery in a building belonging to a cold storage and ice company. While the engineers were making a "preliminary run" for the purpose of testing the machinery, one of their workmen engaged in the work was killed. During the preliminary run the entire control of the machinery was in the hands of the engineers. The ice made in the course of the trial belonged to the ice company under the contract between them and the engineers. No machinery driven by steam or other mechanical power had been used by the engineers in the erection of the refrigerating machinery:—Held, that, even if the ice company's building or the refrigerating machinery was a factory the engineers were not the occupiers of it within the meaning of the Act, and so were not liable to pay compensation in respect of the accident. Purves v. Sterne, 2 F. 887—Ct. of Sess.

Building being Constructed—Contractors for Part of Building.]—A contractor constructing a substantial part of a building without which the building will not be complete is a person "undertaking the construction" of the building within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Mason v. Dean, 69 L. J. Q.B. 358; [1900] 1 Q.B. 770; 82 L. T. 139; 48 W. R. 353; 64 J. P. 244—C.A.

Work Let out to Sub-Contractor.]—Where a person has entered into a contract with a building owner to construct the whole of a building, and has then let out a part of the work by a contract to a sub-contractor, such sub-contractor is not an "undertaker" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Mason v. Dean (col. 1540), distinguished. Cass v. Butler, 69 L. J. Q.B. 362; [1900] 1 Q.B. 777; 82 L. T. 182; 48 W. R. 309; 64 J. P. 261—C.A.

Building—Ornamental Carving Work—Right of Principal Contractor to Indemnity against Sub-contractor—Accident Due to Fault of Principal Undertaker.—A sub-contractor for ornamental carving work, part of the design of a building in course of construction, is an "undertaker" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7, and liable to a workman employed by him, and therefore liable under section 4 to indemnify the principal contractor for compensation paid by him to the workman. Whether the fact that an accident is due to the fault of a principal contractor is a good defence to a claim by him for indemnity against a sub-contractor under section 4, quære. Cooper & Crane v. Wright (71 L. J. K.B. 642; [1902] A.C. 302) followed. Topping v. Rhind, 6 F. 666—Ct. of Sess.

Part of or Process in their Trade or Business.—A window-cleaner, while engaged, in the employment of a window-cleaning company, in cleaning the windows of a workshop belonging to a firm of tailors, fell from one of the windows and was injured. He claimed compensation from the tailors as being the undertakers within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897:—Held, that the work of window-cleaning was not a part of or process in the trade or business carried on by the respondents, and consequently, under section 4 of the Act, that they were not liable to pay compensation. Dempster v. Hunter, 4 F. 580—Ct. of Sess.

Workman Employed on Ship in Dock—Dry or Wet Dock—"Factory"—"Occupier."—A workman employed to do repairs on a ship which is in the water space of a dock, and is moored to the dock by a rope, the repairs having no relation to the structure of the dock, but relating exclusively to the ship, is not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for injury sustained by him whilst engaged on such repairs, and it makes no difference whether the dock is a wet dock or a dry dock. The employer of the workman has not under the circumstances "the actual use or occupation" of the dock so as to be deemed the "occupier" of a factory, and is not consequently an "undertaker" within section 7 of the Act. Houlder Line, Ltd. v. Griffin (74 L. J. K.B. 465; [1905] A.C. 220) discussed and principle applied. Flowers v. Chambers (68 L. J. Q.B. 648; [1899] 2 Q.B. 142) considered. Smith v. Standard Steam Fishing Co.; Burdon v. Gregson & Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 640; [1906] 2 K.B. 275; 95 L. T. 42; 54 W. R. 582; 22 T. L. R. 578—C.A.

Actual Use or Occupation of Dock.—The defendants were the tenants of a small hut in a dock, and they supplied horses, men, and gear for hauling railway waggons loaded with coal for ships using the dock from the railway sidings to the quay where the ships lay. One of the men in the employment of the defendants, while engaged in hauling a waggon to the quay with coal belonging to the plaintiffs' ship, fell, and the waggon went over his foot. He took proceedings against the plaintiffs under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and a third-party notice was served on the defendants. An award of compensation having been made in his favour, the plaintiffs brought an action claiming an indemnity from the defendants under section 4:—Held, that the defendants had the actual use or occupation of the dock, which was a factory, for the purpose of carrying on their business there, and were therefore the occupiers thereof, and so were "undertakers," and liable to indemnify the plaintiffs under section 4. Pacific Steam Navigation Co. v. Pugh, 23 T. L. R. 622—C.A.

—The respondents, ship repairers, hired a dry dock for the repairs of a ship. The appellant's husband was at work on the vessel, and in the course of his duty was crossing by a plank to the side of a dock, when the plank tilted, and he was thrown into the dock and killed:—Held, that the respondents were the "occupiers" of the dock, which, by section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is a "factory," and that they were "undertakers" within section 7, sub-section 1, and therefore liable to pay compensation. Merrill v. Wilson, (70 L. J. Q.B. 97; [1901] 1 Q.B. 35) approved. Raine v. Jobson, 70 L. J. K.B. 771; [1901] A.C. 404; 85 L. T. 141; 49 W. R. 705—H.L. (E.)

Exclusive Use of Quay Berth.—The D. steamship company had a particular berth in a harbour allotted to them for loading and unloading their vessels, and had an office there and a staff of servants and clerks constantly employed in the receipt and discharge of cargo. The same berth was also used by the M. steamship company, who also had an office there. When not required by either of these companies the harbour-master allowed occasional vessels to load or discharge at the berth. A firm of coalowners who had the contract for coaling the vessels of the D. company employed a sub-contractor to trim the coal on the quay opposite the berth, and to put it on board the vessels. While so trimming the coal with a view to putting it on board one of the D. company's vessels which had not yet arrived at the berth, a servant of the sub-contractor fell off the quay and was drowned. The vessel arrived at the berth an hour after the accident:—Held, that the D. company were not the "occupiers" of the quay within section 7, sub-section 2 of the Act, and consequently were not liable as "undertakers" in the sense of that section. Stewart v. Dublin and Glasgow Steam Packet Co., 5 F. 57—Ct. of Sess. See Hanlon v. North City Milling Co., [1903] 2 Ir. R. 163—C.A.

Occupiers of Dock, Wharf, or Quay—"Undertakers."—A firm of carriers was employed by the Post-Office to carry parcels for them during the Christmas season. In consequence of the heavy traffic in parcels the Post-Office had taken temporarily from the dock authorities a transit shed at the docks for the storage of parcels. The carriers brought the parcels from different parts of the city, including the quays, to the transit shed, from which they were forwarded to their destination. The approach to the transit shed was within the ambit of the docks, but the Post-Office had not the exclusive occupation of the roadway. A carter in the employment of the respondents was at the transit shed when he met his death by accident:—Held, that the place where the accident occurred was a "factory," and that the respondents were "undertakers." Fogarty v. Wallis, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 522—C.A.

— A coal company contracted with a steam packet company to supply the steamers of the company with bunker coal free on board at Glasgow harbour. The coal company contracted with a coal porter to put such bunker coal on board at a particular berth of the harbour, and the coal porter employed labourers, for whose wages he alone was responsible, to do the work of loading. One of the labourers so employed by the coal porter, after having been engaged in bringing coal from the coal company's carts and laying it upon the quay ready to be shipped, was awaiting the arrival of one of the packet company's steamers when he fell into the river and was drowned. His widow claimed compensation under the Act from the coal company:—Held, first, that, assuming the quay to be a factory, the coal company were not (on the occasion in question) the occupiers of the quay, or of any part of it, within the meaning of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and therefore, secondly, that they were not, within the meaning of section 7 of the Act of 1897, the undertakers of the employment at which the husband of the claimant met his death, and were not liable to pay compensation. Stewart v. Darnagavil Coal Co., 4 F. 425—Ct. of Sess.

Per LORD TRAYNER.—A quay is not per se a factory within the meaning of the Acts. Ib.

Persons "having the actual use or occupation"
—Contractors Erecting Wooden Pigeon-holes in Warehouse.—Personal injury was caused to a workman by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment by contractors for the erection of wooden pigeon-holes in a warehouse in a Government dockyard, which was a factory within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The warehouse consisted of two storeys, the lower storey being solely in the occupation of the Government for storage purposes, while in the upper storey, where the accident occurred, there were at the time of the accident ten or twelve men employed by the contractors in erecting the pigeon-holes; three men employed by the firm of builders who had built the warehouse engaged in finishing doors and putting on locks; and also workmen employed by the Government engaged in fixing hydraulic cranes at each end of the room. The clerk of the works of the Government was in charge of the works to see that the men did their duty, and that the contractors complied with the specifications. The premises were locked and unlocked by the person in charge of the dockyard:—Held, that the contractors, being in such occupation of a considerable and definite space within the warehouse as was necessary for the work which they had to do, were persons "having the actual use or occupation" of the warehouse within the meaning of section 104 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, and were by that section to be deemed the occupiers thereof, and were consequently the "undertakers" of the work within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Weavings v. Kirk and Randall, 73 L. J. K.B. 77; [1904] 1 K.B. 213; 89 L. T. 577; 52 W. R. 209; 68 J. P. 91; 20 T. L. R. 152—C.A.

Employer Using Machinery to Unload from Dock—Occupier of Factory.—Employers using machinery in the process of loading or unloading from or to a dock, wharf, quay, or warehouse, are, upon the true construction of section 23, sub-section 1 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, occupiers of a factory within the meaning of that Act, and are therefore "undertakers" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Carrington v. Bannister, 70 L. J. K.B. 31; [1901] 1 K.B. 20; 83 L. T. 457—C.A.

Work "Ancillary" to Undertaker's Business—Shipowner—Supplying Coal for Bunkering Vessels.—The supplying of coal for bunkering the vessels of a steamship company is not part of but ancillary to the business of that company within section 4 of the Act. Stewart v. Dublin and Glasgow Steam Packet Co., 5 F. 57—Ct. of Sess.

— In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in which compensation was claimed from a builder, who had contracted to construct a factory, in respect of injury done to a workman in the employ of a sub-contractor for the fixing of an iron roof in the course of that work, the County Court Judge found that the fixing of the iron roof was no part of the business of the builder, but that, taking into consideration the character of the business of a builder as carried on generally, the fixing of an iron roof was a part of that business, and consequently the last clause of section 4 of the Act did not exempt the builder from liability to pay compensation:—Held, that having regard to the finding of fact that the fixing of the roof was no part of the business of the builder, the last clause of section 4 applied, and the builder was not liable to pay compensation. Bush v. Hawes, 71 L. J. K.B. 68; [1902] 1 K.B. 216; 85 L. T. 507; 50 W. R. 311; 66 J. P. 260—C.A. And see Knight v. Cubitt, col. 1545.

— An electric tramway company employed a firm of contractors to erect coal-hauling machinery at one of their power-stations. Part of the coal-hauling machinery consisted of a trolley at which B. was engaged at work. A splinter from the head of a bolt which he was driving into the trolley struck him in the eye and destroyed his sight. B. was employed by the firm, and not by the company. At the time of the accident the firm had not handed over the coal-hauling machinery to the company, and none of the company's workmen were engaged upon it:—Held, that the erection of the coal-hauling machinery was work merely ancillary to the company's trade or business, and that they were not liable to pay compensation to B. Brennan v. Dublin United Tramways Co., [1901] 2 Ir. R. 241—C.A.

Railway Company—Signal Cabin.—A work, man, when engaged in the employment of a builder in the erection of a stone and lime wall in a railway cutting, was run down and killed by a passing train. The wall, which the builder had contracted to build for the railway company, was intended to prevent earth on the bank of the cutting from falling down and obstructing the access to a signal cabin belonging to the railway company. The workman's widow claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, from the railway company, as the undertakers within the meaning of the Act:—Held (dissentiente Lord Young), that the work on which the deceased was engaged was not part of the business of the railway company, but was merely ancillary or incidental thereto, and that the railway company was not liable. Burns v. North British Railway Co. (2 F. 629) not followed; Pearce v. London and South-Western Railway (69 L. J. Q.B. 688; [1900] 2 Q.B. 100) approved. Dundee and Arbroath Joint Railway v. Carlin, 3 F. 843—Ct. of Sess.

Building being Demolished — Contract by Builders to Demolish and Rebuild—Sub-contract for Demolition — “Undertakers” — Work Ancillary to and no Part of Business of Undertakers—Building Demolished to Less than Thirty Feet, except Party-wall.—Builders having contracted to demolish a building, leaving the party-wall between it and the adjoining building standing, and to rebuild upon the site, entered into a contract with a housebreaker for the work of demolition. At the time when the building had been reduced to less than thirty feet, except that the party-wall remained intact and exceeded that height, injury resulting in death was caused to a workman employed by the housebreaker. It was the usual practice of the builders to enter into contracts for pulling down and rebuilding, but they invariably sub-let the work of pulling down:—Held, first, that the builders were “undertakers” in respect of the work of demolition within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897; secondly, that the work of demolition was not merely ancillary to, but was a part of the business carried on by the undertakers, and therefore the last clause of section 4 of the Act did not operate to exempt them from liability to pay compensation; and thirdly, that there was evidence on which the County Court Judge was justified in finding that the employment of the workman was upon a building exceeding thirty feet in height being demolished. Knight v. Cubitt, 71 L. J. K.B. 65; [1902] 1 K.B. 31; 85 L. T. 526; 50 W. R. 113; 66 J. P. 52—C.A.

Indemnity—Claim by Undertaker to, against Contractor—Notice.—Where undertakers, as defined by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and a contractor with them, are both made respondents to arbitration proceedings under the Act, the undertakers, if they desire to make a claim in the proceedings to indemnify against the contractor, must, five clear days before the day fixed for proceeding with the arbitration, file a notice of their claim as provided by rule 19 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898. Appleby v. Horseley Co. (No. 2), 68 L. J. Q.B. 894; [1899] 2 Q.B. 521; 80 L. T. 855; 47 W. R. 614—C.A.

— Fatal Accident—Compensation—“Under- taker” — “Contractor.”—Where an undertaker has contracted for the erection of a whole building and has made a sub-contract with another for part of the work, he is entitled to an indemnity from the sub-contractor for compensation paid by him under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in respect of an accident to a workman of the sub-contractor (Lord BRAMPTON and Lord ROBERTSON dissenting). Cass v. Butler (69 L. J. Q.B. 362; [1900] 1 Q.B. 777) overruled. Cooper & Crane v. Wight, 71 L. J. K.B. 642; [1902] A.C. 302; 86 L. T. 776; 51 W. R. 12—H.L. (E.)

— by Sub-contractor to Undertaker—Right to Sue in High Court.—Where an undertaker, as defined by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, being liable under section 4 of the Act to pay compensation for injury to a workman of a sub-contractor, agrees with the workman as to the amount, he is entitled to maintain an action in the High Court of Justice to recover from the sub-contractor the indemnity given him by section 4 of the Act, and is not limited to the procedure by arbitration under the Act for the recovery thereof. Evans v. Cook, 74 L. J. K.B. 95; [1905] 1 K.B. 53; 92 L. T. 48; 53 W. R. 81; 21 T. L. R. 42—C.A.

— The defendants, having undertaken to construct a house, made a sub-contract with the third party to do the whole of the plastering work for a fixed sum, he supplying all the labour but no materials. A workman employed by the sub-contractor in the work of plastering was injured by accident, and recovered compensation from the defendants under the Workmen's Compensation Act:—Held, that the sub-contractor was himself an undertaker, who would have been liable to pay compensation to the workman, and that he was liable to indemnify the defendants, under section 4 of the Act. Wagstaff v. Perks, 87 L. T. 558; 51 W. R. 210—C.A.

Election to Proceed against Person other than Employer.—A workman in the employment of carting contractors was injured while employed under a contract between the contractors and a railway company, who were undertakers in the sense of the Act. The workman, under reservation of all claims he might have for compensation against other parties, asked for and accepted from the contractors a payment in full of all claims against them under any statute or at common law in respect of the injury. He afterwards claimed compensation under the Act from the railway company as undertakers:—Held, that the word “employer” in the sense of section 6 of the Act means “undertaker” in the sense of the Act, and consequently that the workman, in respect of the payment by the contractors, was barred by the terms of section 6 from thereafter claiming compensation under the Act from the undertakers. Murray v. North British Railway, 6 F. 540—Ct. of Sess.

(12) “Serious and Wilful Misconduct.”

What is.—For an act by a workman to amount to “serious and wilful misconduct,” it must be both a wilful act of misconduct and must be not trivial or doubtful as regards quality, but must be serious. Wallace v. Glenboig Fire Clay Co., [1907] S.C. 967—Ct. of Sess.

Drunk and Unfit to Work.—Being drunk and unfit to work is serious and wilful misconduct on the part of a workman within section 1, sub-section 2 (c) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. McGroarty v. Brown, 8 F. 809—Ct. of Sess.

Disobedience to Order.—Held, on the evidence, that an engine-driver who, in contravention of an order of his employers of which he was aware, left the footplate of his engine and went on the tender while the train was in motion, and was killed by collision with a bridge under which the train passed, was guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 1, sub-s. 2 (c). Bist v. London and South-Western Railway, 76 L. J. K.B. 703; [1907] A.C. 209; 96 L. T. 750; 23 T. L. R. 471—H.L. (E.)

Disobedience to Order from which Serious Consequences not Expected.—The mere breach of a rule or order from which no serious consequences could reasonably have been anticipated is not such "serious and wilful misconduct" under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, as disentitles to compensation for death or injury occasioned thereby. The onus of proving such misconduct lies upon the person asserting it. Johnson v. Marshall, Sons & Co., Lim., 75 L. J. K.B. 868; [1906] A.C. 409; 94 L. T. 828; 22 T. L. R. 565—H.L. (E.)

A workman was found crushed to death in an empty lift. There was no evidence how he came there. On the lift there was a notice: "No one is allowed to use this hoist except in charge of a load." There was evidence that men sometimes used the lift without a load. The arbitrator dismissed a claim for compensation by the widow on the ground of "serious and wilful misconduct" by the workman:—Held, that there had been no "serious and wilful misconduct" within the meaning of the Act. Ib.

Breach of Rules.—Breaches of the rules made under the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, committed by a workman employed in a coal mine, do not necessarily amount to "serious and wilful misconduct" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 2 (c) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Rumboll v. Nunnery Colliery Co., 80 L. T. 42; 63 J. P. 132—C.A.

— under Coal Mines Regulation Act.—In a mine there was in force Rule 9 of the Additional Special Rules framed in pursuance of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, which provided that "Where holing is being done, sprags or holing props shall be set as soon as there is room, and the distance between such sprags or holing props shall not exceed six feet, or such less distance as shall be ordered by the owner, agent or manager." A workman in the mine was killed by a fall of coal while holing coal with four other workmen. Three of the men had holed a distance of nearly seventeen feet before the deceased and the remaining man began, and these two had holed a further distance of three feet when the accident happened. No sprag had been erected by any one in the space thus holed, though there was ample room for the erection of same:—Held (LORD YOUNG dissenting), that the deceased workman, having disobeyed rule 9, was guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct." O'Hara v. Cadzow Coal Co., 5 F. 439—Ct. of Sess.

Breach of Duly Published Special Rule—Ignorance of Rule.—By the additional special rules in force in a mine under the provisions of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, it was provided (inter alia): "While charging shot holes or handling any explosive not contained in a securely closed case or canister a workman shall not smoke or permit a naked light to remain in his cap, or in such a position that it could ignite the explosive." These rules were duly exhibited at the mine in such a manner as to satisfy the requirements of the Act as to publication. A workman in the mine, while carrying a cartridge not contained in a closed case or canister, failed to remove a naked light from his cap, and in crawling through a narrow road two feet in height the light came in contact with the cartridge, which exploded and injured him. The workman did not know of the special rule, nor that there was any rule against having a lamp in his cap while carrying a cartridge. In acting as he did he followed his usual practice—a practice that was also followed by other miners in the mine:—Held, that the injury was attributable to the serious and wilful misconduct of the workman. Dobson v. United Collieries, Lim., 8 F. 241—Ct. of Sess.

Semble (per the LORD PRESIDENT and LORD KYLLACHY), where a workman, except for some dominant reason, commits a breach of a duly published statutory rule, and an injury results therefrom, his de facto ignorance of the rule can in no circumstances prevent the injury being attributable to his serious and wilful misconduct. Ib.

Per LORD M'LAREN.—There may be exceptions where the workman is excusably ignorant. Ib.

— Causing Danger.—A workman was employed in a factory at a circular saw which was driven by machinery. His duty was to hold the wood and guide it when it was being sawn. He was told on several occasions, both by his employer and by the factory inspector, to keep the guard upon the saw when it was in use. The object of the guard was to prevent the wood which was being sawn, if it was jerked up, from being caught by the teeth at the back of the saw and hurled about the workshop to the danger of those at work there. The workman had worked for several years at circular saws before the guard was invented, and he had a great aversion to using a guard. Upon the day in question he intentionally did not place the guard upon the saw when using it, and the piece of wood which was being sawn jerked up and was hurled by the saw against him, and he was killed. The County Court Judge found that the injury to the workman was not attributable to his serious and wilful misconduct within section 1, sub-section 2 (c) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and made an award of compensation in favour of his widow:

—Held, that the injury was caused by the serious and wilful misconduct of the workman, and that his widow was not entitled to compensation under the Act. Brooker v. Warren, 23 T. L. R. 201—C.A.

Breach of Statutory Rule Prior to, but not Causing Accident.]—In a mine worked by stoop and room, the rooms had been worked out, and a stoop was in course of being removed. In removing the stoop, which consisted of upper and lower seams of shale separated by a bed of blaes, the method adopted was to cut off perpendicular strips from the stoop, and in the case of each strip to remove in the first place the bed of blaes and the lower seam of shale (which operation was known as “holing”), and finally the upper seam of shale. After the removal of the whole strip the roof of the mine thereby exposed was supported by “trees.” In carrying out this method of working a stoop two miners had completed the operation of holding, but had not set up props to support the upper seam of shale, in contravention of one of the special rules in force at the mine, which provided that “where holing is being done sprags or holing props shall be set up as soon as there is room.” Immediately after the holing was completed, and before the removal of the upper seam of shale, one of the two miners proceeded to take measurements with the view of inserting a tree outside the stoop to support the roof of the mine. In taking these measurements he was killed by the fall of the upper seam of shale:—Held, that, though the deceased workman had in fact broken the rule in having failed to set sprags or holing props while carrying out the holing, his injury was directly attributable not to his breach of the rule, but to an act done by him after the operation of holing, to which the rule applied, had been completed, and that, on the facts, his injury was not attributable to serious and wilful misconduct. Dobson v. United Collieries (8 F. 241) distinguished. Pratt v. Broxburn Oil Co., [1907] S.O. 581—Ct. of Sess.

— of Rule of Factory.]—A woman employed in a spinning mill was injured through attempting to clean a teaser card-machine, at which she was working, while it was in motion. It was the rule and practice at the factory, known to the woman, that no cleaning of machinery was to be done unless the machinery was stopped:—Held, that the injuries to the woman were attributable to her “serious and wilful misconduct” within the meaning of the Act, and consequently that she was not entitled to recover compensation. Guthrie v. Boase Spinning Co., 3 F. 769—Ct. of Sess.

— not Conducting to Accident.]—A miner while riding on the top of a loaded hutch in the mine, in breach of one of the rules in force in the mine, was killed by the fall of a stone from the roof of the tunnel in which the hutch was running:—Held, that, although the miner was guilty of serious and wilful misconduct, his death was not “attributable” thereto within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Act, and that his widow was not barred from claiming compensation. Glasgow Coal Co. v. Sneddon, 7 F. 485—Ct. of Sess.

Accident Due to Absent-mindedness.]—By the special rules in force in a coal mine under the provisions of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, it was provided that “the bottomer at a mid-working in a vertical shaft not provided with an appliance which constantly fences the shaft, being a mid-working in use for the regular passage of workers or the drawing of minerals from the mine, shall not open the gate fencing the shaft until the cage is stopped at such mid-working.” It appeared that in the mine in question a bottomer with a loaded hutch opened the gate fencing the shaft when the cage was not opposite the gate; that he, presumably through absent-mindedness, failed to notice (although there was sufficient light to enable him to do so) that the cage was not at the gate, and proceeded to push the hutch from behind till it fell down the shaft, and that he was drawn after it and was fatally injured by the fall:—Held, that the deceased had been guilty of serious and wilful misconduct, and that his employers were not liable to pay compensation. United Collieries v. McGhie, 6 F. 808—Ct. of Sess.

Fact or Law.]—A special rule for the mine in which the accident in question took place provided as follows: “While charging shot-holes or handling any explosive not contained in a securely closed case or canister, a workman should not smoke or permit a naked light to remain on his cap, or in such a position that it could ignite the explosive.” A., a workman in the mine, committed a breach of this rule by wearing a lighted naked lamp in his cap while carrying cartridges which were not enclosed in a case or canister. A spark from the lamp ignited the cartridges, which exploded, causing injuries which resulted in A.’s death. The employers provided a special canister to carry cartridges, but it was a common practice among the miners (not known to the employers) not to use this canister when carrying cartridges. A. was not directly told not to carry cartridges in the way he did when he met his death; but the Sheriff found “that it must be assumed he knew the special rules”:—Held, first, that the question whether A. had been guilty of serious and wilful misconduct within the meaning of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, s. 1, sub-s. 2 (c), was a question of law; secondly, that the death of A. was attributable to his serious and wilful misconduct within the meaning of that enactment; and, therefore, thirdly, that his representatives were not entitled to compensation. Dailly v. Watson, 2 F. 1044—Ct. of Sess.

A miner employed in a coal mine at a place adjoining a wheel brae on which there were two sets of rails, one for ascending and the other for descending hutches, was injured in crossing the wheel brae while the hutches were running. He was well aware that it was most dangerous to do so. Had he waited until the hutches had ceased running, he could by shouting to the man in charge at the top of the wheel brae have been able to cross in safety. The Sheriff dismissed the applicant’s claim for compensation on the ground that his injuries were due to his own serious and wilful misconduct:—Held, by the LORD PRESIDENT and LORD ADAM, that the Sheriff’s judgment determined a question which, in the absence of anything to shew that the Sheriff had proceeded on an erroneous construction of the statute, was one of fact only and not subject to review, and by LORDS M'LAREN and KINNEAR that the judgment involved a question of the construction of the statute, and that the construction on which the Sheriff had proceeded was right. Condron v. Paul, 6 F. 29—Ct. of Sess.

Miner Hurt while Crossing Tramline.]—While the applicant was at work in a mine, his lamp went out, and thereupon he went to the lamp station to have it relighted. In order to get back to the place where he had been at work he had to go along a way where trams were hauled by means of a rope, and in which were manholes at certain intervals in which the men could stand till trams passed. He was told, and he could himself see by the rope being in motion, that some trams were coming towards him, but he went on with the object of reaching one of the manholes, and while so proceeding the haulage rope slipped and struck him, breaking his leg:—Held, upon these facts, that there was no evidence of "serious and wilful misconduct" on the part of the applicant. Rees v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., 64 J. P. 164—C.A.

Blasting Operations.]—In the course of blasting operations in a mine, a brushing squad, whose work it was, had drilled a hole and filled it with a charge of an explosive called saxonite, placing at the bottom of the charge a detonator which was to be electrically exploded by means of two wires passing downwards through the charge and attached to the detonator; the foreman brusher thereafter, contrary to fact and apparently for fun, informed the fireman whose duty it was to explode the charge that it was not ready, and the fireman went away. Subsequently the fireman was sent for, but could not be found, and the foreman brusher then proceeded alone to the charge, which exploded and killed him, and it was found in fact, as the only way in which the arbitrator could account for the accident, that it was caused by friction set up by the deceased having attempted to pull out the wires communicating with the detonator. It was proved that rule 12 (e) of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1897, which provides that "no explosive shall be forcibly pressed into a hole of insufficient size, and when a hole has been charged, the explosive shall not be unrammed," was well known to the deceased and carefully enforced, but it was not proved that he knew the mechanism of the detonator, or the danger of pulling the wires:—Held, that the accident was not caused by an attempt to unram the charge in the sense of rule 12 (e), and did not result from the "serious and wilful misconduct" of the deceased, and that it arose out of and in the course of his employment. Lynch v. Baird, 6 F. 271—Ct. of Sess.

Disregard of Warning of Danger.]—A miner, at work in a colliery, was walking along the main haulage road. He was warned that there was risk in going on, as a journey of trams was approaching, but notwithstanding such warning he went on and was killed by the trams:—Held, that there was evidence to support the County Court Judge's finding that the workman had been guilty of serious and wilful misconduct. John v. Albion Coal Co., 65 J. P. 788—C.A.

Sudden Impulse.]—The applicant was a lad who worked at a machine used to cut slits in the heads of screws. He had been frequently warned not to put his hand near the wheel while it was in motion. There was no guard on the wheel. A screw having fallen out on to the table before it was cut, he leaned over the machine to pick it up and replace it, and two of his fingers were cut off. The County Court Judge found that, though the lad was negligent, he was not "guilty of serious and wilful misconduct":—Held, that the element of wilfulness did not enter at all into what the lad did, as he seemed to have acted on a sudden impulse, and therefore the award could be supported. Reeks v. Kynoch, Lim., 50 W. R. 118—C.A.

(18) Bars to Compensation.

Voluntary Payments by Employer during Time Limit—Waiver—Estoppel.]—Where a workman has received personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of employment to which the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, applies, the payment to him by the employer of the maximum weekly payment which he could have recovered under the Act, for six months after the accident, does not constitute a waiver of the provision of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act, requiring a claim for compensation under the Act to be made within that time, and does not estop the employer from taking the objection that proceedings under the Act for the recovery of compensation are not maintainable by reason of the claim not having been made within the specified time. Randall v. Hill's Dry Dock and Engineering Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 554; [1900] 2 Q.B. 245; 82 L. T. 521; 48 W. R. 530; 64 J. P. 451—C.A.

Acceptance by Workman of Weekly Payments as Compensation—Subsequent Action under Employers' Liability Act—Election.]—A workman, who had sustained injuries, received from his employers weekly payments for a period of six months, and granted receipts for same, some of which bore to be granted "in full satisfaction of amount due to me as compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 . . . based on my average weekly earnings, in accordance with the said Act"; the others were on account of "compensation." He then brought an action against his employers for damages on account of the same injuries at common law, and under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. He averred that he had accepted the payments made to him as payments to account of compensation due to him by law, and that he did not understand that he was thereby making an election to take under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897:—Held, first, that the receipts, according to their terms, imported an election to take under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897; secondly, that the pursuer had not stated a relevant ground for setting aside the receipts; and therefore, thirdly, that under the Workmen's Compensation Act, s. 1, sub-s. (2), the pursuer was barred from proceeding with the action; but the Court having in view the provisions of section 1, sub-section (4) of the Act, remitted to the sheriff to determine the amount of compensation due under that Act. Little v. MacLellan, 2 F. 387—Ct. of Sess.

Common-law Action for Negligence—Receipt of Compensation—“Proceeding.”—The plaintiff met with an accident through the negligence of the defendants, on whose ship he was working under the orders of his employers. The plaintiff gave notice of his accident to his employers and signed receipts for money received from them “on account of compensation which may be or become due to me under the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897”; but after giving the first receipt, in pursuance of advice given to him by the delegate of his trade union, the plaintiff said he could only accept payments “without prejudice.” The plaintiff subsequently refused to accept any further payments from his employers, and brought this action against the defendants, in which negligence was admitted and the damages agreed subject to the question of the defendants’ liability under section 6 of the Act:—Held, that the plaintiff had not so exercised his option under section 6, of proceeding against his employers for compensation under the Act, as to be debarred from maintaining his common-law action against the defendants. Randall v. Hill’s Dry Dock &c. Co. (69 L. J. Q.B. 554; [1900] 2 Q.B. 245) discussed. Oliver v. Nautilus Steam Shipping Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 857; [1903] 2 K.B. 639; 89 L. T. 318—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—If there is a payment and a receipt of money under the Act of 1897, and that receipt is in no way qualified, that is sufficient to bring the case within the operation of section 6 and to put the workman in the position of having proceeded against his employer for compensation and recovered it. Ib.

Per ROMER, L.J.—Proceedings by a workman against his employer should not be held to irrevocably bind the workman in the exercise of his option under section 6, unless they have resulted in some compensation, as such, being paid to and received by the workman in such a manner as to bind both parties. Ib.

Election to take Compensation under Act—Foreign Workman.—To an action for personal injuries the defender pleaded that under section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, the action was not maintainable, as the pursuer had claimed and accepted compensation under the Act of 1897. It appeared that the workman was an Italian imperfectly acquainted with English and wholly unable to read or write it; that he had applied for money for his injuries; that he had accepted two sums from the defenders consisting of the amount due to him under the Act of 1897 for three weekly payments, and had with his mark authenticated two receipts therefor which bore to be for payments under the Act of 1897; that he knew of his right to half wages during incapacity, but did not know of the Act by name or of his rights apart from the Act; and that the receipts were not read over or explained to him:—Held, that it had not been proved that the pursuer had elected to take compensation under the Act of 1897, and that consequently he was not barred from maintaining the present action. Valenti v. Dixon, [1907] S.C. 695—Ct. of Sess.

Unsuccessful Action against Employer—Claim for Compensation—Right to New Trial of Action.—An action brought in the County Court by the personal representatives against the employers of a workman killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment having been decided in favour of the defendants, the plaintiffs applied under section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, for compensation under that Act, and the Judge assessed the compensation and made his award in favour of the defendants. The plaintiffs duly applied to the High Court for a new trial of the action:—Held, that the plaintiffs by taking the proceedings for compensation had not in the circumstances exercised the option given them by section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Act, and were not disentitled to a new trial of the action, inasmuch as, in order to avail themselves of the remedy provided by sub-section 4, they must have proceeded on the footing that the defendants were not liable in the action, and as they had applied for a new trial they had not proceeded on that footing. Isaacson v. New Grand, Lim., 72 L. J. K.B. 227; [1903] 1 K.B. 539; 88 L. T. 291—D.

Unsuccessful Proceedings under Workmen’s Compensation Act—Right to Institute Subsequent Proceedings Independently of the Act.—When a workman has proceeded to have compensation for his injuries assessed under the Workmen’s Compensation Act, and is defeated by reason of a ruling that his case does not come within the provisions of the Act, he is not thereby prevented from instituting subsequent proceedings independently of the Act to enforce any previously existing remedy to which he may have been entitled (HOLMES, L.J., dissenting). Beckley v. Scott, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 504—C.A.

Failure of Action under Employers’ Liability Act, 1880—Assessment of Compensation not Applied for—Subsequent Proceedings.—A workman who has exercised his option under section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Workmen’s Compensation Act, 1897, and brought an action under the Employers’ Liability Act, 1880, to recover damages for injury happening in the course of his employment, is not entitled, when he has failed in such action, to take proceedings under the Act of 1897, where he has not applied in that action for compensation to be assessed under section 1, sub-section 4 of the Act of 1897. Edwards v. Godfrey, 68 L. J. Q.B. 666; [1899] 2 Q.B. 333; 80 L. T. 672; 47 W. R. 551—C.A.

Joint and Several Liability.—A workman, while engaged in the employment of a glass merchant in repairing the roof of a factory occupied by a firm of wool manufacturers, fell from the scaffold on the roof and was killed. His dependants claimed compensation from the glass merchant and the firm of wool manufacturers jointly and severally or severally, or in such proportions as to the Court should seem just:—Held, that, as the Act imposed no joint liability, the application as directed against the two defenders jointly and severally was incompetent, and that it should be dismissed. Herd v. Summers, 7 F. 870—Ct. of Sess.

Workman Earning Same Wages after Accident as before—Earning Capacity in the Future.—

The test of a workman's right to compensation under the Act of 1897 is the diminution of his earning capacity in the future by reason of the injury received, and the mere fact that at the date of his claim he is earning the same wages as he did before the accident does not necessarily exclude the claim under the Act. Freeland v. Macfarlane, 2 F. 832—Ct. of Sess.

Injury Owing to Negligence of Third Person—Action against Third Person.]—A workman, having been injured in the course of his employment by the negligence of a third person, obtained an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, against his employer. He then brought an action against the third person claiming damages for pain and suffering, and the expenses he had been put to, and the balance of his wages:—Held, that the action would not lie by virtue of section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Tong v. Great Northern Railway, 86 L. T. 802; 66 J. P. 677—Wright, J.

(14) Claim for Compensation.

Requisites of.]—To satisfy the requirements of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, a "claim" for compensation must be a claim for a definite and specified amount, and not merely an intimation of a demand for compensation. Maver v. Park, 8 F. 250—Ct. of Sess.

Declaration of Employer's Liability—No Loss Suffered by Workman.]—If a workman has not, when he makes his claim for compensation, suffered any loss, the proper course is not to dismiss the claim, but for the arbitrator to make a declaration of the liability of the employer, leaving the amount and the duration of the compensation to be fixed upon an application under schedule 1, clause 12, to vary the award should the workman at any future time be unable, by reason of the accident, to earn the same wages. Irons v. Davis & Timmins ([1899] 2 Q.B. 830) and Chandler v. Smith ([1899] 2 Q.B. 506) approved. Freeland v. Macfarlane, 2 F. 832—Ct. of Sess.

"Arising out of or in the course of the employment."]—When a claim for compensation is made under section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, it is still as necessary as before to establish that the accident arose not only out of but "in the course of the employment." Cremins v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefold, 77 L. J. K.B. 326; [1908] 1 K.B. 469—C.A.

A "claim for compensation" under section 2, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, must be a claim for a specific sum, and not merely an intimation of a demand for compensation. Kilpatrick v. Wemyss Coal Co., [1907] S. C. 320—Ct. of Sess.

Claim not Made Within Six Months—Payments.]—A woman who had been totally incapacitated by an accident in the course of her employment received from her employer for a period of about six months thereafter the sum of 10s. a week, which was 9d. a week in excess of the maximum under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The payments were made without anything being said as to the Act. The employer having proposed to reduce the payments to 5s. a week, the woman, without having made any claim to compensation under the Act within six months of the date of the accident, applied for arbitration under the Act, contending that her employer was barred from pleading the omission to make a claim within six months, in respect that the payment by him of 10s. a week amounted to a representation that he admitted her right to compensation under the Act:—Held, that there was nothing in the circumstances to take the case out of the strict rule of the statute, and consequently that the application was incompetent. O'Neill v. Motherwell, [1907] S. C. 1076—Ct. of Sess.

Notice of Claim—Effect of.]—A notice making a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, stating the name and address of the injured man and the nature of the accident, cannot be regarded and receive effect as a notice under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. Thomson v. Baird, 6 F. 142—Ct. of Sess.

Failure to Give Notice of Accident—Prejudice to Employer—Onus of Proof.]—In a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, where no notice of the accident has been given to the employer, the onus of showing that the employer has not thereby been prejudiced in his defence lies on the workman claiming the compensation. Shearer v. Miller, 2 F. 114—Ct. of Sess.

Failure to Give Notice as Soon as Practicable—Mistake.]—A workman who had sustained injury in the course of his employment failed to give notice of the accident until five months thereafter, when he made a claim for compensation under the Act. The reasons for his failure to give earlier notice were that at first he did not regard his injury as so serious as his doctor's advice should have led him to suppose, and that he did not intend to make any claim under the Act if his recovery had been as satisfactory as he expected:—Held, that, even if the employers were prejudiced by the workman's failure to give notice earlier, the want of notice was occasioned by mistake for which there was reasonable cause, and that the workman was not precluded from obtaining compensation. Rankine v. Alloa Coal Co., 6 F. 375—Ct. of Sess.

No Notice Given of Accident—"Mistake or other reasonable cause."]—On November 20, 1905, a workman in the course of his employment fell and racked the muscles on his left side and over his lower ribs. Notwithstanding medical advice to rest, he continued working till February, 1906, when he had to go to a hospital. He designedly did not give notice of his accident at the time, believing that his injuries would not keep him from work. After going to the hospital he realised that his injuries were more serious than he had thought, and on February 14, 1906, he gave written notice of the accident to his employers:—Held, that the delay in giving notice was due to mistake or other reasonable cause within section 2, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that consequently the delay in giving notice was not a bar to proceedings under the Act. Rankine v. Alloa Coal Co. (6 F. 375) followed. Brown v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., [1907] S.C. 198—Ct. of Sess.

— Notice of Accident previously given by Plaintiff to his Employer—No Further Proceedings against such Employer—Wages Paid as before.—The plaintiff, who worked for J., met with an accident caused by the negligence of a servant in the defendant's employment. Having given notice of the accident to his own employer, the plaintiff's wages were paid as before, and no further proceedings were taken by him under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. In a common-law action against the defendant, Held, that the action was maintainable because a mere notice of an accident given under section 2 of the Act of 1897 to the employer was not a "proceeding" within the meaning of section 6, and did not, therefore, preclude the plaintiff from bringing an action against a person other than his employer, whose negligence caused the injury. Perry v. Clements, 49 W. R. 669—Ridley, J.

Time for Making Claim.—The requirement of section 2, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, that the claim for compensation is to be made within six months of the accident, is fulfilled by a written notice served within the time limited by the injured workman on the employer, referring by date to the accident and stating the amount of compensation demanded. Powell v. Main Colliery Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 758; [1900] A.C. 366; 83 L. T. 85; 49 W. R. 49; 65 J. P. 100—H.L. (E.) — Limit of.—By section 2, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, proceedings for the recovery of compensation are not maintainable unless . . . the claim for compensation has been made within six months from the occurrence of the accident causing the injury. In proceedings by the workman under the statute, Held, that the employer may by his conduct preclude himself from objecting that the claim was made more than six months from the occurrence of the accident. Wright v. Bagnall, 69 L. J. Q.B. 551; [1900] 2 Q.B. 240; 82 L.T. 346; 48 W. R. 533; 64 J. P. 420—C.A.

Claim by Sole Dependant—Death of Sole Dependant before Request for Arbitration—Right of Administratrix to Claim—"Actio personalis moritur cum persona"—Non-application of Maxim.—If a notice of claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, has been given by a "sole dependant," who dies before a request for arbitration is made or other proceedings are taken, the right to claim survives to such dependant's legal personal representative, and the maxim "Actio personalis moritur cum persona" does not apply. O'Donovan and Cameron, Swan & Co., In re ([1901] 2 Ir. R. 633), distinguished. Darlington v. Roscoe, 76 L. J. K.B. 371; [1907] 1 K.B. 219; 96 L. T. 179; 23 T. L. R. 167—C.A.

Claim not in Writing—Payment by Employers in Respect of Claim—Admission of Claim.—It is not necessary that a claim for compensation by a workman under section 2, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, should be in writing. The arbitrator under the Act may take into consideration any facts or admissions for the purpose of ascertaining whether a claim for compensation has been made within six months from the occurrence of the accident. Low v. Myers, 75 L. J. K.B. 651; [1906] 2 K.B. 265; 95 L. T. 35; 22 T. L. R. 614—C.A.

Withdrawal of Claim—Subsequent Action under Employers' Liability Act, 1880.—A workman who withdraws notice of injury and request for arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, upon the employer objecting that the workman's claim is not within that Act, is not debarred from bringing an action in respect of the same injury under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, inasmuch as the workman has not exercised his "option" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Act of 1897. There is no real option where there is no liability under the Act of 1897. Rouse v. Dixon, 73 L. J. K.B. 662; [1904] 2 K.B. 628; 91 L. T. 436; 53 W. R. 237; 68 J. P. 406; 20 T. L. R. 553—D.

Edwards v. Godfrey (68 L. J. Q.B. 666; [1899] 2 Q.B. 333) is a decision upon section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, only, and no expressions in the judgments in that case ought to be adopted as laying down any general principle. Id.

Action for Damages Dismissed—Motion to have Compensation Assessed—Delay.—On May 18, 1906, a workman was injured in the course of his employment. He brought an action for damages, which was dismissed on February 5, 1907. On February 19, 1907, the workman applied to the Court to remit the case to have compensation assessed under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The Court refused the application on the ground that it was not made timeously. Baird v. Higginbotham (3 F. 673) followed. M'Gowan v. Smith, [1907] S.C. 548 Ct. of Sess.

(15) Medical Examination.

Conditions—Examination of Workman by Duly Qualified Medical Practitioner—No Notice of Accident Given.—Where proceedings by a workman for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, are pending the employer may, under Schedule I. clause 3, require the workman to submit himself for examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner, notwithstanding that the workman has not given notice of the accident in respect of which the compensation is claimed. Osborn v. Vicars, Son & Maxim, 69 L. J. Q.B. 606; [1900] 2 Q.B. 91; 82 L. T. 491—C.A.

Refusal of Workman to Submit to Treatment.—An employer held not bound to continue weekly payments to an injured workman where the continuance of his incapacity was due to his neglect to comply with certain simple medical directions which had been given to him. Dowds v. Bennie, 5 F. 268—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, per LORD ADAM: A workman who has been incapacitated by an accident is not bound in every case to submit to any medical or surgical treatment that is proposed, under the penalty, if he refuses, of forfeiting his right to a weekly payment—e.g. in a case where a serious surgical operation is proposed with more or less probability of a successful cure. Ib.

Refusal of Workman to Undergo Surgical Operation.]—A workman became entitled to compensation under the Act in consequence of an injury he received to one of his thumbs on April 18, 1901, and his employers began to pay him compensation voluntarily. Shortly after the accident part of the thumb was amputated, and in June, 1901, a further operation was performed. The workman, having continued to be incapacitated for his ordinary work, was advised to undergo a third operation, but refused. His employers stopped paying compensation to him. It appeared that the third operation "would in all probability remove the sensitiveness of the injured part and enable the workman to earn wages as before, or at least to earn more than he is able to do now," and "that the operation so advised is a simple operation, not attended with serious risk or pain, and is such as a reasonable man not claiming compensation or damages would for his own advantage and comfort elect to undergo":—Held (LORD YOUNG dissenting), that the workman's refusal to undergo the operation disentitled him in the circumstances to a continuance of substantial compensation. Anderson v. Baird, 5 F. 373—Ct. of Sess.

A workman who had sustained injury to his right elbow, which disabled him from work, and who had been paid compensation by his employers for more than a year, was then examined by two surgeons on their behalf, who advised that he should undergo an operation for the removal of a piece of the elbow-bone which prevented the free use of the arm. The workman refused, and the payments were discontinued. On an application thereafter to assess compensation the arbitrator found "that the operation (1) is an important minor operation, (2) is not in the nature of an experiment, but is established in surgical practice; (3) has been attended with complete success in all similar cases (five in number) regarding which evidence was led before me; (4) is not attended by any appreciable risk; (5) will in all probability within two months, or a little longer, restore to the [workman] the use of his right arm, and enable him to earn wages as before; and (6) is such as a reasonable man not claiming compensation or damage would, for his own advantage and comfort, elect to undergo"; he accordingly refused to award compensation. It was stated at the hearing of the appeal, and not disputed, that an eminent surgeon, who had not been a witness before the arbitrator, had examined the workman after, as well as before the arbitration, and was of opinion that the workman should not undergo the operation proposed:—Held, on the facts, that the workman was not bound to submit to the operation, and that his refusal to do so did not disentitle him to compensation. Held also, that the Court was entitled to take into consideration the facts admitted at the Bar, which shewed that the workman's refusal was reasonable. Sweeney v. Pumpherston Oil Co., 5 F. 972—Ct. of Sess.

Weekly Payments—Medical Examination of

Workman by Employer's Medical Practitioner—Refusal of Further Examination by Medical Referee—"Such examination"—Examination Condition Precedent to Right to Proceed for Compensation—Stay of Proceedings.]—By clause 11 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, "Any workman receiving weekly payments under this Act shall, if so required by the employer, . . . from time to time submit himself for examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner provided and paid by the employer . . .; but if the workman objects to an examination by that medical practitioner, or is dissatisfied by the certificate of such practitioner upon his condition when communicated to him, he may submit himself for examination to one of the "medical referees appointed for the purposes of the Act, and the certificate of that medical referee "as to the condition of the workman at the time of the examination shall be given to the employer and workman, and shall be conclusive evidence of that condition. If the workman refuses to submit himself to such examination, or in any way obstructs the same, his right to such weekly payments shall be suspended until such examination has taken place".—Held, that, upon the true construction of clause 11, it was not a condition precedent to the right of a workman to have compensation assessed under the Act of 1897 that he should submit himself for examination not only by a medical practitioner provided and paid by the employer, but also by one of the medical referees appointed for the purposes of the Act; that the provisions of clause 11 as to submission for examination, if required by the employer, to a medical practitioner provided and paid by the employer were compulsory, but that the provisions as to examination by one of the medical referees appointed for the purposes of the Act were optional on the part of the workman; and that the words "such examination" in the last paragraph of clause 11 referred not to an examination by one of the medical referees, but to the examination by the employer's medical practitioner. Neagles v. Nixon's Navigation Co.; Edwards v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds, Lim., 73 L. J. K.B. 165; [1904] 1 K.B. 339; 90 L. T. 49; 52 W. R. 356; 68 J. P. 297; 20 T. L. R. 160—C.A.

The decision in Niddrie and Benhar Coal Co. v. M'Kay (40 Sc. L.R. 798) and the dissenting judgment of LORD YOUNG in Davidson v. Summerlee and Mossend Steel and Iron Co. (5 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (5th Series), 991) approved. Ib.

No Examination by Medical Referee—Effect of.]—The employers of a workman, who had sustained injuries, orally agreed to pay him 18s. 3d. weekly as compensation under the Act, but no memorandum of the agreement was recorded. The workman, after being in receipt of these weekly payments for nearly a year, on the requisition of the employers, submitted himself to examination by a medical practitioner provided and paid by them. A certificate having been granted by that medical practitioner, the workman was dissatisfied therewith, but did not submit himself for examination to one of the medical practitioners appointed under the Act, whereupon the employers discontinued the weekly payments. The workman then instituted an arbitration under section 1, sub-section 3 of the Act:—Held, that he was not precluded from so doing because of his failure to submit himself to one of the medical practitioners appointed under the Act. Niddrie and Benhar Coal Co. v. M'Kay (5 F. 1121) and Neagle v. Nixon's Navigation Co. (73 L. J. K.B. 165; [1904] 1 K.B. 339) approved and followed. Davidson v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron Co. (5 F. 991) disapproved. Strannigan v. Baird, 6 F. 784—Ct. of Sess.

Obstruction of Medical Examination.]—An injured workman in receipt of weekly payments under the Act went to Australia without intimating to his employers that he was going or leaving his address. In an application by the employers for review of the weekly payments, the Court suspended in hoc statu the workman's right to the weekly payments, on the ground that he was obstructing medical examination within section 11 of the First Schedule of the Act. Finnie v. Duncan, 7 F. 254—Ct. of Sess.

A workman who was receiving weekly payments as compensation under the Act, and who had twice submitted himself for examination by a medical practitioner provided by the employers, and being certified not to have recovered, immediately after the second examination went to Ireland to reside with his father. About two months thereafter he was again required to submit himself at Glasgow for examination by the employers' medical man. He offered to submit himself to a medical man near the place where he was residing in Ireland, but he refused to come to Glasgow for examination unless his expenses were paid:—Held, that the workman had not refused to submit himself to medical examination or obstructed the same within the meaning of section 11, Schedule I. of the Act, and that the employers were not entitled to suspend payment of his compensation. Finnie v. Duncan (supra) distinguished. Baird v. Kane, 7 F. 461—Ct. of Sess.

— A workman who had been receiving compensation under the Act from his employers by agreement, but without a memorandum of agreement having been registered, submitted himself, at his employers' request, for examination by a medical man provided by his employers, in terms of clause 11 of the First Schedule of the Act. The medical man reported that the workman had so far recovered as to be able to do his former work. The workman was dissatisfied with this report, but did not apply to be examined by one of the medical practitioners appointed for the purposes of the Act by the Secretary of State. The employers having discontinued payment of compensation, the workman instituted proceedings for arbitration to have the amount of compensation determined:—Held (LORD YOUNG dissenting), that so long as the workman did not submit himself for examination by one of the medical practitioners appointed under the Act his right to compensation was suspended and proceedings by way of arbitration were excluded. Davidson v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron Co., 5 F. 991—Ct. of Sess.

A workman in receipt of a weekly payment under an agreement registered in terms of the Act was examined on November 7, 1902, and certified to be fit for work by a medical practitioner provided by the employers. The workman intimated to the employers that he was dissatisfied with his medical certificate, but did not submit himself to examination by one of the medical practitioners appointed for the purposes of the Act, owing, as he alleged, to inability to pay the fee. In an application by the employers to review the weekly payment, the employers opposed an allowance of proof on the ground that under clause 11 of Schedule I. of the Act the right of the workman to the weekly payments had, as he had not submitted himself for examination by a medical practitioner appointed for the purposes of the Act, been suspended at the date on which he had been certified to be fit for work. The workman produced a certificate by a medical practitioner dated February 14, 1903, certifying that he was unfit for his usual work. The arbitrator then remitted to the statutory medical referee to report, and on his report that the workman was fit for light work diminished the weekly payment. On appeal by the employers, —Held, that the workman, having submitted to an examination by a medical practitioner provided by his employers, his failure to submit to examination by one of the medical practitioners appointed for the purposes of the Act did not infer a suspension of his right to compensation, and did not disentitle him to a proof; and secondly, that it was competent for the arbitrator, with the view of fixing the weekly payment in the application for review, to remit, under Schedule II. (13) of the Act, to a medical practitioner appointed for the purposes of the Act, to report as to the condition of the workman. Davidson v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron Co. (supra) questioned. Niddrie & Benhar Coal Co. v. M'Kay, 5 F. 1121—Ct. of Sess.

Medical Referee—Conclusiveness of Report.]—The report by a medical referee under section 13 of the Second Schedule to the Act is conclusive evidence of the condition of the workman to whom it refers. Ferrier v. Gourlay, 4 F. 711—Ct. of Sess.

Review of Award.]—In an application by an employer for review of an order for weekly payments of 6s. 3d. to an injured workman, the sheriff remitted to the medical practitioner appointed by the Secretary of State to report, as to the workman's condition. The report bore that the power of vision of the right eye was permanently reduced by one-half, and that the left eye was quite sound, and that in the opinion of the reporter "he will never be able for any work for which unimpaired vision is essential, but he is quite able to undertake his ordinary work as a labourer." The sheriff, without further proof, reduced the compensation to 5s. a week:—Held (LORD YOUNG dissenting), that the report was conclusive evidence that the incapacity of the workman arising from his injuries had ceased to the effect of disentitling him to a continuance of the compensation at the present rate, and remitted to the sheriff to reduce the compensation to one penny per week until further orders. Id.

A mason's labourer, sixty-six years of age, whose left eye had been injured was awarded under the Act the maximum weekly payment for total incapacity. Prior to an application by the employers to have the payment diminished, the workman was examined by one of the medical men appointed by the Secretary of State. The medical certificate stated that the workman's right eye was healthy and the vision good, but that the left eye was seriously defective; "his disability is however at present great enough to unfit him for his usual occupation of a mason's labourer though I am of opinion he is quite fit for any work where he would not have to exercise for the safety of life or limb that nice discrimination as to distances for which the sight of two eyes is necessary":—Held (Lord Young dissenting)—first, that the medical certificate under section 11 was conclusive evidence of the workman's condition; and secondly, that, as the certificate stated that the workman was unfit for his usual occupation, although fit for work of a particular character, and as his employers did not state or offer to prove that he could get such employment, the sheriff was entitled to decide as he did without further evidence that the workman's earning capacity had not increased to such an extent as to justify a reduction or termination of the previous award. Bryce v. Connor, 7 F. 193—Ct. of Sess.

—The certificate given by a medical referee under Schedule I. (11) of the Act stated that a workman who was in receipt of weekly payments under the Act had recovered from the injuries in respect of which the payments were made, and that although he was suffering from partial disability for work, such disability was not connected with the injuries, but was "the result of deficient natural vigour of constitution, together with advancing years":—Held (Lord Young dissenting), that such certificate was conclusive against any further claim by the workman for compensation under the Act. McAvan v. Boase Spinning Co., 3 F. 1048—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, the report of a medical referee made under rule 2 of the regulations as to the appointment, &c., of medical referees of May 2, 1898, is not to be taken by the arbitrator as final and conclusive, but falls to be considered by him along with the other evidence before him. Dowds v. Bennie, 5 F. 263—Ct. of Sess.

Application for Review—Refusal to Allow Proof—Remit to Medical Practitioner.—In an application by an employer under section 12 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for review and ending of a weekly payment made under agreement, in respect that the workman had recovered and had been certified as recovered by a medical practitioner selected by the employer, the workman moved to be allowed to call evidence; but the sheriff refused this application, and remitted to a medical practitioner appointed by the Secretary of State, and thereafter, on a consideration of his report, terminated the weekly payment:—Held, that the sheriff was not entitled to refuse the application of the workman to be allowed to call evidence, and that the case must be sent back to him for this application to be granted. Johnstone v. Cochran & Co., 6 F. 854—Ct. of Sess.

VOL. II.

(16) Scale of Compensation.

How Calculated.—The "average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months," on the basis of which compensation is payable during a workman's disablement under Schedule I., section 1 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, are to be calculated by ascertaining the amount of money earned by the workman during the previous twelve months and dividing that amount by fifty-two. Kecsk v. Barrow Haematite Steel Co., 63 J. P. 56—C.A.

—Earnings by Workman after Accident.—Clause 2 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that in fixing the weekly payment (which is to be the compensation under the Act in the case of the workman's incapacity for work) regard shall be had to the difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident, and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident, does not cut down the limit imposed by clause 1 (b), which provides that the weekly payment is not to exceed 50 per cent. of the workman's average weekly earnings. Illingworth v. Walmsley, 69 L. J. Q.B. 519; [1900] 2 Q.B. 142; 82 L. T. 647—C.A.

Maximum Compensation—Employment for Less than Three Years.—Semble, the maximum of 300% mentioned in the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, as the limit of compensation, applies to cases where the deceased workman has been in the employment for less than three years. Russell v. McCluskey, 2 F. 1312—Ct. of Sess.

Minimum Compensation—Workman Less than Three Years in Employment of Master.—The minimum sum of 150% fixed by section (1) (a) (i.) of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, as the compensation for a deceased workman's dependants, applies, although the deceased workman has been less than three years in the employment. Doyle v. Beattie (2 F. 1166) reconsidered and disapproved. Forrester v. McCallam, 3 F. 650—Ct. of Sess.

"Where death results from the injury"—Reasonable and Probable Consequence.—Schedule I., paragraph 1 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, prescribes a scale of compensation payable to the dependants of a workman "where death results from the injury":—Held, that the dependants are entitled to compensation on that scale if death results in fact from the injury, even though at the time of the injury it could not be reasonably expected as the probable consequence thereof. Dunham v. Clare, 71 L. J. K.B. 683; [1902] 2 K.B. 292; 86 L. T. 751; 50 W. R. 596; 66 J. P. 612—C.A.

"Average Weekly Earnings"—Employment of Workman for Less than a Fortnight.—The right to compensation for injury conferred in general terms by section 1, subsection 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, on workmen to whom the Act applies is not qualified or restricted by Schedule I. clause 1 (a) and (b), by which the scale of compensation is based on "average weekly earnings," and it is not a condition precedent to the right, that the workman injured or killed should have been a fortnight or any other definite period in his employment. Lysons v. Knowles, 70 L. J. K.B. 170; [1901] A.C. 79; 84 L. T. 65; 49 W. R. 636; 65 J. P. 388—H.L. (E.). Reversing C.A., 69 L. J. Q.B. 449; [1900] 1 Q.B. 780; 82 L. T. 189; 48 W. R. 408; 64 J. P. 292; and overruling Stuart v. Nixon, 69 L. J. Q.B. 598; [1900] 2 Q.B. 95; 82 L. T. 453; 48 W. R. 598—C.A.

— How Calculated.—Per LORD ADAM.—In calculating the average weekly earnings of a workman, the actual earnings for each week should be taken, irrespective of the number of working days in that week. Russell v. M'Chuskey, 2 F. 1312—Ct. of Sess.

"Average weekly earnings" mean the total amount actually earned by the workman during his employment divided by the number of weeks during which or part of which he was employed, and that the week to be taken as the unit of division is not the calendar week, but the trade or pay week of the particular employment. Lysons v. Knowles (70 L. J. K.B. 170; [1901] A.C. 79) followed. Peacock v. Niddrie and Benhar Coal Co. (col. 1567) explained. Fleming v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., 4 F. 890—Ct. of Sess.

In estimating "average weekly earnings," only the period of continuous employment prior to the accident in the service of the same employer is to be taken into account, and where that period is only part of a day the actual sum earned is to be taken as the average weekly earnings. Ayres v. Buckeridge (col. 1566) not followed. Grewar v. Caledonian Railway, 4 F. 895—Ct. of Sess.

Where a workman before his disablement has worked not a full week, but only one or more days in the week, his actual earnings are to be taken as his weekly earnings; in ascertaining the average of his weekly earnings a fraction of a week counts as a whole week; where there is no trade week the calendar week from Sunday to Saturday is to be taken as the week. Grewar v. Caledonian Railway (supra) followed. M'Cue v. Barclay, Curle & Co., 4 F. 909—Ct. of Sess.

— Employment for Less than a Fortnight.—A workman was employed in the demolition of a house upon the terms that he was to be employed for eleven hours a day for five days in the week and for five hours a day on Saturday, making sixty hours a week, and that he was to be paid at the rate of 7½*d.* an hour. He was not employed for any specified number of weeks, and he could be discharged from his employment at an hour's notice. He worked in fact for four days, and then sustained injury which resulted in his death. In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge made an award in favour of the applicant, the widow, calculated on the basis that the average weekly earnings of the deceased were 1*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and taking 156 times that sum, as provided by the First Schedule, clause 1 (a) (i.) of the Act, which amounted to 292*l.* 10*s.*, fixed this latter sum as the amount of compensation to be paid:—

Held, that the County Court Judge had awarded compensation in accordance with the principle laid down by the House of Lords in Lysons v. Knowles & Sons (70 L. J. K.B. 170; [1901] A.C. 79), by taking into consideration the weekly earnings which the deceased might have earned if he had not met with the accident, but had had an opportunity of continuing in his employment. Ayres v. Buckeridge. Wheale v. Rhymney Iron Co. Jones v. Rhymney Iron Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 28; [1902] 1 K.B. 57; 85 L. T. 472; 50 W. R. 115; 65 J. P. 804—C.A.

Average Weekly Earnings.—A workman was employed as a haulier, and in the course of such employment sustained personal injuries. One of the men commenced to work on a Wednesday, and worked every day (including Sunday) until the following Wednesday, on which day the accident occurred. There was no regular contract of employment, and the wages were at the rate of 5*s.* 2*d.* a day. The workman received 2*l.* 1*s.* 4*d.* payment in respect of the days on which he was actually employed. In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge made an award in the workman's favour calculated on the basis that his average weekly earnings were six times 5*s.* 2*d.*—namely, 1*l.* 11*s.*—and, in accordance with the provisions of the First Schedule, clause 1 (a) (i.) of the Act, made an award for a weekly payment of 15*s.* 6*d.*, being one-half of the sum of 1*l.* 11*s.*:—Held, that the award had been made upon a correct basis, for that since the decision of the House of Lords in Lysons v. Knowles (70 L. J. K.B. 170; [1901] A.C. 79; col. 1565), although the employment had extended from one week to a portion of another week, the County Court Judge was entitled in calculating the workman's weekly wages to take into consideration the wages he might have earned if he had had an opportunity of working for two weeks. Id.

— A miner entered the service of a coal company on Friday, March 23; he did not work on Saturday, the 24th; he worked on Monday, the 26th, and on every day thereafter until Thursday, the 29th, when he received injuries, on account of which he claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, from his employers:—Held, that these facts afforded a sufficient basis for calculating the claimant's "average weekly earnings" in terms of the First Schedule (1) (b) of the Act. Per LORD TRAYNER, the word "weekly" in the schedule refers to calendar weeks. Opinion per LORD MONCREIFF reserved on the question whether a workman who had been in the employment during one week only was excluded from the benefit of the Act. Cadzow Coal Co. v. Gaffney, 3 F. 72—Ct. of Sess.

— In calculating a workman's "average weekly earnings" where the employment is by trade weeks, the total earnings of the workman are to be divided by the number of trade weeks in which he has been employed, and not by the number of calendar weeks. Fleming v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co. (4 F. 890) followed. Campbell v. Fife Coal Co., 5 F. 170—Ct. of Sess.

— Gratuities.—"Earnings in the employment of the same employer" in respect of which compensation is recoverable under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, need not always come from the employer; and where the employment is of such a nature that the habitual giving and receiving of "tips" is open and notorious, and sanctioned by the employer, the money thus received with his knowledge and approval must be brought into account in estimating the "average weekly earnings" in respect of which compensation has to be awarded. Penn v. Spiers & Pond, [1908] 1 K.B. 766—C.A.

— Divided by Number of Calendar Weeks.—

In computing the average weekly earnings of a workman who has been employed by the same employer for three days in one week and during the whole of the next two weeks and on the Sunday of the fourth week, the total amount of his earnings must be divided by the number of calendar weeks—that is, four—over which his employment extended. Peacock v. Niddrie and Benhar Coal Co., 4 F. 443—Ct. of Sess.

— "In the employment of the same employer"—Continuous Employment—Casual Work done for Same Employer.—A workman engaged by employers on two nights in each week for a period exceeding two weeks, at a fixed rate of wages per night, was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment under this engagement. Besides the work done under this engagement he did casual employment for the employers and other firms:—Held, that he was entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, on the basis of 50 per cent. of his weekly earnings under the engagement; but was not entitled to anything in respect of the casual work. Held, by COLLINS, L.J., that mere discontinuous casual attendances and unconnected acts of employment with intervals, however short, do not constitute employment within the meaning of Schedule I. clause 1 of the Act. Hathaway v. Argus Printing Co., 70 L. J. Q.B. 12; [1901] 1 Q.B. 96; 83 L. T. 465; 49 W. R. 113; 64 J. P. 804—C.A.

— "Grade"—"Employment by same employer"—Interruptions—"Illness or other unavoidable cause."—The provisions of clause (2)(a) in Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, that where it is impracticable to compute the remuneration regard may be had to the average weekly amount which during the twelve months previous to the accident was being earned by a person in the same grade employed at the same work by the same employer, or, if there is no person so employed, by a person in the same grade employed in the same class of employment and in the same district, are intended to supply a guide and not a fetter; and there is no obligation to adopt the average weekly earnings so arrived at as the basis of computation, but personal considerations applicable to the particular workman may also be taken into account. Perry v. Wright; Cain v. Leyland & Co.; Bailey v. Kenworthy; Gough v. Crawshaw Brothers, Cyfartha, Lim., 77 L. J. K.B. 286; [1908] 1 K.B. 441—C.A.

The word "grade" in clause (2) (a) refers to the particular rank in the hierarchy of labour occupied by the workman, and not to good or bad specimens of that rank. Thus, in arriving at the average weekly earnings of a casual dock labourer it is a wrong method to divide casual dock labourers into two grades, one of good and the other of bad workmen. Ib.

In calculating the average weekly earnings of a workman in the employment of the same employer for the period of twelve months previous to the accident, days during which no work was done through accidents to the machinery or enforced holidays ought not to be taken into account in arriving at the average wage. Ib.

Where a collier was by an accident incapacitated for work in respect of which he was paid weekly compensation by his employers, and he subsequently got better and was by the same employers offered and accepted light employment at agreed weekly wages, and whilst engaged in such light employment—namely, carrying batteries in the mine—met with a fatal accident, it was held that the light employment was as a matter of fact a grade of work, and must be treated as such, and that the compensation for the first accident was no part of the earnings in such grade. Ib.

Per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., and FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.—The meaning and effect of Schedule I. (1) and (2) considered and explained. Ib.

— In Same Employment during Previous Twelve Months—Less Period.—In assessing compensation to a workman under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the period, whether it be the twelve months prior to the injury or any less period, to be taken into consideration for the purpose of computing his average weekly earnings under section 1 (b) of Schedule I. of the Act must be one period of substantially continuous and consecutive employment by the master in whose employment the workman is at the date of the injury. Jones v. Ocean Coal Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 731; [1899] 2 Q.B. 124; 80 L. T. 582; 47 W. R. 484—C.A.

At a date twelve months prior to the injury to a workman he was in the employment of the employer by whom he was employed at the date of the injury, and so continued for some months, until in consequence of a strike the employment was duly terminated. The strike continued for some months, and at its termination the workman resumed employment with the same employer, but upon terms different from those of the previous employment, and so continued until the date of the injury:—Held, that compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, must be assessed upon the basis of the workman's average weekly earnings, not during the previous twelve months, but during the period of employment subsequent to the strike only. Ib.

— "Employment of the same employer."—A workman employed as a casual dock labourer to work for a day met with an accident in the course of his employment. He was paid 8s. 3d. for the work done by him up to the time of the accident, being at the rate of so much an hour for the number of hours he had worked. There was no evidence that the workman had ever before, or would again, work for the employers.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge made an award in the workman's favour for 50 per cent of 18s., which the Judge found to be the average weekly earnings of an ordinary casual dock labourer in the port of Bristol (where the workman worked), taking one week with another throughout the year:—Held, that the award was wrong, for, there being materials before the County Court Judge upon which it was possible for him to find the weekly earnings of the workman in the employment of the employers in whose employment the accident happened, he was bound, in accordance with the provision of Schedule I. clause 1 (b) of the Act, to assess the amount of compensation upon the basis of those earnings, and was not entitled to take into consideration what the workman might possibly earn in the employment of other employers. Bartlett v. Tutton, 71 L. J. K.B. 52; [1902] 1 K.B. 72; 85 L. T. 531; 50 W. R. 149; 66 J. P. 196—C.A.

— Before Accident—Fall in Rate of Wages—Partial Recovery—Wages Workman Able to Earn after Accident.—A workman employed as a haulier in a colliery was totally incapacitated for work by reason of personal injury caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. His average weekly earnings as a haulier before the accident were 34s., and his employers after the accident continued to make him, as compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, weekly payments of 17s. a week, being the maximum compensation under the Act. The workman, having after a time partially recovered from his injury, was taken back by his employers into their employment at light work as a lamp-man at weekly wages of 29s. 5d. a week. At that time the wages of hauliers had fallen to 29s. 5d. a week. The employers having refused to pay the workman any sum as compensation in addition to his wages of 29s. 5d. a week, the workman filed a request for arbitration in the County Court. The County Court Judge was of opinion that, in determining the amount of compensation, if any, which should be awarded to the workman, the proper principle to be adopted was that the basis—that is, the average weekly earnings on which the amount of compensation was originally fixed—should be varied to the extent of the variation at the time in the wages earned by persons in similar employment to that in which the workman was engaged prior to the accident, and he refused to award the workman any compensation in addition to the weekly wages he was earning at the time:—Held, on appeal, that the principle adopted by the County Court Judge was wrong, and that the case must be remitted to him for reconsideration, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. James v. Ocean Coal Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 915; [1904] 2 K.B. 213; 90 L. T. 834; 52 W. R. 497; 68 J. P. 431; 20 T. L. R. 483—C.A.

— Workman Passing from Lower to Higher Grade in Same Employment during Previous Twelve Months.—The provision in section 1, sub-section (b) of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, that where total or partial incapacity for work results from an injury, the subject of compensation under the Act, the amount of compensation shall be a weekly payment during the incapacity, after the second week, not exceeding 50 per cent. of the workman's average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months, "if he has been so long employed," means if he has been so long employed in the employment of the same employer. Price v. Marsden, 68 L. J. Q.B. 307; [1899] 1 Q.B. 493; 80 L. T. 15; 47 W. R. 274—C.A.

Where the workman has during the previous twelve months been employed in the employment of the same employer, compensation in case of personal injury must be based upon his average weekly earnings during the whole twelve months, although during the twelve months he may have passed into a higher grade of employment at higher weekly wages. Ib.

— Continuity of Employment—Miner Employed by Contractors Passing into Employment of Mine Owners.—A miner employed by a contractor in a coal mine was dismissed from his employment on October 7. On Friday, October 9, he got employment from the coalmaster in the same mine. On Monday, October 12, he was injured in the course of his employment. In a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, against his employer, —Held (Lord Young dissenting), that in estimating his average weekly earnings, his earnings under the contractor could not be taken into account. Hunter v. Baird, 7 F. 304—Ct. of Sess.

— Partial Incapacity—Workman in Receipt of Same Wages after as before Accident.—A workman, who was so injured as to necessitate the amputation of a thumb, on return to work for the same employers was engaged on a different class of work, but was paid the same amount of wages a week as he received before the accident:—Held, that there was no evidence of partial incapacity for work to justify an award for any weekly payment under clauses 1 (b) and 2 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Irons v. Davis, 68 L. J. Q.B. 673; [1899] 2 Q.B. 330; 80 L. T. 673; 47 W. R. 616—C.A.

— Workman Earning same Wages with same Employers as before Accident—Enforcing Decree.—A workman obtained a decree under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, awarding him 17s. per week compensation "until further orders of the Court." Thereafter he accepted employment with the same employers and was paid 34s. per week, being the same wages as before the accident, and continued to be so employed and paid for a considerable period, during which no payments under the decree were made, and no steps under the Act were taken by the employers to have the decree for weekly payments reviewed or terminated. Having left their employment, the workman sought to enforce the weekly payments decreed for from the date of the decree:—Held, that the workman was not entitled to payment under the decree for the time he was earning full wages. Beath & Keay v. Ness, 6 F. 168—Ct. of Sess.

— Amount of Compensation.—In fixing the amount of compensation in cases of partial incapacity, the arbitrator may, if on the evidence he sees fit, give as compensation the whole amount of the difference between the average earnings of the workman before the injury and the average amount of his earnings after the injury, provided that it does not exceed 50 per cent. of the average earnings before the injury, and does not exceed 1*l.* a week. Geary v. Dixon, 4 F. 1143—Ct. of Sess. s.p. Parker v. Dixon, 4 F. 1147—Ct. of Sess. s.p. Corbet v. Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., 5 F. 782—Ct. of Sess.*

Break in Employment—Inability to Work.]

—A workman was employed by a firm of coal-owners for over twelve months prior to August 16, 1901, the engagement being terminable at the will of either party. On that day he was injured in the course of his employment, and thereafter, from August 31 until his recovery on October 15, 1901, he was unable to work, and was paid compensation by his employers. On October 15, having resumed his former employment, he worked for two hours, when he was again accidentally injured:—Held, (Lord Young dissentiente), that the Act contemplated a substantially continuous employment, that the period during which the workman was unable to work constituted a break in his employment; and that the workman was entitled to compensation in respect of the second injury on the footing that he had been in the employment only from the date of his resuming work on October 15, 1901. Gibb v. Dunlop, 4 F. 971—Ct. of Sess.

A workman, whose death resulted from personal injury caused by an accident in the course of his employment, was, during the course of the three years preceding the injury, employed by the same employer, in whose service he was at the time of the injury, for two separate continuous periods of employment, one period of employment being at the commencement of the three years, after which there was a break in the employment, and the second period immediately preceding the injury:—Held, that compensation to the workman's dependants must under clause 1 (a) (i) of the First Schedule of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, be assessed upon the basis of his average weekly earnings during the continuous period of employment immediately preceding the injury only. Appleby v. Horseley Co. (No. 1), 68 L. J. Q.B. 892; [1899] 2 Q.B. 521; 80 L. T. 853; 47 W. R. 614—C.A.

Total or Partial Incapacity for Work—Weekly Payment, Fixing Amount of—Earnings, Meaning of—Review of Weekly Payment.]

—In fixing the amount of the weekly payment to be made to a workman in proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in the case of his total or partial incapacity for work resulting from injury, the sole matter to be regarded—apart from any payment not being wages which he may receive from the employer in respect of the injury during the period of incapacity—is the difference between the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident. The fact that the average weekly earnings of the workman after the accident would have been greater but for the injury cannot be taken into consideration. Irons v. Davis (68 L. J. Q.B. 673; [1899] 2 Q.B. 330) and Chandler v. Smith (68 L. J. Q.B. 909; [1899] 2 Q.B. 506) followed. Pomphrey v.

Southwark Press, 70 L. J. K.B. 48; [1901] 1 K.B. 86; 83 L. T. 468; 65 J. P. 148—C.A.

Per A. L. SMITH, M.R.—Loss of tuition* by an apprentice is not the subject of compensation under the Act. Per STIRLING, L.J.—The value of the tuition received by an apprentice during his apprenticeship is too vague to be included in the expression "earnings" in clause 2 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Ib.

Semble, incidental advantages derived from his employment and capable of being estimated in money, such as food, clothing, or a house rent free, may be included in the workman's earnings. Ib.

"Earnings"—Deductions—Railway Guard—Lodging Allowance.]

—A goods guard, in the employment of a railway company, who had frequently in the course of his duty to lodge away from home, was under the terms of his employment entitled, when he did so, to receive a specified money allowance for board and lodging, the object of the allowance being to cover the guard's out-of-pocket expenses, and its amount about equal to the reasonable cost of board and lodging. No enquiry was ever made as to the actual expenses incurred by the guard, and the guard was entitled to the allowance even although he lodged and boarded with a friend without any expense to himself:—Held, that the allowance, being a payment to which the guard was entitled on the happening of certain events, whether he had incurred any expenses or not, came within the meaning of the word "earnings" in clause 1 (a) (i) of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Midland Railway v. Sharpe, 73 L. J. K.B. 666; [1904] A.C. 349; 91 L. T. 181; 53 W. R. 114; 20 T. L. R. 546—H.L. (E.)

Uniform Supplied to—Property in Uniform in Railway Company.]

—A railway guard, in addition to his wages, was supplied by the railway company with a complete uniform each year. The property in the uniform remained in the railway company:—Held, that the value of the use of the uniform was part of the guard's "earnings" within the meaning of clause 1 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Great Northern Railway v. Dawson, 74 L. J. K.B. 271; [1905] 1 K.B. 331; 92 L. T. 145; 53 W. R. 309; 21 T. L. R. 193—C.A.

Lamp Oil Supplied to Miner.]

—"Earnings" in Schedule I. clause (1) (a) (i) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, means the actual amount, whether in money or in kind, which the workman receives from his employers. Houghton v. Sutton Heath and Lea Green Colliery Co., 70 L. J. K.B. 61; [1901] 1 K.B. 93; 83 L. T. 472; 49 W. R. 196; 65 J. P. 134—C.A.

The average weekly earnings of a miner, who suffered injury from an accident in the course of his employment which resulted in his death, were 1*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* a week, but a deduction of 6*d.* a week was made for oil supplied by his employers for the lamp used by the miner in his employment, so that the average amount of money actually received by him from his employers was 1*l.* 10*s.* 5*d.* only:—Held, in assessing compensation to the miner's dependants under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, that the compensation must be computed upon the basis that the miner's average weekly earnings were 1*l.* 10*s.* 11*d.* a week. Ib.

— — — Tools.—In calculating the amount of compensation due under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in respect of an accident to the workman no deduction should be made for tools or other necessary equipment of a workman, for the supply of which he has been called upon to pay his employer. Houghton v. Sutton Heath and Lea Green Colliery Co. (70 L. J. K.B. 61; [1901] 1 K.B. 93) approved. Abram Coal Co. v. Southern, 72 L. J. K.B. 691; [1903] A.C. 306; 89 L. T. 103—H.L. (E.)

Offer by Employer to Continue Wages Previously Earned.—Employers in whose service a workman, earning wages at the rate of 16*s.* a week, had sustained injuries resulting in the loss of an arm, offered to retain him in the same employment at the same wages. This offer was declined by the workman. The arbitrator found that the loss of his arm diminished the applicant's capacity to earn wages in the employment in question, and awarded compensation at the rate of 6*s.* a week:—Held, that the refusal of the workman to accept the offer of employment did not exclude his right to compensation, if otherwise well founded, and award sustained. Fraser v. Great North of Scotland Railway, 8 F. 908—Ct. of Sess.

Wage-earning Capacity as Affected by Age and Decrease in Rate of Wages in Trade.—In fixing the amount of compensation to be paid to a miner who had been totally incapacitated for work by an accident, the arbitrator, in view of the fact, first, that the workman had reached an age (sixty-four) when full wages as a miner could not be earned, and, secondly, that there had been a general fall in the rate of miners' wages subsequent to the accident, awarded a sum less than half the workman's wages before the accident:—Held, that it was incompetent for the arbitrator to take these considerations into account in fixing compensation. Jamieson v. Fife Coal Co., 5 F. 958—Ct. of Sess.

Capacity of Workman at Date of Application—Capacity at Date of Hearing—Jurisdiction of Arbitrator.—In an application under section 12 of the First Schedule of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to review weekly payments made to an injured workman during incapacity, the arbitrator is not bound to regard solely the state of the workman's capacity at the date of the hearing of the application, but has jurisdiction and is bound to enquire into the workman's condition at the date when the application is filed, and semble also during the period between the filing and the hearing of the application. Morton v. Woodward, 71 L. J. K.B. 786; [1902] 2 K.B. 276; 86 L. T. 878; 51 W. R. 54; 66 J. P. 660—C.A.

Weekly Wages Fixed by Contract.—A workman was engaged for a fixed weekly wage. He entered upon his work on a Saturday, and worked for the whole of the following calendar week, at the end of which his employment was terminated by his employers in consequence of an injury resulting in total incapacity, and entitling him to compensation under the Act:—Held, that the fixed weekly wage was the basis for determining the amount of the weekly payment due to the workman as compensation under the Act. Brown v. Cunningham, 6 F. 997—Ct. of Sess.

Earnings in Business carried on by Workman on his own Account Cannot be Excluded.—Upon an application by the employer under Schedule I., clause 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to review the weekly payments directed to be made to a workman by an award under the Act upon the ground that the earnings of the workman are then such that the weekly payments should be ended or diminished, the arbitrator cannot exclude from consideration the average amount which the workman is able to earn in a business carried on by himself. Norman & Burt v. Walder, 73 L. J. K.B. 461; [1904] 2 K.B. 27; 90 L. T. 531; 52 W. R. 402; 68 J. P. 401; 20 T. L. R. 427—C.A.

Full Wages Paid after Injury.—The mere fact that a workman who had been injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment is paid by his employer the same wages after as he received before the accident happened, does not conclusively shew that he has not been disabled for a period of at least two weeks from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed within section 1, sub-section 2 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, inasmuch as part of the wages so paid may not have been earned by him, but may have been paid to him by his employer as a matter of grace. Chandler v. Smith, 68 L. J. Q.B. 909; [1899] 2 Q.B. 506; 81 L. T. 817; 47 W. R. 677—C.A.

Employment for More than One Week but Wages Earned during One Week Only.—A workman in the course of his employment earned 16*s.* 2*d.* in the first week, and in the second week worked for two hours but earned nothing, and was then injured:—Held, that 16*s.* 2*d.* represented his "average weekly earnings." Nelson v. Kerr & Mitchell, 3 F. 893—Ct. of Sess.

Workman Employing Unpaid Assistant.—A miner who was paid according to his output employed his son as an assistant in his work, but paid him nothing for his services. The usual wage for such assistance was 2*s.* 9*d.* per day. The miner having been injured in the course of his employment claimed compensation:—Held, that in estimating his average weekly earnings nothing fell to be deducted in respect of the gratuitous assistance given by the son. Ib.

Period of Employment—Irregularity.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the injured workman had worked continuously for the employers for a period of eighteen days previous to the accident, and that he had worked for them, not continuously, but irregularly, for a period of twelve months previous to the accident. The County Court Judge found as a fact that the employment commenced at the beginning of the period of eighteen days, and he made an award of compensation on the basis of the applicant's average weekly earnings during that period:—Held, that the County Court Judge had made his award on the right basis. Jones v. Ocean Coal Co. (68 L. J. Q.B. 731; [1899] 2 Q.B. 124) followed. Giles v. Belford, 72 L. J. K.B. 569; [1903] 1 K.B. 843; 88 L. T. 754; 51 W.R. 692; 67 J.P. 399—C.A.

A workman, a dock labourer, sustained an accident after being in the service of his employer, as stevedore, for three and a-half days. During the previous twelve months he had been employed by various other stevedores as well as on a number of occasions by the stevedore in whose service he was at the time of the accident, who had engaged him in every week except four during that period, but sometimes only for one day. In assessing the amount of compensation payable to the workman, the County Court Judge added the various sums he had received as wages from such stevedores during the whole period of twelve months, divided the total amount by the number of weeks, and awarded half of such weekly amount as compensation. The workman appealed and claimed that he was entitled to compensation as if he had been in the master's employment for at least two weeks at the same rate of daily wages as he was earning when the accident happened:—Held, dismissing the appeal, that he was not so entitled. Williams v. Poulson, 68 J. P. 757—C.A.

Workman Employed by the Hour.—There is no presumption for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, that a casual labourer employed by the hour will continue in his employment for more than one hour. Case v. Colonial Wharves, 53 W. R. 514—C.A.

No Work Done—No Wages Earned.—A miner was killed after he had descended to work in the pit in which he was employed, but before he had actually commenced to work and before he had earned anything:—Held, that his widow was entitled to compensation under the Act, and, the average weekly earnings of the deceased being nil, that she was entitled to the alternative sum of 150*l.* under the First Schedule of the Act. Leonard v. Baird, 3 F. 890—Ct. of Sess.

Setting off Costs against Weekly Payment.—An employer who has been found liable to pay compensation by way of weekly payments under the Act to a workman is not entitled to set off against those payments a sum awarded to him as costs against a workman in an application for the diminution of the weekly payments. Rosewell Gas Coal Co. v. M'Vicar, 7 F. 290—Ct. of Sess.

Redemption of Weekly Payments by Payment of Lump Sum—Application for Redemption Limiting the Amount of the Lump Sum.—An arbitrator has no jurisdiction under clause 13 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to entertain an application by an employer for redemption of his liability for weekly payments under the Act by payment of a lump sum where by the application the employer limits the amount of the lump sum which he is willing to pay. Castle Spinning Co. v. Atkinson, 74 L. J. K.B. 265; [1905] 1 K.B.

(17) Agreement to Pay Compensation.

Agreement not in Writing—Registration of Memorandum Thereof.—Per the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and LORD LOW.—An agreement to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, though not in writing, may be enforced under the Act by lodging a memorandum of agreement and getting the authority of the sheriff to register it in terms of the Act; and this may be done although six months from the date of the accident have elapsed. Cochrane v. Traill, 2 F. 794—Ct. of Sess.

Action to Enforce Agreement to Pay Compensation.—Per the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK and LORD TRAYNER.—An action to enforce an agreement to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act is incompetent. Id.

Agreement by Letter.—A workman, who had been injured in the course of his employment, on March 15 received from his employers a letter in these terms: "We admit liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and are prepared to pay compensation at the rate of 12*s.* 8*d.* during incapacity in terms thereof." The employers, after paying compensation at the specified rate for some months, discontinued the payment on the ground that the workman had recovered. The workman then applied for arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, maintaining that he was still disabled as the result of the accident, or otherwise that he was entitled to a declaration of his employers' liability in the event of supervening incapacity:—Held, that the letter of March 15 was an agreement, of which a memorandum might have been, and might still be, recorded under section 8 of the Second Schedule to the Act of 1897; that the parties having come to an agreement, procedure by arbitration was excluded; and consequently that the application for arbitration fell to be dismissed. Dunlop v. Rankin & Blackmore, 4 F. 203—Ct. of Sess.

Weekly Payment—Application by Employer for Review—Order Ending Weekly Payment—Second Application for Review by Workman—Jurisdiction to Entertain Application—Res Judicata.—A workman injured by an accident signed an agreement, which was duly recorded in the County Court, by which he was to receive a weekly payment during incapacity, "or until the same should be ended, diminished, increased or redeemed in pursuance of the said Act." On an application to review made by the employer, the arbitrator made an award that the weekly payments should be ended. The workman did not appeal. The workman, on a recrudescence of his injury, made an application for a review and increase of the weekly payment:—Held, that the award on the first application for review was final, and no second application for review could be entertained. Nicholson v. Piper, 76 L. J. K.B. 856; [1907] A.C. 215; 97 L. T. 119; 23 T. L. R. 620—H.L. (E.)

Quare, as to the legal effect of making a nominal award in order to keep the applicant's rights alive. Id.

Application to Review Weekly Payment—Change in Circumstances—Ability to Work—Decision on Medical Evidence—Res Judicata.]

—A workman was accidentally injured in the course of his employment, and a memorandum of agreement was filed for the payment by the employers to the workman of a weekly sum of 15s. during incapacity. On an application by the employers for a review of the weekly payment on the ground that the workman was able to work, the County Court Judge, acting on the weight of the medical evidence, reduced the weekly payment to a penny, leaving it open for the workman to apply again. On an application by the workman for a further review, the County Court Judge refused to hear fresh medical evidence on behalf of the workman, and held that the matter was res judicata.—Held, that the doctrine of res judicata was not applicable, and that, notwithstanding Crossfield & Sons v. Tavian (69 L. J. Q.B. 790; [1900] 2 Q.B. 629), the County Court Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the workman's application for a review. Sharman v. Holliday, 73 L. J. K.B. 176; [1904] 1 K.B. 235; 90 L. T. 46; 68 J. P. 151; 20 T. L. R. 135—C.A.

Indemnity—Contractor and Sub-contractor—Right to Sue.]—A contractor for the construction of a building entered into a contract with a sub-contractor whereby the latter agreed to execute part of the work. A workman in the employment of the sub-contractor was injured by an accident while at work on the building, and became entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. He claimed compensation under section 4 of the Act from the contractor, who agreed to pay him a certain weekly sum during incapacity. The sub-contractor was no party to this agreement. The contractor claimed to be indemnified by the sub-contractor under section 4 in respect of his liability to the workman, and brought an action in the High Court to enforce the indemnity. The sub-contractor contended that the indemnity could only be enforced by means of an arbitration under the Act.—Held, that, as the amount of the weekly payment to the workman had been settled by agreement, and there had been no arbitration proceedings to settle the amount, the action was maintainable. Evans v. Cook, [1905] 1 K.B. 53; 53 W. R. 81; 21 T. L. R. 42—C.A.

"Compensation paid under this Act"—Indemnity—Proceeding—Notice of Claim.]—By section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, a workman may under certain circumstances "proceed" either against his employer for compensation or against a third person for damages, and "if compensation be paid under this Act" the employer is entitled to be indemnified by the third person.—Held, that compensation may be "paid under this Act" within the meaning of section 6, although it is paid under an agreement between the workman and his employer, and not under an award in an arbitration. Thompson v. North-Eastern Marine Engineering Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 222; [1903] 1 K.B. 428; 88 L. T. 239—Kennedy, J.

Semble, a workman "proceeds" against his employer within the meaning of section 6 when he gives notice of claim under section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act. Ib.

Memorandum of Agreement—Registration.]

In an application to the sheriff for special warrant to register a memorandum of agreement under the Act, the applicant admitted that he had resumed work and was earning higher wages than before the accident, and that nothing was due to him in name of compensation at the date of the application; but he averred that in consequence of his injuries he was liable to be incapacitated for work from time to time, and he claimed to be entitled, in view of probable future claims against his employers, to have the memorandum registered. The employers admitted that they and the applicant had come to an agreement as to compensation under the Act, but claimed that the memorandum ought not to be registered as the agreement was at an end owing to the applicant's recovery.—Held, that the terms of the agreement being admitted, the memorandum should be registered, it being open to the employers to have their future liability fixed by applying for a review of the weekly payment under section 12 of the First Schedule to the Act. Cammick v. Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., 4 F. 198—Ct. of Sess.

In answer to a petition by a workman for a special warrant to register a memorandum of a verbal agreement to pay compensation at the rate of 16s. a week under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the employers, while not denying the agreement, objected that it had been made under essential error as to the rights of the parties under the Act, and that the sum agreed to be paid was more than half the workman's average weekly earnings.—Held, that the employers' objections were irrelevant as answers to the petition for warrant to register an agreement which was not denied. Macdonald v. Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Co., 8 F. 8—Ct. of Sess.

As to what is the proper course if a memorandum is presented proceeding upon a written agreement to pay a sum beyond the maximum amount which in any view of the facts could be awarded under the Act, quære. Ib.

—Application for Arbitration—Review of Weekly Payments.]—A workman who had been injured on October 12, 1904, received weekly compensation from his employers under an agreement between them and him until January 26, 1905, when the employers stopped the payments. The workman thereupon applied for a warrant to record a memorandum of the agreement, and the memorandum was ultimately recorded. Pending this application the employers applied to the arbitrator to find that their liability to compensate the workman came to an end on January 25, 1905, and to grant an order declaring his right to compensation to have ended at that date, or alternatively to ascertain and fix such weekly payments as might be due to the workman under the Act, and to make an award finding him entitled to such weekly payments, beginning the first payment on February 1, 1905, for the preceding week.—Held, that the employers' application was incompetent in respect—first, that, as an original application for arbitration, it was excluded by the agreement of which a memorandum had been recorded; and secondly, that, as framed, it could not be treated as an application for review of the weekly payments under the agreement. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co. v. Sinclair, [1907] S.C. 1071—Ct. of Sess.

— Finality.—The decision of a sheriff granting, or refusing to grant, a warrant to record a memorandum of agreement under the Workmen's Compensation Act is final. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co. v. Sinclair, [1907] S.C. 3—Ct. of Sess.

— "Genuineness"—Registration—Time for Registering.—There is no limit of time fixed by the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, within which the parties may apply to register a memorandum of agreement for compensation under Schedule II, clause 8. Blake v. Midland Railway, 73 L. J. K.B. 179; [1904] 1 K.B. 503; 90 L. T. 433; 68 J. P. 215; 20 T. L. R. 191—D.

The genuineness of the memorandum of the agreement is not affected by the fact that at the date of the application to register the memorandum, the agreement itself is, owing to altered circumstances, no longer applicable. Ib.

Record of Memorandum by Registrar—Dispute as to Genuineness of Memorandum—Reference to Judge—Appeal.—In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, where there is a dispute as to the genuineness of a memorandum of agreement with regard to the amount of compensation payable to the workman, and the memorandum is not recorded by the Registrar, but the matter is referred to the Judge, if the latter hears evidence and as a result orders the memorandum to be recorded, he is acting in a judicial capacity and not merely as adviser to his Registrar, and consequently an appeal will lie from his decision upon a point of law under section 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888. Johnston v. Mew, Langton & Co., 97 L. T. 308; 23 T. L. R. 607—D. Affirmed in C.A., 24 T. L. R. 175.

Order for Registration of Memorandum of Agreement—Ministerial Act.—The order of the sheriff for the registration of a memorandum of agreement for compensation is a purely administrative act. Hughes v. Thistle Chemical Co., [1907] S.C. 607—Ct. of Sess.

Per LORD SALVESSEN.—Wherever there is a bona fide dispute as to whether a verbal agreement in terms of the memorandum presented for registration has been in fact entered into, the sheriff should decline to order the memorandum to be recorded. Ib.

Warrant to Register Memorandum of Agreement—Whether Order Granting or Refusing Warrant is Appealable.—The granting or refusing to grant a warrant by a sheriff (whose functions correspond to those of a County Court Judge) authorising the registration of a memorandum of an agreement, whose genuineness has been disputed, is a ministerial act and cannot be appealed from. Binning v. Easton, 8 F. 407—Ct. of Sess.

Unregistered Agreement to Pay Compensation During Incapacity—Stoppage of Payments by Employer on Ground that Incapacity had Ceased—Arbitration Proceedings by Workman.—In August, 1903, the employers, who admitted their liability to pay compensation under the Act to A, one of their workmen, agreed to pay him at the rate of 12s. 5d. a week "during the period of his incapacity." The agreement was not recorded under the Act. The employers made payments in terms of the agreement down to December 14, 1903. They then ceased to make payments, alleging that A's incapacity had ceased, and offering him work at full wages, which he declined. In March, 1905, A instituted arbitration proceedings, in which he asked for an order that the employers should pay him compensation under the Act at the rate of 12s. 5d. a week as from December 14, 1903, until further orders of the Court. The sheriff, as arbitrator, found that A's incapacity had ceased by December 14, 1903, but ordered the employers to make payment to A at the rate of 12s. 5d. a week as from December 14, 1903, to July 12, 1905—the date of the award; and held that the employers were not liable for any future compensation. In an appeal by the employers, — Held, that the sheriff, as arbitrator, had wrongly awarded compensation as from December 14, 1903, to the date of his award in respect that—first, if A's application for compensation was made under the agreement, the sheriff, as arbitrator, had under the Act no power to enforce the agreement as to arrears of compensation due under it; and secondly, if the application was for the purpose of settling compensation by arbitration, A was not entitled to the compensation awarded, the sheriff having found in fact that A's incapacity had ceased by December 14, 1903. Colville v. Tigue, 8 F. 179—Ct. of Sess.

Whether an unrecorded agreement to pay compensation under the Act remains in force until formally terminated or modified in terms of the Act, quære. Semble (per LORD LOW) that it does not. Ib.

Rectification of Register.—Baird v. Stevenson, [1907] S.C. 1259—Ct. of Sess.

(18) Arbitration.

(i.) Powers of Arbitrator.

Condition Precedent to Jurisdiction of Arbitrator—Question as to Liability to Pay Compensation or as to Amount or Duration of Compensation—Question Settled by Agreement.—A workman having been incapacitated from work in consequence of personal injury caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, his employers paid him regularly after the second week from the accident a weekly sum of one-half the amount of his average weekly earnings. About five months after the accident a letter was written to the employers by a solicitor on behalf of the workman, giving them notice of the accident and of the workman's claim for compensation, and in reply the employers wrote asking what sum would be accepted in lieu of further weekly payments. In the course of the correspondence the employers wrote that they would arrange for a medical examination of the workman, and would continue the weekly payments during his incapacity for work. The workman was accordingly examined by a medical man on behalf of the employers. The negotiations for payment of a lump sum in settlement having proved unsuccessful, the workman commenced arbitration proceedings in the County Court. At the hearing before the County Court Judge the employers contended that at the date of the filing of the request for arbitration no question had arisen as to the liability to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, or as to the amount or duration of compensation, and, in the alternative, that all questions between the parties had been settled by agreement prior to the request being filed. The County Court Judge made an award in favour of the workman for a weekly payment of one-half his average weekly earnings during incapacity. Upon appeal by the employers,—Held, that the County Court Judge had no jurisdiction to make the award, for upon the true construction of section 1, subsection 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the County Court Judge to entertain arbitration proceedings under the Act, that a question has arisen as to the liability to pay compensation under the Act or as to the amount or duration of compensation, and that no such question had arisen between the parties. Field v. Longden, 71 L. J. K.B. 120; [1902] 1 K.B. 47; 85 L. T. 571; 50 W. R. 212; 66 J. P. 291—C.A.

Per CURIAM.—The County Court Judge ought upon the evidence to have found as a fact that there was an agreement between the parties. Ib.

Per COLLINS, M.R.—The proper course for the workman under the circumstances, if he was in doubt as to his position, was to propose to the employers to have a memorandum filed in the County Court in accordance with clause 8 of the Second Schedule to the Act. Ib.

Application for Arbitration before Dispute—Competency.]—A workman who had been injured filed his application for arbitration two days prior to the date at which he would become entitled to compensation under the Act.—Held, that as at the date when the application was filed no dispute had arisen between the parties as to compensation, and as the compensation was not in arrears, the conditions precedent to an arbitration under the Act were wanting, and accordingly that the application must be dismissed. Caledon Shipbuilding and Engineering Co. v. Kennedy, 8 F. 960—Ct. of Sess.

Medical Examination of Workman.]—An arbitrator has no power to make it a condition of an order that a workman shall submit himself for examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner that the employer shall pay the expense of the attendance at such examination of a medical practitioner on the workman's behalf. Osborn v. Vicars, Son & Maxim, 69 L. J. Q.B. 606; [1900] 2 Q.B. 91; 82 L. T. 491—C.A.

Application while Payments being Regularly Made—Competency.]—A workman who was injured on September 5, 1905, was regularly paid by his employers the maximum weekly compensation due to him under the Act, on the footing of total incapacity, from a fortnight after the date of his injury until January 23, 1906. The employers having on several occasions when making the weekly payments intimated to the workman that, in their opinion and if that of their medical adviser, he had recovered, and that the weekly payments would in a short time be stopped, the workman, on January 30, 1906, prior to the payment of the weekly sum due on that day, presented a petition for arbitration under the Act. There was no agreement between the parties as to compensation which could have been recorded. The employers objected to the competency of the petition, but the sheriff, holding that a question had arisen as to the continuance of the workman's incapacity, repelled the objection, and after a proof awarded compensation:—Held, that the petition was incompetent and must be dismissed in respect (a) that at the date when it was presented no question had arisen between the parties as to the duration of the compensation within the meaning of section 1, subsection 3 of the Act, and (b) that the mere fact that there was no agreement between the parties capable of registration did not shew that a question had arisen between them so as to entitle the workman to present the petition. Gourlay v. Sweeney, 8 F. 965—Ct. of Sess.

Allowance on Basis of Total Incapacity—Subsequent Earning Capacity of Workman—Discretion of Arbitrator as to Reducing Amount of Allowance.]—In fixing the amount of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in cases of partial incapacity, the arbitrator must on the facts of each case exercise his discretion on the question whether or not he will award the maximum sum allowed by the Act; he cannot lay down and act upon a hard-and-fast rule that, unless grounds are shewn for varying the same, he will award the maximum in all cases. Webster v. Sharp & Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 141; [1904] 1 K.B. 218; 89 L. T. 627; 52 W. R. 275; 68 J. P. 140; 20 T. L. R. 121—C.A.

Nominal Award of One Penny per Week—Competency.]—In an application by an employer to have a weekly payment to an injured workman reviewed and ended,—Held, that it is incompetent for the arbitrator, if either party objects, to postpone the determination of the question of compensation by making an interim nominal award of one penny per week. Clelland v. Singer Manufacturing Co., 7 F. 975—Ct. of Sess.

Average Weekly Earnings.]—Semble, that while the Act requires an arbitrator in fixing the amount of a weekly payment to have regard to the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident, and to the average amount he is earning after the accident, the latter is not conclusive as to the workman's wage-earning capacity. Ib.

Partial Incapacity—Discretion of Arbitrator.]—A workman who had been totally incapacitated by an accident, and whose average weekly earnings were 36s. 8d., was awarded under the Act a weekly payment of 18s. 4d., being 50 per cent. of his previous wages. His incapacity having partially ceased, he was taken back into his employers' service at a wage of 17s. per week, and his employers, in view of that change of circumstance, applied to the arbitrator to review the weekly payment of 18s. 4d. The arbitrator, in these circumstances, declined to diminish the existing payment. On appeal, the Court held that the arbitrator's award was not disconform to the Statute. Bryson v. Dunn & Stephen, 8 F. 226—Ct. of Sess.

Semble (per LORD M'LAREN), an arbitrator may not award such a sum as would, when added to the wages being earned, give the workman a larger weekly income than he was earning before the accident. Ib.

— In awarding compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for the partial incapacity of a workman, the arbitrator cannot lay down any general rule as to the amount to be awarded, but must decide each case on its merits. Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (73 L. J. K.B. 141; [1904] 1 K.B. 218) affirmed by consent upon terms. Webster v. Sharp & Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 776; [1905] A.C. 284; 92 L. T. 373—H.L. (E.)

Review of Weekly Payment—Date from which Payment may be Ended, Diminished, or Increased.—When an application under Schedule 1 (12) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to review a weekly payment under the Act, is brought before an arbitrator, he is bound to treat the agreement for, or award of, the weekly payment, as enforceable up to the date of his decision in the application, and can end, diminish, or increase the payment as from that date only (dissentiente the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK). Morton v. Woodward (71 L. J. K.B. 736; [1902] 2 K.B. 276) disapproved. Steel v. Oakbank Oil Co., 5 F. 244—Ct. of Sess.

— On an application under Schedule I. (12) of the Act to review a weekly payment, the arbitrator is bound to treat the agreement for, or award of, the weekly payment as enforceable up to the date of his decision (LORD M'LAREN dissenting). Steel v. Oakbank Oil Co. (5 F. 244) approved. Morton v. Woodward (71 L. J. K.B. 736; [1902] 2 K.B. 276) disapproved. Pumpherson Oil Co. v. Cavaney, 5 F. 963—Ct. of Sess.

In an application under paragraph 12 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to review a weekly payment under the Act, the arbitrator has power to end, diminish, or increase the payments only as from the date of his decision in the application. Steel v. Oakbank Oil Co. (5 F. 244) and Pumpherson Oil Co. v. Cavaney (5 F. 963) followed. Baird v. Stevenson, [1907] S. C. 1259—Ct. of Sess.

— In an application to have compensation, payable to an injured workman, ended or diminished, the arbitrator made a remit to a medical referee, who, on February 26, 1906, reported that the workman's wage-earning capacity would be fully restored by March 31. The arbitrator on February 27 ordered compensation to be continued till March 31 and to end at that date.—Held, that the arbitrator had no power to make such an order, in respect that his duty in assessing compensation was to have regard to the workman's present state, and that he was not entitled to pronounce an order the validity of which would depend on the workman's condition at a future date. Allan v. Spowart, 8 F. 811—Ct. of Sess.

Rights of Dependants—Allotment of Compensation-money.—When compensation is awarded under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to the dependants of a deceased workman, the arbitrator must make a definite allotment of the money for the benefit of each dependant, except so far as any dependant being of age and capable of making an agreement may agree to give up his or her share for the benefit of the other dependants. Manchester v. Carlton Iron Co., 89 L. T. 730; 52 W. R. 291; 68 J. P. 209; 20 T. L. R. 155—C.A.

Action against Employer, Failure of—Assessment of Compensation by the Judge—Estoppel.—Where, upon the dismissal of an action brought by a workman under age, by his next friend, against his employers, to recover damages in respect of personal injuries occasioned to the plaintiff by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, an application was made to the Judge who tried the action to assess compensation to the plaintiff under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 1, sub-s. 4, and the Judge accordingly awarded such compensation,—Held, that the plaintiff was estopped by the election to take such compensation and the award thereupon made from proceeding further with the action, and therefore a subsequent application by him for judgment or a new trial in the action could not be entertained. Isaacson v. New Grand, Lim. (72 L. J. K.B. 227; [1903] 1 K.B. 539), discussed. Neale v. Electric and Ordnance Accessories Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 974; [1906] 2 K.B. 558; 95 L. T. 592; 22 T. L. R. 782—C.A.

Application to State Case—Question of Law—Painting Work—Construction.—In an arbitration under the Act the sheriff found in fact that the employers were the contractors for the painting work on a building over thirty feet in height in course of construction, and that the workman had been injured while engaged in this painting work, and awarded compensation. The sheriff refused to state a Case on the question, "Whether the work on which the deceased had been engaged at the time of the accident was construction of the building in question in terms of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897?" on the ground that it was solely a question of fact.—Held, that he should state a Case on this question, as it was, or might involve, a question of law. Hobbs & Samuels v. Bradley, 2 F. 744—Ct. of Sess.

Refusal to State Case—Law or Fact.—A sheriff-substitute having held that on the facts proved, in proceedings before him as arbitrator under the Act, the injury received by a workman was not attributable to his "serious and wilful misconduct," refused to state a Case. The Court refused to order the sheriff-substitute to state a Case, inasmuch as, according to the facts as found by him, no question of law on the construction of the statute was raised. Glasgow and South-Western Railway v. Laidlaw, 2 F. 703—Ct. of Sess.

Arbitration before County Court Judge—Application for New Trial.—A County Court Judge has no power to entertain an application for a new trial of an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Moun- (ii.) Award.

Memorandum of—"Enforceable as a County Court judgment"—Judgment Summons—Committal Order.—Where an amount of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, has been ascertained under the Act by an arbitrator, and a memorandum thereof has been recorded under clause 8 of Schedule II. of the Act, the memorandum is enforceable by judgment summons and committal order under section 5 of the Debtors Act, 1869. Bailey v. Plant, 70 L. J. K.B. 63; [1901] 1 K.B. 31; 83 L. T. 459; 49 W. R. 103; 65 J. P. 52—C.A.

Right to Nominal Award to Preserve Claim.—A lad of seventeen, who had been temporarily incapacitated by the loss of the third finger of his left hand in consequence of an injury sustained in his employers' factory, received from his employers, for a number of weeks, eight shillings weekly, that being the full sum he would have earned had he been working. The employers then offered to receive him back, and as he did not return ceased making the payments. He then took work from a new employer, and thereafter claimed compensation under the Act from his former employers, in which proceedings he admitted he was then able to do all his old work:—Held, that the applicant was not entitled to such a declaration of the liability of his former employers as would preserve his rights in the event of supervening incapacity. Husband v. Campbell, 5 F. 1146—Ct. of Sess.

Award by Arbitrator Appointed by a County Court Judge—Appeal to Court of Appeal.—No appeal lies direct to the Court of Appeal from the award of an arbitrator appointed by a County Court Judge to assess a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Gibson v. Wormald & Walker, 73 L. J. K.B. 491; [1904] 2 K.B. 40; 91 L. T. 7; 52 W. R. 661; 68 J. P. 382; 20 T. L. R. 452—C.A.

Reviewing Award—"Incapacity for work."—A gasworks coal porter in the employment of a gas company was, in December, 1899, injured by an accident which resulted in the loss of four fingers of his left hand. His weekly wages were 41s. 9d., and the company agreed to pay him 1l. a week compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. In January, 1901, the company offered him employment as a gateman and timekeeper at weekly wages of 27s., which he refused. In April, 1901, at the instance of the company, the County Court Judge made an award reducing the weekly amount of compensation to 14s. 9d. Subsequently the workman accepted the employment which he had previously refused, but in consequence of his refusing to note down the times of arrival of the workmen he was dismissed. The workman thereupon made an application to the County Court Judge to increase the weekly payment of 14s. 9d., which was refused. More than a year later a further application was made to increase the weekly payment, when the Judge found that the workman had not since the accident been capable of earning wages as a gasworks porter, that he was capable of earning wages as a gatekeeper, timekeeper, watchman, or in any similar work, and that he had made reasonable efforts, but had been unable to get such employment. The Judge accordingly held that the workman was entitled to have the 1l. weekly compensation restored:—Held, that the County Court Judge was entitled to find that the workman's opportunity of finding employment had been narrowed in consequence of the accident, and that the weekly payment of 1l. should be restored. Clark v. Gas Light and Coke Co., 21 T. L. R. 184—C.A.

—Application—Change in Circumstances since Date of Award.—Clause 12 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that "any weekly payment may be reviewed at the request either of the employer or of the workman, and on such review may be ended, diminished, or increased," subject to a maximum provided in the Act, only applies to cases where there has been a change in the circumstances since the date when the award for payment of a weekly sum to the workman has been made. (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., hesitante.) Crossfield v. Tanian, 69 L. J. Q.B. 790; [1900] 2 Q.B. 629; 82 L. T. 818; 48 W. R. 609—C.A.

(19) Agreement to Scheme Certified by Registrar of Friendly Societies.

Assent of Workman—Right to Proceed Independently of Act.—Where a workman contracts with his employer under section 3, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, that the provisions of a scheme certified in accordance with that sub-section by the Registrar of Friendly Societies shall be substituted for the provisions of the Act, and afterwards receives injury arising out of and in the course of his employment, he cannot maintain an action against the employer under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, to recover damages in respect of the injury. Taylor v. Hamstead Colliery Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 469; [1904] 1 K.B. 838; 90 L. T. 363; 52 W. R. 417; 68 J. P. 300; 20 T. L. R. 338—C.A.

Receipt by Workman under Agreement of Maximum Compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897—Subsequent Action for Wages—Estoppel.—Where a workman has, by agreement between himself and his employer, received the maximum compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, during incapacity for work resulting from injury by accident arising out of his employment, he is not entitled in addition to sue the employer for wages under his contract of employment in respect of a period which is subsequent to the accident, and in respect of which he has received the compensation. Elliott v. Liggins, 71 L. J. K.B. 483; [1902] 2 K.B. 84; 87 L. T. 29; 50 W. R. 524—D.

Expiry by Effluxion of Time—Renewal Scheme Certified by Registrar.—A scheme of compensation was certified in November, 1898, by the Registrar of Friendly Societies under section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, as applicable to the defendants' workmen, and the plaintiff, who was a workman in the defendants' employment, agreed to come in under the scheme. The scheme expired at the end of 1903, and in December, 1903, a renewal scheme was certified by the Registrar, and the defendants posted up a notice that workmen might enrol under the scheme. The course adopted at the defendants' works was that a month's notice should be given if a workman wished to withdraw from the scheme. The workman had not given notice of withdrawal, but he did not enrol under the renewal scheme. The defendants deducted a certain sum from his wages as his contribution under the renewal scheme, upon the ground that the workman was bound by the renewal scheme until he gave notice that he would not be bound by it:—Held, that, the original scheme having expired, the workman was not bound by the renewal scheme unless the defendants proved that the workman had agreed to accept the new scheme. Wilson v. Ocean Coal Co.; Treharne v. Ocean Coal Co., 21 T. L. R. 621—C.A.

(20) Dependants.

Father of Workman in Workhouse.]—The meaning of the words "dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death," in section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is confined to actual dependence in fact upon the earnings of the workman. Consequently, the father of a workman who at the time of the death of the workman was being maintained in a workhouse, at the sole expense of guardians of the poor, is not within the meaning of the words. Rees v. Penrhyber Navigation Colliery Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 85; [1903] 1 K.B. 259; 87 L. T. 661; 51 W. R. 247; 67 J. P. 231; 1 L. G. R. 173—C.A.

Weekly Payments—Workman Returning to Work—Subsequent Death Resulting from Accident—Abandonment of Right—Independent Rights of Dependents.]—The right of dependants to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, where death ultimately results from the injury, is a separate and independent right and cannot be released by the workman; but, semble, in case of redemption of future weekly payments by the employer under Schedule I. clause 13, the amount so paid by way of redemption would properly be deducted from the maximum sum payable to dependants if death afterwards resulted from the injury. Williams v. Vauxhall Colliery Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 854; [1907] 2 K.B. 433; 97 L. T. 559; 23 T. L. R. 591—C.A.

Action for Damages by Person Found not Entitled to Compensation.]—A claimant who had been refused compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, as not being a dependant of the deceased workman, is not thereby barred from suing the deceased's employer at common law or under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880. McDonald v. Dunlop & Co., 7 F. 533—Ct. of Sess.

"Wholly or in part dependent."]—The question whether the members of the family of a workman who has been killed by an accident were "wholly or in part dependent" upon the workman's earnings at the time of his death is one of evidence for the arbitrator, whose award will not be disturbed in respect of amount, if the Court is satisfied that there was such evidence. The actual income of the person killed and the actual expenditure of the family are the basis for decision in each case, and no general standard can be applied. Main Colliery Co. v. Davies, 69 L. J. Q.B. 755; [1900] A.C. 358; 83 L. T. 83; 65 J. P. 20—H.L. (E.)

The respondent's son, who was killed by an accident, had been earning at the time of his death 8s. a week on an average of one hundred and fifteen weeks. His earnings went into the family fund, which was administered for the common benefit. The County Court Judge, whose decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, found that the father was partly dependent upon the son's earnings, and made an award in his favour. Ib.

Per LORD SHAND (approving Simmons v. White Brothers, 68 L. J. Q.B. 507; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1005), "dependent" in the Act means dependent for the ordinary necessities of life, or for maintenance of himself and his family by a person in that class and position in life. The mere fact that the father receives and spends the money is not, without regard to such position, sufficient to establish a claim under the Act. Ib.

— A workman having by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment sustained injury resulting in death, his parents, with whom he resided, and to whom he gave his wages, claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. At the hearing of the claim the father, who was thirty-four years of age and in receipt of full wages, stated that the earnings of the workman were a help to maintain his family. The County Court Judge having found that the parents were in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Act,—Held, that the words "dependent upon the earnings" in that sub-section meant dependent thereon in the proper sense of the term for the ordinary necessities of life, having regard to the class and position of the parties; and that, as it appeared that the County Court Judge had adopted this construction, the Court could not interfere with his finding upon the question of fact whether the parents were so dependent. Simmons v. White, 68 L. J. Q.B. 507; [1899] 1 Q.B. 1005; 80 L. T. 844; 47 W. R. 513—C.A.

— The question whether a dependant of a deceased workman was wholly or only in part dependent upon his earnings within paragraph 1 (a) of the 1st schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is to be determined with reference to the moment of time just before the workman's death; so that, in deciding this question, no consideration should be taken of any pecuniary benefit that may come to the dependant in consequence of, or after, the workman's death. Pryce v. Penrhyber Colliery Co., 85 L. T. 477—C.A.

— Maintenance of Household by Workman out of his Earnings Supplemented by Children's Wages—Claim of Widow.]—A workman who met with a fatal accident in the course of his employment, in addition to his own earnings, was at the date of his death receiving the wages of his three elder sons, whom he housed, fed, and clothed in return, making a balance of gain in so doing:—Held, that the widow and younger children were none the less "wholly dependent" on the workman's earnings within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Sched. I. (1) (a) (i). Senior v. Fountains & Burnley, 76 L. J. K.B. 928; [1907] 2 K.B. 563; 97 L. T. 562; 23 T. L. R. 634—C.A. And see infra, WIFE.

"Wholly dependent upon (workman's) earnings at the time of his death"—Property Possessed by Workman Passing to Dependant upon His Death.—A dependant of a workman is none the less "wholly dependent upon his earnings at the time of his death" within the meaning of the First Schedule, clause (1) (a) (i) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, because upon the death of the workman his small personal estate, the result of his savings, which produced no income during his life, passes to the dependant. Pryce v. Penrikyber Navigation Colliery Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 192; [1902] 1 K.B. 221; 50 W. R. 197; 66 J. P. 198—C.A.

—A workman, in respect of whose death compensation was claimed by his widow, had for the three years immediately preceding his death lived separate from his wife. His contribution to her support did not exceed 5l. per annum. The claimant had no regular means of livelihood. In addition to what she received from her husband she was supported by her earnings from occasional employment and by contributions from her relations:—Held, that she was, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, First Schedule, s. (1) (a) (i), wholly dependent on her husband at the time of his death. Cunningham v. M'Gregor, 3 F. 775—Ct. of Sess.

Wife—Presumption of Dependency of—Non-rebuttal—Wife not Supported by Husband at Time of His Death—Child en Ventre sa Mère.—Dependency within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, must always be a mixed question of law and fact. There is a presumption in favour of the dependency of the wife upon her husband's earnings, which is not rebutted by proof that at the time of his death he was not in fact supporting her. Williams v. Ocean Coal Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 1073; [1907] 2 K.B. 422; 97 L. T. 150; 23 T. L. R. 584—C.A.

The rule in Villar v. Gilbey (76 L. J. Ch. 339; [1907] A.C. 139) that a child en ventre sa mère shall be deemed to have been born, where it is for its benefit that it should be born, applies in the case of a posthumous child, and consequently such child is a dependant within the Act. Ib.

An applicant for compensation was the widow of a workman, to whom she had been married in March, 1903, and who was killed in April, 1906. The husband had not kept up a home for the wife, and had not since 1904 contributed to her support, she having in that year returned to her parents. The wife in January, 1906, went into domestic service, receiving 1l. a month and board wages, and was in such service at the time of her husband's death. There was also a child en ventre sa mère at such time, who was born in September, 1906. The County Court Judge having decided that neither the widow nor the child were dependants within the Act, the COURT OF APPEAL, reversing his decision, held, that he was wrong—first, in ignoring the presumption of dependency in the case of the wife; and secondly, in treating as conclusive the fact that the wife was not receiving any part of her husband's earnings at his death; and, instead of sending the case back, the Court held that, as a matter of legal inference upon the facts in evidence, there was total dependency both in the case of the widow and of the posthumous child. Observations in Queen v. Clarke ([1906] 2 Ir. R. 135, 163) adopted. Ib.

Wife Deserted by Husband and Unable to Support Herself.—In July, 1901, a husband deserted his wife, and thereafter did not contribute anything to her support. She suffered from chronic bronchitis and varicose veins to an extent which incapacitated her from work requiring ordinary exertion, and she became unable to do anything for her own support. Her husband having, in 1904, in the course of his employment, sustained injuries from which he died, she claimed compensation from his employers:—Held (dubitante the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK), that the claimant was dependent on the earnings of her husband at the time of his death, and was entitled to compensation under the Act. Sneddon v. Addie, 6 F. 992—Ct. of Sess.

Wife Living Apart from and not Supported by Husband.—A woman had been living apart from her husband for fourteen years and was supported by her illegitimate son:—Held, that she was not wholly or in part dependent on the earnings of her husband so as to be entitled to compensation under the Act in respect of his death by accident. Turners v. Whitefield, 6 F. 322—Ct. of Sess.

Wife not Living with Husband and not Maintained by Him at the Time of His Death.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant, the widow of the injured workman, had been married to him for many years, and had been maintained by him up to a date about four months before his death. He was then out of work, and he left her, apparently to find work, and never afterwards contributed anything to her maintenance. During the time he was away she obtained casual work when she could, and received help from her friends. She said in her evidence that she expected him back every day to provide a home. He obtained employment three weeks before his death:—Held, that the County Court Judge was justified in holding that the applicant was dependent upon the earnings of the deceased at the time of his death. Coulthard v. Consett Iron Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 60; [1905] 2 K.B. 869; 93 L. T. 756; 54 W. R. 139; 22 T. L. R. 25—C.A.

The applicant, the widow of a workman, was married on July 15, 1904, at Glasgow, both she and her husband being Scotch by domicile. She lived with her husband in Glasgow, and was supported by him till the end of October, 1904, when, being out of work, he went to Dublin to seek employment. He obtained employment there from the respondent on January 9, 1905, and on January 17 he was accidentally killed in the course of his employment. From the time the husband left Glasgow until his death he did not contribute anything to the support of his wife, who went to reside with her father in Glasgow, and was supported by him. A posthumous child was born on April 15, 1905:—Held (Fitzgibbon, L.J., diss.), that the widow and the child were wholly dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 (a) of the Act. Queen v. Clarke, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 135—C.A.

Wife in Asylum.—A workman who died as the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and maintained his wife until her removal as a dangerous lunatic to a lunatic asylum, where she was detained by the asylum authorities under confinement, and where she was being maintained by them at the date of her husband's death:—Held, that these circumstances were insufficient to rebut the presumption of dependency, and that there was a total dependency of the wife on her husband's earnings. Kelly v. Hopkins, [1908] 2 Ir. R. 84—C.A.

Wife — Foreigner.—In December, 1903, a Pole came to Scotland, where in the course of his employment as a miner he was killed in August, 1904. During that period he remitted 1*l.* a week to his wife, who remained in Poland, and whose means of livelihood during her husband's absence consisted, in addition to the 1*l.* sent by her husband, of her earnings as an outdoor labourer at a wage of 9*d.* a day, and of contributions by her father:—Held, that the wife was a "dependant" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 (b) of the Act; but that she was not wholly dependent upon her husband's earnings at the time of his death within the meaning of section 1 of the First Schedule of the Act. Baird v. Birsztan, 8 F. 438—Ct. of Sess.

Daughter.—A workman's daughter, who had previously been earning wages, remained at home after her mother's death to keep her father's house, getting from him board, lodging, and clothing, but no wages. The workman was killed by accident in the course of his employment:—Held, that the daughter was a dependant of the workman within the meaning of the Act. Moyes v. Dixon, 7 F. 386—Ct. of Sess.

Granddaughter.—A workman was killed in the course of his employment. For eight years he had supported A, a child of his deceased daughter. A's father had not been heard of during that time, and it was not known whether he was alive or dead. Nothing was known about A's paternal grandparents. The workman was survived by a son and daughter:—Held, that A was a dependant of the deceased workman within section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Cooper v. Fife Coal Co., [1907] S.C. 564—Ct. of Sess.

Partial Dependency—Mode of Assessing Compensation—"Proportionate to the injury to" the Dependants.—By Schedule I. clause 1

(a) (ii.) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the amount of compensation under the Act, where death results from the injury and the workman leaves dependants in part dependent upon his earnings at the time of his death, shall be such sum, not exceeding the fixed sum payable under clause 1 (a) (i.) in cases of total dependency, as may be determined on arbitration under the Act "to be reasonable and proportionate to the injury to" the dependants. In an arbitration under the Act it was proved that the wages of a deceased workman were 19*s.* 10½*d.* a week, and, if he had left dependants wholly dependent upon his earnings, the sum payable under clause 1 (a) (i.) would have been 155*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* He left a widow who was at the time of his death earning 1*s.* 11*d.* a week by laundry work, and was in part dependent upon his earnings at the time of his death, and the County Court Judge awarded her 150*l.* (including payments previously made). Upon appeal it was contended for the employers that the County Court Judge ought to have taken into account the cost of maintenance of the deceased workman:—Held, that the mode of calculating the amount of compensation in cases of partial dependency under Schedule I. clause 1 (a) (ii.) of the Act only differs from the mode of calculating it in cases of total dependency under clause 1 (a) (i.) by introducing into the calculation the other source or sources of income of the dependant, and that there was nothing to shew that the County Court Judge had misdirected himself as to the mode of assessing the compensation. Osmond v. Campbell and Harrison, Lim., 75 L. J. K.B. 1: [1905] 2 K.B. 852; 93 L. T. 724; 54 W. R. 117; 22 T. L. R. 4—C.A.

— Outlay in Medical and Funeral Expenses.—In fixing compensation under the Act, the arbitrator, in a claim by partial dependants, may take into account the outlays which the claimants have incurred in medical and funeral expenses. Bevan v. Crawshaw (71 L. J. K.B. 49; [1902] 1 K.B. 25), followed. Fagan v. Murdoch (1 F. 1179) doubted, per Lord McLaren. Hughes v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron and Steel Co., 5 F. 784—Ct. of Sess.

— Boy helping Family.—A boy who earned 8*s.* a week lived at home with his father and mother and five brothers and sisters. The father earned 25*s.* a week, and two sisters together earned 19*s.* a week. These earnings were all put together into a common fund:—Held, that there was evidence that the father and mother were "in part dependent" upon the earnings of the boy within section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Davies v. Main Colliery Co., 80 L. T. 674—C.A.

Award Including Funeral Expenses — Sum "reasonable and proportionate to the injury" to the Dependants.—Where a workman, to whom death has been caused in circumstances to which the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, applies, leaves dependants in part dependent upon his earnings, the funeral expenses of the workman may be taken into consideration in determining the sum "reasonable and proportionate to the injury" to the dependants directed by the First Schedule to the Act, clause 1 (a) (ii.), to be awarded to them as compensation. Bevan v. Crawshaw Brothers (Cyfartha), Lim., 71 L. J. K.B. 49; [1902] 1 K.B. 25; 85 L. T. 496; 50 W. R. 98—C.A.

Standard of Living.—The plaintiff claimed compensation, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, as being in part dependent upon the earnings of his deceased son, who was killed by accident in the employment of the defendants. The County Court Judge held that the plaintiff was not dependent upon the earnings of his son, and was not entitled to compensation because he was able to maintain himself and his family in his position of life without the assistance of the earnings of his son:—Held, that the County Court Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff was not a dependant because he was able to maintain himself and his family without the assistance of his son's earnings. Howells v. Vivian, 85 L. T. 529; 50 W. R. 163—C.A.

In an arbitration under the Act the sheriff found a father entitled to compensation for the death of his only son, on the ground that the father was in part dependent on the earnings of the son. The son's employers appealed on the ground that the father was dependent on the son only because the father supported a cripple brother who lived with him and his son. The Court affirmed the judgment of the sheriff, holding that there was nothing in the case for appeal to shew that the sheriff had committed an error in law. Leggett v. Burke, 4 F. 693—Ct. of Sess.

Earnings by Betting.—A father claimed compensation in respect of the death of his son, who died from injuries sustained in the course of his employment. The son's average weekly earnings from his employment were 1l. 4s. 1d., but he also practised a systematic course of betting which brought him a substantial profit. The father, who was a widower, fifty-four years of age, and without dependants, suffered from bronchitis and rheumatism, and his capacity for work was consequently precarious, but his average weekly earnings during a period of forty weeks were 1l. 4s. 11d. The son made payments to his father which averaged 10s. per week. Father and son did not live together:—Held, that the father was not in part dependent upon the earnings of his son within the meaning of the Act. Arrol & Co. v. Kelly, 7 F. 906—Ct. of Sess.

Apportionment of Compensation—Payment to Legal Personal Representative—Investment in Name of Registrar.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the County Court Judge awarded that a sum, payable by employers as compensation for injury to a workman resulting in death, should be apportioned between the widow, who was the legal personal representative of the workman, and the two infant sons, who were the other dependants of the workman, and that the employers should pay the sum apportioned to the sons to the Registrar of the Court, to be invested in his name in the Post-Office Savings Bank for their benefit:—Held, that on the true construction of clauses (4), (5), (6), and (7) of the First Schedule to the Act, the County Court Judge had jurisdiction to make the order, and was not bound by the first part of clause (4) to order the payment of the full amount of the compensation to the legal personal representative of the workman. Daniel v. Ocean Coal Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 567; [1900] 2 Q.B. 250; 82 L. T. 523; 43 W. R. 467; 64 J. P. 436—C.A.

Death of Sole Dependant before Claim for Compensation.—The sole total dependant of a workman who was killed by an accident arising out of his employment died before she had filed or served a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. If she had lived and taken the necessary steps, it was admitted that she would have been entitled to 150l. compensation. The personal representative of the deceased workman subsequently took proceedings in the County Court to recover compensation to be applied for the benefit of the dependant and in payment of her debts:—Held, that neither her personal representative nor the personal representative of the deceased workman was entitled to recover the amount. O'Donovan v. Cameron, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 633—C.A.

(21) Costs.

Application, of—Taxation—Discretion of Arbitrator.—An application under Schedule I. clause 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to vary weekly payments of compensation is not necessarily, for the purposes of taxation of costs, to be treated either as an original or as an interlocutory matter. Rigby & Co. v. Cox (No. 2), 73 L. J. K.B. 690; [1904] 2 K.B. 208; 91 L. T. 72; 68 J. P. 385; 20 T. L. R. 461—D.

The arbitrator has a discretion in each case under Schedule II. clause 6, and has no power to lay down any general rule as to how such applications are to be treated for the purposes of taxation. Id.

Action under Employers' Liability Act Dismissed—Assessment of Compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act—Costs of Action and Arbitration.—Where an action brought under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, is dismissed, and the County Court Judge determines that the defendant would be liable to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and proceeds under section 1, sub-section 4 of that Act to assess such compensation, the costs of the action, including the proceedings for the assessment of compensation, may be dealt with at the discretion of the County Court Judge. Cattermole v. Atlantic Transport Co., 85 L. T. 513; 50 W. R. 129; 66 J. P. 4—C.A.

Admission of Liability—Duty of Widow to take out Letters of Administration—Subsequent Application to Court—Compensation Paid into Court.—A workman, who was accidentally killed in the course of his employment, died intestate, leaving a widow and children, who as his dependants were entitled to be paid compensation by his employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The amount of compensation was agreed upon between the widow and the employers, but the employers refused to pay this amount to her unless she first took out letters of administration. The widow refused this condition and commenced proceedings against the employers to obtain compensation under the Act. The employers paid the agreed amount of compensation into Court. The County Court Judge ordered the employers to pay to the widow the costs of her application up to the date of the payment into Court. Against this order the employers appealed:—Held, that the employers were not entitled to insist on the widow taking over letters of administration before they paid over to her the agreed amount of compensation:—Held, also, that the proceedings for compensation having been rightly commenced, the County Court Judge had jurisdiction to order the employers to pay the widow the costs of her application up to the date of the payment into Court. Clatworthy v. Green, 86 L. T. 702; 50 W. R. 610; 66 J. P. 596—C.A.

Failure of Action to Recover Damages—Assessment of Compensation at Plaintiff's Request.—The effect of section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which provides that, where an action brought against an employer for injury caused by an accident is dismissed and the Court upon the plaintiff's request proceeds to assess compensation, the Court "shall be at liberty to deduct from such compensation all the costs which, in its judgment, have been caused by the plaintiff bringing the action instead of proceeding under this Act," is to leave the Court in which the action is tried full liberty to exercise any power of awarding costs which it may have in the action, and to confer the additional power of deducting from the compensation costs caused by the plaintiff bringing the action instead of proceeding under the Act. Cattermole v. Atlantic Transport Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 173; [1902] 1 K.B. 204; 85 L. T. 513; 50 W. R. 129; 66 J. P. 4—C.A.

(22) Appeal.

Questions of Law.—The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to entertain an appeal upon questions of law only. Smith v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 68 L. J. Q.B. 51; [1899] 1 Q.B. 141; 79 L. T. 633; 47 W. R. 146—C.A.

Deduction of Costs under Employers' Liability Act, 1880—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—In an action under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, the County Court Judge nonsuited the plaintiff, and his decision was affirmed by the Divisional Court. The County Court Judge, upon the application of the plaintiff, assessed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and deducted from the amount awarded the costs incurred by the defendants in the action under the Employers' Liability Act and in the appeal to the Divisional Court. The plaintiff appealed to the Divisional Court against the order as to the deduction of the costs:—Held, that the appeal lay to the Court of Appeal, under Schedule II. par. 4 to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Williams v. Army and Navy Auxiliary Co-operative Society, 23 T. L. R. 408—D.

Refusal of County Court Judge to Direct Payment of Amount into Post-Office Savings Bank

by Insurers.—No appeal lies under the Second Schedule, clause 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, to the Court of Appeal against the refusal of a County Court Judge to direct payment by insurers of the compensation awarded to a workman into the Post-Office Savings Bank under the provisions of section 5, sub-section 1 of the Act. Leech v. Life and Health Assurance Association, 70 L. J. K.B. 544; [1901] 1 K.B. 707; 84 L. T. 414; 49 W. R. 482—C.A.

An appeal lies under section 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to the Divisional Court from an order by a County Court Judge under the provisions of section 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, directing payment by insurers of the compensation awarded to a workman into the Post-Office Savings Bank. Morris v. Northern Employers' Mutual Indemnity Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 733; [1902] 2 K.B. 165; 86 L. T. 748; 50 W. R. 545; 66 J. P. 644—C.A.

Subrogation of Workman to Rights of Employer—Insurance.—The effect of section 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is to subrogate the workman to the rights of the employer against his insurers; the workman has no larger rights against the insurers than the employer has. Id.

Refusal of County Court Judge to Review Taxation.—No appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the refusal of a County Court Judge to direct a review of the taxation of the costs of an application to vary an agreement for a weekly payment to a workman registered under clause 12 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Rigby v. Cox (No 1), 73 L. J. K.B. 80; [1904] 1 K.B. 358; 89 L. T. 717; 52 W. R. 195; 68 J. P. 195; 20 T. L. R. 186—C.A.

— An appeal will not lie to the Court of Appeal from the refusal of a County Court Judge to direct a review of the taxation of costs under an order made under section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Keane v. Nash, 88 L. T. 790—C.A.

Order by County Court Judge for Payment of Compensation into Post-Office Savings Bank—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897—"Direction in an action or matter."—An appeal lies to the Divisional Court from an order made by a County Court Judge, under section 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, directing payment by insurers of the compensation awarded to a workman into the Post-Office Savings Bank, such an order being a "direction in an action or matter" within the meaning of section 120 of the County Courts Act, 1888. Kniveton v. Northern Employers' Mutual Indemnity Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 588; [1902] 1 K.B. 880; 86 L. T. 721; 50 W. R. 704—D.

Costs of.—Where an applicant under the Workmen's Compensation Act appeals unsuccessfully against the amount of compensation awarded him, the costs of appeal will be set off against his costs in the court below. Case v. Colonial Wharves, 53 W. R. 514—C.A.

— Security for Costs—Request for.]—Before applying to the Court for security for the costs of an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act upon the ground of the appellant's poverty, the respondent ought first to apply to the appellant for security. Stamland v. North-Eastern Steel Co., 23 T. L. R. 1—C.A.

— When Ordered.—An order for security for the costs of an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, will be ordered in a proper case even if the County Court Judge has stayed execution with a view to an appeal. Shea v. Drolenvaux, 88 L. T. 679—C.A.

— New Trial—Re-hearing.—The rule that no security for costs is required on an application to the Court of Appeal under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, for the new trial of an action in the King's Bench Division will not be extended to an appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, which, if successful, will practically result in a new trial of the case. Harwood v. Abrahams, 70 L. J. K.B. 746; [1901] 2 K.B. 304; 84 L. T. 857—C.A.

— Poverty of Appellant.—In an appeal from a County Court Judge to the Court of Appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, if it appears that the appellant will, if unsuccessful, be unable through poverty to pay the respondent's costs of the appeal, he will, in accordance with the ordinary practice of the Court of Appeal, be ordered to give security for such costs. Hall v. Snowden, Hubbard & Co. (No. 1), 68 L. J. Q.B. 363; [1899] 1 Q.B. 598; 80 L. T. 256; 47 W. R. 322—C.A.

Motion to Find Compensation Due under Act—Action under Employers' Liability Act Dismissed.—An action by a widow for damages in respect of the death of her husband by accident on January 2, 1900, was raised within two months thereafter. The action was dismissed on June 16, 1900, and on appeal on November 29, 1900. On February 14, 1901, the pursuer, applied to the Court for a finding that compensation would have been due under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and to assess the same in terms of section 1, sub-section 4 thereof. THE COURT refused the application. Baird v. Higginbotham, 3 F. 673—Ct. of Sess.

12. SEDUCTION.

Action for—Girl Seduced while Living with her Father and Mother—Child Born after Death of Girl's Father—Action by Mother.—The plaintiff, a widow, brought an action for the seduction of her daughter S. The seduction took place in the lifetime of the plaintiff's husband, S.'s father, and while S. was living with her parents. After her father's death S. continued to reside with the plaintiff rendering her the ordinary household services. Two months after her father's death S. was delivered of a child, the result of the seduction.—Held, that the action was not maintainable by the plaintiff either at common law or by virtue of the Married Women's Property Acts. Hamilton v. Long, [1908] 2 Ir. 407—K.B. D. Affirmed, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 552—C.A.

Service at Time of Seduction—Servant in Defendant's Service.—The plaintiff's daughter was seduced by the defendant while in his service as a barmaid and general assistant earning her board and lodging and eight shillings a week. On one day in the week she used to visit her father's house and help her mother in the household work and care of the children:—Held, that there was no evidence that the girl was in her father's service. Dictum in Thompson v. Ross (29 L. J. Ex. 1) approved. Whitbourne v. Williams, 70 L. J. K.B. 933; [1901] 2 K.B. 722; 85 L. T. 271—C.A.

— Evidence of.—Upon the death of a farmer, twenty-eight years prior to the commencement of the action, testate, but whose will was never proved, his widow and three children resided on the farm, which was managed by the widow until her death, which occurred eight years after that of her husband. Then her daughter, who was considerably older than the other two children (sons), and who was at that time the only adult member of the family, became manager, paid the rent, and got receipts in the names of her father's representatives. She also did the indoor servant's work, no servant being kept, and had charge of the domestic arrangements. Seven years later the elder of her two brothers attained twenty-one. From that time he worked on the farm, and was rated as the occupier. His sister continued to perform the duties of indoor servant, and to make things comfortable for her two brothers in the house. In an action by the eldest brother for the seduction of his sister, —Held, that there was evidence upon which the verdict of the jury in favour of the plaintiff could be sustained. Action by Master—Damages—Loss of Service.—In an action by a master to recover damages for the seduction of his servant, the master not being the parent of, or related or in loco parentis to, the servant, the plaintiff can only recover out-of-pocket expenses owing to his being deprived of her services. *McKenzie v. MAYOR'S COURT.

Costs—Action for Libel—Judgment for Damages not Exceeding 5*l.* and Costs—Jurisdiction to Allow Costs other than Court Fees and Witnesses' Allowances.—The true construction of rule 1 of the Mayor's Court of London Fees and Costs Rules, 1890, is that in every action or matter in the Court the costs shall be taxed according to the scales set out in the schedules, where a scale is provided, but where no scale is provided the jurisdiction of the Court to allow costs is left unfettered. Hall v. Launspach, 67 L. J. Q.B. 372; [1898] 1 Q.B. 513; 78 L. T. 243—C.A.

In an action for libel in the Mayor's Court the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff with 2*l.* 10*s.* damages, and judgment was entered for 2*l.* 10*s.* damages and costs. The Registrar, in taxing the costs, allowed the plaintiff costs beyond the Court fees and allowances to witnesses. The defendant applied for a writ of prohibition on the ground of want of jurisdiction, there being no scale in the schedules annexed to the Fees and Costs Rules, 1890, applicable to a case in which the amount recovered does not exceed 5*l.*:—Held, that the defendant, on whom the burden of proof lay, had failed to prove that the Court had no jurisdiction to allow such costs previously to the Fees and Costs Rules, 1890, the previous practice of the Court and section 11 of the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act, 1890, affording a strong presumption in favour of the jurisdiction; and that the jurisdiction, if it existed, was not taken away by the Fees and Costs Rules, 1890, or by the Mayor's Court Rules, 1892. Ib.

Semble, the Mayor's Court has jurisdiction to allow costs in an action for libel in which a sum not exceeding 5*l.* is recovered, notwithstanding that the schedules to the Fees and Costs Rules, 1890, contain no scale applicable to the case. Ib.

Security for Costs of Appeal.—Section 8 of the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act provides that in case of an appeal the party appealing shall give security within such time or times as the Court shall direct for the costs of the appeal, whatever be the event of the appeal, and for the amount of the judgment if the party appealing be the defendant and the appeal be dismissed. On an appeal by an unsuccessful plaintiff in the Mayor's Court, the Judge directed that he should give security for the costs of the appeal and also for the costs of the defendant at the trial:—Held, that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction under the above section to direct the plaintiff to give security for the defendant's costs in the trial in addition to giving security for the costs of the appeal. Green v. Isaacs, 96 L. T. 122—D.

Stay of Proceedings.—The mere fact of a plaintiff giving security for the costs of appeal under the above section does not operate as a stay of proceedings. Ib. And see COURT.

MEDICINE AND MEDICAL PRACTITIONER.

Medical Men.—5 Edw. 7 c. 14 is the Medical Act (1886) Amendment Act, 1905.

Pharmacy.—61 & 62 Vict. c. 25 is the Pharmacy Acts Amendment Act, 1898.

Veterinary Surgeons.—63 & 64 Vict. c. 24 is the Veterinary Surgeons Amendment Act, 1900.

"Physician"—Title Adopted by L.S.A. London (1886).—A licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries of London, registered under the Medical Act, 1886, and qualified by the society's certificate to practise in medicine and surgery, as well as an apothecary, is not entitled to describe himself as a "physician"; but in order to support a conviction under section 40 of the Medical Act, 1886, such adoption must have been adopted "wilfully" as well as "falsely." Hunter v. Clare, 68 L. J. Q.B. 278; [1899] 1 Q.B. 635; 80 L. T. 197; 47 W. R. 394; 63 J. P. 308—D.

Dentist—Taking or Using the Name—Person—Company.—The word "person" in the Dentists Act, 1878, relates only to an individual, and does not embrace a corporation or company. A company by assuming a name which includes the words "surgeon-dentists" does not become liable to a prosecution under the Act for using a name, title, addition, or description implying that it is registered under the Act. O'Duffy v. Jaffe, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 27—K.B. D.

— Company.—Although the word "person" in section 3 of the Dentists Act, 1878, has been held not to include artificial person and not to apply to limited companies, a limited company is not at liberty to use the word "dentist" or its synonyms in such a way as to amount to a false representation calculated to induce the public to believe that the individuals whom it comprises or employs are qualified "dentists," and may be restrained from doing so by injunction at the suit of the Attorney-General. Att.-Gen. v. Myddletons, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 471—Barton, J.

— Appropriation of Payments—Contract—Consideration.—The Dentists Act, 1878, s. 5, prevents an unqualified person from recovering any fee or charge for dental operations or dental attendance or advice, but there is nothing in the Act which renders the contract to do such work illegal, and notwithstanding section 5 an unqualified person can recover in respect of mechanical work done or materials supplied in the course of such dental operations or attendance. Where, therefore, money has been paid to the unqualified person on general account of services partly within and partly without the scope of section 5, he may appropriate it to the payment of the fees and charges which he could not recover under that section, and maintain an action for the balance which is not within the scope of section 5. Seymour v. Pickett, 74 L. J. K.B. 413; [1905] 1 K.B. 715; 92 L. T. 519—C.A.

— Registration under Companies Acts—Information by Attorney-General.—Certain persons formed a company under the Companies Act with the title of "Mr. Appleton, Surgeon-Dentist, Limited," for the following objects (inter alia): To carry on, through competent persons, the business of dentists or dental surgeons in the United Kingdom, and, for that purpose, to employ suitable persons, and to purchase, hire, or procure suitable instruments, furniture, and fittings; and they carried on and advertised such business. None of the directors or other persons forming the company was a qualified dentist, registered under the Dentists Act. In an information by the Attorney-General, at the relation of the honorary secretary, Irish branch of the British Dental Association, alleging that the company was formed for the fraudulent purpose of deceiving the public, by falsely representing that the business was carried on by persons registered under the Dentists Act, 1878, and for the purpose of injuring and defrauding persons duly registered under that Act, the company, the signatories to the memorandum of association, and certain directors named as special defendants, not delivering any defence, it being admitted that the company was in liquidation,—Held, that the Attorney-General, suing in the public interest to prevent an admitted fraudulent attempt to evade statutory provisions, was entitled to an injunction, and that the costs of the proceedings should be paid by the special defendants. Att.-Gen. v. Appleton, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 252—M.R.

— Unregistered Practitioner—Supply of False Teeth—Fitting Set in Patient's Mouth—Right to Recover Fee.—"Dental operation, dental attendance, or advice."—A person who was carrying on the practice of a dentist, but who was not registered under the Dentists Act, 1878, made for the defendant and fitted to the defendant's mouth a set of false teeth, which were taken by the defendant and kept and used by him. The defendant having refused to pay for the same,—Held, that section 5 of the Dentists Act, 1878, which prevented an unregistered person from recovering any fee or charge for "the performance of any dental operation, or for any dental attendance or advice," did not prevent the unregistered person from recovering the price of the set of teeth so supplied, as distinguished from the fitting of the same. Hennan v. Duckworth, 90 L. T. 546; 20 T. L. R. 436—D.

— Predecessor's Name and Qualification Exhibited Outside Premises.—The respondent, who was not registered either as a dentist or as a medical practitioner, purchased a dental practice from the representatives of S., a dentist, together with the right to keep affixed on the premises S.'s name and qualifications. The respondent's own name, without any letters after it, and his predecessor's name and qualifications as follows—"Mr. C. R. Stent, R.D.S. Eng., Surgeon-Dentist," were affixed to the premises. The magistrate dismissed an information taken out against the respondent under the Dentists Act, 1878, for improperly using the words "R.D.S. Eng., Surgeon-Dentist," on the ground that he had not taken or used such addition or description implying that he was registered or specially qualified to practise dentistry:—Held, that the decision of the magistrate, being on a question of fact, could not be interfered with. Brown v. Whitlock, 67 J. P. 451—D.

— Using Title of Company.—The appellant was the sole director and manager of "The West Central Dental Institute, Limited." He was not registered under the Dentists Act, nor was he a qualified medical practitioner. A summons having been taken out against him for using the description on the door-plate of the premises he occupied "German Dental Institute, West Central Dental Institute, Limited," which implied that he was a person specially qualified under the Dentists Act or registered thereunder, the magistrate convicted him:—Held, that the conviction was right. Panhaus v. Brown, 68 J. P. 435—D.

— Name of Proposed Company involving False Representation—Refusal of Registrar to Register—Mandamus.—The memorandum of association of a company proposed to be formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of teeth extracting and artificial-teeth making provided that the name of the company should be "S. G. Rowell, Dentist, Limited." None of the signatories to the memorandum (one of whom was S. G. Rowell) was registered as a dentist under the Dentists Act, 1878. The Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies having refused to register the memorandum of association under the Companies Act, 1862,—

Held, that a mandamus would not be granted to compel him to do so, since the use by the company of the proposed name would involve a false representation, tending to mislead the public. Re v. Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 634—K.B. D.

Certified Midwife—Employing Uncertificated Person.—The Central Midwives Board, when enquiring into an offence alleged to have been committed by a certified midwife under the Midwives Act, 1902, acts in a judicial capacity. Quere, however, whether the Board is bound to act only upon the strict legal rules of evidence. Feldmann, In re, 97 L. T. 548; 71 J. P. 269; 5 L. G. R. 653; 23 T. L. R. 432—D.

The word "employ" in section 1, sub-section 4 of the Act—which provides that "no woman certified under this Act shall employ an uncertificated person as her substitute"—is not confined to employment for payment, but includes any employment by the midwife of an uncertificated person as her substitute. Ib.

Inquest—Post-mortem Examination—Fees—“Public hospital”—“Medical officer.”—By the proviso to section 22 of the Coroners Act, 1897, where an inquest is held on the body of a person who has died in a public hospital, the medical officer whose duty it may have been to attend the deceased as medical officer of the hospital shall not be entitled to fee or remuneration for making a post-mortem examination and attending to give evidence:—Held, first, that a children's and general hospital, supported by voluntary contributions, and founded for the free admission and relief of patients within a certain area upon production of a governor's letter, and of patients outside that area upon payment of a small weekly sum, was a public hospital within the proviso; and secondly, that a medical man, practising in the neighbourhood, who held the appointment of honorary medical officer to such hospital, for which he received no remuneration by way of fees or honorarium, was the medical officer of a public hospital, whose duty it was to attend the deceased, within the proviso. Horner v. Lewis, 67 L. J. Q.B. 524; 78 L. T. 792; 62 J. P. 345—D.

Infectious Disease—Statutory Notification of—Public Authorities Protection.—Semble, a medical practitioner in giving in respect of a private patient the statutory notification to the local medical officer of health that such patient is suffering from an infectious disease is acting in the execution of a statutory or public duty, and is therefore entitled to the benefit of the provisions of section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. Salisbury v. Gould, 68 J. P. 158—Grantham, J.

Breach of Confidence.—The question whether a breach of medical confidence is actionable depends on the character of the disclosure made. A. B. v. C. D., 7 F. 72—Ct. of Sess.

Specific for Complaint Affecting Human Body—Gum Pastilles—Label on Box.—The words "Pure Gum Pastilles: Influenza: Delightfully soothing to singers and public speakers," printed on a label affixed to boxes of gum pastilles amount to a statement that such pastilles are beneficial in the case of a complaint affecting the human body within the meaning of 52 Geo. 3, c. 150. Selling such labelled boxes without the medicine stamp is therefore an offence under that statute. Ransom v. San-guinetti, 67 J. P. 219—D.

Stamp Duty—Ammoniated Tincture of Quinine—Exemption—Packet, Box, or Bottle—Label—"Original or first vendor."—A duly qualified chemist sold without a stamp a bottle containing a tincture of well-known properties and in general use, and labelled "Ammoniated Tincture of Quinine, B.P., a well known and highly recommended remedy for Influenza and Colds":—Held, that he did not thereby make himself the "owner, proprietor, maker, compounder, original or first vendor" of the tincture; that the tincture came within the "special exemptions" in the schedule to the Medicine Stamp Act, 1812; and that the chemist was not liable to any penalty under section 2 of that Act. Farmer v. Glyn-Jones, 72 L. J. K.B. 523; [1903] 2 K.B. 6; 89 L. T. 64; 51 W. R. 524; 67 J. P. 240—D.

Poison—Restriction on Sale—Person having Conduct and Management of Sale—Poison Sold on Behalf of Manufacturers.—A florist and seedsman, at whose shop orders are received for a weed-killer (admitted to be a poison), recommended by him to his customers, and who transmits the orders to a chemical company, the manufacturers, receiving from them a commission on sale for his recommendation, is not a person acting in the conduct or management of the sale of poisons, nor liable to a penalty under section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868. Pharmaceutical Society v. White, 69 L. J. Q.B. 289; [1900] 1 Q.B. 454; 81 L. T. 821; 48 W. R. 335; 64 J. P. 168—D.

Vermin-killer—Resolution of Pharmaceutical Society.—The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain has power, by resolution passed in pursuance of section 2 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, to declare what articles shall be deemed to be poisons under Parts I. and II. respectively of Schedule A to the Act. Brown v. Leggett, 75 L. J. K.B. 193; [1906] 1 K.B. 330; 94 L. T. 200; 54 W. R. 362; 70 J. P. 109; 21 Cox C.C. 114; 22 T. L. R. 180—D.

Restriction on Sale—Canvasser for Orders with Authority to Receive Money—"Sell."—A shopkeeper who, acting as agent upon commission for the manufacturers of a poison within the meaning of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, receives at his shop orders for the poison and the purchase-money for it, and does not make any binding contract of sale with respect to it, but merely forwards the orders and the money to the manufacturers for them to deal with, does not "sell" the poison within the meaning of section 15 of the Act, and does not keep open shop for retailing poison within the meaning of that section. Pharmaceutical Society v. White, 70 L. J. K.B. 386; [1901] 1 K.B. 601; 84 L. T. 188; 49 W. R. 407; 65 J. P. 340—C.A.

Intention.—A being entitled to an estate for life in the lands of B, subject to (among others) a first incumbrance for 900*l.*, and a charge for younger children, with power to mortgage, purchased the incumbrance, which was conveyed to a trustee for him. He mortgaged the lands subject to the charges. By his will he directed certain other lands to be sold for the purpose of paying off the charges and incumbrances on the lands of B; and he empowered his trustees, during the minority of his son (to whom he devised the lands of B, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate), to apply the surplus rents of all the lands, and also to sell his personal estate, and apply the proceeds thereof, for the same purpose. By a codicil he increased the amount of the charge for younger children:—Held, that the charge of 900*l.* merged. Lloyd's Estate, In re, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 144—Ross, J.

—The rule of equity that the question of merger must be decided by the intention of the parties applies to the merger of estates as well as of charges. Capital and Counties Bank v. Rhodes, 72 L. J. Ch. 386; [1903] 1 Ch. 631; 88 L. T. 255; 51 W. R. 470—C.A.

Lease—Mortgage by Sub-demise—Conveyance of Fee-simple to Lessee—Mortgage of Fee-simple—Intention to Preserve Term—Power of Re-entry—Right of Mortgagees of Freehold to Enforce after Foreclosure—Legal Estate.—In May, 1897, R., as beneficial owner, mortgaged his leasehold interest in certain property in a register county by sub-demise to F. & Co., and he declared himself a trustee of the outstanding day. R. purchased the freehold of the property, and it was conveyed to him, subject to but with the benefit of the lease, by deed of July 27, 1899. By deed of the same date he mortgaged the freehold and leasehold properties referred to in the deeds in the schedule to the plaintiffs; the schedule mentioned the freehold title-deeds and the counterpart lease, and the security when offered was described as "a freehold ground rent." On August 28, 1899, R. was registered under the Land Transfer Acts as proprietor of the land with a possessory title. On the same day he charged it with the money due from him to the plaintiffs, and by the same deed conveyed the land to them subject to redemption. The plaintiffs were registered as proprietors of the charge, the certificates of registration of both the title and the charge being dated September 18, 1899. F. & Co. took possession under their mortgage. The plaintiffs brought their action for foreclosure, a declaration that the term had not merged, and that they were entitled to re-enter under the power of re-entry in the lease:—Held, first, that neither on the sale to R. nor on the mortgage by him to the plaintiffs would the beneficial interest in the term have been deemed to be merged or extinguished in equity, and the case came within sub-section 4 of section 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and there was no merger of the term. The law laid down in Thorne v. Cann (64 L. J. Ch. 1, 6; [1895] A.C. 11, 18, 19), Chambers v. Kingham (48 L. J. Ch. 169; 10 Ch. D. 743), and Ingle v. Vaughan-Jenkins (69 L. J. Ch. 618; [1900] 2 Ch. 368) applied. Ib.

Held, secondly, by ROMER, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J. (COLLINS, M.R., agreeing, though with doubt), that the legal estate was vested in the plaintiffs under the mortgage deed of August 28, 1899, and they had the legal right of re-entry for non-payment of rent under the lease. Ib.

Lease of Settled Estates—Lessee Becoming Legal Tenant for Life—Intention—Lessee's Benefit.—In determining questions of merger, the principle by which the Court is guided is the intention of the parties; and in the absence of the expression, either documentary or verbal, of any intention the Court looks to the benefit of the person in whom the two estates become vested. Ingle v. Vaughan-Jenkins, 69 L. J. Ch. 618; [1900] 2 Ch. 368; 83 L. T. 155; 48 W. R. 684—Farwell, J.

Where a tenant for life in remainder by building a house on part of the settled land entitles himself to specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease of the house and premises, and becomes legal tenant for life of the settled estates before the lease is granted, there will be no merger of the leasehold interest, for although no intention was expressed at the time of entering into the contract, the Court will have regard to the expenditure incurred, and will consider that it is for the benefit of the lessee that the term should be kept alive. Ib.

Real Estate—Sum Charged in Favour of Son—Fee-simple—Union in Single Owner—Intention.—The owner of the fee-simple of certain real estate created a term to secure the raising of certain sums charged in favour of two of his younger sons if and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-one years, to be paid on their respectively attaining that age, or on the death of their father, whichever should happen last. By the same settlement he covenanted with the trustees that the annual value of his settled estate should never fall below a certain sum. One of the sums vested in one of the sons on his attaining twenty-one years, but he subsequently died intestate during the lifetime of his father, leaving his father his sole next-of-kin. The father did not take out administration to his son. The father subsequently died, having by his will devised the property out of which the charges were raisable, but without having made any mention of the existence of the charges:—Held, under the circumstances, that there was no indication of any intention on the part of the father to treat the portion coming to him as sole next-of-kin of his son as still subsisting; that it was for the benefit of the father that the portion should sink back into the fee-simple; and that it had so sunk back accordingly. Compton (Lord) v.

Equitable Owners—Acquisition of Legal Estate—Commensurate Interests.—The rule that where an owner of an equitable interest acquires a commensurate legal estate the equitable interest will merge in the legal estate, applies where two persons become entitled to commensurate legal and equitable interests. Selous, In re; Thomson v. Selous, 70 L. J. Ch. 402; [1901] 1 Ch. 921; 84 L. T. 818; 49 W. R. 440—Farwell, J.

The difference in value between a tenancy in common and a joint tenancy is so small and of so unsubstantial a character that it will not by itself prevent an equitable interest in common merging in a commensurate legal estate in joint tenancy. Id.

Equitable Interests—Lease—Mortgage by Sub-demise to Lessor—Conveyance of Fee-Simple by Lessor to Lessee Subject to Lease—Subsequent Purported Mortgage in Fee by Lessor—Estate or Interest Passing.—H., the owner in fee-simple of certain houses, by certain indentures in 1893 demised each of the houses for the term of ninety-nine years to W. at the rents and subject to the covenants therein contained, and thereupon W. sub-demised the houses to H. for the respective terms of ninety-nine years, less the last day thereof, by way of mortgage. In the same year, by deed, in which it was recited that H. had agreed to sell the houses subject to the leases to W., H., for the consideration therein mentioned, conveyed the houses together with the rents reserved by the leases, and the benefit of the covenants therein contained, to W. in fee-simple subject to the leases and the terms of years thereby respectively created. By deed also in 1893 W., for the consideration therein mentioned, conveyed the houses, together with the rents reserved by the leases and the benefit of the covenants therein contained, to the plaintiffs in fee-simple subject to the leases and the terms of years thereby respectively created. In 1894 H. by deed purported to convey all the houses to the defendant in fee-simple by way of mortgage. The defendant had no notice of the title of the plaintiffs to the houses:—Held (assuming, but without so deciding, that there was a merger at law of the terms of years, and that the existence of an intention on the part of H. and W. would not be sufficient to prevent such a merger), that H. and W. dealt with one another on the footing that the leases were or were to be deemed to be in existence, and that it would be inequitable to treat them as at an end, and that under the old law as it stood prior to the Judicature Act, 1873, H. had at the date of the mortgage to the defendant an equitable interest in the houses subject to the condition of accepting legal leases on the same terms as the old leases, and that under section 63 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, such interest passed to the defendant by the mortgage subject to the like condition. Brandon v. Brandon (31 L. J. Ch. 47) discussed. Theilsson v. Liddard, 69 L. J. Ch. 673; [1900] 2 Ch. 635; 82 L. T. 753; 49 W. R. 10—Stirling, J.

Investment of Trust-moneys on Mortgage—Conveyance of Mortgaged Land to Cestui que Trust.—J. L. S., by his will dated March 23, 1849, after giving an annuity to his wife and certain specific legacies, gave all the residuum of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof unto his daughter E. L. S. during her life, and after her decease to pay the income to his son-in-law J. L. A. S. during his life, and after the decease of the survivor of them upon trust for such one or more of the children or more remote issue of E. L. S. as the survivor of them (E. L. S. and J. L. A. S.) should by deed or will direct or appoint, and in default of such appointment upon trust for the child and all the children if more than one of E. L. S. living at the decease of the survivor of them (E. L. S. and J. L. A. S.), if more than one child equally between them as tenants in common. Provided nevertheless and the testator thereby declared it to be his will and mind that in case any child of his daughter should die in the lifetime of E. L. S. and J. L. A. S. or in the lifetime of the survivor of them leaving issue that then such issue should be entitled to the same share in the trust property as his, her, or their parent would have had if surviving the survivor of them (E. L. S. and J. L. A. S.). Provided always and the testator thereby declared it to be his will and mind and did thereby give and devise in case there should be no child or remoter issue of E. L. S. at the decease of the survivor of them (E. L. S. and J. L. A. S.) one third part of his said trust estate real and personal unto his niece M. A. S., one third part unto his brother C. T. S., and one third part unto the children of his brother J. S., equally between them as tenants in common. The testator J. L. S. died on May 11, 1849; his daughter E. L. S. died on October 3, 1851. E. L. S. had only one child—namely, E. J. S. On February 4, 1873, J. L. A. S., by two deeds poll of that date, exercised his power of appointment under the will in favour of E. J. S. E. J. S. died on October 22, 1901, predeceasing J. L. A. S.:—Held, nevertheless, that the appointment of February 4, 1873, stood, and was not defeated by the last recited proviso of the will. In 1864 J. L. A. S. purchased certain land in B., and on August 4, 1864, conveyed this land to the trustees of the will of the testator F. L. S. by way of mortgage. On September 7, 1893, by an indenture made between J. L. A. S. of the one part and E. J. S. of the other part, J. L. A. S. conveyed the said land in B. unto E. J. S. in fee-simple, subject to the payment of the principal moneys and interest secured by the indenture of mortgage of August 4, 1864. By another indenture of the same date, and made between the same parties, J. L. A. S. released unto E. J. S. his life estate and interest of the residuary estate of the testator J. L. S. Succession duty had not been paid by E. J. S.:—Held, that the mortgage debt of 400l. had not become merged in the said land in B., but passed by the residuary bequest of the personal estate of E. J. S. Simmons, In re; Dennison v. Orman, 87 L. T. 594—Joyce, J.

Covenant—Rate of Interest—Judgment.—A mortgage deed contained a covenant by the mortgagors for payment of the principal sum on a day named, with interest in the meantime at 5l. per cent. per annum, and also, if the principal sum should not be then paid, that so long as the same, or any part thereof, should remain unpaid, the mortgagors would pay interest half-yearly at the same rate for the said principal sum, or so much thereof as should from time to time thereafter remain unpaid. The mortgagors having made default, the mortgagees recovered judgment against them for principal and interest on the covenant:—Held, that the covenant merged in the judgment, and that the mortgagees were therefore entitled only to 4l. per cent. interest on the judgment debt, and not to 5l. per cent. interest on the principal sum under the covenant. Popple v. Sylvester (52 L. J. Ch. 54; 22 Ch. D. 98); Fewings, Ex parte (53 L. J. Ch. 545; 25 Ch. D. 338), and Lowry v. Williams ([1895] 1 Ir. R. 274) discussed and applied. Usborne v. Lime-rick Market Trustees, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 85—C.A.

Priorities — Interest — Covenant — Judgment — Merger.—By local Acts of Parliament passed in 1852 and 1862 power was given to the trustees of a market to borrow money upon the security of the tolls, and the later Act provided that “the interest on the sum authorised to be borrowed under the Act of 1852, and the interest on the sum authorised to be borrowed under this Act, shall be a first charge on the tolls”:—Held, that the interest on a mortgage effected under the later Act took priority over the principal of a mortgage effected under the earlier Act, notwithstanding that the prior mortgagee had recovered judgment for the amount due for principal and interest, and had obtained the appointment of a receiver. Where a covenant for the payment of interest in a mortgage-deed is an independent covenant, and not merely ancillary to the covenant for the payment of the principal, it will not be merged in a judgment. A mortgage-deed contained a covenant “that so long as the principal sum or any part thereof should remain unpaid” the mortgagors would pay interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. The mortgagors made default, and the mortgagees recovered judgment against them for principal and interest:—Held, that the covenant did not merge in the judgment, and that the mortgagees were entitled to interest at the rate of 5 per cent. under the covenant, and not to 4 per cent. only on the judgment debt. *Economic Life Assurance Society v. 2. OFFICERS.

Metropolitan Borough Council—“Existing officer”—Additional Work—Remuneration—Power of Finance Committee to Remunerate for Temporary Assistance.—The plaintiff, who at the time of the coming into operation of the London Government Act, 1899, was accountant to the Hackney Vestry, was transferred by that Act as an existing officer to the defendant council. The plaintiff did not enter into any new contract with the council, but continued to perform the duties attaching to his former office, and also, at the request, as he alleged, of the finance committee, did much additional work. He applied to the finance committee for remuneration for extra services, and the committee recommended to the council that he should be paid a sum of 50l.; but the council refused to adopt the recommendation. He sued the council on a quantum meruit in respect of the extra services for a sum of 112l. 10s.:—Held—first, that the plaintiff, not having availed himself of the option given to him under section 30, sub-section 1 of the Act to relinquish his office on the ground that the duties he was required to perform were "not analogous" or "an unreasonable addition" to his then existing duties, must be taken to have done the additional work without reference to any implied contract that he should be remunerated for so doing; secondly, that the plaintiff's claim was inadmissible by reason of the provision in section 8, sub-section 3 of the London Government Act, 1899, that a liability exceeding 50% shall not be incurred by a Metropolitan borough council except upon a resolution of the council passed on an estimate submitted by the finance committee. Gray v. Hackney Borough Council, 2 L. G. R. 429—Buckley, J.

Transfer of Powers to Borough Council—Abolition of Office—Officer not Required to Devote Whole Time to Duties of Office—Compensation—Assessment—Deduction—Treasury "Rule"—Practice of Treasury—Failure of Council to Exercise Discretion—Mandamus—Appeal to Treasury—Adequate Alternative Remedy.]—A Metropolitan borough council, in assessing under section 120 of the Local Government Act, 1888, the compensation to be paid on the abolition of his office to an officer who had not been required to devote his whole time to the duties of the office, in accordance with what they ascertained to be the practice of the Treasury in assessing the compensation of Civil servants, calculated the compensation as if the officer's whole time had been required, and deducted 25 per cent. from the amount so arrived at:—Held, that the practice of the Treasury could not be regarded as a "rule" relating to the Civil Service within the meaning of sub-section (1) of the above section; that the council had not performed the duty imposed on them by sub-section (3) of assessing the just amount of the compensation; that the right of appeal to the Treasury given by sub-section (4) was not so adequate a remedy as mandamus; and that a mandamus ought therefore to issue to compel the council to perform their duty. Rea v. Stepney Borough Council, 71 L. J. K.B. 238; [1902] 1 K.B. 817; 86 L. T. 21; 50 W. R. 412; 66 J. P. 183—D.

Validity—Notice to Person Complained Against.]—A by-law made by the London County Council under section 39 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, is unreasonable and void if it does not provide for notice to the person complained against before the commencement of proceedings. *Nokes v. 4. MATTERS OF MUNICIPAL REGULATION.

(a) Advertisements.

Distribution of Print "by way of advertisement"—Handbill containing News.]—In order that a print may be carried or distributed by way of advertisement within the meaning of section 9 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867, the print itself must be an advertisement. Therefore where a print which is a publication of news, but is not in itself an advertisement, is, without the approval of the Commissioner of Police, distributed in such a way as to obtain the same consequences as if it were an advertisement, the distributor thereof is not liable to the penalty imposed by the section for distributing a print by way of advertisement, except in such form and manner as may be approved by the Commissioner of Police. Gage v. Brealey, 67 L. J. Q.B. 457; 46 W. R. 415—D.

Paper Scattered in Street—"Litter."—Paper advertising bills thrown in a thoroughfare may be litter within section 60, sub-section 3 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839. Hills v. Davies, 88 L. T. 464; 67 J. P. 198; 1 L. G. R. 499; 20 Cox C.C. 398—D.

Exhibition of—Licence Given by Local Authority.]—By section 30, sub-section 14 of the Baker Street and Waterloo Railway Act, 1900, the railway company were prohibited from exhibiting advertisements other than those relating to their undertaking upon premises acquired by them under the Act in a certain Metropolitan parish "unless the same shall have been approved" by the vestry or their successors. The defendant, being about to exhibit advertisements as the licensee of the railway company on a hoarding erected on land in the parish acquired by the company under the powers of the Act, applied to the plaintiff council, as successors of the vestry, for their permission. Correspondence ensued between the parties, in which the council intimated that they proposed to make a charge in respect of their permission. In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendant to recover a sum of 168*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* under a contract alleged to be contained in the correspondence,—Held, first, that no contract was constituted by the letters; secondly, that under section 30, sub-section 14 of the Act the plaintiff council had no power to make any charge as consideration for their approval to the exhibition of advertisements; that the plaintiff council were required by the sub-section to act judicially, and that any such contract as was endeavoured to be set up would therefore, if entered into, be illegal. Reg. v. Bowman (67 L. J. Q.B. 463; [1898] 1 Q.B. 663) applied. Southwark Borough Council v. Partington Advertising Co., 3 L. G. R. 505; 69 J. P. 183—Warrington, J.

Advertisement Hoarding on Boundary Wall—"Structure."—The respondents attached to the front walls of a shop belonging to them in the county of London certain advertisement-cases without having obtained the consent of the London County Council. The cases were constructed of sheet-iron supported by strong wrought-iron supports securely cut and pinned through the walls, though they might have been moved, with the exception of the iron supports, in a single day without injury to the building; their outer sides were covered with wooden frames carrying canvas or linen lined with advertisements, provision being made for illuminating the interior by electric light; they varied in width from two to five feet, and in height from five to seven feet, stood out ten inches in front of the wall, that being less than the projection of the cornice over the shop, and projected ten inches beyond the building-line of the street:—Held (WILLS, J., dissenting), that the cases were not a "structure" within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, or a bringing forward of a structure within the meaning of section 200, sub-section 3 of the Act; and that the respondents by erecting them without the consent of the Council had not acted in contravention of these sections. Hull v. London County Council (70 L. J. K.B. 364; [1901] 1 K.B. 580) commented on. London County Council v. Illuminated Advertisements Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 1034; [1904] 2 K.B. 886; 91 L. T. 352; 53 W. (b) Betting.

By-law against.]—A by-law of the London County Council prohibiting any person from frequenting and using any street or other public place in the metropolis for bookmaking or betting is valid, and is not ultra vires as being repugnant to section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867. White v. Morley, 68 L. J. Q.B. 702; [1899] 2 Q.B. 34; 80 L. T. 761; 47 W. R. 583; 63 J. P. 550; 19 Cox C. C. 345—D.

— Validity—Street Betting.]—A by-law made by a county council under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, prohibiting persons from frequenting and using the streets or other public places in the county for the purpose of bookmaking or betting or carrying out betting transactions, is a valid by-law "for the good rule and government" of the county, within the meaning of section 23 of the Act of 1882, and it is not too wide or unreasonable. Thomas v. Sutters, 69 L. J. Ch. 27; [1900] 1 Ch. 10; 81 L. T. 469; 48 W. R. 133; 19 Cox C.C. 418—C.A. s.r. Hickey v. Hay, 65 J. P. 232—D.

Neither is such a by-law repugnant to section 23 of the Metropolitan Streets Act, 1867 (an Act for the regulation of traffic), which provides that the assembling of three or more persons in a street for the purpose of betting is to be deemed to be an obstruction. Thomas v. Sutters, supra.

General Line of—Appeal from Superintending Architect—Costs.]—Where the general building-line is to be defined and drawn within section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, is a question of fact which ought to be decided with reference to the physical aspect of the street and buildings, &c. Therefore, on an appeal to the tribunal of appeal from the certificate of the superintending architect, that tribunal, in fixing the building-line, can take different points from which and to which they will define the general building-line from those which the superintending architect has chosen. London County Council and London Building Act, 1894, In re, 91 L. T. 501; 68 J. P. 490; 2 L. G. R. 1265—D.

The tribunal of appeal can award a lump sum for costs to a successful appellant instead of simply awarding costs. Ib.

Erection beyond General Line of Buildings —"Land lawfully occupied by building."]—

The London Building Act, 1894, s. 22, provides that no building shall, without the written consent of the County Council, be erected beyond the general line of buildings in any street, but that "this section shall not apply to any building or structure erected after the commencement of this Act, which, either at the commencement of this Act upon land, or at any time within seven years previously, has or shall have been lawfully occupied by a building or structure." Two adjoining houses abutting on, and standing more than fifty feet back from a street in the metropolis, had each a one-storey building upon the forecourt which extended to the side of the road. One of these buildings was erected, in 1858, contrary to the provisions of section 140 of 7 Geo. 4, c. cxlii., which provided that no building should be erected in this street within fifty feet of the side of the road. That section was repealed by section 75 of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1862, which provided, by section 108, that nothing therein contained should "in any way prejudice or affect any act, matter, or thing done or commenced prior to the passing of this Act." The other building was erected in 1876, under a licence from the Metropolitan Board of Works, which, under section 76 of the Act of 1862, was given subject to the condition that the erection should not be at any time in any way altered or raised without the consent of the board. The owner proposed to pull down and rebuild the whole premises and to erect, without the consent of the County Council, three-storey buildings upon the forecourts, which would be beyond the general line of buildings in the street:—Held, that the owner was not entitled to erect the proposed buildings upon the forecourts beyond the general line of buildings in the street without the consent of the County Council. Scott v. Carritt, 82 L. T. 67—C.A. And see London County Council v. Coal Co-operative Society, 72 J. P. 68—D.

Raising of Buildings—"Land lawfully occupied by building or structure."]—The appellant was the owner of two adjoining houses in the metropolis built back fifty feet from the road with forecourts in front abutting on the road, which forecourts had been occupied by one-storey shops. One of these shops had been erected without any licence and in contravention of the statutory provision then in force with regard to this road that no building should be erected within fifty feet from the road. This statutory provision was repealed, and the repealing Act, which had no provision dealing with acts done in contravention of the repealed Act, required that no new buildings should be erected or raised beyond the general building line without the consent of the Metropolitan Board of Works. The second shop was built under this enactment, and with the necessary consent, but subject to the condition that the one-storey shop should not be raised without the like consent. The appellant proposed to rebuild the whole premises, including the shops, and to raise the shops and bring out the buildings to the line of frontage of the shops, which would have been in advance of the general building line as certified under section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894:—Held, that the land occupied by the shops was not land which at the commencement of the London Building Act, 1894, was "lawfully occupied by a building or structure" within the meaning of sub-section 2 of section 22 of that Act, so as to entitle the appellant to erect the proposed buildings beyond the general building line, and that the appellant was therefore not entitled to erect the proposed buildings without the consent of the County Council as required by sub-section 1 of that section. Scott v. Carritt, 81 L. T. 454; 63 J. P. 772—D.

Height—Measurement—“Front or nearest external wall”—Building of Varying Heights—Building Regarded as a Whole—New Street.—In order to ascertain whether the height of a building, which is of varying height, does or does not exceed the limit prescribed by section 49 of the London Building Act, 1894, the building must not be regarded as a whole, but each part must be regarded separately to see if that particular part exceeds the prescribed height, and the measurement must be taken from the front wall of each part to the opposite side of the street. Att.-Gen. v. Metcalf, 76 L. J. Ch. 259; [1907] 2 Ch. 23; 96 L. T. 351; 71 J. P. 182; 23 T. L. R. 263—Kekewich, J.

Exemption—Vested in or in Occupation of Crown.—The exemption from the provisions of the London Building Act, 1894, given by section 202 of that statute to, among other structures, "any building structure or work vested in and in the occupation of any department of Her Majesty's Government," does not extend to buildings in respect of which Her Majesty's Commissioners of Works have an option for a lease when they are completed, even although such buildings are being constructed under the supervision of their surveyor. Drury v. Rickard, 63 J. P. 374—D.

Show-case—Structure.—The respondents, whose business premises were approached from the public footway by a flight of four stone steps and a stone landing at the top of the steps, erected, without the consent of the London County Council, upon those stone steps and landing a large show-case of wood and glass 7 feet 6 inches in length, 1 foot 10 inches in width, and 9 feet 3 inches in height above the street level. The show-case, which took the place of a shop front, projected 6 feet 3 inches beyond the general line of buildings in the street:—Held, that the show-case did not amount to a "structure" within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894. London County Council v. Illuminated Advertisements Co. (73 L. J. K.B. 1034; [1904] 2 K.B. 886) followed. London County Council v. Hancock, 76 L. J. K.B. 526; [1907] 2 K.B. 45; 96 L. T.

Certificate of Superintending Architect—Railway Company—Claim of Exemption from Operation of Certificate—Appeal Therefrom to Tribunal of Appeal—Person Aggrieved.—Where a certificate fixing a building-line has been given by a superintending architect under section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, an appeal therefrom by a railway company to the tribunal of appeal does not lie where their ground of appeal is that, by reason of the provisions of section 31 of the above Act, they are not bound by such certificate because it affects the exercise of the powers conferred upon them by their special Act for railway purposes. South-Eastern and Chatham Railways v. London County Council, 76 L. J. K.B. 528; [1907] 2 K.B. 91; 96 L. T. 676; 5 L. G. R. 626; 71 J. P. 260—D. And see Lilley v. London County Council, 98 L. T. 110; 6 L. G. R. 126; 72 J. P. 41—C.A.

Appeal to Tribunal of Appeal—Costs.

—Where, upon an appeal to the tribunal of appeal under the London Building Act, 1894, by parties interested, against a certificate of the superintending architect of Metropolitan buildings defining the general line of buildings in a street, the London County Council appear to support the certificate, the tribunal, if they reverse or vary the certificate, have power under section 183 of the Act to order costs to be paid by the Council to the appellants. London County Council v. Metropolitan Railway, 97 L. T. 136; 5 L. G. R. 814; 71 J. P. 372—D.

In 1893 a certificate was made by the superintendent architect of Metropolitan buildings, in which he fixed the line of buildings in a part of P. Street. No appeal was taken from that certificate. Since 1898 nothing had been done to change the frontage of the buildings in the particular part of the street:—Held, that the appeal tribunal under the London Building Act, 1894, could not fix another general building-line for the same part of the street. Lilley & Skinner, In re, 97 L. T. 306; 71 J. P. 437; 5 L. G. R. 1070—D.

Finding by Magistrate as a Question of Fact—Mandamus to State Case.—In proceedings against a theatre company for a contravention of the London Building Act, 1894, for erecting a structure beyond the general line of buildings without having obtained the written consent of the London County Council, it appeared that the construction which was said to be a "structure" consisted of a framework of wood which acted as a foundation for some plaster work, intended to represent or imitate stonework. It was a little over 13 feet in height and 7 feet 10 inches in width, and at the deepest part it extended 2 feet 2 inches beyond the defined line. The back of the structure was fastened by iron holdfasts to the wall of the theatre, and it could be removed without serious injury to the wall. It was not built into or fastened to the pavement, but stood upon the pavement lights. The centre of the front was composed of transparent material, and being hollow it contained lights which illuminated the advertisements printed on the transparent material. The magistrate found as a fact that the erection was a "structure," and being of opinion that no question of law was involved, declined to state a Case. Upon an application for a mandamus requiring him to state a Case,—Held, that, in view of the magistrate's finding, and the fact that it could not be said that there was no evidence upon which he could arrive at it, the magistrate should not be ordered to state a Case. Rea v. Denman; Palace Theatre Co., Ex parte, 96 L. T. 672; 5 L. G. R. 649; 71 J. P. 279—D.

Failure to Give Notice of Objection—Allowing Work to Proceed.—Notice of objection by a district surveyor, under section 150 of the London Building Act, 1894, is not a condition precedent to proceedings under section 153 for a contravention of that Act in respect of which a notice of irregularity has been served on the builder under section 151. Coggin v. Duff, 96 L. T. 670; 5 L. G. R. 615; 71 J. P. 302—D.

Notice to Set Back Building—Forecourt.—Section 14 of the London Building Act, 1894, does not apply to all the offences created by section 13, sub-section 1, and where the external boundary of a "forecourt" is within the prescribed distance from the centre of a roadway, the County Council has no power under section 14 to serve a notice upon the owner or occupier requiring him to set back the forecourt so that every part of the external boundary thereof shall be at a distance from the centre of the roadway not less than the distance permitted by the Act. London County Council v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., 67 L. J. Q.B. 24; [1898] 1 Q.B. 106; 77 L. T. 440; 61 J. P. 759—D.

New Building — Volunteers' Drill Hall — Drainage to Main Sewer.—A drill hall built for the exclusive use of a volunteer corps and vested in the commanding officer for military purposes is not exempt from the provisions of section 75 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, on the ground that it is Crown property. St. Margaret's and St. John's Vestry v. Hoskins, 68 L. J. Q.B. 840; [1899] 2 Q.B. 474; 81 L. T. 390; 47 W. R. 649; 63 J. P. 725—D.

Gas Company.—Where a gas company erect a building upon lands specified in the schedule to their private Act, they are subject to the sections of the London Building Acts, 1894 and 1898, relating to the position of new buildings with reference to streets. London County Council v. Wandsworth and Putney Gas Co., 82 L. T. 562; 64 J. P. 500—D.

Construction of Buildings—Building Used in Part for Purposes of Trade and in Part as a Dwelling-house—Separation of Parts by Fire-resisting Divisions.—Upon the true construction of section 74, sub-section 2 of the London Building Act, 1894, a shopkeeper may live over his shop, and carry on his trade in the lower part of his house, without making fireproof divisions between the lower part of the building used for trade and the upper part used as a dwelling-house. But on appeal this judgment was reversed, upon the ground that the question intended to be raised by the Case stated by the magistrate was concluded by his findings of fact. Dicksee v. Hoskins, 70 L. J. K.B. 851; [1901] 2 K.B. 660; 85 L. T. 205; 49 W. R. 693; 65 J. P. 612—C.A.

Erection—Notice to Local Authority—Building Authorised by Special Act.—Notice to the local authority under section 76 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, need not be given before erecting pursuant to section 4 of the Surrey Commercial Dock Act, 1894, a building which is necessary in connection with the works thereby specially authorised, inasmuch as the control of the local authority under the earlier general enactment is inconsistent with the powers of the dock company under the later special enactment. Surrey Commercial Dock Co. v. Bermondsey Borough, 78 L. J. K.B. 293; [1904] 1 K.B. 474; 90 L. T. 123; 52 W. R. 446; 2 L. G. R. 356; 68 J. P. 155; 20 T. L. R. 208—D.

"Structure" — Advertisement - hoarding on Boundary-wall.—Whether an advertisement-hoarding placed on the top of a boundary-wall is a "structure" within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, so as to require the consent of the London County Council to its erection, quære. Tunmer v. Partington Advertising Co., 68 J. P. 318—Channell, J.

The respondents attached to the front walls of a shop belonging to them in the county of London certain advertisement-cases without having obtained the consent of the London County Council. The cases were constructed of sheet-iron supported by strong wrought-iron supports securely cut and pinned through the walls, though they might have been moved, with the exception of the iron supports, in a single day without injury to the building; their outer sides were covered with wooden frames carrying canvas or linen lined with advertisements, provision being made for illuminating the interior by electric light; they varied in width from two to five feet, and in height from five to seven feet, stood out ten inches in front of the wall, that being less than the projection of the cornice over the shop, and projected ten inches beyond the building-line of the street:—Held (WILLS, J., dissenting), that the cases were not a "structure" within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, or a bringing forward of a structure within the meaning of section 200, sub-section 3 of the Act; and that the respondents by erecting them without the consent of the Council had not acted in contravention of these sections. Hull v. London County Council (70 L. J. K.B. 864; [1901] 1 K.B. 580) commented on. London County Council v. Illuminated Advertisements Co., 73 L. J. K.B. 1034; [1904] 2 K.B. 886; 91 L. T. 352; 68 J. P. 445; 2 L. G. R. 905; 20 T. L. R. 527—D.

Stand for Viewing State Processions—Powers of Supervision and Inspection—Transfer of Power from London County Council to Borough Council.—The powers, duties, and liabilities of district surveyors with respect to the supervision or inspection of wooden structures falling within section 84 of the London Building Act, 1894, have not been transferred to the Westminster City Council by section 5, sub-section 1 of the London Government Act, 1899, and Schedule 2, Part I. of the Act, but the district surveyors have neither the right, power, nor obligation of performing any duties prescribed by a licence granted by the Westminster City unless by its terms it indicates that they are the persons to fulfil the duties. Westminster City Council v. Watson, 71 L. J. K.B. 603; [1902] 2 K.B. 717; 87 L. T. 326—D.

Where matters are involved which impose upon a district surveyor the right of inspecting such a wooden structure under the terms of the Act, the district surveyor should have notice given to him under section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894. For example, questions might arise of dangerous structures or as to interference with some street or street-line. Ib.

The right to receive the fees specified by the London Building Act, 1894, for supervision and inspection of such wooden structures has not been transferred to the Westminster City Council and its officers, nor has it altogether lapsed. If in a proper case for good cause a surveyor on information he has received has the duty cast upon him to inspect the structure, or some question arises which properly gives him the right to inspect in order to see whether the provisions of the Act have been infringed, he would be entitled to his fees. Ib.

— Power to License — Transfer of Power from London County Council to Borough Council.]

—A stand of a temporary character constructed of wood, except the nails and some of the other fastenings and the cloth or other hangings placed upon it, erected for the purpose of enabling spectators to view a State procession is a "wooden structure" within the meaning of section 84 of the London Building Act, 1894, and is not a building or structure of a temporary character falling within the operation of sections 82 and 83; and consequently where such a stand is erected within one of the areas constituted a separate borough by the London Government Act, 1899, the power to license the setting up of the stand and the power to take proceedings for default in obtaining or observing the conditions of the licence are by section 5, sub-section 1 of the latter Act transferred from the London County Council to the council of the borough. Westminster City Council v. London County Council, 71 L. J. K.B. 244; [1902] 1 K.B. 326; 86 L. T. 53; 50 W. R. 429; 66 J. P. 199—D.

Wooden Structure "used for the purposes of or in connection with the traffic of" a Railway—Licence—Exemption.—A wooden structure erected by a coal merchant at his own expense with the permission of a railway company in their coal yard or depot, occupied by him rent free and without any agreement as to tenure, and used by him for the clerical work connected with the delivery to him by the company of coal consigned to him by their line, and the sale of it by him to his customers, is "used for the purposes of or in connection with the traffic of" a railway company within the meaning of section 86 of the London Building Act, 1894, and is consequently exempt from the operation of section 84, which provides that no person shall set up a wooden structure without having first obtained a licence from the London County Council. Elliott v. London County Council, 68 L. J. Q.B. 887; [1899] 2 Q.B. 277; 81 L. T. 155; 63 J. P. 645—D.

Wooden Structure Erected and Continued without Licence—Liability to Penalties.—A liability to penalties for erecting a wooden structure without licence under section 13 of the Metropolitan Building Act, 1882, which existed on January 1, 1895, when the London Building Act, 1894, came into operation, is saved by section 215 of the latter Act; but proceedings which have been delayed for more than six months after January 1, 1895, cannot be taken for the recovery of such penalties owing to the operation of section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. Reg. v. Cluer; London County Council, Ex parte, 67 L. J. Q.B. 86; 71 L. T. 439—D.

Dangerous Structure—Service of Summons—Owner of Premises.]

—The rule to be observed in the service of a summons under section 107 of the London Building Act, 1894, is that where the owner of the premises can by reasonable and ordinary enquiry be discovered, the procedure must be under section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848; but that where, after such enquiry, the owner cannot be ascertained, the procedure under section 188, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1894 is applicable, and the summons may be served by affixing a copy thereof on some conspicuous part of the building to which it relates. Reg. v. Mead, 66 L. J. Q.B. 874; [1898] 1 Q.B. 110; 77 L. T. 462; 46 W. R. 61; 61 J. P. 759; 18 Cox C.C. 670—D.

— Safety Compulsorily Provided for by London County Council—Reinstatement of Pavement—Limit of Council's Liability.]

—In compulsorily exercising the powers of restoring dangerous structures to a state of safety, vested in them by Part IX. of the London Building Act, 1894, the London County Council need not obtain a licence from the vestry or district authority for the erection of hoardings or for the removal of paving-stones from the pavement for the insertion of necessary props and shores; nor need they give notice to such authorities of their intention so to proceed. Having restored a dangerous structure to a state of safety, the obligation of the London County Council is at an end, and does not extend to the reinstatement of the pavement. Crisp v. London County Council, 68 L. J. Q.B. 499; [1899] 1 Q.B. 720; 80 L. T. 654; 63 J. P. 484—Wills, J.

— Inspection of Party-wall—Fees of District Surveyor.]

—A district surveyor in London is not entitled to more than one set of fees for his services in the inspection of a party-wall alleged to be a dangerous structure, notwithstanding that it separates premises belonging to different owners, and that it has been necessary for him to inspect both sides of the wall, and to enter upon different sets of premises for that purpose. London County Council v. Sheinman, 93 L. T. 505; 3 L. G. R. 977; 69 J. P. 395—D.

Music Hall Licensed before 1878—Danger from Fire—Compliance by Owners with Notice to Remedy Structural Defects—Subsequent Notice to the Same Effect.]

—Upon the true construction of section 11 of the Metropolis Management and Building Acts Amendment Act, 1878, where a notice to owners of a music hall, licensed before the Act, to remedy structural defects so as to avoid danger from fire has been once complied with, a subsequent notice by the London County Council (not rendered necessary by any new works done by the owner) requiring further structural alterations for the same end is ultra vires. St. James's Hall Co. v. London County Council, 70 L. J. K.B. 510; [1901] 2 K.B. 251; 84 L. T. 568; 49 W. R. 572—Channell, J.

Building used in Part for Purposes of Trade—Public-house — Dwelling-house — Fire-resisting Materials.]—A public-house is not a building “used in part for purposes of trade . . . and in part as a dwelling-house” within the meaning of section 74, sub-section 2 of the London Building Act, 1894, and it is not therefore necessary that “the means of approach” to the living rooms should be constructed of fire-resisting materials. Carritt v. Godson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 799; [1899] 2 Q.B. 193; 80 L. T. 771; 63 J. P. 644; 19 Cox C.C. 355—D.

Portico or Shelter—Supported entirely from Porch—Projection over Pavement beyond Building Line.]—A glass and iron portico or shelter which projects beyond the general building line of the street, and which is dovetailed into the main structure of a building, if not erected by the consent of the London Council, is within section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894. Coburg Hotel v. London County Council, 81 L. T. 450; 63 J. P. 805—D.

Electric-lighting Boxes in Street—Notice to District Surveyor.]—An electric-lighting box of considerable size and substantial construction constructed in a street is a “building structure or work” within section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, and the circumstance that the electric-lighting undertakers by whom the box is constructed are required by their Provisional Order to give notice of the construction of such boxes to the local authority and to the Postmaster-General, and to construct the boxes in accordance with plans approved by those authorities, does not relieve them from the obligation of giving notice to the district surveyor under section 145 of the Act of 1894. Whitechapel Board of Works v. Crow (84 L. T. 595), approved and followed. Charing Cross and Strand Electric Supply Corporation v. Woodthorpe, 88 L. T. 772; 1 L. G. R. 551; 67 J. P. 286—D.

Rain-water Pipe—Notice to Alter—Offence.]—The appellant vestry served a notice on the respondent requiring him to disconnect a rain-water pipe from a drain and cause it to discharge over a stoneware gully trap. The pipe had been put up prior to the passing of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and it was not alleged to be defective. The respondent, having failed to comply with the notice, was summoned at the instance of the appellants, but the magistrates dismissed the summons, holding that no offence had been committed:—Held, that the magistrates were right. Hammersmith Vestry v. Ainsworth, 62 J. P. 108—D.

Temporary Floorings put in Public Baths—Notice to District Surveyor before Commencement of Work.]—Temporary wooden flooring put in a public swimming-bath so as to convert same into a hall, where such flooring does not and is not likely to affect the building in which it is placed, does not constitute a “structure, or building or work” within the meaning of section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, so as to require the service of a building notice on the district surveyor before the commencement of the work. Handover v. Meeson, 67 J. P. 813—D.

Re-erection of Buildings on Site Formerly Occupied—Substitution of Factory for Dwelling-houses.]—The right reserved by section 13, sub-section 5 of the London Building Act, 1894, to re-erect buildings erected before that Act nearer to the centre of the roadway than is allowed by the section in the case of wholly new buildings extends to the erection of buildings differing wholly both in height and class from the previously existing buildings—e.g. to the erection of high factories in substitution for small dwelling-houses, the sub-section being concerned with identity of ground area only. London County Council v. Patman & Fotheringham, 1 L. G. R. 519; 67 J. P. 285—D.

“Uniting” of Buildings—Blocks of Flats Commenced as Separate Buildings but Finished as Single Building.]—Section 77, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894, which prohibits the “uniting” of buildings except where they are wholly in one occupation or are constructed or adapted to be so, applies only to the uniting of buildings completely erected, in the first instance, as separate structures, and does not apply to the uniting of separate buildings in the course of erection for the purpose of transforming them into and finishing them as a single separate structure:—Seemle, that pushing a covered way between two buildings is not “uniting” the buildings within the sub-section. Goodchild v. Matthews, 89 L. T. 369; 1 L. G. R. 523; 67 J. P. 296—D.

Buildings Wholly in one Occupation or so Constructed or Adapted to be so.]—No offence is committed under section 77, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894, by the making of an opening between two buildings by means of which they are united, if such buildings, though not wholly in one occupation, are in fact united by an opening previously made, even although such prior opening was made without proper authority. The words in that sub-section, “originally constructed or adapted to be so,” mean either buildings originally constructed to be in one occupation or buildings which, not originally so constructed, have been subsequently adapted to be in one occupation. Woodthorpe v. Spencer, 63 J. P. 246—D.

Notice to Remedy Structural Defects—Action to Restrain Proceedings.]—In 1885 the board served a notice on the defendants, under section 11 of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1878, requiring them to make certain structural alterations in the premises, and the defendants complied with the requirements of that notice. In May, 1890, the London County Council served another notice upon the defendants under section 11, requiring certain alterations in the same premises. The defendants gave notice of appeal under protest, and commenced this action for a declaration that the defendants had no power to give a second notice under section 11, and for an injunction restraining them from taking any proceedings upon the notice:—Held, that an interlocutory injunction might properly be granted restraining the defendants, until the trial, from taking any proceedings in the arbitration upon the plaintiffs' appeal against the notice. St. James's Hall, Lim. v. London County Council, 83 L. T. 98—C.A.

Building—Building and Adjoining Owners—Party Wall—Difference—Reference to Surveyors—Claim for Compensation for Loss of Trade—Jurisdiction of Surveyors.—Where a difference has arisen between a building owner and an adjoining owner with regard to the raising of a party wall, and such dispute has been referred to three surveyors for settlement under section 91 of the London Building Act, 1894, the surveyors have no power to award compensation for loss of trade caused to the adjoining owner by the execution of the work. Adams v. Marylebone Borough Council, 77 L. J. K.B. 1; [1907] 2 K.B. 822; 71 J. P. 465; 97 L. T. 593; 23 T. L. R. 702—C.A.

Surveyor's Fees—Recovery of from Owner—Proceedings before Justices—Time within which to Bring.—Where default is made by a builder in payment of the fees due from him to the district surveyor under section 154 of the London Building Act, 1894, they may, under sub-section 2 of section 157 of the Act, be recovered from the owner within six calendar months from the delivery to him of a proper bill specifying the amount of the fees, inasmuch as until that time the "matter of complaint" within the meaning of section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, does not arise. Corbett v. Badger, 70 L. J. K.B. 640; [1901] 2 K.B. 278; 84 L. T. 602; 49 W. R. 539; 65 J. P. 552—D.

Land of School Board.—By section 21 of the London Building Act, 1894, any building to be erected upon any lands belonging at the time of the coming into operation of the Act to the London School Board may be erected in accordance with the provision of any Act in force immediately before the passing of the Act:—Held, that the fees payable to the district surveyor were also regulated by such earlier Act. Marsland v. Wallis, 83 L. T. 761; 65 J. P. 166—D.

(ii.) Party Walls.

Notice by Building Owner—Sufficiency.—A notice given by a building owner under section 90, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894, in respect of a party structure should be so clear and intelligible that the adjoining owner may see what counter-notice he may require to give under section 90, sub-sections 5 and 6. Hobbs, Hart & Co. v. Grover, 68 L. J. Ch. 84; [1899] 1 Ch. 11; 79 L. T. 454—C.A.

Sufficiency—"Particulars of proposed work."—A party-wall notice given by a building owner to an adjoining owner under section 90 of the London Building Act, 1894, ought to be so clear and intelligible that the adjoining owner may be able to see whether he ought to give a counter-notice, and what the nature of any such notice should be. Hobbs v. Grover, [1899] 1 Ch. 11; 79 L. T. 454—C.A.

Validity—Limit of Time for Commencing Work—Settlement of Difference by Arbitration.

—The provision of section 90, sub-section 4 of the London Building Act, 1894, that a party-wall notice shall not be available for the exercise of any right unless the work to which the notice relates is begun within six months after the service thereof and is prosecuted with due diligence, does not apply where a difference has arisen between the building owner and the adjoining owner, and is being settled by arbitration under section 91 of the Act, notwithstanding that the work has not been begun within six months after the service of the notice. Lead-bitter v. Marylebone Borough Council (No. 2), 74 L. J. K.B. 507; [1905] 1 K.B. 661; 92 L. T. 819; 53 W. R. 470; 69 J. P. 201; 21 T. L. R. 377—C.A.

Notice by Building Owner—"Adjoining owner"—Successive Owners.—The party-structure notice to be served under section 90 of the London Building Act, 1894, by a building owner on the "adjoining owner" must be served on every person in possession of or in receipt of rents or profits arising from the adjoining premises or in occupation of the same otherwise than as tenant from year to year, or for any less time, or as a tenant at will. Semble, however, that where a particular interest in adjoining premises is owned by a number of persons together, as in the case of a tenancy in common or joint tenancy, then it is sufficient to serve one of these persons only. List v. Tharp (66 L. J. Ch. 175; [1897] 1 Ch. 260) applied. Crosby v. Alhambra Co., 76 L. J. Ch. 176; [1907] 1 Ch. 295—Neville, J.

"Owner"—"Building owner"—Tenant at Will until Lease Granted—London County Council Conditions of Letting.—At a sale by auction the plaintiff was declared the lessee of certain property belonging to the London County Council subject to certain of the Council's conditions as to letting. One of these conditions provided that until the granting of the lease the lessee should be deemed tenant at will of the Council at the rent to be reserved thereby, and that he should pay the rent and perform the covenants and conditions to be reserved and contained in such lease when granted as if such lease had been actually granted. Under the Council's "building conditions" the plaintiff was to be at liberty to remove such earth, &c., as should be necessary to enable him to erect his buildings. Before the plaintiff became entitled to have a lease granted to him he built a party-wall, partly on his own property and partly on that of the defendant, the adjoining owner. On an application to restrain the defendant from interfering with the party-wall until he had paid his share of the costs of its erection,—Held, that the plaintiff, having agreed to become tenant at will of the Council until the granting of the lease, was not an "owner" within the definition of that term in section 5, sub-section 29 of the London Building Act, 1894, and therefore had not the rights of a building owner within section 87 of that Act. Orf v. Payton, 3 L. G. R. 126; 62 J. P. 103; 24 T. L. R. 90—Swinfen Eady, J.

Jurisdiction of Surveyors—Award that Adjoining Owner should be Entitled to Raise the Party-wall at any Time as he thought fit—Operations by Adjoining Owner without giving Building Owner's Notice.]—In 1902 the tenant to the plaintiffs, the freeholders of one of two adjoining houses in the Metropolis, being desirous of pulling down and rebuilding the house, gave to the defendants, the owners in fee of the adjoining house, a notice under section 90, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894, for the purpose of enabling him to exercise a building owner's rights in relation to the party-wall. Thereupon the defendants, as adjoining owners, gave to the tenant a notice, under section 89, sub-section 1, making certain requisitions as to works to be executed for their convenience. A difference having arisen upon the notice between the tenant as building owner, and the defendants as adjoining owners, it was referred to surveyors, under section 91 of the Act. The surveyors, by their award, provided, amongst other things, that the defendants should be entitled to raise the wall at any time as they might desire. The works proposed by the tenant were completed in 1902. In 1904 the defendants commenced to raise the party-wall without serving upon the plaintiffs, to whom in the meantime the tenant had surrendered his lease, a building owner's notice under the Act. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain the defendants from building upon the party-wall without first serving upon the plaintiffs a building owner's notice:—Held, that the jurisdiction of the surveyors was limited to differences as to matters to which the notices under the Act related, and that they therefore had no jurisdiction to award that the defendants should be entitled to raise the party-wall at any time as they might desire, that the defendants consequently had no right to build upon the wall without first serving a building owner's notice upon the plaintiffs as adjoining owners, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction. Leadbitter v. Marylebone Borough Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 1013; [1904] 2 K.B. 893; 91 L. T. 639; 53 W. R. 118; 68 J. P. 566; 20 T. L. R. 778—C.A.

Demolition of Buildings—Rights and Liabilities of Adjoining Owners—Notice—Railway Company—Acquisition of Land by Agreement—Station Purposes.]—A railway company's special Act provided that any buildings erected on any land acquired by agreement for an extraordinary purpose mentioned in the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, "except such buildings or parts of buildings as may be used for the purposes of a station," should be subject to the provisions of the Acts relating to buildings in the Metropolis:—Held, that the company were not exempt in regard to the site of a house, which they had acquired by agreement and were demolishing for the purposes of the construction of a station from the obligations of Part 8 of the London Building Act, 1894, requiring notice to be given by the owner of a building separated from another by a party-wall who does or is desirous of doing a work affecting the party-wall. Lewis & Solome v. Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway, 75 L. J. Ch. 282; [1906] 1 Ch. 508; 94 L. T. 732; 54 W. R. 435; 70 J. P. 221; 4 L. G. R. 432; 22 T. L. R. 282—Warrington, J.

Raised by Building Owner—Demise of House to Lessee—Subsequent Building Operations by Adjoining Owner—Use of Party-wall by Adjoining Owner beyond Use Thereof before Alteration—Claim by Lessee to Proportion of Expenses of Raising Party-wall.]—The lessee of a house in the Metropolis, whose lessors before the demise to him have at their own expense raised the party-wall between the demised and the adjoining house, is not entitled, where the owner of the adjoining house subsequently makes use of the party-wall beyond the use made of it by him before the alteration, to recover from the latter under the provisions of section 95, sub-section 2 of the London Building Act, 1894, any proportion of the expenses originally incurred by his lessors in raising the party-wall. Stone and Hastie, In re, 72 L. J. K.B. 846; [1903] 2 K.B. 463; 89 L. T. 353; 52 W. R. 130; 68 J. P. 44—C.A.

Jurisdiction of Surveyors to Entertain Claim by Lessee to Proportion of Original Expenses.]—Surveyors appointed under section 91 of the Act to settle a difference arising between a building and adjoining owner have no jurisdiction to entertain such a claim. Id.

(iii.) Projecting and Overhanging Matter.

"Structure"—Projection—Iron Framework Filled in with Glass.]—The respondent erected over the doorway of his premises a large iron framework filled in on the front and sides with leaded glass and covered over on the top with zinc. On the glass were the words "Russian Vapour Baths," which words were made visible at night by means of electric lights. The structure was beyond the general line of buildings and was erected without the appellant's consent:—Held, that the framework so erected was not a "structure" within the meaning of section 22, sub-section 1 of the London Building Act, 1894, and, on the authority of Hull v. London County Council (70 L. J. K.B. 364; [1901] 1 K.B. 580), that it was not a "projection" within section 73, sub-section 8 of the Act. Hull v. London County Council (supra) commented on. London County Council v. Schwezick, 74 L. J. K.B. 959; [1905] 2 K.B. 695; 93 L. T. 550; 54 W. R. 168; 69 J. P. 409; 3 L. G. R. 1159; 21 T. L. R. 731—D.

Electric Advertising Sign—Extension beyond General Line of Buildings.]—In order to constitute a projection within the meaning of section 73, sub-section 8 of the London Building Act, 1894, there must be a part of a building projecting or jutting out; the word "projection" in the sub-section means a prominence extending from the building in the sense of coming out from the building as part of the building. Therefore where an electric advertisement sign consisting of a wooden case with a glass front is, without the consent of the London County Council, affixed by iron brackets to the external wall of premises and does not project over the highway, an information will not lie under the sub-section for extending a projection from a building beyond the general line of buildings. Hull v. London County Council, 70 L. J. K.B. 364; [1901] 1 K.B. 580; 84 L. T. 160; 49 W. R. 396; 65 J. P. 309; 19 Cox C.C. 635—D.

Continuing Offence.—Assuming that an offence is, under such circumstances, committed, it is complete when the sign is completely affixed to the premises, and is not a continuing offence. Ib.

Absence of Power to Control Position of Sign without Trespass.—A person cannot escape liability for an offence under the sub-section upon the ground that by an agreement he has demised the part of the premises upon which the projection is extended, and therefore has no power to control or alter the position of the projection without trespass. London County Council v. Cross (61 L. J. M.C. 160) followed. Ib.

Portico or Shelter—Supported entirely from Porch.—A glass and iron portico or shelter which projects beyond the general building-line of the street, and which is dovetailed into the main structure of a building, if not erected by the consent of the London County Council, is within section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894. Coburg Hotel v. London County Council, 81 L. T. 450; 63 J. P. 805; 19 Cox C.C. 411—D.

Exposing Article for Sale upon Carriage-way or Footway—Who may Lay Information.—Any person may lay an information for the offence of exposing goods for sale upon or so as to hang over any carriage-way or footway so as to cause an annoyance or obstruction in any thoroughfare, which is created by section 60, sub-section 7 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839. Allman v. Hardcastle, 89 L. T. 553; 67 J. P. 440; 2 L. G. R. 13; 20 Cox C.C. 567—D.

Meat or Offal, or "other matter or thing" whatsoever Overhanging Pavement—Reflector Lights.—Reflector lights for increasing light in dimly lighted rooms, fixed by staples to the brickwork of the front of a house and supported at the angle by chains so as to overhang the pavement of the street, are not within the prohibition in section 65 of the Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817 (Michael Angelo Taylor's Act), against the hanging-out or exposing of meat or offal or "other matter or thing whatsoever" over the pavement. Winsborrow v. London Joint-Stock Bank, 88 L. T. 803; 1 L. G. R. 531; 67 J. P. 289; 20 Cox C.C. 478—D. And see LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

(d) Dwelling-house.

"To be inhabited or adapted to be inhabited by persons of the working class."—By section 13, sub-section 5 of the London Building Act, 1894, a building may, without the consent of the London County Council, be re-erected on the site of buildings existing at the passing of the Act, though such site is within the prescribed distance of the centre of the roadway, subject to the proviso that, if such new building be a "dwelling-house to be inhabited or adapted to be inhabited by persons of the working class," it shall not exceed in height the distance of its front wall from the opposite side of the street:—Held, that "to be inhabited" here means intended when erected to be so inhabited, and "adapted to be inhabited" means structurally adapted to be inhabited. Held, further, that a public building in the nature of a hotel for poor men is not a dwelling-house within the proviso. Held, further, that, though a building is a "public building" within the definition of section 5, sub-section 27, it may also be a "dwelling-house" within section 13, sub-section 5. Per CHANNELL, J.: By "working class" in this section is meant that class of persons who ordinarily live in such a condition of life that overcrowding is likely to take place. Per CHANNELL, J.: Quare, whether in section 13, sub-section 5, where height of dwelling-houses is regulated by the distance of their front wall from the opposite side of the street, "street" does not mean a roadway on the opposite side of which buildings are or may possibly be erected. London County Council v. Davis, 77 L. T. 693; 62 J. P. 68—D.

VOL. II.

The words "to be inhabited" in section 13, sub-section 5 of the London Building Act, 1894, as amended by section 4 of the London Building Act, 1894 (Amendment) Act, 1898, mean "intended to be inhabited," and that, with regard to such intention, the proper test to apply is: If the builder constructs the houses in such a way that it is practically certain that when constructed they would ultimately be inhabited by persons of the working class, and that their ultimate destination would be to become working-class tenements, although they might be in the hands of intermediate tenants, then they are "dwelling-houses to be inhabited by the working class"; and the mere fact that the builder had no intention that the houses should be occupied by persons of the working class only, but that he intended them for occupation by any one who might take them, does not prevent them from being "dwelling-houses to be inhabited by the working class." Crow v. Davis, 89 L. T. 407; 67 J. P. 319—D.

With regard to the question of adaptation, the proper test as to whether the houses are "adapted to be inhabited" by persons of the working class is not whether the houses are specially adapted for habitation by persons of the working class only, but whether they are, by reason of their structure, substantially adapted for habitation by persons who live in the same way as the working class live—that is, in small flats or separate tenements in the same house—and who would be liable to the same danger of overcrowding. London County Council v. Davis (77 L. T. 693) distinguished. Ib.

Where houses are constructed in such a way that it is practically certain that when constructed—meaning at the time of construction or building, and not ultimately—they will be inhabited by persons of the working class, the fact that the builder intends them for occupation by any one who will take them—meaning thereby any person who might come along, and who might be willing to take a particular house and not occupy or underlet it for the purposes of persons of the working class—is not sufficient to prevent the houses being houses intended “to be inhabited . . . by persons of the working class” within section 13, sub-section 5 of the London Building Act, 1894. Crow v. Davis, 91 L. T. 88; 68 J. P. 447; 2 L. G. R. 1034—D.

The words “to be inhabited” or “adapted to be inhabited” in section 13, sub-section 5, constitute two distinct conditions. The first means “intended to be inhabited,” and the second means in some respects “having features of construction which point to the use of the houses by persons of the working class as their natural use.” Ib.

Artizans' Dwellings—Houses Let in Lodgings—By-laws—Powers of Sanitary Authority.—A block of artisans' dwellings where the landlord does not reside, and which is divided into tenements each of which is occupied by one family, is not a house “let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family” within the meaning of section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and a sanitary authority has therefore no power to make by-laws for the regulation of such a building. Weatheritt v. Cantlay, 70 L. J. K.B. 799; [1901] 2 K.B. 285; 84 L. T. 768; 49 W. R. 568; 65 J. P. 644; 20 Cox C.C. 1—D.

“Public building” — Dwelling-house — Home for Children of Defective Intellect.—The appellant, a builder, was engaged by the Metropolitan Asylums Board to carry out certain alterations in a dwelling-house which they had purchased as a home for children of defective intellect. The house was acquired by the Board under a scheme for purchasing houses in London adjacent to schools specially provided by the London School Board for the education of children of that class. The appellant having neglected to comply with certain notices served upon him by the district surveyor under the London Building Act, 1894, Held, that the house was not a “public building” within the meaning of section 5, sub-section 27 of the Act, and that the appellant was therefore not bound to comply with the notices served upon him. Moses v. Marsland, 70 L. J. K.B. 261; [1901] 1 K.B. 668; 83 L. T. 740; 49 W. R. 217; 65 J. P. 188—D.

Domestic Building on Old Site—Certified Plans—Deviation—Sanction of London County Council.—A person intending to erect a domestic building on the site of a domestic building existing at the commencement of the London Building Act, 1894, is not entitled to deviate in the height nor in any other respect from the plans certified by the district surveyor, without having previously obtained the sanction of the London County Council to such deviations under section 43, sub-section 2 of the Act. Paynter v. Watson, 67 L. J. Q.B. 640; [1898] 2 Q.B. 31; 46 W. R. 655; 62 J. P. 467—D.

(dd) Fire.

Fire Hydrants.—See WATER.

(e) Food.

Unsound Food—Condemnation—Functions of Magistrate—Right to Consider whether Article Intended for Food of Man.—Before condemning an article seized and brought before him under section 47 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, a magistrate is not entitled to consider whether it was intended for the food of man or was sold or exposed for sale or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale, but only whether it is unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man. Thomas v. Van Os, 69 L. J. Q.B. 665; [1900] 2 Q.B. 448; 82 L. T. 845; 49 W. R. 57; 64 J. P. 582; 19 Cox C.C. 542—D.

— Summary Proceedings for Fine—Information by Sanitary Inspector—No Express Direction from Sanitary Authority.—Summary proceedings for a fine under section 47, sub-section 2 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, against a person to whom unsound food had been sold or exposed for sale or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale, but only whether it is unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man. Thomas v. Van Os, 69 L. J. Q.B. 665; [1900] 2 Q.B. 448; 82 L. T. 845; 49 W. R. 57; 64 J. P. 582; 19 Cox C.C. 542—D.

— Information Purporting to be “on behalf of” Sanitary Authority—Validity.—Where such information purports, contrary to the fact, to have been laid “on behalf of” the sanitary authority, these words may be disregarded. Allman v. Hardcastle (89 L. T. 558; 2 L. G. R. 13) followed. Ib.

Margarine—Penalty—Notification.—It is not a condition precedent to the right of a purchaser for consumption to take proceedings for a penalty under section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887, that he should have given the seller the notification required by section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875. Buckler v. Wilson, 65 L. J. M.C. 18; [1896] 1 Q. B. 88; 78 L. T. 580; 44 W. R. 220; 60 J. P. 118—D.

Fruit unfit for Food of Man—Sale by Broker—Contract with Purchaser to destroy Bad Fruit—Sale or Exposure for Sale—“Liable to be seized”—Rejection of Evidence.—A person cannot be convicted of the offence created by section 47, sub-section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, unless at the time the articles are found in the possession of his purchaser they are intended for the food of man, and are sold or exposed for sale or deposited in some place for the purpose of sale or of preparation for sale, and are “liable to be seized” under sub-section 1. (Mathew, J., dissenting). Reg. v. Dennis, 10 R. 316; [1894] 2 Q. B. 458; 63 L. J. M.C. 153; 71 L. T. 436; 42 W. R. 586; 58 J. P. 622—C. C. R.

The terms of the contract of sale may be evidence to go to the jury to show that the articles sold are not intended for the food of man (Mathew and Cave, JJ., dissenting). Ib.

Article in Possession of Purchaser not Intended for Food of Man—Liability of Seller—

Article "liable to be seized."]—An article of food is "liable to be seized" within the meaning of section 47, sub-section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, if it is in fact unsound or unfit for the food of man, whether or not it is at the time of seizure intended for the food of man or exposed for sale. Grivell v. Malpas, 75 L. J. K.B. 647; [1906] 2 K.B. 32; 95 L. T. 123; 70 J. P. 334; 4 L. G. R. 668; 21 Cox C.C. 220; 22 T. L. R. 514—D.

Consequently, on the hearing of an information under that sub-section against the seller of an article which has been seized as unsound in the possession of the purchaser, the magistrate is not justified in stopping the case and dismissing the information as soon as it has been proved that at the time of seizure the article was not intended for the food of man or exposed for sale, and before he has heard evidence on the questions whether the article purchased from the seller for the food of man, whether when so purchased it was in such a condition as to be liable to be seized, and whether the seller at the time he sold it or not know, and had no reason to believe, that it was in such condition. Reg. v. Dennis, 75 L. J. M.C. 153; [1894] 2 Q.B. 458) considered and distinguished. Ib.

by Milkshop—Infectious Disease—Outbreak in Buildings or Premises.—A three-storeyed building or block of tenements or flats adapted for separate occupation is a building within regulation 29 of the Dairies, Cowsheds, and Milkshops Order, 1885; and a purveyor of milk who occupies the ground floor as a milkshop and the second floor as his residence, the first floor being in a separate occupation, and the two floors being connected by one central staircase, must cease to sell milk immediately upon the outbreak of an infectious or contagious disease occurring in his family on the second floor. London County Council v. Edwards, 67 L. J. Q.B. 648; [1898] 2 Q.B. 75; 78 L. T. 558; 62 J. P. 377; 19 Cox C.C. 65—D. And see LOCAL GOVERNMENT, col. 1356.

(f) Improvements.

Improvements.—4 Edw. 7 c. 2 is the Metro-politan Improvements (Funds) Act, 1904.

Charge—"Improvement area"—"Lands, all or any part of which abut" on a Street.—Under an Act of Parliament the London County Council were empowered to make an "improvement charge" on lands "all or any part of which front or abut" on a certain road. A music hall fronted on another street, where the principal entrance was, but it had also a side entrance from a house in that road to the pit and gallery. The plaintiffs were owners or lessees of all the land on which the hall stood, including the house through which there was the side entrance:—Held, that, as the whole of the property was occupied for one purpose, it could not be said that only that house abutted on the road; and that, consequently, the power of the London County Council to place an improvement charge on the music hall was not limited to that house. Oxford, Lim. v. London County Council, 67 L. J. Ch. 655; [1898] 2 Ch. 491; 79 L. T. 22; 47 W. R. 297—North, J.

Betterment—"Initial valuation"—Public-house—Takings and Payments—"Tied" House—"Free" House—Value of "Tying" Covenant.—In making the "initial valuation" of a public-house under section 36 of the London County Council (Tower Bridge Southern Approach) Act, 1895, evidence of the takings and payments of the house is not admissible either for the purposes of the valuation or for the purpose of testing the expert evidence relating thereto; nor is the fact of the existence or non-existence of a "tying" covenant in the lease of the house to be taken into consideration in assessing the value of "the site apart from that of any existing building thereon." But in valuing "the site and buildings as a whole," and also in separately valuing "the interest of the owner of the site and buildings and the interest of any lessee thereof for twenty-one years unexpired," the fact of the existence of such a covenant may be taken into consideration, though, as regards "the site and buildings as a whole," the valuation would presumably be the same whether its existence were considered or not. London County Council and City of London Brewery Co., In re, 67 L. J. Q.B. 382; [1898] 1 Q.B. 387; 77 L. T. 463; 46 W. R. 172; 61 J. P. 808—D.

(g) Lighting.

Electric Lighting.—4 Edw. 7 c. 13 is the London Electric Lighting Areas Act, 1904.

Electric-Lighting Boxes in Street—Notice to District Surveyor.—Where a local authority within the meaning of the Electric Lighting Acts, 1882 and 1888, in pursuance of those Acts, has been granted a provisional order confirmed by a statute, and under the provisions of that order has constructed in a street boxes for the purposes in connection with the supply of electric energy, such boxes are buildings, structures, or works, within section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, and a notice under that section must be served on the district surveyor before they are commenced. Whitechapel Board of Works v. Crow, 84 L. T. 595; 65 J. P. 549; 19 Cox C.C. 700—D.

Statutory Powers—Obstruction—Rights of Adjoining Owners.—The owner of premises abutting on a highway has, as a private right, a right of access to the highway, and any obstruction which interferes with the exercise by him of that right is an infringement of his private right. His right, however, as regards the user of the highway itself is one which he enjoys in common with the rest of the public, and is not a private right. Att.-Gen. v. Thames Conservators (1, H. & M. 1), Lyon v. Fishmongers Co. (46 L. J. Ch. 68; 1 App. Cas. 662), and Fritz v. Hobson (49 L. J. Ch. 321; 14 Ch. D. 542) followed. Chaplin v. Westminster Borough, 70 L. J. Ch. 679; [1901] 2 Ch. 329; 85 L. T. 88; 49 W. R. 586; 65 J. P. 661—Buckley, J.

The defendants, a public authority, in the exercise of their statutory obligation to light streets, erected a lamp-post on a highway in a place which it was proved was most convenient for the public. The plaintiffs, the owners of premises abutting on the highway, complained that the lamp-post interfered with the carrying on by them of their business:—Held, that the plaintiffs had no right to restrain the defendants from exercising their statutory authority to obstruct the highway by the erection of lamp-posts where they thought it necessary. Id.

(h) Nuisance.

Black Smoke—No Evidence of Nuisance to Particular Person—Smoke sent forth on Repeated Occasions.]—Ten several complaints were preferred against the appellants under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, each of which charged that at premises occupied by the appellants a nuisance existed after notice thereof had been served upon them—namely, that a chimney (not being a chimney of a private dwelling-house) did on a specified and several day send forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance within the meaning of section 24, sub-section (b) of the Act. It was proved that on the days in question black smoke issued from the chimney, which was 180 feet high, from one to six times a day for from six to seventy-five minutes at a time, sixteen minutes in all being the shortest time for which it had issued on any one day; but there was no evidence that it was a nuisance to any particular person. The magistrate found that the black smoke on each of the days amounted to a nuisance, and convicted the appellants on each complaint:—Held, that there was evidence upon which he could properly convict the appellants on each complaint. South London Electric Supply Corporation v. Perrin, 70 L. J. K.B. 648; [1901] 2 K.B. 186; 84 L. T. 630; 49 W. R. 539; 65 J. P. 627; 19 Cox C.C. 717—D.

Chimney of Club—"Private dwelling-house."]—A London club-house contained five bedrooms for the use of members, and other bedrooms for the use of the staff. In the basement there were several covered-in cooking ranges and a vertical boiler with furnace attached. The smoke from these discharged into one flue, and caused black smoke to issue from the chimney. A magistrate having dismissed a summons against the secretary of the club for failing to comply with a notice requiring him to abate the nuisance,—Held, that the chimney was not the chimney of a "private dwelling-house" so as to come within the exemption contained in section 24 (b) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and that the magistrate ought to have convicted the respondent. McNair v. Baker, 73 L. J. K.B. 120; [1904] 1 K.B. 208; 90 L. T. 24; 68 J. P. 66; 2 L. G. R. 143; 20 T. L. R. 95—D.

"Chimney"—Funnel of Steam-tug.]—Section 24 (b) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, which provides that "any chimney (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance" shall be a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily, applies to the funnel of a steam-tug. Tough v. Hopkins, 73 L. J. K.B. 628; [1904] 1 K.B. 804; 90 L. T. 672; 52 W. R. 605; 68 J. P. 274; 2 L. G. R. 1213; 20 Cox C.C. 650; 9 Asp. M. C. 562; 20 T. L. R. 323—D.

— Notice to Abate—Recurrence of Nuisance

—Summary Jurisdiction—Limitation of Time.]—On March 18, 1904, the occupier of certain premises in London was required by notice under section 4 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, forthwith to abate a nuisance consisting in a chimney sending forth black smoke. From that date to January 5, 1906, no further nuisance due to the chimney was observed; but on the latter date the chimney again sent forth black smoke, whereupon the occupier was summoned for an alleged breach of the notice of 1904. The magistrate dismissed the summons subject to a Case in which he stated that as the notice required the abatement of the nuisance forthwith, and no further nuisance occurred until January 5, 1906, it must be assumed that immediately upon receipt of the notice the nuisance was abated, and that he had dismissed the summons on the ground that it was out of time under section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848:—Held, without deciding whether section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, had any application to the case, that no connection between the nuisance of March, 1904, and that of January, 1906, was established, and on that ground that the decision of the magistrate could not be reversed. Battersea Borough Council v. Goerg, 5 L. G. R. 62; 71 J. P. 11—D.

Exposing Article for Sale upon Carriage-way or Footway—Who may Lay Information.]—Any person may lay an information for the offence of exposing goods for sale upon or so as to hang over any carriage-way or footway so as to cause an annoyance or obstruction in any thoroughfare, which is created by section 60, sub-section 7 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839. Altman v. Hardcastle, 89 L. T. 553; 67 J. P. 440—D.

"Leaking drain"—Defective Drain.]—On a summons taken out under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, against the owner of premises for failure to comply with a notice to abate a nuisance alleged to arise from a defective drain, the magistrate found that the drain in question was "a leaking drain," and made an order on the owner to abate the nuisance:—Held, that the magistrate's finding amounted to a finding of fact that the drain in question was a nuisance, and that his order was therefore right. Whether a defective drain is per se a nuisance, quare. Farmèr v. Long, 72 J. P. 91—D.

Litter in Streets.]—A by-law made by the London County Council under section 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, providing that no person shall "sweep or otherwise remove from any shop, house, or vehicle into any street, any waste paper, shavings or other refuse," is good, notwithstanding that by section 60, sub-section 3 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, which applies throughout their county, a penalty is imposed on any person "who in any thoroughfare shall throw or lay . . . any litter or rubbish." Batchelor v. Sturley, 93 L. T. 539; 3 L. G. R. 1056; 69 J. P. 398; 21 Cox C.C. 35—D.

Offensive Business—Where Gut is Cleansed, Scraped, or Dealt with—Scraped Gut Sorted—Business within Prohibition.]—The respondents purchased from gut scrapers the intestines of sheep which have been previously cleansed and scraped by such gut scrapers, as sausage casings, and their business consisted of sorting these cases into different sizes and lengths. They then repack them, and supply them to sausage makers:—Held, that this was not a business within the order made in pursuance of section 3 of the Slaughter-houses Act, 1874, as preserved by the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. London County Council v. Hirsch, 81 L. T. 447; 63 J. P. 822; 19 Cox C.C. 405—D.

Refuse from Hotel—House Refuse or Trade Refuse—Right of Appeal—Special Case.—The decision of a petty sessional Court under section 33, sub-section 2 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, as to whether certain refuse is to be considered "trade refuse" or otherwise is final, and cannot be appealed from by way of Special Case or in any other way. Reg. v. Bridge (59 L. J. M.C. 49; 24 Q.B. D. 609) distinguished. Westminster City Council v. Gordon Hotels, 76 L. J. K.B. 482; [1907] 1 K.B. 910; 96 L. T. 535; 71 J. P. 200; 5 L. G. R. 545; 23 T. L. R. 387—C.A.

"Sewer"—"Drain"—Drainage of Adjoining Houses in Groups by Combined Operation—Subsequent Unauthorized Variation in Grouping of the Same Houses.—In 1855 an order was made by the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers for draining contiguous houses in a street by combined operation in groups or blocks of four houses each. A system of drainage was thereupon constructed before January 1, 1856, according to which a group of five of these houses, of which three belonged to one of the groups of four houses, and two to a contiguous group of four houses, were drained together by combined operation:—Held, that the pipe by which the houses were drained was not a "drain," but a "sewer" within section 250 of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, as amended by section 112 of the Metropolitan Management Amendment Act, 1862, and consequently that the owner of the house under which it passed was not liable to abate a nuisance arising from its non-repair. Bullock v. Reeve, 70 L. J. K.B. 42; 84 L. T. 55; 49 W. R. 93; 65 J. P. 164—D.

Water Supply—Absence of—Sub-demise of Part of House—"Owner."—The tenant of a house in London sub-let the top floor in breach of a covenant not to sub-let without his landlord's consent. The house was provided with a supply of water which was sufficient so long as the house was occupied as a whole by a single tenant. But the supply was not such as to be sufficient for the purposes of the top floor if that floor was separately occupied:—Held, that the landlords could not be required under sections 4 and 48 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to provide a supply of water sufficient for the needs of the top floor as separately occupied. If the house was regarded as a whole, the supply was sufficient for the house as let by them. If the top floor alone was looked to, the landlords were not the statutory "owners," inasmuch as, though in receipt of the rack-rent of the house as a whole, they were not, within the meaning of section 141 of the Act, in receipt of the rack-rent of the top floor. Field v. Southwark Borough Council, 96 L. T. 646; 5 L. G. R. 567; 71 J. P. 240—D.

Abatement Notice—Compliance with Notice by Person not Legally Liable—Liability of Sanitary Authority to Recoup Expenses of Abatement.—Section 4, sub-section 1 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, casts upon the person prima facie liable the duty of abating any nuisance specified in a notice of the sanitary authority, and his non-compliance with an abatement notice, irrespective of any order to be subsequently made upon it, renders him liable to the penalty imposed by sub-section 4 of that section. Where, under the above section, an abatement notice has been served, in consequence of which, and without waiting for an order to be made on it, the person prima facie liable to abate the nuisance has executed the work required, and it is afterwards discovered that he was not legally liable to do so, but that the sanitary authority were, he is entitled at common law to be recouped the expenses he has been put to through their default, and also by virtue of section 11, sub-section 1 of the Act to recover from the sanitary authority the costs and expenses of carrying the notice into effect as if such an order had been made. Gebhardt v. Saunders ([1892] 2 Q.B. 452) followed. Andrew v. St. Olave's Board of Works, 67 L. J. Q.B. 592; [1898] 1 Q.B. 775; 78 L. T. 504; 46 W. R. 424; 62 J. P. 328—D.

Intimation to Owner of Premises by Officer of Sanitary Authority—No Notice by Sanitary Authority—Liability of Owner to Abate Nuisance.—An owner of premises who has been served with an intimation by the officer of a sanitary authority under section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, bringing to his notice a nuisance thereon, but not with a notice by the sanitary authority under section 4 requiring him to abate the nuisance, is under no legal obligation to do or pay for the work of abating the nuisance. Andrew v. St. Olave's Board of Works (67 L. J. Q.B. 592; [1898] 1 Q.B. 775) distinguished. Harris v. Hickman, 73 L. J. K.B. 31; [1904] 1 K.B. 13; 89 L. T. 722; 68 J. P. 65; 2 L. G. R. 1; 20 T. L. R. 18—Wright, J.

Compliance with "Intimation" without Statutory Notice—Right of Owner to Recover Expenses as for Work done under Compulsion.—An owner of premises received a written intimation under section 3 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, duly signed by the officer of the sanitary authority, making known to him the existence of a nuisance at his premises, and requesting him to abate the same within seven days, otherwise the sanitary authority would commence proceedings against him by the service of a statutory notice. The owner, without waiting for the service of the statutory notice under section 4 of the Act requiring him to abate the nuisance, did the necessary works to abate the nuisance, in the course of which he discovered that the work was a sewer and not a drain, but without communicating with the sanitary authority he completed the work, and brought an action against the sanitary authority to recover the expenses as for work done by him under compulsion which the sanitary authority were legally compellable to do:—Held, but only on the authority of Thompson & Norris Manufacturing Co. v. Hawes (59 J. P. 580), that work done under an "intimation" given under section 3 is not work done under compulsion, and that as the owner had not waited for the statutory notice under section 4, but had done the work under the "intimation" notice, the work was not done by him under compulsion, and he was not entitled to recover the expenses of the work. Quære, whether, if an owner wrongfully converts that which is properly a drain, for the repair of which he would be liable, into a sewer, he could recover from the sanitary authority the expenses of work done by him to the sewer under compulsion of the sanitary authority. Oliver v. Camberwell Borough Council, 90 L. T. 285; 52 W. R. 511; 68 J. P. 165; 2 L. G. R. 617—D. And see Wilson's Music Printing Co. v. Finsbury Borough Council, 77 L. J. K.B. 471; [1908] 1 K.B. 563; 72 J. Prohibition Order—Order not Specifying Works to be Executed—Validity.]—The law laid down in Millard v. Rastall (67 L. J. Q.B. 277; [1898] 1 Q.B. 342) with reference to sections 94 and 96 of the Public Health Act, 1875—that a notice to abate a nuisance caused by quantities of black smoke issuing from a factory chimney need not necessarily specify the works required to be done in order to abate the nuisance—has not been substantially altered by section 5, sub-section 5 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, which requires that a prohibition order shall, if the person on whom the order is made so requires, specify the works to be done. Central London Railway v. Hammer-smith Borough Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 623; 90 L. T. 645; 68 J. P. 217; 2 L. G. R. 446; 20 Cox C.C. 632—D.

Upon the hearing of a summons under section 5 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, in respect of a nuisance arising from the emission of black smoke from a chimney belonging to the appellants, the existence of the nuisance was proved, but no evidence was given as to the works required to prevent the issue of black smoke. After the respondents' case had been closed the appellants gave evidence that the nuisance might have been due to two furnace doors being open at one time, and required under section 5, sub-section 5, that the order should specify the works to be executed by them. They objected, however, to any further evidence being given on the part of the respondents, on the ground that their case was closed. The magistrate, without hearing further evidence, made a prohibition order directing the appellants to fit up apparatus to prevent the doors being left open simultaneously, and to adopt all other means necessary to prevent the emission of black smoke in such quantities as to be a nuisance:—Held, that the order was good, and that it was not necessary, under the circumstances, that it should specify the works to be executed for the purpose of preventing the recurrence of the nuisance. Ib.

A prohibition order made under section 5 of the Act is not invalid because it does not specify the works to be executed by the defendant for the purpose of abating or preventing the recurrence of the nuisance, notwithstanding that the defendant may have required them to be specified. Central London Railway v. Hammer-smith Borough Council (supra) followed. Tough v. Hopkins, 73 L. J. K.B. 623; [1904] 1 K.B. 804; 90 L. T. 672; 52 W. R. 605; 68 J. P. 274—D.

Cost of Abatement—Contribution—Defective Drain—Easement—Duty of Dominant Owner to Repair—"Person through whose act or default the nuisance was caused."]—The occupier of a dominant tenement had a right by implied grant to send sewage through a drain running under and also carrying the drainage of the servient tenement. Through a defect in the drain a nuisance arose upon the servient tenement, the occupier whereof was ordered by a Court of summary jurisdiction to abate, and did abate, the nuisance. In proceedings under section 120 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, by the occupier of the servient tenement to recover a proportionate part of the cost of abating the nuisance from the occupier of the dominant tenement,—Held, that the occupier of the dominant tenement was not merely, as such, a person through whose act or default the nuisance was caused within the meaning of section 120, and therefore that he was not liable to contribute. Nathan v. Rouse, 74 L. J. K.B. 285; [1905] 1 K.B. 527; 92 L. T. 321; 69 J. P. 135; 3 L. G. R. 854; 21 T. L. R. 222—D.

Disused Burial-ground—Erection of Screen to Prevent Acquisition of Easement.]—A local authority acting under statutory powers is entitled by a screen or other suitable means to prevent anything which may interfere with the free use by the public of an open space of which it is the trustee, and to prevent thereby the acquisition of an easement of light or other adverse right over such space by an adjoining owner. Paddington Borough Council v. Atkinson, 75 L. J. Ch. 4; [1906] A.C. 1; 93 L. T. 673; 54 W. R. 317; 70 J. P. 41; 4 L. G. R. 19; 22 T. L. R. 55—H.L. (H.)

— Erection of Screen to Prevent Acquisition of Easement—Action by Adjoining Owner to Restrain Erection—Joining Attorney-General—"Building."]—A local authority who have under the provisions of the Metropolis Open Spaces Act, 1881, and the Open Spaces Act, 1887, the management and control of a disused burial-ground, must hold and administer it for certain limited purposes only—namely, in trust to allow the enjoyment of it by the public in an open condition, and for no other purpose. The erection of a screen or hoarding on the ground to prevent the owner of adjoining land from acquiring a right of light over it is not one of the purposes authorised, and the local authority have no right to use the open space for such a purpose. Boyce v. Paddington Borough Council, 72 L. J. Ch. 695; [1903] 2 Ch. 556; 89 L. T. 383; 52 W. R. 114; 1 L. G. R. 696; 68 J. P. 49—C.A.

Semble,—An action to restrain a local authority from using a disused burial-ground for purposes other than those authorised by the Open Spaces Acts should be brought in the name of the Attorney-General at the relation of the plaintiff. Ib.

Right of Sanitary Inspector to Enter Premises—Reasonable Grounds—Warrant.]—A sanitary inspector who applies for a warrant under section 115 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, authorising him to enter premises to which he has been refused admission, must shew to the magistrate some reasonable ground for such entry. Merely to shew that in seeking admission to premises he was acting honestly with a view to the discharge of his duties will not suffice. Vines v. North London Collegiate School, 63 J. P. 244—D.

By-law—Absence of Provision for Notice to Owner—Validity—Water-closets.]—A by-law made by the London County Council under section 39 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, is unreasonable and void if it does not provide for notice to the person complained against before the commencement of proceedings. Nokes v. Islington Borough Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 100; [1904] 1 K.B. 610; 90 L. T. 22; 52 W. R. 399; 2 L. G. R. 334; 68 J. P. 95; 20 T. L. R. 95—D.

Lodging-house—Cleansing.]—A by-law made by a Metropolitan borough council under section 94 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, provided that the landlord of a lodging-house should in the first week of April in every year cause every part of the premises to be cleansed:—Held, that the by-law was unreasonable and void, inasmuch as it did not provide for notice to be given to the landlord before the commencement of proceedings. Stiles v. Galinski, 73 L. J. K.B. 485; [1904] 1 K.B. 615; 90 L. T. 437; 52 W. R. 462; 68 J. P. 183; 2 L. G. R. 341; 20 T. L. R. 219—D.

Held, also (WILLS, J., dissenting), that the by-law was not rendered invalid by reason of the requirement that the work should be done in the first week in April. Ib.

House Refuse or Trade Refuse—Refuse from Hotel—Removal by Sanitary Authority.]—Refuse resulting from and incidental to the supply of warmth, food, and other refreshment to the guests at an hotel is not "trade refuse" within the meaning of sections 30 and 33 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and therefore the sanitary authority within whose district the hotel is situated are not entitled to be paid for its removal. St. Martin's Vestry v. Gordon (60 L. J. M.C. 37; [1891] 1 K.B. 61) followed. Westminster City Council v. Gordon Hotels, Lim., 75 L. J. K.B. 438; [1906] 2 K.B. 39; 94 L. T. 521; 4 L. G. R. 538; 70 J. P. 258; 22 T. L. R. 439—D.

— Removal of—By-law Empowering Sanitary Authorities to Require Occupier to Deposit Refuse on Kerbstone, or in Conveniently Accessible Position on Premises—Notice by Sanitary Authority Requiring Occupiers in Particular Area to Deposit Refuse on Kerbstone—Refusal of Sanitary Authority to Remove Refuse from Conveniently Accessible Position on Premises—Failure "without reasonable cause" to Remove

Refuse.]—A by-law of the London County Council provided that where a sanitary authority arranged for the daily removal of house refuse in their district, or in any part thereof, each occupier of premises should "deposit on the kerbstone or on the outer edge of the footpath immediately in front of the house or in a conveniently accessible position on the premises, as the sanitary authority may prescribe by written notice served upon the occupier, a movable receptacle" containing the house refuse. The appellant sanitary authority, under the powers of this by-law, gave written notice to each occupier in a particular area requiring him to "deposit on the kerbstone or edge of the footpath immediately in front of the house a movable receptacle," in which should be placed the house refuse. The respondent, who had a reasonably accessible position on his premises on which he was willing to place the receptacle containing his house refuse, refused to comply with the sanitary authority's notice. The appellants having declined to remove the refuse unless it was placed on the kerbstone or edge of the footpath, the respondent served a written notice upon them, under section 30 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, requiring them to remove such refuse, and, as they still declined, preferred an information against them under sub-section 2 of section 30. The magistrate found as a fact that the respondent had a reasonably accessible position on his premises from which the appellants might have removed the house refuse, and he decided that the appellants had failed "without reasonable cause" to perform the duties cast upon them by section 30:—Held, that the conviction was right, as the notice given by the appellants, so far as regarded the respondent, went beyond what was contemplated by the by-law, inasmuch as it did not prescribe any conveniently accessible position on his premises upon which the refuse might be deposited, and that in the absence of such a prescription the respondent's only obligation was to deposit the refuse on some conveniently accessible position on the premises. Wandsworth Borough Council v. Baines, 75 L. J. K.B. 158; [1906] 1 K.B. 470; 94 L. T. 211; 54 W. R. 457; 70 J. P. 124; 4 L. G. R. 257; 22 T. L. R. 220—D.

Sanitary Conveniences—Street—Powers of Local Authority.]—It is within the powers conferred upon sanitary authorities by section 44 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, when constructing public sanitary conveniences underneath a street, to make approaches thereto by descending staircases to subways from either side of the street. The fact that the approaches may be used merely for the purpose of crossing the street is not sufficient to indicate that the sanitary authority were not acting bona fide in the exercise of their statutory powers. London and North-Western Railway v. Westminster Corporation, 71 L. J. Ch. 34; [1902] 1 Ch. 269; 85 L. T. 544; 50 W. R. 268; 66 J. P. 343—Joyce, J.

— Footway—Subsoil—Trespass—Right of Adjoining Owner—Obstruction—Mandatory Injunction.]—Where a sanitary authority has taken a portion of a footway to a street in order to construct an approach to public conveniences, this constitutes a trespass upon the property of the owner of an adjoining house, to whom (in the absence of evidence to the contrary) the soil usque ad medium filum viæ belongs, by virtue of a legal presumption; and a mandatory injunction will be granted for the removal of that portion of the approach, inasmuch as the subsoil of the footway does not vest in the sanitary authority under section 44, sub-section 2 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. Ib.

— Statutory Powers of Local Authority—
Pass—Mandatory Injunction.]—A public body invested with statutory powers must take care not to exceed or abuse those powers, and must act in good faith within the limits of its authority. Westminster Corporation v. London and North-Western Railway, 74 L. J. Ch. 629; [1905] A.C. 426; 93 L. T. 143; 54 W. R. 129; 3 L. G. R. 1120; 69 J. P. 425; 21 T. L. R. 686—H.L. (E.)

Where a corporation under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, constructs public conveniences, the mere provision in connection with such a convenience of a subway capable of being used as a thoroughfare under a crowded street is not evidence of bad faith or excess of authority. To establish such a case it would have to be shewn that the corporation constructed the subway as a means of crossing the street under colour of providing public conveniences. Ib.

— “Workplace”—Persons Employed or in Attendance—Cab Proprietor's Yard.]—A London cab proprietor's yard, where many cab-cleaners and horse-keepers are employed and many cab-drivers attend daily to hire horses and cabs, is a “workplace” within section 83 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and must be provided with sufficient suitable accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences, regard being had to the number of persons employed or in attendance. The cab-drivers are none the less in attendance because they come as customers to hire horses and cabs. Bennett v. Harding, 69 L. J. Q.B. 701; [1900] 2 Q.B. 397; 83 L. T. 51; 48 W. R. 647; 64 J. P. 676—D.

— Nuisance.]—A statutory power to erect urinals in such situations as the sanitary authority think fit, does not entitle such sanitary authority to erect urinals where they constitute a private nuisance to individuals. Parish v. London Corporation, 67 J. P. 55—Joyce, J.

Lavatories in New Buildings—Provision as to Trapping of Waste Water-pipes.]—No. 10 of a series of by-laws as to drainage made by the London County Council under section 202 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, requires, inter alia, that a person who erects a new building shall cause every pipe in the building for carrying off waste water from every lavatory or sink (with certain exceptions) to a sewer to be constructed of certain materials, and to be trapped in a certain manner immediately beneath such lavatory or sink:—Held (assuming that each of a series of lavatory basins in a room is itself a lavatory within the by-law, as to which quære), that the by-law did not prohibit the carrying off of the waste water from a lavatory by means other than a pipe, and therefore that there was no infringement of the by-law where the waste water from each of a series of lavatory basins was discharged by a short straight pipe into an open trough which in turn communicated with a pipe, properly trapped, leading to a sewer. Treasure v. Bermondsey Borough Council, 2 L. G. R. 488; 68 J. P. 206—D.

Privy—Emptying—“Street or public place.”]
 —Sub-section 4 of section 60 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, which prohibits the emptying of privies within certain hours, is not limited by the words in the preamble to the section so as to be applicable only to the emptying of privies actually in a street or public place. The sub-section applies to acts done on premises not actually in a street or public place. Howard v. Daniels, 93 L. T. 669; 69 J. P. 439; 3 L. G. R. 1282—D.

Water-closets—“Construction of water-closet”
—Ventilation of Trap of Water-closet—Extension of By-laws to Existing Buildings.]—A series of by-laws were made by the London County Council under the provisions of section 202 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, giving power to make by-laws for regulating the dimensions, mode of construction, &c., of “the pipes, drains, and other means of communicating with sewers, and the traps and apparatus connected therewith.” No. 17 of these by-laws provided that every person who should “construct any water-closet,” of which the soil-pipe fulfilled certain conditions, should cause the trap of the water-closet to be ventilated in a particular manner. No. 21 of the by-laws was as follows: “These by-laws shall, so far as practicable, apply to any person who shall construct or reconstruct any pipe or drain or other means of communicating with sewers, or any trap or apparatus connected therewith, so far as he shall effect any such works in any building erected before the confirmation of these by-laws, as if the same were being constructed in a building newly erected.” The appellants, who were the owners of a building erected before the confirmation of the by-laws, reconstructed and replaced the pans and traps of several water-closets in the building, which had been broken in the course of alterations they were carrying out in the drains connecting the soil-pipes of the closets with the sewer, or in the course of ordinary wear and tear. The soil-pipes of the water-closets were of the character contemplated by by-law 17:—Held, that the by-laws were neither ultra vires nor unreasonable, and that the work done by the appellants was not the construction of water-closets within by-law 17; and that by-law 21 did not impose on a person who constructed or reconstructed the pan or trap of a water-closet, but did not construct a water-closet, the obligation of complying with by-law 17 as to the ventilation of the trap. Semble, that a by-law imposing that obligation in such a case would be intra vires, and not unreasonable. Metropolitan Industrial Dwellings Co. v. Long, 2 L. G. R. 233; 68 J. P. 113; 20 T. L. R. 103—D.

Water-closet—Construction—By-law—Intention to Affix “Apparatus”—Notice to Sanitary Authority—By-law, whether Applicable to Water-closet already Existing—Reasonableness of By-law.]—A by-law which provides that “Every person who shall intend to construct any water-closet, earth-closet, or privy, or to fit or fix in or in connection with any water-closet, earth-closet, or privy any apparatus," shall before executing any such works give notice to the sanitary authority, applies to a person intending to fit or fix apparatus in connection with a water-closet already existing at the coming into force of the by-law as well as in connection with one not yet constructed. London and South-Western Railway v. Hills, 75 L. J. K.B. 340; [1906] 1 K.B. 512; 94 L. T. 517; 70 J. P. 212; 4 L. G. R. 399—D.

A by-law which provides that every person who shall intend to fit or fix in connection with any water-closet "any apparatus, or any trap or soil-pipe" shall give notice to the sanitary authority is not unreasonable, inasmuch as the "apparatus" of which it requires notice to be given comprise only sanitary appliances of a like nature with those specified, and not such accessory or trivial matters as a handle or chain for the door. Id. And see LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

General Regulations by Vestry—Size of Inspection Chambers—Validity of Regulations.]—The appellant having given notice under section 76 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, of his intention to make new drains, on a form supplied by the vestry upon which was indorsed "Notes from the regulations as to the drainage of new houses," the proposed drains and plans were approved by the respondents, who sent to the appellant a printed copy of their general regulations:—Held, that the respondents had exercised their discretion in this particular case, and that it was not necessary on each occasion to make fresh regulations, but that, having considered the drain proposed, there was nothing to prevent their general regulations being applied. Frost v. Fulham Vestry, 82 L. T. 720; 64 J. P. 629; 19 Cox C.C. 519—D.

Extension of Council's By-laws to Drains "in" Existing Building.]—No. 21 of the series of by-laws as to the construction, &c., of drains made by the London County Council under section 202 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, provides that the by-laws shall apply, so far as practicable, to any person who shall construct or reconstruct a drain, &c., "in" any existing building as if the same were being constructed "in" a new building:—Held, that the word "in" in this by-law does not mean "inside," but has the sense of "in connection with." Kingsland v. Haben, 90 L. T. 449; 2 L. G. R. 470; 68 J. P. 159—D.

Construction of Works—Order of Vestry—Sufficiency.]—The respondent having applied to the vestry for permission to lay a drain according to an annexed plan, received from the surveyor to the vestry the following communication: "I have considered your application . . . and have to inform you that, subject to the conditions mentioned below, and which I have placed upon your notice, the work can be proceeded with, and I shall report to that effect to my vestry. . . ." The vestry subsequently passed a resolution approving the report of the surveyor:—Held, that this was a sufficient "order" of the vestry within section 76 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. Stokes v. Haydon, 84 L. T. 531; 65 J. P. 756; 19 Cox C.C. 690—D.

Defective Drain—Works Specified in Detail—Notice of Order—Non-compliance.]—

S. being the owner of certain premises, the respondents on February 5 served a notice on him under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, requiring him to abate a certain nuisance, being a defective drain. On February 19 another notice was served requiring him to abate the nuisance and re-lay the drain. On March 20 the public health committee of the respondents caused a notice to be served on him under the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, that the drain was defective, and requiring him to amend the same and to execute the works that the notice set out in detail. In April S. executed certain repairs to the drain, but not those in the notice of March 20. On June 18 the committee reported to the respondents that they had had the report of the inspector before them and had given directions for the statutory notices to be served on S., and they recommended that a notice be served on the appellant under the Act of 1855 requiring him to execute such works as were necessary to amend the drain which was in bad order, and that in the event of non-compliance proceedings should be taken. On June 18 the respondents by resolution adopted this recommendation, and on July 14 a notice was served on S. requiring him to amend the drain, and for that purpose to execute the works that this notice set out in detail:—Held, that the notice of July 14 was not a notice of an order, and that S. could not be convicted for non-compliance. Swinburn v. Hammersmith Borough Council, 88 L. T. 596; 67 J. P. 253; 2 L. G. R. 280—D.

Main Drainage—London County Council—Duty to Provide Sewers and Works—Duty to Keep Sewers so as not to be a Nuisance—Neglect of Duty—Mandamus.]—The Metropolis Management Act, 1855, by section 135, provides that the London County Council shall "make all such sewers and works and such diversions and alterations of any existing sewers or works as they may from time to time think necessary for the effectual sewerage and drainage of the metropolis," and shall "cause the sewers vested in them to be constructed, covered, and kept so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health." Under this section, if works are in fact necessary for the effectual sewerage and drainage of any part of the metropolis, the Council is bound to execute works for that purpose, having a discretion only as to the kind of works which are to be executed, and that duty will be enforced by mandamus. If the sewage from any sewer vested in the Council escapes into any district so as to be a nuisance, a mandamus will be granted to compel the Council to keep that sewer so as not to be a nuisance. Lee District Board v. London County Council, 82 L. T. 306; 64 J. P. 20—C.A.

District Boundary running down Centre of Highway found to be a Street before 1856—New Street.]—An old highway, with many houses on one side built before 1856, but with few on the other until a more recent date, which, taken as a whole, has been found by Justices to have been sufficiently built upon to be a "street" before 1856, is none the less a "street" because the boundary dividing two counties or districts runs down its centre; and a vestry or district board, having constructed a sewer for the drainage of the more recently built side of the street, cannot recover the expenses of construction from the owners of the houses on that side as for the drainage of a "new street." Clerkenwell Vestry v. Edmondson, 71 L. J. K.B. 198; [1902] 1 K.B. 336; 86 L. T. 137; 50 W. R. 345; 66 J. P. 324—C.A.

Combined Scheme of Drainage—Alteration of Course of Drain—Liability to Repair.—Where there has been an order of a vestry for the drainage of a block of houses by a combined operation under section 74 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a deviation from the approved plan by altering the course of a pipe will not convert the pipe into a "sewer," provided that its character is not altered, and that it drains only the same group of houses as if the plan had been adhered to. Greater London Property Co. v. Foot, 68 L. J. Q.B. 628; [1899] 1 Q.B. 972; 80 L. T. 390; 47 W. R. 541; 63 J. P. 420—D.

Order of Local Authority—Alteration—Drain or Sewer.—Certain houses in B. Street in 1853 were drained by a combined scheme under the order of the local authority. In 1889 No. 85 B. Street was disconnected from No. 83 and connected to its adjoining house on the other side, No. 87. No order was made by the authority for this, but it was superintended by their officers. In 1900 the owner of No. 85 erected a workshop on the garden, and the drainage from that, including an additional w.c., was connected with the drain of No. 87. This was superintended by the respondents' officers, and, although a plan had been approved by the respondents, the work was not in fact carried out in accordance with that plan:—Held, that the drain of No. 87 did not become a sewer. Gorringe v. Shoreditch Borough Council, 86 L. T. 592; 66 J. P. 565—D.

Subsequent Deviation from Sanctioned Plan.—In 1876 a local authority sanctioned the drainage by a combined operation of Nos. 45, 47, 49, and 51 in R. Road, these houses to be drained by a drain under No. 49. In 1906 it was discovered that houses Nos. 47, 49, 51, 53, and 55 in the road in question were all drained by a drain passing under No. 51. There was no evidence that the alteration in the group of houses drained by one drain was ever sanctioned by the local authority:—Held, that the drain passing under No. 51 was a "sewer." Harvey v. Jaye, 97 L. T. 543; 71 J. P. 473; 5 L. G. R. 967—D.

Deviation from Plan Sanctioned by Local Authority—Alteration in Group of Houses—Innocent Purchaser.—A Metropolitan local authority sanctioned a plan for the combined drainage of a group of three houses by means of a drain leading into a sewer in E. Road; and shortly afterwards sanctioned a plan for the combined drainage of another group of four houses by means of the same drain. In fact, the three houses constituting the first group, together with one of the four houses constituting the second group, were drained by means of a pipe leading into a sewer in R. Road, while the remaining three houses of the second group were drained by means of a pipe leading into the sewer in E. Road:—Held, that, as between the successors of the local authority and an innocent purchaser of one of the first group of houses, the pipe by means of which that group, together with the fourth house, were drained into the sewer in R. Road was a "sewer" and not a "drain" for the purposes of the Metropolis Management Acts, inasmuch as it could not be said to be laid under the order of the local authority. Kershaw v. Taylor (64 L. J. M.C. 245; [1895] 2 Q.B. 471) followed. Harvey v. Busby, 95 L. T. 91; 4 L. G. R. 693; 70 J. P. 301—D.

Order of Local Authority—Evidence—Approval by Surveyor only—Delegation of Powers by Local Authority to Surveyor.—A Metropolitan local authority cannot delegate to their officers their power under the Metropolis Management Acts of ordering the drainage of a group or block of houses by a combined operation. High v. Billings, 89 L. T. 550; 1 L. G. R. 723; 67 J. P. 338—D.

To prove that a pipe draining a group or block of houses in London is a drain, as having been laid pursuant to an order of the proper local authority for the drainage of the group or block by a combined operation, it is generally enough to produce from the records of that authority an application for their sanction to the laying of the pipe marked by the proper officer of the authority as approved, for the proper inference in such a case is that the application received the sanction of the authority. But it is otherwise if at the time of the application the authority had purported to delegate their power of sanctioning such applications to the officer in question, for then the proper inference is that the matter was dealt with by the officer himself, and not brought before the authority. Ib.

Sanctioned by Vestry—Evidence of Sanction.—A plan of a "combined system of drainage" initiated by the surveyor was found in the possession of the vestry. The drains had in fact been constructed in accordance with it:—Held, that such plan was sufficient evidence that the system of drainage had been constructed by order of the vestry. Holland v. Lazarus (66 L. J. Q.B. 285) followed. Geen v. Newington Vestry, 67 L. J. Q.B. 557; [1898] 2 Q.B. 1; 46 W. R. 624; 62 J. P. 564—D.

Connection not Shewn on Plan—Unauthorised Act.—A Metropolitan vestry passed a resolution adopting a plan for the combined drainage of two contiguous houses, Nos. 27 and 29, in a street. The plan merely shewed that the drains, which were represented by single lines, passed diagonally underneath the houses and united in front of them before entering the sewer in the street; it did not show in detail all the particular drains which were intended to be provided within the combined area. On the drains being constructed, a connection was made between the drain of No. 29 and a sink at the back of No. 27. It was found as a fact that this connection had been made with the approval of the vestry's surveyor:—Held, tha the drain of No. 29 was a "drain" and not a "sewer" within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. Heaver's Executors v. Fulham Borough Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 715; [1904] 2 K.B. 383; 91 L. T. 31; 63 J. P. 278; 2 L. G. R. 672; 20 T. L. R. 333—Channell, J.

Pipe taking Rainwater from Roofs of two Houses.—Semble, that the passage of rainwater from the roofs of two contiguous houses down a stack-pipe fixed to the front wall of one of the houses, and thence by an open gully into a branch drain which enters the main drain of that house, does not make the stack-pipe or the branch drain a "sewer" within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. Silles v. Fulham Borough Council (72 L. J. K.B. 397; [1903] 1 K.B. 829) discussed. Ib.

Voluntary Purchase of Property—Estoppel of Purchaser.—Semble, that where the original owner of two contiguous houses in the Metropolis in respect of which an order for drainage by combined operation has been made has improperly made a connection not sanctioned by the order between the drain on one of the houses and a sink on the other, his immediate successor in title to both the houses under a voluntary conveyance is estopped as completely as he would himself have been from alleging that the connection converts that drain into a sewer repairable at the expense of the public. Kershaw v. Taylor (64 L. J. M.C. 245; [1895] 2 Q.B. 741) distinguished. Ib.

Notice to Alter Drain Improperly Made—Service on Successor of Person Offending—Validity.—Section 83 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, which provides that in case a person who has improperly made a drain does not within fourteen days after notice in writing by the local authority cause it to be altered, the local authority may cause the work to be done at the expense of such person, does not authorise the service of such a notice upon the successor in title of a former owner who has improperly made the drain. Ib.

"Drain" Serving Two Houses—Houses Held of Same Landlord—Leases Containing Covenant by Lessee to Contribute to Cost of Repairing Drain—Drain Repaired by one Lessee under Nuisance Order—Implied Contract—Contribution between Parties Responsible for Nuisance.—The fact that the lessees of two adjoining houses held of the same landlord, and drained by a common drain not vested in or repairable by the local authority, are each bound by the terms of his lease to contribute towards the expenses of repairing the drain, does not give rise to any implied contract between the lessees under which one of them who has been compelled under a nuisance order made pursuant to the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to repair the drain can recover a contribution from the other. The rights of the parties in such a case under section 120 of the Act considered. Nathan v. Rouse, 2 L. G. R. 1304—D.

Unauthorised Connection with Another Drain.—Where a drain from one house is connected with the drain of another house without the knowledge of the owner of the second house or of the vestry, the drain of the second house becomes a sewer within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts. Geen v. Newington Vestry, 67 L. J. Q.B. 557; [1898] 2 Q.B. 1; 46 W. R. 624; 62 J. P. 564—D.

Low-lying Land—"Admitting of being drained by gravitation"—"Existing sewer."—Land may be so situate as "to admit of being drained by gravitation into an existing sewer," within the meaning of section 122 of the London Building Act, 1894, notwithstanding that, owing to the construction or management of the sewer, drainage from the land cannot in time of flood find its way into the sewer. Ellis v. London County Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 151; [1904] 1 K.B. 283; 90 L. T. 206; 52 W. R. 381; 63 J. P. 99; 2 L. G. R. 147—D.

Recovery of Penalty—Time for Commencing Proceedings.—Proceedings may be brought under section 200 of the Act of 1894 to recover a penalty imposed by sub-section 9 thereof at any time within six months of the date of the completion of a house erected, without a licence, otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of Part XI. of the Act. Ib.

Disposal of Sewage—User of Sewer outside Area—Persons Outside Metropolitan Area—Public Body—Ultra Vires Agreement.—A parish outside the metropolitan area cannot send its sewage into any sewer of any parish within that area without the consent of such parish; but a parish within the area cannot make any binding agreement for any definite time to receive sewage from a parish without the area—they can only grant revocable licences for such a purpose. Decision of HALL, V.C., in Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway (49 L. J. Ch. 355; 14 Ch. D. 521) on this point approved. St. Mary, Islington, Vestry v. Hornsey Urban Council, 69 L. J. Ch. 324; [1900] 1 Ch. 695; 82 L. T. 580; 48 W. R. 401—C.A.

Drainage into London Sewer—Injunction.—The plaintiffs, a vestry in the county of London, brought an action against the Urban District Council of H., which is outside the county of London, for an injunction to restrain the defendants from permitting their drains and sewers to be connected with the plaintiffs' sewer; also an injunction to prevent any future connection:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to compel the defendants to do their duty; further, if the Court were by injunction to compel the defendants to disconnect their drains and sewers from the plaintiffs' sewer, it would create a public nuisance. St. Mary, Islington, Vestry v. Hornsey Urban Council, 80 L. T. 746; 63 J. P. 488—Kekewich, J.

Sewage Passing into River Thames—Prevention—Liability of County Council to Construct Sewer.—By section 135 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the main sewers then vested in two other public bodies were vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works, and it was provided that "such Board shall make such sewers and works as they may think necessary for preventing all or any part of the sewage within the Metropolis from flowing or passing into the River Thames"; and by section 1 of the Metropolis Management Act Amendment Act, 1858, it was provided that the Board should cause to be commenced as soon as might be after the passing of the Act, and to be completed with all convenient speed, "the necessary sewers and works for the improvement of the main drainage of the Metropolis, and for preventing, as far as may be practicable, the sewage of the Metropolis from passing into the River Thames within the Metropolis." In an action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants claiming a declaration that the defendants (as successors of the Metropolitan Board) were liable to construct the necessary sewers for preventing, as far as practicable, the sewage of certain houses from passing into the River Thames,—Held, that under section 135 of the Act of 1855, the Metropolitan Board had a discretion to decide what sewers and works were necessary for preventing the flow of sewage into the Thames; that section 1 of the Act of 1858 did not take away from the Board the discretion conferred on them by the earlier enactment; and that the action was therefore not maintainable. Westminster City Council v. London County Council, 75 L. J. K.B. 549; [1906] 2 K.B. 379; 94 L. T. 791; 54 W. R. 616; 70 J. P. 390; 4 L. G. R. 655; 22 T. L. R. 593—Bray, J.

New Drainage — Removal of Old Disused Drains.—By-law or Regulation and Direction.]—By regulation 29 of the respondents all disused drains were to be broken up and destroyed, and the materials and foul earth removed and dry earth, ballast, or brick rubbish substituted. By section 83 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a penalty is provided if any drain thereinbefore mentioned is found not to have been provided according to the directions or regulations of the respondents. The appellants constructed new drains, which were connected with the respondents' sewer. On the premises were old disused drains which were not physically joined or connected with the new drains. The old drains were not taken out:—Held, that the regulation was rightly made, and the appellants were properly convicted for constructing the new drain not in accordance with the directions of the respondents. London School Board v. Fulham Borough Council, 90 L. T. 116; 68 J. P. 117; 2 L. G. R. 409—D.

Trespass by Vestry in Laying New Drain.]—Where a metropolitan vestry, acting on the reports of its officers, had passed resolutions recorded on its minutes, and in accordance with such resolutions, but without obtaining the leave of the County Council, entered upon the plaintiff's premises and inserted a new system of drainage,—Held, that on the proper construction of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the vestry had committed a trespass and had done an illegal act for which they were liable in damages; but the plaintiff not having suffered injury, and having consented to the work, judgment was given for the vestry, the defendants, with costs. Long v. Fulham Vestry, 47 W. R. 56—Kekewich, J.

Rain-water Pipe of one House Connecting with Drain of adjoining House.]—A drain which carries sewage-matter from one house, and into which flows a rain-water pipe carrying from another house rain-water only—the two houses not being drained by a combined system of drainage sanctioned by the local authority—becomes, from the point where the rain-water pipe discharges into it, a "sewer" within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. Holland v. Lazarus (66 L. J. Q.B. 285) approved and followed. Silles v. Fulham Borough Council, 72 L. J. K.B. 397; [1903] 1 K.B. 829; 88 L. T. 753; 51 W. R. 598; 67 J. P. 273; 1 L. G. R. 643—C.A.

Liability to Repair—Approval of Vestry and Metropolitan Board of Works.]—By section 69 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, no new sewer is to be made without the previous approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works. By section 250, the word "drain" is defined to include not only what is used for the drainage of one building, but "any drain for draining any group or block of houses by a combined operation under the order of any vestry or district board." "Sewer" includes "sewers and drains of every description" except these. Such a "combined operation" must, in the absence of an order of a vestry or district board, even though there be no evidence of approval by the Metropolitan Board of Works, or such approval was not in fact obtained, be held to be a sewer vested in the vestry and repairable by them. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, Vestry v. London School Board, 67 L. J. Q.B. 234; [1898] A.C. 190; 77 L. T. 635; 46 W. R. 353; 62 J. P. 116, 532—H.L. (E.)

"Reconstruction" of Drain — Reconstruction or Repair.]—The respondents took up a drain, by which their premises were connected with a sewer, except a short length at one end, in consequence of its defective condition. They laid a new concrete foundation for the drain and re-laid the drain on this foundation in its own line and at its old level. In doing so they used one of the old pipes and an old gully. Otherwise the drain as re-laid was of new materials:—Held, that the works amounted to the "reconstruction" of the drain within the meaning of certain by-laws as to drainage made by the London County Council, including a by-law containing a proviso that the by-law should not apply in the case of "any repair which does not involve the alteration or the entire reconstruction of any . . . drain." Agar v. Nokes, 93 L. T. 605; 3 L. G. R. 1168; 69 J. P. 374—D.

Compulsory Purchase—House—Notice to take Whole—Part only Required.]—Under the provisions of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, 1817, a corporation is not entitled to take the whole of a house for the improvement of a street when part only is required for that purpose, unless it can be proved that the part left would be useless to the owner for the purposes of his business. Aldis v. London Corporation, 68 L. J. Ch. 576; [1899] 2 Ch. 169; 80 L. T. 683; 47 W. R. 514; 63 J. P. 376—Kekewich, J.

—Separable Part of House—House under Alteration—Effect of Alteration on Rights of Parties.]—The Act 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. (known as Michael Angelo Taylor's Act) does not authorise a local authority to take part of a house unless that part is separable—that is, can be removed without destroying the house as a house. Gibbon v. Paddington Vestry (69 L. J. Ch. 746; [1900] 2 Ch. 794) and the dicta in Gordon v. St. Mary Abbott's Vestry (63 L. J. M.C. 193, 196, 197; [1894] 2 Q.B. 742, 750, 751, 754) followed. Thompson v. Hammersmith Borough Council, 75 L. J. Ch. 129; [1906] 1 Ch. 299; 94 L. T. 135; 54 W. R. 279; 70 J. P. 100; 4 L. G. R. 331; 22 T. L. R. 179—Buckley, J.

The fact that at the date of the notice to treat the owner or occupier is intending to alter the house is immaterial and does not enlarge the rights of the local authority. At the most it is relevant only if the alterations will result in a new house, of which the part required by the local authority is not an essential part. Ib.

— Power to Take Part of a House.—A vestry is not entitled (under the provisions of section 82 of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, relative to the compulsory taking of houses which obstruct the making of improvements) to take part only of a house, where what is taken is a substantial portion, so that the house and the use and the substantial enjoyment of the house can no longer be enjoyed as before. Dicta in Gordon v. St. Mary Abbott's Vestry (63 L. J. M.C. 193; [1894] 2 Q.B. 742) followed. Gibbon v. Paddington Vestry, 69 L. J. Ch. 746; [1900] 2 Ch. 794; 83 L. T. 136; 49 W. R. 8; 64 J. P. 727—Stirling, J.

A landowner does not by negotiating with a vestry for the sale of part only of a house necessarily lose his right, upon his terms being rejected by the vestry, to insist upon the whole house being taken, if originally so entitled. Ib.

— Adjudication to Take Whole of House — Part only Required for Improvement — Previous Agreement to Sell Part not Required — Bona Fides.—There is no rule that the owner of premises has an absolute right to restrain a local authority acting under the powers of Michael Angelo Taylor's Act, 1817, from taking more of his premises than they require for the purpose of widening a road. Thomas v. Daw (36 L. J. Ch. 201; L. R. 2 Ch. 1), Teuliere v. St. Mary Abbott's Vestry (55 L. J. Ch. 23; 30 Ch. D. 642), and Gordon v. St. Mary Abbott's Vestry (63 L. J. M.C. 193; [1894] 2 Q.B. 742) followed. Pescod v. Westminster Corporation, 74 L. J. Ch. 664; [1905] 2 Ch. 475; 93 L. T. 160; 54 W. R. 89; 69 J. P. 387; 3 L. G. R. 1272; 21 T. L. R. 743—Swinfen Eady, J.

A local authority adjudicated that the possession, occupation, and purchase of the plaintiff's premises were necessary to enable them to carry out the widening of a certain road. The premises had a depth of 64 feet from the road, and of this the defendants proposed to throw a strip 22 feet 6 inches wide into the roadway. Prior to the adjudication the local authority had entered into a contract to sell so much of the premises as they did not require for the purposes of their improvement to an hotel company. The plaintiff was willing to sell to the local authority a strip of 22 feet 6 inches, but objected to their taking the whole of his premises:—Held, that the adjudication was not either ultra vires on the ground that the local authority were not proposing to throw the whole of the plaintiff's premises into the road, or malà fide by reason of the local authority having entered into a previous contract to sell so much of the premises as they did not require for the purposes of their improvement. Ib.

— Bona Fide Intention to Widen—Adjudication.—A Metropolitan borough council desiring to put in operation the powers of section 80 of the Metropolitan Paving Act, 1817 (Michael Angelo Taylor's Act), must bona fide come to the conclusion that it is expedient to widen the street in question, and, having come to that conclusion, must further bona fide adjudge that the land in question projects into and obstructs such widening and must therefore be acquired. Parry v. Hammersmith Borough Council, 92 L. T. 161; 3 L. G. R. 95; 69 J. P. 35; 21 T. L. R. 56—Warrington, J.

By an Act of 1902, the London County Council were empowered to construct an electric tramway along, amongst other streets, Q. Street. When the Bill was before Parliament, the borough council in whose borough Q. Street was opposed it. Subsequently an agreement was arrived at between the parties under which the borough council consented to withdraw their opposition, and the London County Council agreed that if they could obtain the necessary consents they would widen the street, the borough council on their part undertaking to assist them in obtaining such consents and to contribute one-third of the expense. The London County Council, being unable to obtain the necessary consents, requested the borough council to put in force their powers under the Act of 1817. Accordingly the borough council passed a resolution to that effect and served a notice to treat on the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs thereupon applied by motion for an injunction to restrain the borough council from proceeding under their compulsory powers:—Held, on the facts, that there had been a bona fide determination on the part of the borough council that it would be expedient to widen Q. Street, and none the less so that the occasion for it was the proposal of the London County Council to bring a tramway into the street and to make a contribution of two-thirds of the costs of the necessary widening. Ib.

— Severance.—A local authority, requiring part of two houses for the purpose of widening a street, adjudged under Michael Angelo Taylor's Act that it was necessary to acquire the whole, and accordingly gave notice to treat for the whole. They subsequently informed the owner that his right of pre-emption of the part not required would be reserved to him. It being proved that possession of the whole was necessary in order to effect the widening,—Held, that the local authority could take the whole. Fernley v. Limehouse Board of Works, 82 L. T. 524; 64 J. P. 323—Kekewich, J.

— Exercise of Power at Request of Third Party.—The power to take property for street improvement under 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix. (commonly called Michael Angelo Taylor's Act) is to be used bona fide for the statutory purpose and for none other. It is in its nature judicial, and local authorities are bound to consider the facts and arrive at an honest decision whether the whole or any and what part of a property is required. If they do not accept that responsibility their decision is not binding. Gard v. Commissioners of Sewers (54 L. J. Ch. 698; 28 Ch. D. 486) and Lynch v. Commissioners of Sewers (55 L. J. Ch. 211, 409; 82 Ch. D. 72) followed. Denman v. Westminster Corporation, 75 L. J. Ch. 272; [1906] 1 Ch. 464; 94 L. T. 870; 54 W. R. 345; 70 J. P. 185; 4 L. G. R. 442; 22 T. L. R. 270—Buckley, J.

— Part of House Required—Adjudication to Take the Whole—Prior Agreement to Sell Part—Ultra Vires.—When part only of a house is required, the question whether what will be left can be called a house is one of fact and largely of degree. It cannot be answered by saying that the building will require some reconstruction to make it a house, especially if the owner is willing to do the work. Some regard must be had to his wishes, though not so far as to make them the measure of the power of the local authority. Ib.

Whether, where owners having different interests in a house hold different views, the local authority can acquire some only of the interests that make up the fee, quære. Ib.

— Owner's Right of Pre-emption.—A board of works contracted to sell to a purchaser such part of the land occupied by two houses as was not required to carry out a scheme for widening a street. A resolution was then passed by the board adjudging that it was necessary to acquire the whole of the two houses, and notice to treat for the same was given to the owner pursuant to 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix.:—Held, that the adjudication was wrong and ultra vires, as the board must have been influenced by the existence of the prior contract for sale, which deprived the owner of his right of pre-emption under section 96 of the Act; and a perpetual injunction must be granted to restrain them from proceeding with their notice to treat. Fernley v. Limehouse Board of Works, 68 L. J. Ch. 344; 80 L. T. 351; 63 J. P. 310—Kekewich, J.

Forming or Laying out of Street for Traffic—Adapting Street for Traffic—Private Road—Alteration of Fence in Front of Building-plot.—In 1870 a private road was laid out on an estate in London for the purpose of foot, horse, and carriage traffic to and from four residences that were at about the same time built on the estate. The road was thenceforth maintained as a private road and used for the traffic in question. In 1903 the purchaser of a plot of land on the estate, to which he had been granted a right of way over the road, took down the existing fence separating his plot from the road and replaced it with a permanent oak fence, and built a house on the plot fifty feet back from the road:—Held, that he had not by these acts commenced to form or lay out a street or to adapt a street for traffic within the meaning of sections 7, 8, and 10 of the London Building Act, 1894. London County Council v. King, 3 L. G. R. 1046; 69 J. P. 406—D.

— for Foot Traffic—Market or Bazaar.—A court in the Metropolis laid out on ground cleared of ancient buildings, with fifty-five places of business on one side, with twenty-four independent shops on the other, and having six or seven means of access for persons on foot from the surrounding streets through the buildings, is a street intended for foot traffic within section 7 of the London Building Act, 1894, and requires the sanction of the London County Council to its formation, though the control of the entrances is retained by the owner, who closes the main gates at night and on certain days, and though the court with the places of business and shops is intended to form and does form as a whole a market or bazaar. London County Council v. Davis, 91 L. T. 555; 2 L. G. R. 1065; 68 J. P. 520—D.

— Sanction of London County Council—Conditions—New Building on Either Side or upon Site Abutting upon Roadway.—The respondent, the owner of a plot of land in London lying between two railway-lines and approached by means of a rough cart-track leading under one of the lines by means of a narrow tunnel, obtained the sanction of the London County Council to the formation of a new street across his land upon certain conditions. The proposed new street was to follow the line of the cart-track as far as it went, the tunnel under the last-mentioned railway-line being much widened, and was to be continued thence, crossing the other railway-line by a new bridge, to join a highway at the other side of the respondent's land. One of the conditions upon which the sanction of the County Council was given was that no new building should be erected "upon either side of" the roadway of the new street or "upon a site abutting upon such roadway" unless the roadway had been defined and thrown open throughout its entire length. The respondent was unable to make the arrangements with the railway company necessary to enable him to widen the tunnel as proposed or to make the proposed bridge. He, however, improved the cart-track already mentioned and erected a factory on his land on a site some 180 feet from the line of the proposed street, with access thereto from the cart-track:—Held, first, that the respondent had not commenced to form or lay out the street sanctioned by the London County Council; and secondly, that there had been in any case no breach of the conditions above referred to, inasmuch as the factory was at too great a distance from the line of the proposed street for it to be said that it was on either side of the roadway or upon a site abutting upon the roadway within the meaning of that condition. London County Council v. Collins, 93 L. T. 540; 3 L. G. R. 1103; 69 J. P. 401—D.

Commencing to Form or Lay Out—Entrance to Blocks of Flats—Sanction of County Council.—The appellant, without having obtained the sanction of the respondents, commenced to erect certain buildings upon a piece of land belonging to him. According to the plan the buildings were to consist of blocks of flats erected in a quadrangular form with an ornamental garden in the centre of the quadrangle formed by the blocks. The approach was to be by means of a carriage-way running round the garden. Upon each side of the carriage-way blocks were to be erected. Each of the blocks was to have a separate entrance from the carriage-way. The appellant did not propose to dedicate any right of way over the land to the use of the public, but intended to erect gates at the entrance to the approach, and to keep a porter there to open the gates when necessary to allow persons going to or from the flats to pass, and the carriage-way was to be for the use of the tenants of the flats and of persons visiting them:—Held, that the appellant had commenced to form or lay out a "street" without having obtained the sanction of the County Council, contrary to the provisions of section 7 of the London Building Act, 1894, and was liable to be convicted under section 200, sub-section 1 (a) of the Act. Wood v. London County Council (64 L. J. M.C. 276) dissented from. Armstrong v. London County Council, 69 L. J. Q.B. 267; [1900] 1 Q.B. 416; 81 L. T. 638; 48 W. R. 367; 64 J. P. 197—D.

— Sanction of County Council—Intention.—The respondent, without having obtained the sanction of the County Council, commenced to erect six shops and houses on the side of a new street upon land purchased from the freeholder. A number of houses had previously been erected along the same side of the street, and the respondent left a space of forty feet for the width of a street for carriage traffic between the corner shop and the corner house of the houses previously erected. This space was the property of the freeholder. The respondent's corner shop had windows looking into the space and also a door opening into it, and the respondent had erected coach-houses and stables at the back of his premises, the only access to which for horses and carriages was by an entrance eighty feet down the space. Upon an information charging that the respondent had commenced to form a street for carriage traffic without having obtained the sanction of the Council, contrary to the provisions of section 7 of the London Building Act, 1894,—Held, that the respondent could not be convicted, as the circumstances were consistent with his having built the shops in the way he did "for some purpose other than that of forming or laying out a street" within the meaning of the proviso to section 8. London County Council v. Dixon, 68 L. J. Q.B. 526; [1899] 1 Q.B. 496; 80 L. T. 232; 47 W. R. 521; 63 J. P. 390—D.

Vesting of Road in Local Authority—Right to Subsoil.—A road ran over certain land which was vested in a company for the purpose of their undertaking. The road was by a private Act vested in the local authority, who gave no consideration therefor:—Held, that the local authority had acquired no rights in the subsoil of the road so as to prevent the company from tunnelling through same in such a way as should not interfere with the use of the road as a road. Poplar Corporation v. Millwall Dock Co., 68 J. P. 339—Farwell, J.

Vesting of Subsoil—Wrongful Laying of Electric Wires—Mandatory Injunction—Continuing Trespass.—The subsoil of streets in the Metropolis is not vested in the local authority by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 95. Therefore an electric lighting company which has wrongfully and without authority broken the surface of a street and laid pipes and wires beneath it is not guilty of a continuing trespass against the local authority by allowing the pipes and wires to remain beneath the surface, and a mandatory injunction will not be granted to compel the removal of the pipes and wires. Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird (65 L. J. Q.B. 451; [1896] A.C. 434) followed. St. Mary, Battersea, Vestry v. County of London and Brush Provincial Electric Lighting Co., 68 L. J. Ch. 238; [1899] 1 Ch. 474; 80 L. T. 31—C.A.

Widening Street—Agreement with House-owner as to Erection of Sign-post of Public-house.—The Corporation of a Metropolitan borough has power, for the purpose of widening and improving a street, to enter into an agreement with the owner of a public-house in the street, whereby he shall be permitted to erect a sign-post at the edge of the footpath. Hoare v. Lewisham Corporation, 87 L. T. 464; 67 J. P. 20—C.A.

Lowering Surface—Local Authority—District Board—Altering Position of Water-Pipes.—Under section 98 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a district board is entitled to lower the surface of a street without making a corresponding alteration in the position of pipes of a water company which have been laid under the street. Geddis v. Bann Reservoir Proprietors (3 App. Cas. 430) distinguished. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. v. Wandsworth District Board of Works, 67 L. J. Ch. 657; [1898] 2 Ch. 603; 79 L. T. 132; 47 W. R. 107; 62 J. P. 756—C.A.

Breaking up Streets to Lay Pipes—Gas Mains—Re-instatement of Streets—Expenses—Concrete Used where none Used before.—Where a Metropolitan borough council, acting under section 114 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and section 82 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, re-instate the surface of a street that has been broken up by a gas company under statutory powers, the council are entitled to recover, as part of the expenses of re-instating the surface, the expenses of placing a course of concrete where there was previously no concrete, or of placing an extra thickness of concrete where there had previously been concrete, if the concrete or extra concrete was necessary in order that the surface should be made as good, and should remain as good, as it was before the excavation. Commercial Gas Co. v. Poplar Borough Council, 94 L. T. 222; 70 J. P. 178; 4 L. G. R. 267—D.

Footway—Reduction of Width—Powers of County Council.—See Corsellis v. London County Council, 77 L. J. Ch. 120; [1908] 1 Ch. 13; 71 J. P. 561; 6 L. G. R. 78—C.A.

New Street—Commencing to Form or Lay Out.—H. was the owner of land. On that land there was a way over which a few other persons had a right to go to premises abutting on the way. It was a well-defined private way, paved with granite, and had gates at the end. No physical act had been done to the way by H., but he had recently enlarged a building in his possession by extending it backwards along one side of the way:—Held, that the magistrate was right upon these facts in finding that H. had not commenced to lay out or form a new street under the London Building Act, 1894. London County Council v. Heathman, 69 J. P. 222; 3 L. G. R. 1016—D.

— "Direct communication between two streets . . . formed and laid out for carriage traffic."—The question whether a proposed new street which is to be used as a carriage-way will, "at and from the time of forming and laying out the same, afford direct communication between two streets . . . formed and laid out for carriage traffic," within the meaning of sub-section 4 of section 9 of the London Building Act, 1894, is a question of fact for the determination of the London County Council, or, upon an appeal from their decision, of the tribunal of appeal appointed for that purpose; and the Court will not interfere with the determination of that tribunal unless it is one to which they could not reasonably have come. Woodham v. London County Council, 67 L. J. Q.B. 707; [1898] 1 Q.B. 863; 78 L. T. 553; 62 J. P. 342—D.

Where, therefore, a proposed new street communicated with two streets laid out for carriage traffic, but contained a right-angled turning, and the tribunal of appeal found that the communication afforded thereby was not reasonably direct, the Court held that the finding was right and ought not to be disturbed. Ib.

When Road becomes "New street."—In 1877 a vestry made up the carriageway of a road which they had taken over and which they undertook to keep in repair, nothing being done to the footways or to the channelling or kerbing, but, except for the omitted channelling and kerbing, the carriageway was made up in a permanent manner, and in the same mode and to the same extent as new streets with a similar amount of traffic were then dealt with. There were no houses upon the road until 1890, when houses were built upon one side, and in 1896 houses were built on the other side. In 1897 the vestry resolved to treat the road as a "new street" and to pave it under section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and to apportion the expenses upon the frontagers, and the estimates included the cost of wood-paving laid on a concrete foundation. A magistrate having found that the road became a "new street" for the first time after the erection of the houses therein, and that the frontagers were therefore liable for the cost of the paving, including the wood-paving,—Held, that the question as to when the road became a "new street" was a question of fact for the magistrate to decide; that he was right in holding that the road became a new street for the first time after the erection of the houses therein, and that the vestry were therefore entitled to pave the road as a new street under section 105, and charge the frontagers with the expenses, including the expenses of the wood-paving. Allen v. Fulham Vestry, 79 L. T. 190; 47 W. R. 9; 62 J. P. 548—D.

Subways—Right to Use—Reduced Charge.—A company constituted for the purpose of supplying hydraulic power, and not empowered to sell water, is not a "water company" within the meaning of the London County Council Subway Act, 1893, s. 5; such a company is therefore not entitled to claim to pay only on the reduced scale of charges applicable to "water companies" for the use of the London County Council's subways. London County Council v. London Hydraulic Power Co., 62 J. P. 229—C.A.

(ii.) Paving Expenses.

"Street."—A highway, of which one side is covered with houses along its entire length, and the other consists of building land vacant, except for the existence thereon of a temporary iron school, is a "street" within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and the Metropolis Management (Amendment) Act, 1862. Simmonds v. Fulham Vestry, 69 L. J. Q.B. 560; [1900] 2 Q.B. 188; 82 L. T. 497; 48 W. R. 574; 64 J. P. 548—D.

"New street"—Paving Done by Adjoining Owners—Delay of Vestry in Repaving—Right of Vestry to Pave at Expense of Owners.—Where at or before the time of a highway becoming a "new street" within the meaning of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and section 77 of the Metropolis Management (Amendment) Act, 1862, the footway on one side of it has been paved for part of its length by the adjoining owners, and for the remainder by the local authority at the expense of the ratepayers, the only other works done on the street being temporary repairs done by the local authority as surveyors of highways, it cannot be inferred from a delay of sixteen years from that time on the part of the local authority in causing the street to be paved that they are satisfied with the existing paving, and therefore not entitled to proceed under these sections to pave the entire street at the expense of the adjoining owners. Bonella v. Twickenham Local Board (57 L. J. M.C. 1; 20 Q.B. D. 63) distinguished. Ib.

Permanent Paving of Part by Local Authority.—The fact that the local authority have, under section 98 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, permanently paved and channelled the footway before a number of houses fronting a country road will not estop them afterwards when that country road has, by having houses built continuously, or nearly continuously on both sides of it, become a new street, from exercising the powers given by section 105 of that Act by directing the footways on both sides to be permanently paved and channelled, and apportioning the estimated cost among the frontagers, including among these the owners of the houses before which the footpath was previously paved and channelled under section 98. "New street" within section 112 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, explained. Crosse v. Wandsworth District Board of Works, 79 L. T. 351; 62 J. P. 807—D.

"Owner"—Contract to Sell Premises.—Where the owner of the premises has entered into a contract to sell the premises, and by the terms of the contract he is entitled to the rents and liable to pay all outgoings until the date fixed for completion, he remains until that date the owner of the premises within the meaning of the interpretation clause in section 3 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. Wise v. Rutson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 298; [1899] 1 Q.B. 474; 80 L. T. 168—Bruce, J.

"Owners"—Land Used for Strengthening Bank of Navigable River.—A strip of land was vested in the Lee Conservancy Board, which they acquired and used solely for the purpose of strengthening the bank of the Hackney Cut:—Held, that the Board were not “owners” of the strip of land within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, so as to be liable for the expense of paving, &c., a new street on which the strip of land abutted. Hackney Borough Council v. Lee Conservancy Board, 67 J. P. 459—D.

— Previous Abortive Proceedings for Making up Road.—Mere lapse of time does not prevent a street from being a new street, nor does the fact that abortive proceedings have been taken to have the street made up as a new street prevent subsequent proceedings for that purpose being taken. Id.

— Building Agreement.—A building agreement provided that the intended lessee should erect houses on the land comprised therein; that until leases of the houses were granted he would pay to the intended lessor by way of rent 200l. a year; and that on the erection of any house the intended lessor would grant a lease thereof to the intended lessee. The agreement expressly provided that it was intended to operate as an agreement only, and not as an actual demise of the premises, or to give the intended lessee any legal interest therein until the leases should have been executed. The 200l. reserved as rent was not a rack-rent. No houses were built upon the land, nor had it been used by the appellant:—Held, that the intended lessor, and not the intended lessee, was the “owner” of the land within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and as such liable under the Metropolis Management Acts to contribute to the expenses of paving a new street upon which the land abutted. Holland (Lady) v. Kensington Vestry (36 L. J. M.C. 105; L. R. 2 C.P. 565) followed. Driscoll v. Battersea Borough Council, 72 L. J. K.B. 564; [1903] 1 K.B. 881; 88 L. T. 795; 67 J. P. 264; 1 L. G. R. 511—D.

— Common Abutting on Street—Common Dedicated to Public Use—Of Land Capable of being Let at a Rack-rent.—The London County Council, in whom a common is vested by statute as a public recreation ground, and on which no houses or other buildings may be erected except such as are necessary for its management or maintenance, are not, although they may receive certain annual sums in respect of the buildings on the common, and also in respect of grazing rights thereon—such sums being in the aggregate much below the amount expended by the Council in the maintenance of the common—the “owners” of the common within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, so as to be liable for the paving expenses of a new street abutting thereon. Fulham Vestry v. Minter (70 L. J. K.B. 348; [1901] 1 K.B. 501) overruled. London County Council v. Wandsworth Borough Council, 72 L. J. K.B. 399; [1903] 1 K.B. 797; 88 L. T. 738; 51 W. R. 499; 67 J. P. 215; 1 L. G. R. 462—C.A.

— “New street”—Road Taken Over and Repaired by Local Authority—Subsequent Erection of Houses in Road—Liability of Adjoining Owners.—A road which had been constructed by a company through market-gardens was in 1877 taken over and made up, except as to the foot-paths thereof, by the local authority in the same manner as new streets with a similar amount of traffic were made up at that time, and had ever since been repaired by them. In 1890 houses were for the first time built on one side of the road, and in 1895 and 1896 on the other. The local authority thereupon paved the road as a “new street” under the provisions of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and apportioned the expenses thereof upon the adjoining owners. Summonses having been issued to recover the sums apportioned, the magistrate found that the road first became a new street when the houses were built along it:—Held, that the words “new street” in section 105 meant a street with buildings in it, and that the magistrate was therefore justified in finding that the local authority were entitled to treat this road as a “new street” when the houses were erected in it, and to charge the expenses of paving it on the adjoining owners. Allen v. Fulham Vestry, 68 L. J. Q.B. 450; [1899] 1 Q.B. 681; 80 L. T. 253; 47 W. R. 428; 63 J. P. 212—C.A.

— Land Abutting on Street—Statutory Restrictions—Rack Rent—“Owner.”—By a private Act it was provided that the defendants should acquire all the land of certain owners up to a road, and should leave a strip of land twenty feet wide along the whole length of the road, which was a new street, and plant and maintain the same with shrubs and trees to the satisfaction of the owners, and to the like satisfaction fence off the land from the road. The defendants acquired the land and left the strip, which they planted and fenced off in accordance with the provisions of the Act:—Held, that, although the land was at present extra commercium, the restrictions against profitable user could be released, and therefore the defendants were “owners” of the land within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and liable under section 105 to contribute to the expenses of paving. Wright v. Ingle (55 L. J. M.C. 17; 16 Q.B. D. 379) followed. Hampstead Borough Council v. Midland Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 431; [1905] 1 K.B. 538; 92 L. T. 252; 69 J. P. 133; 3 L. G. R. 455; 21 T. L. R. 272—C.A. Affirming, 53 W. R. 187—Bigham, J.

— Paving Streets at Points of Intersection.—The provisions of section 77 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, under which the expenses of paving a new street chargeable on the frontagers may include “the cost of paving at the points of intersection of streets,” are not confined to cases where two streets cross each other, but apply also where the new street in question joins another street and is not continued on the other side thereof. And where the borough council make up, at the cost of the frontagers, a new street so joining another street, they may, accordingly, charge on the frontagers the cost of paving a crossing at the junction of the two streets in the line of the foot-pavement of the latter street. Bridgett v. Wandsworth Borough Council, 93 L. T. 519; 3 L. G. R. 1186; 69 J. P. 394—D.

— Old Street Widened by Addition on One Side.—Where a strip of land is added to one side of an old highway and made into a street, such added strip and not the whole roadway constitutes a new street. The expenses of paving, &c., such added strip are therefore apportionable among and recoverable from the frontagers on it, and not from the frontagers on both sides of the old roadway. Property Exchange Co. v. Wandsworth District Board, 84 L. T. 689; 65 J. P. 407—D.

— Land Kept for the Recreation of the Public—Property Capable of Beneficial Occupation.—Where land abutting upon a new street is of such a character that it is incapable of ever being used beneficially, it is extra commercium, and the owner is not liable under section 77 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, to contribute in respect of it to the expenses of paving the street. But where the owner may, consistently with the terms upon which he holds the land, derive some beneficial occupation from it, he is liable to contribute to such expenses, notwithstanding that the land is subject to a trust for the perpetual use by the public for purposes of recreation. Fulham Vestry v. Minter, 70 L. J. K.B. 348; [1901] 1 K.B. 501; 34 L. T. 49; 49 W. R. 415; 65 J. P. 180—D.

— Cut of Navigable River Vested in Conservancy Board Abutting on Street—Strip of Land for Strengthening Bank—"Owner" of Land Capable of being Let at a Rack-rent.—The Lee Conservancy Board purchased a strip of land about twenty-six feet wide at the base and from ten to fifteen wide at the top for the purpose of strengthening the bank of the Hackney Cut (which formed part of the Lee Navigation) and preserving the river in a navigable condition, and thus enabling the Board to earn the tolls which the statutes authorised them to charge. The strip of land was used solely for that purpose. The money necessary to enable the Board to perform their statutory duties was raised by mortgages, and the tolls were applicable to pay the interest on the mortgages. The Board had statutory power to construct new locks, docks, wharves, towing-paths, and other works, and there was nothing in the statutes to prevent the strip of land being utilised for such a purpose; the Board had also power to sell, convey, or otherwise dispose of any of the lands vested in them which were not required for any of the purposes of the undertaking, and there was nothing to preclude the Board substituting a retaining wall for the bank formed by the strip of land in question, and disposing of the portion of land no longer required:—Held, that the nature of the Board's undertaking and the conditions under which it was carried on did not place the strip of land extra commercium or render it incapable of being let at a rack-rent, and therefore that the Board were "owners" of the same within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and, as such, liable for paving expenses in respect of a new street on which the strip of land abutted. Dictum of LORD WATSON in Great Eastern Railway v. Hackney Board of Works (52 L. J. M.C. 105; 8 App. Cas. 687) considered. Hackney Borough Council v. Lee Conservancy Board, 73 L. J. K.B. 766; [1904] 2 K.B. 541; 91 L. T. 13; 68 J. P. 485; 2 L. G. R. 1144; 20 T. L. R. 146—C.A.

— Present or Future Owner—Liability.—By the joint operation of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and section 77 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, successive owners of houses bounding on abutting on new streets are liable on demand to pay the amount of paving expenses apportioned or charged in respect of their houses. Hampstead Corporation v. Caunt, 72 L. J. K.B. 440; [1903] 2 K.B. 1; 88 L. T. 599; 51 W. R. 700; 1 L. G. R. 507; 67 J. P. 344—Wright, J.

Landlord and Tenant—Covenant by Tenant to Pay Charges Imposed on Frontages—Payment by Tenant to Local Authority of Rent Due to Landlord—Right of Landlord to Distrain.—The payment made by an occupier of premises to the local authority under section 96 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, is not a payment of rent, but a payment of a sum on account of the charges and expenses incurred by the local authority measured by the amount of rent due from the occupier to his landlord, and which the occupier is entitled to deduct from his rent, provided that he has entered into no contract with his landlord which prevents him from so doing; but if he has entered into an agreement with his landlord to pay such charges as those in question he is not entitled to make the deduction, and the rent remains due notwithstanding the payment to the local authority, and the landlord can distrain for it. Skinner v. Hunt, 73 L. J. K.B. 680; [1904] 2 K.B. 452; 91 L. T. 270; 68 J. P. 402; 2 L. G. R. 769; 20 T. L. R. 556—C.A.

Water Company—Opening of Street by—Repair by Local Authority—Employment of Contractor—Recovery of Expenses from Company—Expense of Superintendence of Contractor.—Where a Metropolitan local authority has employed a contractor to make good a street which has been broken up by a water company in the exercise of statutory powers, the local authority is entitled under section 114 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, to recover from the company not only the sum paid by them to the contractor for the work actually done by him, but also the expenses reasonably incurred by them in superintending the execution of the work by the contractor. New River Co. v. Westminster City Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 1009; 90 L. T. 792; 68 J. P. 358; 2 L. G. R. 1024; 20 T. L. R. 507—D.

Private Courtyard or Mews—Whether Owner can be Called upon to Re-pave.—Where a borough council in exercise of their powers under sections 99 and 100 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, have called upon the owner of a private courtyard or mews to pave the same in a particular manner, as, for instance, with macadam, they cannot afterwards require him to re-pave the same in some other manner, as, for instance, with asphalt on concrete. When once a pavement has been laid in compliance with a notice under these sections, the powers of the borough council are limited to calling upon the owner to repair and keep the pavement in repair. Harrison v. New Street Mews (Owner), 75 L. J. K.B. 510; [1906] 1 K.B. 703; 95 L. T. 57; 70 J. P. 355; 4 L. G. R. 703—D.

Footpaths—Percentage for Supervision &c. by Salaried Officers of Local Authority.—A Metropolitan borough council, purporting to act under section 3 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1890, executed works on a road in their borough, and apportioned a sum of about 431*l.*, as being the expenses of and incident to the works, on the frontagers. The 431*l.* included an item of about 10*l.* in respect of works to the footpaths, and an item of about 16*l.*, representing expenses of plans, estimates, supervision, &c., calculated at 4 per cent on the actual expenditure. On proceedings against one of the frontagers for the recovery of an apportioned share of the 431*l.*, the magistrate found as a fact that the "works executed, though very extensive, did not amount to paving as a new street, and that such works were not therefore works of construction or reconstruction, but necessary works of repair" within the section. The work in connection with the plans, estimates, supervision, &c., was, in fact, carried out by the salaried officials of the council, and occasioned no substantial extra expense to the council:—Held—first, that the frontagers were liable as regards the expenses of the works to the carriage-way, but could not be charged with the expense referable to the footpath; secondly, on the authority of Metropolitan Water Board v. Westminster City Council (75 L. J. K.B. 384; 4 L. G. R. 237), that the frontagers could not be charged with the 16*l.*; and thirdly, following Reg. v. Marsham (61 L. J. Q.B. 52; [1892] 1 Q.B. 371), that, as the apportionment included items not chargeable on the frontagers, the magistrate ought to have dismissed the summons, and could not make an order for payment of a reduced amount. Ballard v. Wandsworth Borough Council, 95 L. T. 118; 70 J. P. 331; 4 L. G. R. 708—D.

Street "leading into" Main Street.]—The London County Council under their Improvement Act, 1899, were required to maintain a public street along the boundary of particular premises "leading into the new central street":—Held, that this meant leading straight or directly into the new central street. Metropolitan Electric Supply Co. v. London County Council, 68 J. P. 501; 2 L. G. R. 1286—Kekewich, J.

Apportionment of—Notice of—Demand.]—A notice given to the owner of premises that the local authority has apportioned and charged him with the payment of a part of expenses of paving a new street, amounting to a specified sum, is a sufficient requirement of payment within section 96 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862. Wix v. Rutson, 68 L. J. Q.B. 298; [1899] 1 Q.B. 474; 80 L. T. 168—Bruce, J.

— Owners of Land "Abutting" on New Street.]—Where an apportionment in respect of the paving expenses of a new street has been bona fide made by a borough council, acting under the powers of the Metropolis Management Acts, the Court, notwithstanding the decision in Grand Junction Waterworks v. Hampton Urban Council (67 L. J. Ch. 608; [1898] 2 Ch. 331, 345), will declare such apportionment invalid if a merely nominal sum has been therein apportioned in respect of an alleged strip of land down one side of the new street, and the Court finds in fact that there was no such strip, and that consequently the owners of the houses bounding or abutting on that side of the new street had no portion of the paving expenses apportioned upon them.

Elsdon v. Hampstead Borough Council, 75 L. J. Ch. 27; [1905] 2 Ch. 633; 93 L. T. 335; 54 W. R. 434; 69 J. P. 434; 3 L. G. R. 1199; 21 T. L. R. 772—Joyce, J.

— Dismissal of Summons on Ground of Street not being a New Street—Fresh Apportionment—Res Judicata.]—On November 9, 1899, the H. Vestry resolved that R. Street be paved as a new street, and apportioned the sum of 37*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.* on the respondent, which he refused to pay. On September 15, 1899, the H. Vestry summoned the respondent for that sum, but the summons was dismissed on the ground that R. Street was not a new street within the Metropolis Management Acts. On June 13, 1900, a resolution was passed by the H. Vestry rescinding the above apportionment, and on March 14, 1901, the H. Borough Council resolved that R. Street be paved as a new street, and apportioned on the respondent the sum of 32*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.*, which he refused to pay, and thereupon the present summons was issued. The magistrate held that the adjudication of September 15, 1899, was conclusive, and he dismissed the summons:—Held, on the authority of Wakefield Corporation v. Cooke (71 L. J. K.B. 257; [1902] 1 K.B. 1888), that the decision of September 15, 1899, was not conclusive, and the present case should be heard on its merits. Scott v. Lowe, 86 L. T. 421; 66 J. P. 520—D.

— Estimated Expenses by Temporary Surveyor.]—An officer of a Metropolitan borough council who, having been their assistant surveyor, was acting as interim surveyor, is their "surveyor for the time being" within the meaning of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, for the purpose of estimating the cost of paving a new street. Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare Local Board (58 L. J. Ch. 39; 40 Ch. D. 55) distinguished. Kendal v. Lewisham Borough, 67 J. P. 236; 1 L. G. R. 416—Kekewich, J. Order discharged by consent, 2 L. G. R. 31; 20 T. L. R. 21—C.A.

— Strip of Land Added to Old Highway.]—An old public highway for carriage traffic, sixteen feet in width, which prior to 1855 was a formed road and was constituted a street by the erection of houses on the south side, and since 1855 had been prepared by the board of works within whose district it was situate, was in 1898 widened on the north side by the addition of a strip, twenty-four feet in width, and houses, sufficient in number and position to constitute a street, were built upon that side. An apportionment of the estimated expenses of paving the added strip as a new street under the Metropolis Management Acts was made by the board upon the owners of the premises on the north side of the added strip:—Held, that the added strip was a new street within the meaning of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and section 77 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, and that the apportionment was properly made on the owners of the premises on the north side of the added strip only. Richards v. Kessick (57 L. J. M.C. 48) and White v. Fulham Vestry (74 L. T. 425) approved. Property Exchange (No. 1) v. Wandsworth Board of Works, 71 L. J. K.B. 515; [1902] 2 K.B. 61; 86 L. T. 481; 66 J. P. 435—C.A.

— Power of Local Authority to Rescind

—New Apportionment.—Resolutions of a local authority as to the paving of the footpaths of a new street followed by a valid apportionment of expenses are not necessarily final and conclusive. They may, unless completely carried out, be rescinded by the local authority, under the powers conferred upon them by section 57 of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, and a second apportionment made in respect of the paving expenses of the same street. Bishop v. Wandsworth Board of Works, 69 L. J. Q. B. 632; 82 L. T. 766; 64 J. P. 630—D.

Road not Repairable by Borough Council—Necessary Works of Repair Executed by Council—Recovery of Expenses from Frontagers—“Court of competent jurisdiction.”—The expenses of necessary works of repair executed upon a road by a Metropolitan borough council under the provisions of section 3 of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1890, may be recovered from the frontagers by summary proceedings before a Metropolitan police magistrate. The expression “Court of competent jurisdiction” in that section is not limited to a Court competent to entertain an action of debt. Rez v. Garrett, 76 L. J. K. B. 353; [1907] 1 K. B. 881; 96 L. T. 407; 71 J. P. 171; 5 L. G. R. 358; 23 T. L. R. 309—C. A.

Intervening Strip.—At the time the defendant purchased a certain piece of land there was an intervening strip on which was an old fence between it and the new street. He had purchased the land in 1904 on the faith of an apportionment by the borough council of a nominal sum in respect of paving expenses on the land upon which the old fence stood forming the eastern boundary of the land he had purchased. Subsequently it was decided that the strip of land had been conveyed with the land on either side of it, and that the buildings erected on the land purchased by the defendant abutted on the new street; whereupon the plaintiffs rescinded the first, and made a fresh apportionment, including the houses erected by the defendant:—Held, that the defendant was liable to pay the amount apportioned on his houses in the second apportionment. Hampstead Borough Council v. Western, 71 J. P. 565—Darling, J. And see LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

Obstruction—Truck Placed Opposite House for Removing Dust—Legal Justification for Appropriation of Roadway.—Whether or not a person wilfully causes an obstruction in a thoroughfare within the meaning of section 54, sub-section 6 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, is in each case a question of degree depending upon the particular facts. Dunn v. Holt, 73 L. J. K. B. 841; 90 L. T. 577; 68 J. P. 271; 2 L. G. R. 502; 20 Cox C. C. 625; 20 T. L. R. 297—D.

Where a truck two feet eight inches wide is placed opposite a house in a carriage-way thirty feet wide for several hours during the day for the purpose of removing dust from the house, the purpose being in itself reasonable, the time selected for the operation also reasonable, and the time and space occupied by it not excessive, but the system of cleaning involved being not necessary to the ordinary comfort or exigency of life, and still in the experimental stage, and one which might, from noise and the collection of sightseers attracted by it, be productive of discomfort and inconvenience to occupants of houses and people using the streets, but sufficient width of carriage-way is left to enable vehicles to pass, and there is no evidence that any one is actually prevented from passing along the street or that any individual is incommoded; there is no evidence of a wilful obstruction within the meaning of the sub-section. Id.

—Costermonger—Offence.—Section 60, sub-section 7 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, has not been impliedly repealed by section 1 of the Metropolitan Streets Act Amendment Act, 1867, in the case of costermongers; nor has it been superseded by the police regulations of December 28, 1869, made by the latter Act. Wandsworth District Board of Works v. Pretty, 68 L. J. Q. B. 193; [1899] 1 Q. B. 1; 47 W. R. 256; 63 J. P. 132—D.

Where a costermonger causes an annoyance or obstruction within the meaning of section 60, sub-section 7 of the Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, a private person who is aggrieved by such annoyance or obstruction may take proceedings against the costermonger by way of summons to recover the penalty imposed by the section. Semble, that the magistrate, in order to convict, must find that there is a real and substantial annoyance in fact. A merely technical annoyance, arising from the user of the street by the costermonger in a manner other than as a highway, is not sufficient to justify a conviction. Wandsworth Board of Works v. Pretty (supra) approved. Reg. v. Francis; Walton, Ex parte, 68 L. J. Q. B. 609; 63 J. P. 469—D.

4. RATES AND RATING.

Valuation List—Hereditaments Exempt from Poor Rate, but Liable to other Rates—Duty of Assessment Committee—Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Mandamus.—Certain hereditaments in the City of London were exempt from poor rate under a local Act, but were liable to certain other rates. The overseers of the parishes in which these hereditaments were situate inserted them in the valuation lists, but in each case, while stating the gross value, refrained from stating any rateable value for the hereditaments, merely entering in the column for rateable value a note that the hereditament was exempt from poor rate. And the assessment committee approved the list in this form. The Corporation of the City, who had power to levy certain rates from which the hereditaments were not exempt, and for the purposes of which the valuation list is, by the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, made conclusive, obtained from the Divisional Court a rule absolute for a mandamus requiring the assessment committee to insert the rateable values of the hereditaments in the valuation lists:—Held, that the rule must be discharged. The scheme of the Act of 1869 is that the valuation lists shall be corrigible only on appeal under that Act, and only at the instance of those to whom rights of appeal are given by that Act. Consequently, in no view ought the mandamus to issue. Further, the matter could have been raised by the Corporation on appeal, both under the provisions of section 32 of that Act, giving a rating authority an appeal against totals, and under the provisions of the same section giving such an authority an appeal if there is no approved valuation list for the parish. Rev v. City of London Union; London Corporation, Ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 1087; [1907] 2 K.B. 764; 97 L. T. 346; 5 L. G. R. 819; 71 J. P. 877; 23 T. L. R. 502—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and FLETCHER MOUTON, L.J.—The rateable values ought to have been inserted; but quære whether the insertion of such values would have affected the amount of the contributions of the parish towards common charges payable out of poor rate. Ib.

— Rateable Value—Deductions from Gross Value—“Houses or buildings let out in separate tenements.”—A building let out in flats, each of which is entered in the parochial valuation list as a separate rateable hereditament, is a house or building “let out in separate tenements” within the footnote to the Third Schedule of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869. Western v. Kensington Assessment Committee, 77 L. J. K.B. 328; [1908] 1 K.B. 811; 72 J. P. 42; 6 L. G. R. 119—C.A.

But the question whether deductions beyond the maxima prescribed by the Third Schedule can be allowed in such a case depends upon the circumstances of the occupation. Ib.

Appeal to Sessions—Point not Expressly Raised in Notice of Objection taken on Appeal.—On appeal to sessions against a decision of an assessment committee under the Act of 1869 the appellant is entitled to take the point that the property to which the appeal relates comes within the category of “houses or buildings let out in separate tenements,” and raise a claim accordingly to a larger deduction from the gross value than would otherwise be permissible, though he did not, in his original notice of objection, expressly allege or necessarily imply that there was any error in the list as regards the class under which the property was entered. Ib.

New Valuations—Alteration in Value—General Rise in Values.—In order to justify an alteration in the valuation of premises either by a supplementary valuation under section 46 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, or by a provisional valuation under section 47 of that statute, the alteration in value must be such that, if the fact relied on as constituting the alteration had been present at the time of the original valuation, it could properly have been taken into consideration in arriving at the assessment, and the fact constituting the alteration in value should affect the premises in question in particular. A general rise in values is not a fact constituting such an alteration, but it is otherwise where an increase in values arises from some cause affecting merely the particular class of premises in question, and not from general prosperity affecting all classes of the community. The onus of shewing an alteration in the value of premises is on those who seek to have a provisional or supplemental valuation made. Ellis v. Camberwell Assessment Committee, [1900] 1 Q.B. 68; 48 W. R. 162; 63 J. P. 820—C.A.

Supplemental Valuation List—Provisional Valuation List—Alteration in Value of Premises Rated.—The alteration in the value of a hereditament, which under section 47 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, justifies its inclusion in a provisional list, must be an alteration arising from a definable cause and affecting the particular hereditament, and not from general economic change, or from appreciation of the particular class of property to which the hereditament belongs; and it lies upon those who desire to alter the assessment to prove the nature and cause of the alleged alteration. The mere fact that subsequently to the quinquennial valuation a premium was paid for the lease of the premises is not—apart from other evidence, such as the premium paid on a previous transfer—evidence of alteration within the meaning of the statute. Camberwell Assessment Committee v. Ellis, 69 L. J. Q.B. 828; [1900] A.C. 510; 83 L. T. 201; 49 W. R. 283; 65 J. P. 132—H.L. (E.)

Quinquennial Valuation List—Omission of Notice of Alteration in Rateable Value—Objection taken to Issue of Distress Warrant.—The objection that no notice of an alteration in the gross and rateable value of a hereditament inserted in the valuation list has been served upon the occupier of the hereditament, under section 9 of the Valuation of Property (Metropolis) Act, 1869, cannot be taken by him upon an application for a distress warrant to recover a rate which is based upon the rateable value of the premises stated in the valuation list. Westminster City Council v. Army and Navy Auxiliary Supply, 71 L. J. K.B. 546; [1902] 2 K.B. 125; 87 L. T. 78; 50 W. R. 631; 66 J. P. 727—D.

Appeal against Valuation List—Occupier's Name Struck Out—“Alteration” in Assessment—Repayment of Rates.—An alteration in a valuation list on appeal to a superior Court is not by the terms of section 44 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, confined to a mere alteration in the amount of the assessment; but the striking out from the valuation list of the name of an occupier is equally an alteration within the contemplation of the section. So where, in such a case, the person wrongly entered as occupier has been compelled to pay rates, he can maintain an action against the vestry for repayment of the same. Burton v. St. Giles's Vestry, 70 L. J. K.B. 127; [1901] 1 K.B. 650; 84 L. T. 30; 49 W. R. 334; 65 J. P. 167—Mathew, J.

Assessment — Gross Value — Rent — Payment made to Third Party for Cleaning and Lighting Common Stair.—Where the tenant of each of several tenements, the access to which is by a common stair, by arrangement with the landlord, pays, in addition to his weekly rent to the landlord, a weekly sum to a third party in respect of the cleaning, watching, and lighting of the common stair, that sum must be taken into account in determining the "gross value" within the meaning of section 4 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, of the tenement in respect of which it is paid. Pullen v. St. Saviour's Union, 69 L. J. Q.B. 139; [1900] 1 Q.B. 138; 81 L. T. 583; 48 W. R. 186—D.

Rector's Rate—Liability—"House"—Dwelling-house.—A house converted by internal alterations into a warehouse, and not actually occupied as a dwelling-house or suitable in its present condition for such occupation, but capable of re-conversion into a dwelling-house, is still a "house" within the meaning of an Act of Parliament by which rates are charged upon the houses within a parish. Dicta in Surman v. Darley (14 L. J. M.C. 145; 14 M. & W. 181) disapproved. Lewin v. End, 75 L. J. K.B. 473; [1906] A.C. 299; 94 L. T. 649; 54 W. R. 606; 4 L. G. R. 618; 70 J. P. 263; 22 T. L. R. 504—H.L. (E.)

Statutory Exemption of Property from—Fore-shore Reclaimed from River Thames—Implied Repeal of Local Act by Subsequent Local Act.—The exemption from taxes and assessments conferred by section 51 of 7 Geo. 3, c. 37, upon the ground and soil of the River Thames inclosed and embanked by virtue of the Act, is taken away by section 169 of the City of London Sewers Act, 1848. Sion College v. London Corporation, 69 L. J. Q.B. 766; [1900] 2 Q.B. 581; 83 L. T. 76—D.

Land Covered with Water.—The partial exemption from rateability under the Public Health Acts of land covered with water is continued, as regards hereditaments situated in Woolwich, by section 10, sub-section 1 of the London Government Act, 1899, and the scheme made under it, notwithstanding the repeal of the Public Health Acts as to Metropolitan boroughs. London and India Docks Co. v. Woolwich Borough, 71 L. J. K.B. 394; [1902] 1 K.B. 750; 86 L. T. 619; 50 W. R. 639; 66 J. P. 484—D.

Appeal—Hereditament Partly Exempt—No Separate Valuation.—The occupier of a hereditament, part of which is covered with water, may appeal against a rate on the ground that effect has not been given to the exemption, although the hereditament has been valued as a whole in the valuation list, and the parts entitled to exemption and the parts not so entitled have not been separately valued. Ib.

— "From all taxes and assessments whatsoever"—New Rate Subsequently Authorised.—The provision of section 51 of 7 Geo. 3, c. 37, that the ground reclaimed from the River Thames under that Act should vest in the owners therein mentioned "free from all taxes and assessments whatsoever," applies only to taxes and assessments in existence at the time of the passing of that Act, and does not apply to the consolidated rate which the Corporation of London were empowered to make under the City of London Sewers Act, 1848, inasmuch as the provisions of that Act shew that that rate is substantially a new rate, and was not in existence at the time of the passing of 7 Geo. 3, c. 37. Sion College v. London Corporation, 70 L. J. K.B. 369; [1901] 1 K.B. 617; 84 L. T. 133; 49 W. R. 361; 65 J. P. 324—C.A.

— Special Statutory Exemption, whether Confined to Existing Rates—Fixed Composition Payable "for ever hereafter."—The 52 Geo. 3, c. 49, extended the time for the exercise of certain statutory powers then vested in the Treasury for the purchase of the "legal quays" (which were at that time private property) in front of the old Custom House in Lower Thames Street, in the City of London, and gave the Treasury power for the acquisition of certain premises in Lower Thames Street for the purpose of erecting a new Custom House in substitution for the old Custom House. Section 3 of the Act provided that an annual sum of 220*l.* 12*s.* 10½*d.*, which was then paid by the Treasury in respect of the old Custom House, and a like sum which was then paid as rates in respect of the legal quays, to the collectors of the parochial and ward rates in the ward of T. and in the parish of A. in the said ward, should for ever thereafter be paid out of consolidated Customs to the collectors of the rates to whom the sums were then paid and should be considered as part of the produce of such rates. Section 4 of the Act provided for the payment of a contribution in lieu of rates in respect of the premises to be purchased for the site of the new Custom House. And section 5 enacted that the old Custom House and "the said premises in Lower Thames Street" should be exempt from all rates and assessments, although the same might become private property. By the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 66, provision was made as to the sale of the legal quays and the site of the old Custom House. And by sections 2 to 4 of that Act it was provided that the two sums of 220*l.* 12*s.* 10½*d.* each referred to in section 3 of the 52 Geo. 3, c. 49, should after the sale of the property by the Treasury cease to be payable out of the Customs and become payable by the proprietors for the time being of the property:—Held, that the legislation had the effect of putting the legal quays in the same position as the site of the old Custom House as regards rates. London Corporation v. Netherlands Steamboat Co., 93 L. T. 566; 69 J. P. 443; 3 L. G. R. 1087—H.L. (E.)

That the provisions exempting the property in the hands of private individuals from rates, except to the extent of the fixed contribution, were not confined to rates existing at the time of the Acts, but extended to future rates. Sion College v. London Corporation (70 L. J. K.B. 369; [1901] 1 K.B. 617) distinguished. Ib.

That the privilege attaching to the property was not taken away as regards the consolidated rate by the City of London Sewers Act, 1848, notwithstanding the provisions of that Act declaring that such rate should be levied on property in the city whether the occupiers were liable to poor rate or were not liable to poor rate by reason of the property being situate in any precinct or extra-parochial place or otherwise, and declaring that churches, prisons, public buildings, &c., should be rateable to such rate. Ib.

— Commutation for Payment of Rates—Extent of Exemption—New Rates.—By section 5 of 52 Geo. 3, c. 49, certain property in the City of London, formerly belonging to the Commissioners of the Treasury but now vested in the respondents, was, in consideration of a fixed composition, made “free and exempt from the payment of all and all manner of rates and assessments,” although it might come into private ownership:—Held, that the exemption was not confined to rates then existing, but extended to all rates and assessments to be thereafter imposed. London Corporation v. Netherlands Steamboat Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 771; [1906] A.C. 263; 93 L. T. 566; 69 J. P. 443; 3 L. G. R. 1087—H.L. (E.)

“Name of person liable to be rated omitted or described by a wrong name”—Correction.—E. was the occupier of premises known as the Pall Mall Club during the whole of the qualifying period. On the rate-book his predecessors in the premises, the New Nimrod Club, were entered as occupiers. Two days after the expiration of the period for which the rate was made a summons was taken out under section 72 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, to have the error rectified, but the magistrate refused to insert E.’s name, being of opinion—first, that E.’s name had not been “omitted from the rate” within the meaning of the section; secondly, that E. was not a person “described in such rate by a wrong name” within the meaning of the section; and thirdly, that E.’s name could not legally be inserted in the said rate after the expiration of the period for which the rate was made:—Held, that the magistrate was wrong in so holding, and that he ought to have inserted E.’s name. Westminster City Council v. Edgcombe, 67 J. P. 25—D.

Collection—Parish of St. Marylebone—From Sheriff in Possession—Goods “taken in execution” —Payment of Judgment Debt—Withdrawal of Sheriff without Paying Rate—Liability of Sheriff for Rate.—Section 195 of 35 Geo. 3, c. 73, provides that when the goods of any person liable to pay any rate “by virtue of this Act” shall be “taken in execution” within the parish of St. Marylebone by any sheriff before such rate shall have been paid, then the sheriff, upon demand made by the collector of the vestry, “shall and he is hereby directed and required, in the first place, to pay to such collector” the rate. A sheriff seized the goods of a judgment debtor in the parish under a writ of fi. fa., and whilst he was still in possession the collector of the vestry served on him a notice that parochial rates, consisting of poor rate, general rate, sewers rate, and two other small rates, were due from the judgment debtor to the vestry, and demanding payment by the sheriff under section 195 of 35 Geo. 3, c. 73. The judgment debtor having paid the judgment debt, the sheriff withdrew without paying the rate, leaving on the premises goods of more than sufficient value to satisfy the rate:—Held, in an action by the vestry against the sheriff to recover the amount of the rate, that the goods were “taken in execution” within the meaning of 35 Geo. 3, c. 73, s. 195, when they were seized by the sheriff, and that, as the privilege of collecting the rate from the sheriff given by that section applied directly to the poor rate, and was extended by section 161 of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, to the other rates, the vestry was entitled to recover the amount of the rate from the sheriff. St. Marylebone Vestry v. County of London (Sheriff), 69 L. J. Q.B. 848; [1900] 2 Q.B. 591; 83 L. T. 355; 49 W. R. 86; 64 J. P. 628—C.A.

G. PARISH PROPERTY.

Metropolitan Vestry Hall—Borough Council or Vicar and Churchwardens—User for Secular or Ecclesiastical Purposes—Transfer to Local Authority—“Property connected with the affairs of the church.”—An Act of 1719, passed to authorise the rebuilding of the parish church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, provided, inter alia, for the enlargement of the churchyard and for the erection of a vestry room for the parish. Under that Act land was acquired and conveyed to trustees upon trust “for the parish and parishioners, and that the same be made part of the site of the parish church now to be rebuilt, or to be laid out as part of the churchyard.” The vestry room was erected upon part of such land. The site of the vestry room, together with vaults constructed underneath it, was duly consecrated for burial; but the room itself was not consecrated. By an Act of 1826, passed to authorize certain street improvements, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests were empowered to remove the vestry room above mentioned and to provide a new vestry room in its stead, which, by the terms of the Act, was to vest in the persons in whom the previous room would have been vested had the Act not been passed. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests removed the old vestry room accordingly, and erected a building comprising a new vestry room, together with other accommodation:—Held, that the earlier vestry room became vested in the vicar of the parish by virtue of section 4 of the Burial Grounds Act, 1816, whereby all ground consecrated as burial ground is, as from twenty years after consecration, to be considered as vested in the trustees, if any, and, if not, in the vicar. That the room remained vested in the vicar notwithstanding the provisions of section 17 of the Poor Relief Act, 1819, vesting parish property in the churchwardens and overseers. That the fact that it was used for civil purposes by the vestry both before and after the establishment of an elective vestry for the parish under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, did not affect the title to the room. And that, consequently, it remained vested in the vicar, and was not subject to the provisions of the London Government Act, 1899, transferring the property of Metropolitan vestries and of the churchwardens and overseers of Metropolitan parishes to the Metropolitan borough councils. Westminster City Council v. St. Martin-in-the Fields, 96 L. T. 491; 5 L. G. R. 500; 71 J. P. 82; 23 T. L. R. 112—Joyce, J.

Land Purchased and Sold under Compulsory Powers—Consent of Local Government Board to Payment out of Court—Sanction to Application of such Money.—Land purchased in the year 1894 by a vestry of a parish which by the London Government Act, 1899, had been converted into a Metropolitan borough, had, after notices to treat under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, served upon the borough council by undertakers for the purposes of the East London Waterworks Act, 1900, and the Metropolitan Water Board, been conveyed by the borough council, being parties under disability under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, in March, 1906, to the Water Board and the purchase money paid into Court. Section 6, sub-section 5 of the London Government Act, 1899, provides that the proceeds of sale of "any land sold" by a borough council "shall be applied in such manner as the Local Government Board sanction." The Local Government Board having been made parties to a summons taken out by the council asking for an order that the purchase money in Court might be paid out to be applied by the borough treasurer towards the purchase money of land for the purpose of widening a street in the borough,—Held, that the London Government Act, 1889, s. 6, sub-s. 5, applied only to proceeds of sale of any land sold pursuant to that section, and not to the sale of any land under any Act, and the sanction of the Local Government Board was not necessary, the Court expressing the opinion that the Board was not a proper party to the application. Islington Borough Council, In re, 97 L. T. 78; 5 L. G. R. 1203; 71 J. P. 896—Kekewich, J.

7. THAMES.

Floods—Prevention of—Banks—Prohibition of "Alteration" without Sanction of County Council—Repair without Sanction—Liability to Penalty.—Pursuant to the Metropolis Management (Thames River Prevention of Floods) Amendment Act, 1879, the predecessors of the London County Council, the appellants, ordered a bank of a certain height to be formed for the protection of lands within the limits of the Act from floods caused by the overflow of the River Thames. Part of the bank, which was upon the property of a railway company, consisted of upright piles driven into the river soil, which gave support to campshedding, consisting of horizontal planks, and was surmounted by a capping of wooden beams. The railway company, with a view to repairing that part of the bank, and without communicating with the appellants, removed the timber capping and the upper part of the campshedding in order to replace them by new material, thereby reducing the height of the bank below the height at which it was ordered to be maintained, with the result that an exceptionally high neap tide flowed over that part of the bank and did damage:—Held, that the railway company had not made an "alteration" of the bank within the meaning of section 23 of the Act, and consequently that they were not liable to the penalty imposed by virtue of that section upon a person making such an alteration without the sanction in writing of the appellants. *London County Council v. 2. MINERALS, WHAT ARE.

Clay, whether a Mineral.]—Clay, forming the surface or subsoil of land, is not a "mineral" within the meaning of sections 77, 78, or 79 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. *Glasgow (Lord Provost) v. Gravel and Sand—Quarry.]—The expression "minerals" in section 1 of the Quarries Act, 1894, includes gravel and sand taken by a railway company from land adjoining their railway for the purpose of maintaining and repairing the line. Scott v. Midland Railway and Great Northern Railway, 70 L. J. K.B. 228; [1901] 1 K.B. 317; 83 L. T. 737; 49 W. R. 318; 65 J. P. 135—D.

Sand.]—In applying the rule in Hext v. Gill (41 L. J. Ch. 761; L. R. 7 Ch. 699) to the construction of a reservation by deed of mines and minerals, the Court must take into consideration all the circumstances of the particular case, the true nature of the transaction between the parties, and their real object as evidenced by the subject-matter of the grant. On the construction of such a reservation,—Held, that sand was not a mineral. Staples v. Young, [1909] 1 Ir. R. 135—C.A.

3. MODE OF WORKING.

Presumption.]—In the case of a concealed trespass in the working of coal mines there is no presumption either that the trespasser has extracted his neighbour's coal in the usual or proper mode, or in an improper mode. The amount payable by the trespasser must be decided in accordance only with the evidence. Bull's Coal-Mining Co. v. Osborne, 68 L. J. P.C. 49; [1899] A.C. 351; 80 L. T. 430; 47 W. R. 545—P.O.

Right to Use Surface for Winning—Compensation to Surface-owner—Inclosure Act.]—An Inclosure Act enacted that "nothing in this Act contained shall prejudice lessen or defeat the right title and interest" of the owner of the royalties "of in or to the royalties incident or belonging to the said common . . . but the said" owner "his heirs and assigns and all and every person or persons claiming under or in trust for him or them . . . and all succeeding owners thereof . . . shall and may at all times for ever hereafter hold and enjoy all rents perquisites profits mines quarries waifs estrays and other royalties and jurisdictions whatever to the owner of the royalties . . . incident appendant and belonging or appertaining . . . in as full ample and beneficial manner to all intents and purposes as he or they could or might have held and enjoyed the same in case this Act had not been made, provided always . . . that in case the . . . owner or owners for the time being of the royalties . . . or any person or persons claiming under him or them shall after" the "inclosure . . . work any mine or mines lying within or under any of the . . . allotments or inclosures then and in such case such person or persons so working the same shall make reasonable satisfaction for the damage and spoil of ground occasioned thereby to the person or persons who shall be in possession of such ground at the time or times of such damage or spoil":—Held, that, on the true construction of the Act, the owner of the royalties was entitled to use the surface of any particular allotment, so far as was reasonably necessary, for the purpose of winning the minerals lying under not only that allotment but also any other allotment, and accordingly to sink pits and use existing pits and put up machinery on the particular allotment, but not to use existing engine-houses, engines, or shops which were the property of the surface-owner. Love v. Bell (52 L. J. Q.B. 290; 53 ib. 257; 10 Q.B. D. 547; 9 App. Cas. 286) considered and applied. Hayles v. Pease, 68 L. J. Ch. 222; [1899] 1 Ch. 567; 80 L. T. 220; 47 W. R. 370—Stirling, J.

Surface Owners — Injury to Ground and Buildings—Obligation to Pay Damage in Conveyance of Minerals — Existing Buildings — Substituted Buildings.]—The proprietor of a piece of ground, partly covered by buildings, in 1875 disposed the minerals, with the disponent's "whole right, title, and interest present and future therein, with full power to search for, work, win, carry away, and dispose of the said minerals," the disponees being taken bound "to make up and pay" to the disponent and his successors "all loss and damage which may be done by the operations of" the said disponees and their forefathers "to the ground before described, and the buildings existing thereon at the date hereof." In an action brought in 1901 by the proprietor of the surface, the successor of the disponent, against the owners of the minerals for damage done to the ground and buildings by the defendants' underground operations,—Held—first, that the conventional obligations by the disponees of the minerals as to damage to the surface superseded their common-law obligation; secondly, that the obligation to pay for damage done to buildings existing at the date of the disposition of the minerals did not apply to new buildings on the site of old buildings then existing, which had been removed; and thirdly, that the obligation to pay for damage to vacant ground included the extra cost necessary for the foundations of new buildings thereon. Aspden v. Seddon (44 L. J. Ch. 359; L. R. 10 Ch. 394) followed. Barr v. Baird, 6 F. 524—Ct. of Sess.

4. SUPPORT.

Letting Down Surface—Compensation.]—The owner of the surface of land does not by parting with the minerals under such land lose his common-law right of support, and in the absence of express power, or necessary implication in the conveyance, the grantee of the minerals has no right to work them so as to let down the surface. This obligation is not affected by a provision that compensation shall be payable for damage to the surface. New Sharlston Collieries Co. v. Westmortland (Earl), 82 L. T. 725—H.L. (E.)

— Power to Work.—In the year 1865 Lady W., the plaintiff's predecessor in title, sold and conveyed to J. C. & Sons, Lim., at the price of 28,500l., all the mines, veins, and seams of coal, iron, and other ores under certain hereditaments known as the S. Estate, containing 1,178 acres or thereabouts, together with full power to make, sink, and work all such pits, shafts, drifts, levels . . . and do all such other acts as might be deemed necessary or convenient for working, searching for, getting and raising the same, and to do all other works and things which might be necessary or convenient for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, doing as little damage as might be consistent with the due and proper carrying out of the said works. The deed contained a covenant by the company not to sink any shaft or drive any level which should or might weaken or damage any building on the vendor's lands, and to make satisfaction to be assessed as therein mentioned for the spoil, or damage, or injury done to, in, and upon the said lands by the machinery for getting and raising the said coal, or by the sinking or working of any pit or shaft, or otherwise by virtue of or under the powers aforesaid. The defendants in this action were lessees of J. C. & Sons, Lim. They were working on the long-wall system some of the deeper seams of coal under the S. Estate, and had caused some subsidence of the surface in places, but no substantial damage was proved. The plaintiff brought this action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from working the coal so as to cause subsidence of the surface. The defendants claimed a right to cause subsidence so long as they worked in a proper method. There was a conflict of evidence whether it was possible to work the coal at all without causing subsidence, but it was in effect admitted that it was not possible to do so at a profit:—Held, that the grant of the minerals did not expressly or by necessary implication give power to let down the surface, and the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction. Westmorland (Earl) v. New Sharlston Colliery Co., 80 L. T. 846—C.A. Affirming, 63 J. P. 198—North, J.

Subsidence—Pumping Brine—Brine Produced by Dissolution of Rock Salt in Plaintiffs' Mine—Cause of Action.—The defendants, the owners of a plot of land and of certain mines containing beds of rock salt lying beneath it, worked a brine-pumping station for the purpose of pumping up salt brine, and from time to time pumped up large quantities of such brine. The plaintiffs were the owners of an adjacent piece of land also comprising rock-salt mines, and a large portion of the brine pumped up by the defendants was produced by the dissolution of rock salt in the plaintiffs' mines. Subsidence having occurred upon the plaintiffs' land, they brought an action against the defendants claiming an injunction restraining them from abstracting salt or brine from their land and from pumping so as to cause a subsidence, and also for damages:—Held, that the defendants had not, under the circumstances of the case, committed an actionable wrong by pumping up brine formed by the dissolution of rock salt belonging to the plaintiffs. Salt Union v. Brunner, Mond & Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 55; [1906] 2 K.B. 822; 95 L. T. 647—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Injury to House—Liability of Owners and Lessees of Mine—Damage Arising from Acts of Predecessor in Title.—There is no right of action against the owner of a mine, or his lessee, in respect of damage caused by the working of the mine by a predecessor in title, although the actual subsidence which causes the damage occurs when such owner or lessee is in possession. Greenwell v. Low Beechburn Coal Co. (66 L. J. Q.B. 643; [1897] 2 Q.B. 165) considered and followed. Hall v. Norfolk (Duke), 69 L. J. Ch. 571; [1900] 2 Ch. 493; 82 L. T. 836; 48 W. R. 565; 64 J. P. 710—Kekewich, J.

Subsidence Due to Past Mining Operations—Apprehension of Future Damage—Depreciation of Selling Value—Statute of Limitations.—The surface owner has no cause of action against the owner of the subjacent stratum for the removal thereof until actual damage results from such removal. If damage is caused, the surface owner may recover for that damage as and when it occurs, and the Statute of Limitations is no bar to the recovery of damages, however long a time has elapsed since the removal. Depreciation in selling value caused by apprehension of future mischief gives no cause of action. West Leigh Colliery Co. v. Tunnickcliffe, 77 L. J. Ch. 102; [1908] A.C. 27; 98 L. T. 4—H.L. (E.)

Water-pipes, for—Arbitration—Liability to Pay Compensation.—The appellants were the owners of two water-pipes called the C pipe and the M pipe. The pipes were laid so close together that support from subjacent minerals could not be removed from one pipe without affecting the support of the other. The C pipe was laid under a local Act, and for it the appellants had a common-law right of support. The M pipe was laid under an Act which incorporated the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. The respondents, who were the owners of the subjacent minerals, gave notice under section 22 of the Waterworks Clauses Act of their intention to work the minerals under the M pipe. The appellants thereupon gave a counter-notice under the Act intimating their willingness to pay compensation under the Act "so far as you are entitled thereto;" and requiring them to leave the minerals unworked. The respondents accordingly left the minerals unworked, and the amount of compensation was referred to arbitration in the usual course under the Act. The appellants reserved all their right of support to the C pipe. The arbitrator awarded a sum as compensation for the non-working of the minerals under the M pipe, but the appellants refused to pay it, on the ground that the right of support for the C pipe necessarily involved abstention from working the minerals under the M pipe, and therefore that there was no damage to the respondents for which they were entitled to compensation:—Held (Lord Halsbury dubitante), that the appellants, having elected to put in force the procedure provided by the statute, were bound to pay the compensation fixed by the arbitrator in accordance with it, it not appearing that the arbitrator had in any way exceeded his jurisdiction. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees v. Clippens Oil Co., 87 L. T. 275—H.L. (Sc.)

Canal, for—Compulsory Purchase—“Possession” of Lands Required for Support—Vendor and Purchaser—Purchase-money—Interest.]—A railway company's special Act provided that, if the workings of any mine owner in any seam of minerals should have come within a certain distance of a canal, and such mine-owner should desire to continue (and but for the existence of the canal would have continued) to work within such distance, the company might, if it should appear that such working was likely to damage the canal, give notice to the mine-owner of their willingness to purchase and make compensation for such seam within the prescribed distance, and then the said seam should not be wrought but should be purchased by the company, the purchase-money and compensation to be settled in case of dispute by arbitration, the compensation to include (in addition to the value of the seam) such additional expenses and losses as should be incurred by the mine-owner by reason of the leaving of minerals for the support of the canal or of the continuous working of his mines being interrupted or of other kindred matters. On November 19, 1892, the railway company gave the plaintiff notice of their willingness to purchase under the above provision. The parties endeavoured to settle the amount of the purchase-money and compensation between themselves, but it was eventually referred to arbitration, and in 1901 the arbitrator awarded the sum of 16,565*l.* as the amount of purchase-money and compensation to be paid by the company, with interest:—Held, that upon the construction of the Act the plaintiff was not entitled to interest, but that upon the general principles applicable to vendor and purchaser, as laid down in Birch v. Joy (3 H.L. Cas. 565) and applied in Rhys v. Dare Valley Railway (L. R. 19 Eq. 98), he was entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from November 19, 1892, to the time of payment. Caledonian Railway v. Carmichael (L. R. 2 H.L. Sc. 56) distinguished. *Fletcher v. The provision of section 6 as to notice is merely directory, and is not a condition precedent to the validity of the Order. Jones v. Robson, 70 L. J. K.B. 419; [1901] 1 K.B. 673; 84 L. T. 230; 65 J. P. 273; 19 Cox C.C. 651—D.

The fact that a Secretary of State has made an Order with regard to an explosive is sufficient evidence that he was satisfied that it was “likely to become dangerous” within the meaning of section 6. Id.

6. MINERS.

Colliers' Wages — Agreement — Payment by Measurement or Weight.]—Where in a colliery agreement men are to “receive payment by measurement for work done by them as miners” at specified rates, the amount of wages to be paid does not depend on the quantity of mineral gotten, and section 38 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1896 (New South Wales), does not apply. [Similar to section 12 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887.] Humble v. Humphreys, 71 L. J. P.C. 18; [1902] A.C. 207; 85 L. T. 563—P.C.

Check-weigher—Interference with Workmen —Order for Removal.]—By section 13, sub-section 4 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, “If the owner, agent, or manager of the mine desires the removal of a check weigher on the ground that the check weigher has impeded or interrupted the working of the mine, or interfered with the weighing, or with any of the workmen, . . . he may complain to a Court of summary jurisdiction,” and by sub-section 5 the Court may make a summary order for the check-weigher's removal:—Held, that it is not necessary, in order to constitute an “interference” with workmen within the meaning of sub-section 4, that the acts of interference should be acts done by the defendant in his capacity of check weigher, or that they should be acts done at the mine. Sykes v. Barraclough, 73 L. J. K.B. 920; [1904] 2 K.B. 675; 91 L. T. 560; 53 W. R. 205; 68 J. P. 561; 20 T. L. R. 680—D.

— Removal of—Order of Justices.]—Justices having made an order under section 13 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, for the removal of a check-weigher, added the words: “And that from henceforth he shall cease to perform the duties of check-weigher on behalf of the persons employed in the said mine as aforesaid”:—Held, that the order was good. Semble, a check-weigher removed under the section cannot immediately be reappointed. Re v. Llewellyn; Squire, Ex parte, 96 L. T. 32; 71 J. P. 51—D.

7. OFFENCES BY MINE OWNERS.

Disused Shaft — Accumulation of Water — Public Well Vested in Local Authority — Liability of Local Authority to Fence Shaft.]—A local authority in whom is vested by statute a public well formed by an accumulation of water in the disused shaft of a mine is not liable under section 13 of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, as owner of the mine or interested in the minerals, to keep the shaft fenced for the prevention of accidents. Knuckey v. Redruth Rural Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 265; [1904] 1 K.B. 382; 90 L. T. 226; 52 W. R. 558; 68 J. P. 172; 2 L. G. R. 456; 20 T. L. R. 164—D.

Abandoned Seam—Plan of, to be sent to Secretary of State—Non-Compliance by Mine Owner—

Information by Government Inspector—Time.]—Where the owner of a coal mine has, after abandoning a seam, failed to furnish a Secretary of State with a plan shewing the boundaries of the workings up to the time of abandonment, the mine inspector's complaint or information of an offence by the mine owner under section 38 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, must, by sub-section 5 of that section, be laid within six months of the abandonment or within six months of the inspector's notice to the mine owner to comply with the requirements of the section. It is sufficient that such notice should call attention to section 38, without specifying its particular requirements. Stokes v. Hill, 70 L. J. K.B. 381; [1901] 1 K.B. 493; 84 L. T. 122; 49 W. R. 375; 65 J. P. 280; 19 Cox C.C. 206—D.

Contravention of Rule in Coal Mine—Certificated Manager—Liability of Agent.]—Section 50 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, provides that in the event of a contravention of any of the rules in the Act in a mine to which the Act applies, the agent and manager "shall each be guilty of an offence . . . unless he proves that he had taken all reasonable means by publishing and to the best of his power enforcing the said rules . . . to prevent such contravention." The agent and the certificated manager and under-manager of a mine to which the Act applied were separately charged under that section in respect of a contravention of rule 1 under section 49 of the Act, which provides for the production of an adequate amount of ventilation in a mine. It was proved that the contravention was caused by the temporary diversion of the air-pipes from one of the headings into another heading which was then being driven. There was no evidence that the agent had ever visited the mine. No evidence was brought on behalf of the agent, and the publication of the rules was not proved. The Justices found that the agent had taken all proper steps to enforce the rules by appointing a duly qualified manager and under-manager who knew the rules, and whose duty it was to carry them out; that the contravention was in no way caused by the agent omitting to enforce the rule; and that as against the agent only an occasional irregularity was proved, and not one which had been continuous. They convicted the manager and under-manager, but acquitted the agent:—Held, that the evidence justified the findings of the Justices, and that they had rightly acquitted the agent. Stokes v. Mitcheson, 71 L. J. K.B. 677; [1902] 1 K.B. 357; 86 L. T. 767; 50 W. R. 553; 66 J. P. 615; 20 Cox C.C. 254—D.

Person not Qualified Allowed to Work Engine for Raising Material—Responsibility of Manager.]—By the special rules in force under section 51 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, at a mine usually entered by means of machinery, it was provided that the engine-man should remain in charge and so near his engine as at all times to have it completely and entirely under his control; should watch and attend to the various signals for raising and lowering the cage, whether laden with persons or materials or empty; and should not allow any person to interfere with the engine while being worked:—Held, that these special rules and general rule 24 of section 49 of the Act applied when the engine was being used for raising and lowering material as well as when it was being used for raising and lowering persons, and that the colliery manager was liable under section 51 for permitting a person under twenty-two years of age to raise material, but not persons, by means of the winding engine when it was under the charge of a qualified winding-engine man. Soutar v. Clark, 7 F. (Just. Cas.) 1—Ct. of Justy.

8. REFUSE HEAPS.

Chattels—Freehold.]—Mounds of tap-cinder produced by lessees in working ironstone mines, and left in heaps on the land as refuse, are not chattels, but form part of the soil out of which they were produced. Such mounds are the property of the lessor, and may not be worked or removed by subsequent lessees of the mines, whose lease includes the coal and ironstone, and "all mines, seams, veins, beds, as well opened as unopened, of all other minerals and clay lying and being within and under the lands." Boileau v. Heath, 76 L. J. Ch. 529; [1898] 2 Ch. 301; 78 L. T. 622; 46 W. R. 602—Bigham, J.

9. SIDING ADJACENT TO MINE.

Per the LORD JUSTICE-CLERK: The whole of a private line leading from a mine to a main line of railway is not a siding adjacent to the mine within the meaning of section 75 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887. Anderson v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., 7 F. 187—Ct. of Sess.

10. MINING LEASE.

Exception or Reservation of "mines and minerals"—Substances without Commercial Value—Trusspass.]—An exception of reservation contained in a lease of "mines and minerals" under lands demised, includes (prima facie) all those substances otherwise falling under the definition of minerals which have a use and value of their own, either for the purpose of sale or for other purposes, independently of and separately from the use of the rest of the soil, whether capable or not of being worked for commercial profit. Johnstone v. Crompton, 68 L. J. Ch. 559; [1899] 2 Ch. 190; 81 L. T. 165; 47 W. R. 604—Byrne, J.

A power subsequently contained in the lease, for the lessor and those claiming under him "to drain get and dispose of the said mines and minerals at his and their free will and pleasure, nevertheless not breaking open nor doing any damage to the surface of the land . . . or the buildings thereon, and making reasonable compensation . . . for all damage thereby occasioned," does not restrict the meaning of the words "mines and minerals" to such substances as can be worked for commercial profit. Id.

Covenant to "fairly duly and honestly win work and get the whole of the said mine of coal"—Working becoming Unprofitable—Absolute Covenant to Work.]—By a mining lease the whole of a mine of coal lying under a certain area was demised for twenty-one years from the date at which the working of the coal should actually have been begun at 100*l.* an acre, and until such date at a rent of 5*l.* The lessees covenanted that they would during the term "fairly duly and honestly win work recover obtain and get the whole of the said mine vein or seam of coal demised in a proper and workmanlike manner." Operations for getting at the coal were carried on for several years, but were found too costly to be remunerative, and were abandoned:—Held, that the lessees had broken the covenant, which was an absolute covenant to win and get the coal, and were liable to damages to the lessor. Charlesworth v. Watson, 75 L. J. K.B. 137; [1906] A.C. 14; 94 L. T. 6—H.L. (E).

Rents and Royalties from—Tenants for Life—Remaindermen—Construction of Will—Direction to Accumulate.—A testator devised his residue upon trust to convert, with power to postpone conversion for twenty-one years, and with a direction that the surplus income of the unconverted estate during the twenty-one years and all accumulations thereof should go in augmentation of capital. The residue was settled on trusts for tenants for life and remaindermen. The trustees, under powers in the will, granted a mining lease, and retained the leased property unconverted for more than twenty-one years:—Held, that the rents and royalties received under the mining lease during the twenty-one years ought to be invested, and that the income therefrom ought to be invested and accumulated. Held also, that after the twenty-one years the tenants for life of settled shares in the residue were entitled to receive out of the rents and royalties such an annual sum as, in the opinion of the Court, would under all the circumstances of the case be a fair equivalent for the annual income that would have resulted if the estate had been converted. The rule laid down in Meyer v. Simonson (5 De G. & Sm. 723) and Brown v. Gellatly (L. R. 2 Ch. 751) approved. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 69 L. J. P.C. 13; [1900] A.C. 163; 81 L. T. 682—P.C.

Working and Winning—Coal under Reservoir—Prohibition on Working—Compensation—Lessor and Lessee—Right to make up Short Workings—Right to Lessor's Compensation Money.—A corporation acquired land under their special Act (which incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847), and constructed thereon a reservoir. The subsoil remained part of a settled estate, the tenant for life of which leased the minerals, including those under the reservoir, to a colliery company, under a power which entitled the immediate reversioner to the whole of the rents and payments reserved. The lease reserved an acreage rent and a minimum rent, and had a provision that if the coal gotten in any year, calculated at the acreage rent, should fall short of the minimum rent, the lessees might make up the deficiency by over-workings in any subsequent year without paying more than the minimum rent. On the lessees proposing to work the coal under the reservoir the corporation refused permission, and compensation both of lessor and leasees was fixed by arbitration on the basis that the coal in question would in the ordinary course have been worked out in the five years ending December 31, 1908. The lessees' share was paid to them, the lessor's being paid into Court. At the date of the award the amount of short workings which the lessees were entitled to make up represented a sum far in excess of the lessor's compensation. They therefore claimed the fund in Court, and agreed with the tenant for life that he should have credit for it in the account for short workings:—Held, that, but for the provision for short workings, the tenant for life would have been entitled to one-fifth of the fund in each of the five years; but that in view of that provision, which bound the remainderman as well as the tenant for life, the lessees were entitled contingently on their remaining in possession under the lease, and that the fund must be paid out to them in periodical instalments on affidavit that they still were in possession. Barrington, In re; Gamlen v. Lyon (56 L. J. Ch. 175; 33 Ch. D. 523), not followed. Dictum of CHITTY, J., in Robinson's Settlement Trusts, In re (60 L. J. Ch. 776, 777; [1891] 3 Ch. 129, 133), followed. Fullerton's Will, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 552; [1906] 2 Ch. 138; 94 L. T. 667—Swinfen Eady, J. And see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

11. RESERVATION OF MINERALS ON SALE.

Sale of Land—Sandstone Lying under Surface—Right of Purchaser to Quarry Stone.—A deed of conveyance upon the sale of a plot of land conveyed the land to the purchaser "except all coal, ironstone, and other mines and minerals (including fireclay) lying or being within or under the lands hereby assured," and it reserved unto the owners of the excepted mines and minerals for the time being full liberty and power to work and get the coal, ironstone, and other minerals by underground working, and to use or allow lessees to use so much of the clay lying within or under the land as might be necessary for making bricks for colliery purposes; and the conveyance of another plot of the land excepted "all mines, beds, and quarries of coal, ironstone, and other minerals (including fireclay)" lying under the land. The purchaser had opened quarries for quarrying and getting certain sandstone as building stone which lay at a considerable depth below the surface:—Held, that the sandstone was included within the reservation of the minerals, and that the purchaser was not entitled to work and get the stone without the leave and licence of the vendors. In such cases the conditions or particulars of sale cannot be referred to for the purpose of explaining the subsequent deed of conveyance. Greville v. Hemingway, 87 L. T. 443—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Inclosure—Allotment of Surface to Commoners—Support—Subsidence—Compensation.—In all cases where there has been a severance in title between the upper and lower strata of lands the surface owner is entitled to support for his property, without interference or disturbance by or in consequence of mining operations, unless such interference or disturbance be authorised by the instrument of severance either by express terms or by necessary implication. The presence of a provision for compensation which is obviously inadequate or plainly inappropriate to subsidence is cogent evidence that subsidence was not contemplated.

And a compensation clause which is capable of being satisfied by reference to acts done on the surface, though it may be wide enough to cover damage done by withdrawal of support, will be confined to damage done on the surface. Butterknowle Colliery Co. v. Bishop Auckland Industrial Co-operative Society, 75 L. J. Ch. 541; [1906] A.C. 305; 94 L. T. 795; 70 J. P. 361; 22 T. L. R. 516—H.L. (E.)

By an Inclosure Act the lords of a manor were authorised to work and win the mines and quarries under the respective allotments made under the Act "without making or paying any satisfaction for so doing," the damage caused by such working to be borne and distributed among the holders of the allotments in manner prescribed:—Held, that damage caused by the withdrawal of support was not included in such exemption. LORD DAVEY'S judgment in New Sharlston Collieries v. Westmorland (Earl) (73 L. J. Ch. 338n.; [1904] 2 Ch. 443n.) explained by LORD DAVEY. Conssett Waterworks Co. v. Ritson (64 L. J. Ch. 293n.; 22 Q.B. D. 318, 702) commented on. Ib.

Grant of Lands—Title—"Except and reserved all mines and veins of coal"—Property in Strata Underlying Coal—Carriage of "foreign coal."—By deeds of lease and release in and prior to 1768, lands of a manor were granted to the plaintiff's predecessors "other than and except and always reserved" unto the grantors (the defendants' predecessors), their heirs and assigns, "all mines and veins of coal" in and under the lands, with liberty for the grantors to mine and erect works necessary for carrying away the coal:—Held, that "mines and veins of coal" included not only the layers of coal, but also part of the strata underlying the coal, and that the property in them was excepted from the grant and remained in the grantors. Hamilton (Duke) v. Graham (L. R. 2 H.L. (Sc.) 166) and Eardley v. Granville (Earl) (45 L. J. Ch. 669; 3 Ch. D. 826) followed. Ramsay v. Blair (1 App. Cas. 701) distinguished. Batten-Poole v. Kennedy, 76 L. J. Ch. 162; [1907] 1 Ch. 256—Warrington, J.

Held, also, upon the facts, that a road which the defendants were using for the carriage of "foreign coal" was within that part of the underlying strata which was comprised in the exception. Ib.

12. COMPULSORY TAKING.

Compensation for Unworked Coal—Value at Date of Notice to Treat—Subsequent Rise in Value—Basis of Assessment.—In assessing the value of property taken under the compulsory powers of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, facts affecting the value of the property in existence at the date of the notice to treat may, but facts occurring after that date cannot, be taken into account. Therefore in an arbitration under section 23 of the Act of 1845 to determine the amount of compensation payable in respect of certain coal required to be left unworked by a notice to treat under section 18 of the Act,—Held, that the arbitrator could not take into account a rise in the market price of coal which took place after the date of the notice to treat. Bullfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries and Pontypridd Waterworks Co., In re, 71 L. J. K.B. 613; [1902] 2 K.B. 135; 87 L. T. 291; 50 W. R. 627—C.A.

13. MINERALS UNDER ADJOINING LAND.

Notice to Mine-owner to Leave Minerals Unworked—Subsequent Rise in Value of Minerals—Compensation—Basis of Assessment.—Under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, where notice is served by a water company on a mine-owner to leave a portion of his mines unworked, full compensation is to be made and all expenses and losses to be recouped to the mine-owner. Where, therefore, there has been a rise in the value of the minerals subsequent to the notice, and it is shewn that but for the notice the mine-owner would have obtained the benefit of the rise in value, consideration must be had in the assessment of compensation of such rise in value. Bullfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 805; [1903] A.C. 426; 89 L. T. 280; 52 W. R. 193—H.L. (E.)

Wrongful Working—No Title by Statute of Limitations.—Where a mine-owner wrongfully works an adjoining seam of coal for more than twelve years before action brought, he acquires no title to such seam under the Statute of Limitations. Ashton v. Stock (6 Ch. D. 719) followed. Thompson v. Hickman, 76 L. J. Ch. 254; [1907] 1 Ch. 550; 90 L. T. 454; 23 L. T. R. 311—Neville, J.

14. MINERALS UNDER OR NEAR RAILWAY.

Right of Railway Company to Prevent Mine-owner Working Mines—Interest on Compensation-moneys.—An arbitrator, in settling the amount of compensation in respect of minerals left unworked under or near a railway in consequence of a notice from the railway company to the mine-owner under section 78 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, has no jurisdiction to award that interest shall be paid on the sum awarded for compensation from the date of the notice to the date of the award. Caledonian Railway v. Carmichael (L. R. 2 H.L. (Sc. 56) and Bullfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co. (72 L. J. K.B. 805; [1903] A.C. 426) followed. Fletcher v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway (71 L. J. Ch. 590; [1902] 1 Ch. 901) distinguished. Richard v. Great Western Railway, 74 L. J. K.B. 9; [1905] 1 K.B. 68; 91 L. T. 724; 53 W. R. 83; 69 J. P. 17; 21 T. L. R. 37—C.A.

Lessee of more Coal than can be Gotten during Lease—Measure of Compensation—Lessee and Reversioner—Compensation "for such mines."—By section 78 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, if the owner, lessee, or occupier of mines lying within the prescribed distance from a railway is desirous of working the same he is to give notice to the railway company, and, if the railway company is willing to make compensation for such mines, the amount of such compensation is to be settled as therein provided. A colliery company were lessees and occupiers of certain coal mines within the prescribed distance within the meaning of section 78 of the Act of 1845. A railway company gave notice to the colliery company that they required certain specified coal to be left unworked. The colliery company could not within the term of their lease have worked out the whole of the demised coal. On receiving the railway company's notice they ceased working the specified coal. If they had been able to work the specified coal they would have realised a sum of 730*l.*. They continued working coal other than the specified coal and realised the sum of 630*l.*:—Held, that the measure of compensation to which they were entitled was 730*l.*, the amount which they would have realised if they had been able to work the specified coal, and not the difference between that sum and the amount which they realised by working coal other than the specified coal. Joicey v. North-Eastern Railway, 75 L. J. K.B. 57; [1906] 1 K.B. 195; 94 L. T. 143; 54 W.R. 332; 70 J.P. 75; 22 T. L. R. 105—Bigham, J. Reversed, 23 T. L. R. 163—C.A.

If the specified coal had been worked out, the owners of the reversion expectant on the termination of the lease would have received for royalties the sum of 155*l.*. The loss in value of the reversion owing to the notice of the railway company was 310*l.*:—Held, that the owners of the reversion were entitled to 155*l.*, and not to 310*l.*, as compensation. Bullfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co. (72 L. J. K.B. 805; [1903] A.C. 426) followed. Ib.

Owner desiring to Work Minerals—Purchase and Compensation—Act under which Land Purchased Repealed by Later Act—Saving by Later Act of Rights Accrued under Earlier Act.—When the surface of land has been sold under the provisions of a special Act which lays down certain terms with respect to the minerals and the purchase thereof, and that Act is repealed by a later statute which enacts a different set of conditions less favourable to the surface-owner in respect of the minerals, but also provides that the repeal is not to annul or prejudice any purchase, sale, conveyance, or the like made or executed under the earlier statute, the rights and obligations of the parties with respect to the sale of the minerals or compensation for the same are regulated by the earlier and not by the later legislation. Reg. v. London and North-Western Railway (68 L. J. Q.B. 685; [1899] 1 Q.B. 921) overruled. London and North-Western Railway v. Walker, 72 L. J. K.B. 578; [1903] A.C. 280; 83 L. T. 705—H.L. (E.)

Right of Railway Company to Call for Conveyance of Minerals.—A railway company which has given notice to a landowner under section 71 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Act, 1845 (corresponding to section 78 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845), requiring him to leave unworked certain minerals lying under or near the railway line, is not entitled, on payment to the landowner of the compensation due to him for leaving the minerals unworked, to demand a conveyance of these minerals. Hamilton's (Duke) Trustees v. Caledonian Railway, 7 F. 847—Ct. of Sess.

Purchase by Railway—Expiration of Powers.]

—A railway company can purchase minerals after the expiration of its statutory powers to purchase if such purchase is reasonably incident to its business. Thompson v. Hickman, 76 L. J. Ch. 254; [1907] 1 Ch. 550; 96 L. T. 454; 23 T. L. R. 311—Neville, J.

Compensation by Railway Company for not Working Mines—Measure of Compensation.—The compensation to be paid to the lessee or worker of a mine by a railway company for the mineral left unworked under the line for the support of the line is the full net value of the mineral so reserved, whether or not there are other parts of the mine which can be worked in substitution for that which is placed under embargo. The liability of the railway is unaffected by the methods which the mine owner may adopt in the conduct of his own business. Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (sub nom. Joicey & Co. v. North-Eastern Railway) (76 L. J. K.B. 253; [1907] 1 K.B. 402) reversed, and that of BIGHAM, J. (75 L. J. K.B. 57; [1906] 1 K.B. 195), restored. Eden v. North-Eastern Railway, 76 L. J. K.B. 940; [1907] A.C. 400; 97 L. T. 254; 71 J. P. 450; 23 T. L. R. 685—H.L. (E.)

Notice to Treat—Compensation.—See Rugby Portland Cement Co. v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 72 J. P. 116—Bray, J.

15. RENT AND ROYALTIES.

“Opened” Mines—Income or Capital.—The rents and royalties of “opened” mines—which mines are the subject of a settlement in the form of a trust for sale and for division, after the death of the tenant for life, according to the exercise of a power of appointment—are to be treated as income and not capital, and the term “opened mines” is not confined to mines worked for the first time by the settlor or testator. Greville-Nugent v. Mackenzie, 69 L. J. P.C. 1; [1900] A.C. 83; 81 L. T. 793—H.L. (Sc.). And see SETTLED LAND ACTS and SETTLEMENT.

16. TENANT FOR LIFE.

Implied Authority to Commit Waste—Settlement—Open Mines.—A tenant for life entitled to work mines may be properly described as not impeachable for waste in respect of the minerals got from such mines, whether the power arise from the terms of the settlement or from the circumstance that the mines are open. Chaytor's Settlement, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 837; [1900] 2 Ch. 804; 49 W. R. 125—Stirling, J.

Mines Open or Unopen.—The statement of the law in Elias v. Snowdon Slate Quarries Co. (48 L. J. Ch. 811; 4 App. Cas. 454) to the effect that when a mine is once open, the sinking a new pit on the same vein is not necessarily the opening of a new mine, is inapplicable to a case where two portions of a settled estate are separated from each other by a strip of land belonging to a different owner, although one continuous seam of coal runs under the whole. If, therefore, the seam of coal has been worked under one portion of the settled estate in the lifetime of the settlor, but not under the other, the unworked portion cannot be held an “open mine," even when the tenant for life has acquired the coal under the intervening strip. The Court, in sanctioning a lease of the unworked portion, will consequently direct that three-fourths of the rent must be set aside and invested, according to section 4, sub-section iii. of the Settled Estates Act, 1877. Maynard's Settled Estate, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 609; [1899] 2 Ch. 347; 81 L. T. 163; 48 W. R. 60; 63 J. P. 552—Kekewich, J.

MISTAKE.

Payment by Mistake—Right to Recover.—The appellants and B. & Co., who were both bankers, financed K., a merchant, making advances against goods. K. sold a parcel of goods to the respondents, and directed them to remit the price to B. & Co., who had an equitable mortgage on these goods. The respondents by mistake, but acting in good faith, paid the money to the appellants, who received it in good faith, believing it to represent the price of goods on which they had made advances to K. A jury found, in answer to a specific question, that they had not been led to alter their position for the worse as regarded K.:—Held, that the respondents were entitled to recover the money from the appellants as being money paid under a mistake of fact. Kleinwort v. Dunlop Rubber Co., 97 L. T. 263; 23 T. L. R. 696—H. L. (E.)

Money Paid to Agent—Remittance to Banker—Credit given by Banker to Customer—Remittance made by Mistake—Recovery Back from Banker by Payer.—K. was a merchant, financed by two banks. These banks were each in the habit of advancing money to K., on the security of the shipping documents of goods bought by him. When he sold such goods he was in the habit of obtaining from the banks the necessary documents to enable him to deliver the goods, and at the same time assigning to them the purchase-money. On receipt of the purchase-money from the purchasers of the goods, the banks would credit the amount to K.'s account. The plaintiffs bought several parcels of goods from K., and received from him notice of the assignment of the purchase-money. The purchase-money of some of the parcels was assigned to one bank, and of the other parcels to the other bank. Through a mistake of their clerk the whole of the money payable by the plaintiffs in respect of all these parcels of goods was paid over by them to only one of the banks, with instructions to credit K.'s account with the amount. This was accordingly done by the bank under the belief that the whole of the money was rightly paid over to them. On discovering the over-payment, the plaintiffs asked the bank to return it. The bank refused. In an action to recover back the money,—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the return from the bank of the money that had been thus paid them by mistake. Continental Caoutchouc and Gutta-percha Co. v. Kleinwort, 90 L. T. 474; 52 W. R. 489; 9 Com. Cas. 240; 20 T. L. R. 403—C.A.

Banker and Customer—Money Paid under Mistake of Fact.—The defendants, who were foreign bankers, were in the habit of making advances to K., who then purchased goods which the defendants held as security; when K. found a purchaser he assigned the right to receive the purchase-money to the defendants, who accordingly released the goods. K. also carried on the same system with B. & Co. The plaintiffs bought from K. two parcels, the one released by the defendants and the other by B. & Co. K. instructed the plaintiffs to pay the defendants and B. & Co. respectively for the goods so purchased. By mistake the plaintiffs paid both sums to the defendants, who credited K.'s account, notifying K. of their having done so. The defendants, acting bona fide, continued to make advances to K., who knew of the mistake, but did not disclose it, and afterwards became bankrupt. The plaintiffs sought to recover from the defendants the sum which should have been paid to B. & Co. as money paid under mistake of fact:—Held, that the defendants were holding the money to the use of the plaintiffs, and that as the defendants were not prejudiced by such payment the sum was recoverable as money paid under mistake of fact. Continental Caoutchouc and Gutta-percha Co. v. Kleinwort, 51 W. R. 541; 8 Com. Cas. 277—Bigham, J.

Money Paid under Compulsion of Legal Process—Erroneously Giving Credit in Writ—Settlement of Action—Action for Recovery of Money Wrongly Credited.—The rule of law that money paid under compulsion of legal process cannot be recovered back does not apply where there has been an absence of bona fides on the part of the defendant; but the rule is applicable to a case where the plaintiff, although he has paid no money to the defendant, has by mistake given him credit for a payment on account which has not in fact been made. Ward v. Wallis, 69 L. J. Q.B. 423; [1900] 1 Q.B. 675; 82 L. T. 261—Kennedy, J.

Representation by Insurance Agent—Illegality of Insurance—Right to Recover Back Premiums Paid.—Where a person unskilled in insurance law has been induced by the bona fide representation of the agent of an insurance company that the policy will be valid to effect a policy on the life of a relation which is illegal and void for want of insurable interest, he is entitled to recover back from the company the premiums paid by him upon the policy. Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 638; [1903] 2 K.B. 92; 89 L. T. 94—D.

Rates—Unequal Tolls—Money Paid to Collecting Agent—Liability of Agent.—The plaintiff, a coal merchant, entered into an agreement with the Midland Railway for the conveyance by them of certain coke breeze from Birmingham to a station on the defendants' railway at a certain through rate. From time to time coke breeze was delivered to the plaintiff at the station in question, and payments at the agreed rate were made by him to the defendants as collecting agents for the Midland Railway. The money so paid was paid over by the defendants to that company or settled for in account. The plaintiff subsequently discovered that in the Midland Railway's book of rates there was a lower through rate between the same stations for coke breeze for fuel purposes, and he thereupon brought an action against the defendants to recover the amount of the over-charges, on the ground that the coke breeze delivered to him was used for fuel. The County Court Judge found that the coke breeze was not used for fuel, but held that the charging of two different rates for the carriage of the same article between the same stations was a breach of section 90 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, and gave judgment for the plaintiff:—Held, that, under the circumstances, there had been no breach of section 90, as, in order to establish a contravention of that section, it would have been necessary for the plaintiff to shew that some other persons had in fact been charged at the lower rate.—Held, further, that in any case the action was not maintainable against the defendants, who had received the money merely as agents for the Midland Railway, and had paid it over to them, or settled for it in account, without notice of any over-charge, and that it made no difference that, under the arrangement between the two companies, the defendants were entitled to retain a portion of the money for their own use. Taylor v. Metropolitan Railway, 75 L. J. K.B. 735; [1906] 2 K.B. 55; 95 L. T. 149; 22 T. L. R. 479—D.

Water Rates—Over-payment.—The owner of a house situate on the estate of the see of the Bishop of London, at Paddington, and entitled accordingly, under section 4 of the Grand Junction Waterworks Act, 1856, to a supply of water at a rate 15 per cent. less than owners of houses not on that estate, had for many years past paid to the water company water rates on the higher scale in ignorance that his house stood on the estate, and that he was therefore entitled to the deduction:—Held, that these over-payments were made under a mistake of fact, and could be recovered back from the water company. Meadows v. Grand Junction Waterworks, 3 L. G. R. 910; 69 J. P. 255; 21 T. L. R. 538—D.

1. EXECUTION OF MORTGAGE.

Mortgagee Solicitor — Receipt Clause — Estoppel — No Money Advanced — Sub-mortgage — Mortgagee Absconding.—On February 3, 1906, the plaintiff mortgaged certain reversionary interests to B., his solicitor, for 2,500*l.*, which sum B. arranged to lend to another client of his at a higher rate of interest than the rate he charged the plaintiff. This mortgage of February 3, 1906, contained the usual receipt clause acknowledging that the sum of 2,500*l.* had that day been advanced to the mortgagor, the plaintiff. In fact no money was advanced by B. to the plaintiff. B. then informed the plaintiff that his other client had executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff to secure the 2,500*l.*, and that he would hold the deeds on his behalf as his solicitor. No such mortgage was in fact ever executed. On April 24, 1906, B. sub-mortgaged the mortgage of February 3, 1906, to the defendant, who knew that B. was the solicitor of the plaintiff, the mortgagor. On this sub-mortgage and a collateral security B. obtained 1,200*l.* from the defendant. The collateral security turned out to be a forgery and of no value, and in June, 1906, B. absconded. The defendant, when he took the sub-mortgage of April 24, 1906, did not enquire as to the state of account between the mortgagor, the plaintiff, and B., the mortgagee, and no notice was given to the plaintiff of this sub-mortgage, which the plaintiff first heard of after B. had absconded. On a claim that the mortgage of February 3, 1906, was void as against the plaintiff on the ground that it was obtained from him by fraudulent misrepresentation, and that no money was in fact advanced on it, and that the sub-mortgage was also void as against him, and for a re-assignment of the reversionary interests by the defendant,—Held, that it would be unduly extending the dictum of constructive notice if the claim of the plaintiff were allowed to be maintained; and that the receipt clause contained in the mortgage deed operated as an estoppel. Powell v. Browne, 97 L. T. 854; 24 T. L. R. 71—C.A. Reversing Joyce, J., 97 L. T. 167; 23 T. L. R. 604.

2. PROPERTY COMPRISED IN SECURITY.

Public-house—Goodwill.—A public-house, of which a testator was owner in fee (subject to a lease), was mortgaged by him to secure 1,500*l.*

The testator at this time was occupying the house, as underlessee, and carrying on there the business of a licensed victualler, but the goodwill of the business was not mentioned in the mortgage. The lease was afterwards surrendered to the testator, and he continued to carry on the business of the house until his death. After the death of the tenant for life under the testator's will, the house and the goodwill were sold by the trustee of the will (who had previously paid off the mortgage debt) for a sum, of which 2,617*l.* was ascertained to be the value of the goodwill:—Held, that the goodwill did not pass to the mortgagee by the mortgage deed; and that, as he had never been in possession, he had not acquired the goodwill de facto. The legatee of the goodwill was therefore entitled to receive the 2,617*l.* without any deduction therefrom on account of the mortgage debt. Bennett, In re; Clarke v. White, 68 L. J. Ch. 104; [1899] 1 Ch. 316; 47 W. R. 406—North, J.

Fixtures—No Specific Mention of Fixtures on Property Mortgaged—Bills of Sale Acts.—C. took a lease of building ground on which he erected a shop, in which he carried on the trade of a chemist and druggist, having fitted up the premises with suitable trade fixtures, all of which were admittedly capable of being detached without injury to the freehold. After the annexation of the fixtures C. mortgaged the premises. In the mortgage the parcels were simply described as "building ground," with boundaries, &c., as in the lease, omitting any specific mention of the fixtures:—Held, that the fixtures passed to the mortgagees, and further, that the mortgage did not come within the provisions of the Bills of Sale Acts. Calvert, In re, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 501—Boyd, J. And see FIXTURES.

Compensation for Loss of Licence under Licensing Act, 1904—Apportionment of Compensation—Possession.—By a debenture-holders' trust deed certain leasehold licensed premises belonging to a brewery company were demised to the trustees for the unexpired term, excepting the last day, of which there was the usual trust for the benefit of the trustees. The deed provided that the trustees should permit the company to hold the premises thereby specifically mortgaged until the security should become enforceable, in which event they might enter upon and take possession of the mortgaged premises and receive the rents and profits thereof; and, by clause 23, that the proceeds of any sale prior to entry, as provided in the deed, should be received by the trustees and applied in various specified works appropriate to licensed premises. The licensing authority, having refused to renew the licence, awarded a sum of 1,133*l.* for compensation to the company as leaseholders, besides other sums to the freeholder and the licence-holder. The trustees for the mortgagees, notwithstanding that their security had not become enforceable, claimed to be entitled to the sum of 1,133*l.*:—Held, that the mortgagees were entitled to receive the balance of the moneys after payment of the costs, but, under present circumstances, were not entitled to apply it towards the payment off of their debt, as the income produced by the investment of it should be paid to the brewery company, being still in possession of the premises. Law Guarantee and Trust Society v. Mitcham and Tied Public-house—Covenant to take Beer—Successors in Business—Person Claiming under Mortgagor.—The benefit of a covenant, contained in a brewer's mortgage, to take beer from him only, will go to his successors in business, if that intention appears from the deed, though the words "successors and assigns" are not used. John Brothers Abergarw Brewery Co. v. Holmes, 69 L. J. Ch. 149; [1900] 1 Ch. 188; 81 L. T. 771; 48 W. R. 236; 64 J. P. 153—Kekewich, J.

The burden of such a covenant attaches to every person claiming under the original mortgagor who has notice of the covenant, whether legally an assign or not. Ib. And see col. 1226.

Deeds Deposited—Injury to—Liability of Mortgagee.—There is no implied covenant on the part of a mortgagee to take reasonable care of the title-deeds during the continuance of the security. Gilligan and Nugent v. National Bank, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 513—Q.B. D.

Per BARTON, J.—Brown v. Sewell (11 Hare, 49) and other cases in which indemnity and compensation have been decreed to mortgagors for loss of title-deeds by mortgagees are not founded on the hypothesis of an implied covenant by the mortgagee to take care of the deeds, but are referable to the ancient jurisdiction of Courts of equity to give relief in cases of accident. Ib.

3. CLOGGING THE EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

"Once a mortgage always a mortgage"—Fetter on Equity of Redemption—Free Public-house—Tying Covenant to Continue after Redemption.—A covenant, purporting to bind the land, in the mortgage of a leasehold public-house, that the mortgagor will not during the continuance of the term, whether or not any principal money or interest is still owing on the security, sell on the mortgaged premises any malt liquors, except such as shall have been purchased from the mortgagees, is invalid as a clog on the equity of redemption, in so far as it purports to tie the public-house after payment of principal moneys and interest due on the security. Santley v. Wilde (63 L. J. Ch. 681; [1899] 2 Ch. 474) disapproved by LORD MACNAGHTEN and LORD DAVEY. Noakes v. Rice, 71 L. J. Ch. 139; [1902] A.C. 24; 86 L. T. 62; 50 W. R. 305; 66 J. P. 147—H.L. (E.)

Collateral Agreement by Mortgagor to Sell Land through Mortgagee or Pay Commission to Him.—Where land has been mortgaged as a security for money, on payment off, the land and its owner in the use of it must be as free as if it had never been mortgaged, and provisions in the mortgage-deed or collateral thereto inconsistent with this right cannot be enforced. Browne v. Ryan, [1901] 2 Ir. R. 653—C.A.

The defendant mortgaged his land to the plaintiff to secure 200*l.* and interest. As part of the same transaction the defendant agreed by an independent deed to sell his land within twelve months, and to give the sale thereof to the plaintiff, who was an auctioneer, and that if the said land were sold otherwise than through the plaintiff the defendant would pay the plaintiff 5 per cent. on the purchase-money. The defendant subsequently sold the land through another auctioneer for 1,250*l.* In an action for the 62*l.* 10*s.*,—Held, that the collateral advantage stipulated for by the mortgagee in the independent deed placed such a fetter on the equity of redemption that it vitiated the agreement. Ib.

Option to Mortgagee to Purchase at any Time within Twelve Months—Mortgage by Company of Debenture Stock—Security for Loan.—A stipulation in a mortgage of debenture stock, the advance being repayable at thirty days' notice on either side, that the mortgagee is to have "the option of purchasing the whole or any part of such stock at 40 per cent. at any time within 12 months" held to be void upon the rule that a mortgagee is not allowed at the time of the loan to enter into a contract for the purchase of the mortgaged property. Samuel v. Jarralt Timber and Wood-paving Corporation, 73 L. J. Ch. 526; [1904] A.C. 323; 90 L. T. 731; 52 W. R. 673; 11 Manson, 276; 20 T. L. R. 586—H.L. (E.)

Collateral Advantage to Mortgagee—Clogging Equity of Redemption.—There is no general and absolute rule that a mortgagor and mortgagee cannot at the time of entering into the mortgage transaction enter into some other agreement from which the mortgagee gets some advantage. So long as such collateral agreement is not unconscionable or oppressive, and so long as it does not place any absolute fetter on the right of the mortgagor to redeem on payment of principal, interest, and costs, it is not invalid. Jennings v. Ward (2 Vern. 520) and Edwards' Estate, In re (11 Ir. Ch. Rep. 367) discussed. Biggs v. Hoddinott, 67 L. J. Ch. 540; [1893] 2 Ch. 307; 79 L. T. 201; 47 W. R. 84—C.A.

A mortgage of a licensed house by a publican to a brewer provided that the loan should continue for a period of five years, and contained a covenant that the mortgagor should not during the continuance of the security sell on the premises beer other than that supplied by the mortgagee.—Held, that the covenant was valid, and could be enforced by injunction. Ib.

— Fetter on Redemption—Invalidity of Covenant.—A mortgage is a conveyance of property as a security for the payment of a debt, or the discharge of some other obligation, and the security is redeemable on such payment or discharge, and any provision inserted to prevent such redemption is a fetter on the equity of redemption, and is void; but the amount or nature of the debt or obligation is not a fetter. Santley v. Wilde, 63 L. J. Ch. 681; [1899] 2 Ch. 474; 81 L. T. 393; 48 W. R. 90—C.A.

A mortgagee may in the mortgage stipulate for a collateral advantage for himself, provided that the bargain is not unconscionable or oppressive; and there is no presumption that where a mortgagee has stipulated for such a collateral advantage it has been obtained by pressure. Ib.

A covenant in a mortgage of a term of years that the mortgagor will, during the residue of the term, notwithstanding that all principal moneys and interest may have been paid, pay to the mortgagee one-third of the net profit rental derived from any underlease or tenancy affecting the same, with provisions for continuing the relative positions of mortgagee and mortgagor for the purpose of securing the said share of rental, is not void as clogging the equity of redemption. Biggs v. Hoddimott (67 L. J. Ch. 540; [1898] 2 Ch. 307) followed. Ib.

Option of Purchase by Mortgagee within Term—Clog on Equity of Redemption—Independent Agreement.—By an agreement dated April 23, 1896, the respondents agreed to lend the appellant on first mortgage of a ship a sum not exceeding 5,000*l.* The money was not to be called in or the mortgage redeemed before the expiration of two years, within which time the respondents were to have the option of entering into partnership with the appellant, on the terms of transferring the ship free of the mortgage to the partnership. The option was not exercised within the two years, and by an agreement dated July 9, 1898, reciting the previous transactions, the respondents were to be at liberty within five years to enter into partnership with the appellant on the terms therein mentioned, being in effect the terms specified in the instrument of April 23, 1896. The respondents claimed to exercise their option, but the appellant declined to admit them into partnership, on the ground that the agreement of July 9, 1898, forming part of a mortgage transaction, was not binding upon him because it created a clog on the equity of redemption. The respondents brought an action for specific performance or damages:—Held, that the agreement of July 9, 1898, was an entirely separate transaction from the mortgage. Reeve v. Lisle, 71 L. J. Ch. 768; [1902] A.C. 461; 87 L. T. 308; 51 W. R. 576—H.L. (E.)

Held, by BUCKLEY, J. (but doubted by the COURT OF APPEAL), that, treating the agreement of July 9 as part of the mortgage transactions, still, inasmuch as the option of purchase was exercised before the date for redemption at law, and therefore before any equity of redemption arose, the doctrine of clogging the equity of redemption had no application. Ib.

Stipulation that Lender should "always hereafter" Act as Broker to a Company—Collateral Advantage to Lender—Clogging Equity of Redemption.—The defendant, in consideration of an advance made to him by the plaintiff, agreed in writing, inter alia, to transfer certain shares in a company, in which he was a shareholder, to a nominee of the plaintiff; and the defendant further agreed as a shareholder in such company and in every other capacity to use his (the defendant's) best endeavours to secure that the plaintiff or any firm of brokers of which he for the time being should be a partner "shall always hereafter have the sale of all the company's teas as broker"; and in the event of any of the company's teas being sold otherwise than through the plaintiff or his firm, the defendant personally agreed to pay to the plaintiff or his firm the amount of the commission which the plaintiff or his firm would have earned if the teas had been sold through him or his firm. The plaintiff having called in the loan, the defendant repaid it and transferred the shares in the company into his own name. The defendant immediately afterwards transferred them by way of security for a fresh loan, and the transferee having attempted to oust the plaintiff from his position as broker to the company, the plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for breach of the agreement:—Held, that, on the true construction of the agreement, the stipulations relating to the plaintiff occupying the position of broker were not merely limited to the period during which the security might remain in force; and that such stipulations were not of such a character as to clog the equity of redemption. Carritt v. Bradley, 70 L. J. K.B. 832; [1901] 2 K.B. 550; 85 L. T. 197; 49 W.R. 593—C.A. On appeal to H.L., held that an agreement in a mortgage of shares under which the mortgagor undertakes to use his best endeavours to secure that the mortgagee shall "always hereafter" be employed as broker for the company, is invalid as constituting a clog on the equity of redemption (LORD SHAND and LORD LINDLEY dissenting). Santley v. Wilde (68 L. J. Ch. 681; [1899] 2 Ch. 474) discussed. Bradley v. Carritt, 72 L. J. K.B. 471; [1903] A.C. 253; 88 L. T. 633; 51 W. R. 636—H.L. (E.)

Independent Agreement—Provision for Increase of Interest on Mortgage Debt—Collection of Rents by Mortgagee—Agency Fees.—M. being previously indebted to T. in the sum of 1,500*l.* secured by mortgages on land, with interest at 5 per cent., in 1878, in consideration of a further advance of 300*l.*, gave his bond, and executed a collateral agreement by which he appointed T. his agent over the mortgaged lands, and empowered him to charge agency fees; and agreed to pay 6 per cent. interest on the whole 1,800*l.* due by him to T., being 1 per cent. additional on the 1,500*l.* secured by the mortgages. This additional 1 per cent. rate of interest was not by the agreement charged on the lands:—Held, that the agreement of 1878 being a new contract for a fresh consideration, had not the effect of imposing a fetter on the equity of redemption by reason of increasing the rate of interest payable or by reason of making the mortgagee the agent of the mortgagor to receive the rents, and empowering him to charge agency fees. Maxwell v. Tipping, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 498—M.R.

4. EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

Validity—Charge of Real and Personal Estate—Vagueness—Public Policy.—A charge upon the whole of a mortgagor's real and personal estate is a valid equitable charge upon all the mortgagor's property existing at its date; and the mortgagee under such a charge has a lien upon all such property in preference to general creditors. Kelcey, In re; Tyson v. Kelcey, 68 L. J. Ch. 742; [1899] 2 Ch. 530; 81 L. T. 354; 48 W. R. 59—Kekewich, J.

Notice of Mortgage to Mortgagor's Tenant—Rent Paid by Tenant to Equitable Mortgagee—Action to Recover Back Money so Paid.—An equitable mortgagee by deposit served notice upon the tenant of the mortgagor (who was in default under the mortgage) intimating the fact of the mortgage and requiring the tenant to pay him, the equitable mortgagee, the rent due in respect of the premises. In pursuance of such notice, the tenant paid his rent to the equitable mortgagee. Subsequently the tenant sought to recover it back on the ground that it had been paid without consideration:—Held, that the action failed, inasmuch as the rent had been paid with full knowledge of the fact that it was claimed by the defendant as equitable mortgagee. Finch v. Tranter, 74 L. J. K.B. 345; [1905] 1 K.B. 427; 92 L. T. 297—D.

"Reasonable" Provisions—Redemption—Consolidation.—A provision in an equitable mortgage that the mortgagor will execute to the mortgagee a legal mortgage of the property, "with such powers and provisions and in such form" as the mortgagee may require "for further securing the said principal moneys and interest," does not entitle the mortgagee to a legal mortgage excluding the operation of section 17 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, so as to give him the right of consolidation. Whitley v. Challis (61 L. J. Ch. 307; [1892] 1 Ch. 64) applied. Farmer v. Pitt, 71 L. J. Ch. 500; [1902] 1 Ch. 954; 50 W. R. 453—Byrne, J.

The wife of a builder, having mortgaged certain property, equitably mortgaged as collateral security to the mortgagee for loans to her husband other property under a memorandum containing a provision as above:—Held, that the mortgagee could redeem the first mortgage without at the same time redeeming the second. Id.

5. FLOATING CHARGE.

Mortgage—Possession of Title-deeds—Negligence of First Mortgagee.—Bankers of a company who in the usual course of business have without notice or enquiry advanced moneys to the company on a deposit of title-deeds coupled with a memorandum of equitable charge, are, under ordinary circumstances, entitled to priority over debenture-holders of the company, notwithstanding that the property comprised in the title-deeds is included in the debenture security, and by the express terms of the debenture itself prohibited from being charged by the company in priority to the debentures. Castell & Brown, Lim., In re; Roper v. Castell & Brown, 67 L. J. Ch. 169; [1898] 1 Ch. 315; 78 L. T. 109; 46 W. R. 248—Romer, J. And see COMPANY, col. 416.

6. INTEREST.

"Punctually paid."—The word "punctually" in a clause which provides that mortgage moneys shall not be called in for three years "if in the meantime every half-yearly payment of interest shall be punctually paid" does not mean "within a reasonable time," but "on the days named." Leeds and Hanley Theatre of

Varieties v. Broadbent, 67 L. J. Ch. 135; [1898] 1 Ch. 343; 77 L. T. 665; 46 W. R. 230—C.A.

Rate of—Covenant—Judgment—Covenant not Extinguished by the Judgment—Merger.—Mortgagees brought an action against mortgagors upon a covenant in the mortgage-deed to repay the principal sum by a day named, and if it was not then paid to pay interest at 5 per cent. upon so much of the principal as should remain unpaid after that date. The deed contained a proviso for redemption, that if the mortgagors should pay to the mortgagees the principal sum "with interest for the same after the rate, at the times and in manner hereinafter covenanted and agreed for the payment thereof," they should have back the property. The mortgagees, on default made by the mortgagors, recovered judgment for principal and interest due on the covenant:—Held, in a subsequent mortgagees' action, that though a judgment merges a debt and bears only 4 per cent. interest, yet the mortgage being in such a form that the property could not be taken out of the hands of the mortgagee without payment of the principal and full interest, the mortgagees were entitled to interest at 5 per cent. Economic Life Assurance Society v. Osborne, 71 L. J. P.C. 34; [1902] A.C. 147; 85 L. T. 587—H.L. (Ir.)

In Arrear—Mortgagee in Possession—Special Provision as to Interest.—A mortgage contained a special provision that if interest should be twenty-one days in arrear it should be capitalised and bear interest. The mortgagee entered into possession when interest was in arrear, but payment of the arrears was subsequently tendered and accepted, and the rents and profits were afterwards (at least prima facie) sufficient to keep down the interest:—Held, on taking the accounts, that the mortgagee had not established a case to be entitled to compound interest under the special provision. Union Bank of London v. Ingram (50 L. J. Ch. 74; 16 Ch. D. 53), Bright v. Campbell (41 Ch. D. 388), and Cockburn v. Edwards (51 L. J. Ch. 46; 18 Ch. D. 449) considered. Wrigley v. Gill, 74 L. J. Ch. 160; [1905] 1 Ch. 241; 92 L. T. 491; 53 W. R. 334—Warrington, J.

—Deficient Security—Capital and Income—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Apportionment.—Funds held under a will in trust for A for life, remainder for B for life, with remainder over for certain persons, were invested in 1875 on the security of a mortgage of real estate then of sufficient value. The interest due on the mortgage fell into arrear, and in 1880 a petition for sale and the appointment of a receiver was presented by the trustees of the will, and a receiver was appointed in the same year. In 1898 A (the first tenant for life) died. At her death considerable arrears of income were due to her, a portion of which was afterwards paid to her executors. In 1901 the lands subject to the mortgage were sold under the Land Purchase Acts, and did not realise the amount of the mortgage security. Prior to the sale nothing had been paid to B (the present tenant for life) in respect of interest:—Held, that the date of the sale of the mortgaged lands must be taken to be the period at which the deficiency of the security was first ascertained; and that the sum realised by the sale should be apportioned, in proportion to the amounts due at that date between the executors of the first tenant for life, the present tenant for life, and the trustees of the will, as representing the persons entitled to the corpus of the fund. The principle of Moore, In re (54 L. J. Ch. 432), preferred to that of Foster, In re (60 L. J. Ch. 175; 45 Ch. D. 629). Stewart v. Kingsale, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 496—M.R.

— Real Estate—Fund in Court—Application by Mortgagor for Payment Out.—The rule established by Hunter v. Nockolds (19 L. J. Ch. 177; 1 Mac. & G. 640)—namely, that in a foreclosure action the mortgagee, by virtue of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, s. 42, can only recover six years' arrears of interest—does not apply to redemption proceedings taken by the mortgagor, nor where the proceeds of sale of land have come to the hands of the mortgagee; and similarly the rule in Hunter v. Nockolds (supra) does not apply where the mortgagor of a share in an estate is himself seeking to obtain payment out of Court of the proceeds of sale of land sold in an administration action. In such a case the mortgagor ought only to be allowed to recover the fund as against the mortgagee upon the same terms as if he had brought an action for redemption—that is, on the terms of paying all arrears of interest. Lloyd, In re; Lloyd v. Lloyd, 72 L. J. Ch. 78; [1903] 1 Ch. 385; 87 L. T. 541; 51 W. R. 177—C.A.

Edmunds v. Waugh (35 L. J. Ch. 234; L. R. 1 Eq. 418), Marshfield, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 599; 34 Ch. D. 721), and Dingle v. Coppen (68 L. J. Ch. 337; [1899] 1 Ch. 726) approved. Mason v. Broadbent (33 Beav. 296) disapproved. Hughes v. Kelly (3 Dr. & W. 482; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 286) and Stead's Mortgaged Estates, In re (45 L. J. Ch. 634; 2 Ch. D. 713), distinguished. Slater's Trusts, In re (48 L. J. Ch. 473; 11 Ch. D. 227), overruled. Ib.

— Realisation of Security—Apportionment of Proceeds—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Interest and Capital—Mortgagees in Possession.—A fund was settled in trust for certain persons for life, with remainder to the plaintiffs. Part of the fund was invested on a mortgage of real estate bearing interest at 5 per cent. (but reducible to 4 per cent. on punctual payment), which was an authorised investment. Interest having fallen into arrear, the trustees in 1889 entered into possession. The rents were not sufficient to keep down the interest, and considerable arrears of interest were owing to the tenants for life. In 1898 part of the mortgaged property was sold, and the question arose as to how the proceeds of sale should be apportioned as between the tenants for life and remaindermen:—Held, that they should be apportioned in the proportion which the amount of interest in arrear bore to the amount of principal due under the mortgage without bringing into hotchpot any sums already received by the tenants for life for interest. Atkinson, In re; Barbers' Co. v. Grose Smith, 73 L. J. Ch. 585; [1904] 2 Ch. 160; 90 L. T. 825; 53 W. R. 7—C.A.

The principle applied in Moore, In re; Moore v. Johnson (54 L. J. Ch. 432), and in Alston, In re; Alston v. Houston (70 L. J. Ch. 869; [1901] 2 Ch. 584), approved and followed. Foster, In — Capitalisation of—Proviso for—Mortgagee in Possession—Receipt of Unappropriated Rents Sufficient to Satisfy Interest.—A mortgagee in possession having in his hands unappropriated rents which he might, but does not, apply to the payment of the amount of a half-year's interest as it falls due, is not entitled to say that such half-year's interest is "in arrear" within the meaning of a usual proviso for capitalisation of interest in that event. The dicta of COTTON, L.J., and BRETT, L.J., in Cockburn v. Edwards (51 L. J. Ch. 46; 18 Ch. D. 449), followed in preference to the dictum of JESSEL, M.R. Union Bank of London v. Ingram (50 L. J. Ch. 74; 16 Ch. D. 58) and Bright v. Campbell (41 Ch. D. 388) distinguished. Wrigley v. Gill, 75 L. J. Ch. 210; [1906] 1 Ch. 165; 94 L. T. 179; 54 W. R. 274—C.A.

Petition by Incumbrancer.—In an incumbrancer's petition matter an incumbrancer who avails himself of the proceedings is not entitled to receive interest on his incumbrance which has accrued more than six years next before the filing of the petition, such interest being barred under section 42 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Lloyd v. Lloyd (72 L. J. Ch. 78; [1903] 1 Ch. 385) only applies to a proceeding in the nature of a redemption suit. Lewis's Estate, In re, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 348—Ross, J.

7. FURTHER ADVANCES.

Covenant to Make—Settlement of Equity of Redemption—Advance after Notice.—The doctrine of Hopkinson v. Rolt (34 L. J. Ch. 463; 9 H.L. C. 514), according to which a prior mortgagee, whose mortgage is taken to cover further advances, cannot claim priority in respect of advances made after notice of a second mortgage, applies as well to a case where the prior mortgagee has covenanted to make the further advances as to a case where the further advances are voluntary. West v. Williams, 68 L. J. Ch. 127; [1899] 1 Ch. 132; 79 L. T. 575; 47 W. R. 308—C.A.

In 1895 A mortgaged his equitable interest under a will to the plaintiff, who gave no notice at the time to the trustees of the will. In 1896 A mortgaged the same interest to the defendants (who gave notice to the trustees of the will) to secure a present advance and any further sums advanced by the defendants under a covenant in a settlement of even date. By this settlement (notice of which was also given to the trustees of the will) A, as part of the same transaction, settled the equity of redemption of his interest under the will on trust to pay the income to himself during his life or until alienation, with trusts over in favour of other persons; and the defendants thereby covenanted to pay to A 200*l.* a year for five years. The defendants received notice of the plaintiff's mortgage in 1897, after which they made further payments to A under the covenant in the settlement:—Held, that the defendants were not entitled to priority over the plaintiff's mortgage in respect of their payments made after notice of the plaintiff's mortgage, and that the settlement had no validity against that mortgage. Ib.

Notice of Puisne Incumbrance—Tacking—Joint Tenants.—In the case of a mortgage of real estate to joint tenants on a joint account, notice to one of them of a second mortgage is sufficient to displace their right to tack a further advance. Freeman v. Laing, 68 L. J. Ch. 586; [1899] 2 Ch. 355; 81 L. T. 167; 48 W. R. 9—Byrne, J.

S. PRIORITIES.

Legal Mortgage—Possession of Title Deeds by Subsequent Equitable Mortgagee.—The mere fact of non-possession of the deeds by a prior legal mortgagee and possession of them by the subsequent equitable mortgagee, there being no evidence or circumstance pointing to fraud or negligence on the part of the prior legal mortgagee, or connecting him with the fraud of the mortgagor,—Held, not to be sufficient to displace the priority of the prior legal mortgagee. Greer, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 57—Barton, J.

Legal Estate—Trustees—Omission to Obtain Title Deeds—Subsequent Equitable Interest—Fraud—Negligence.—Where, through the negligence of the trustees of a marriage settlement in not obtaining the title deeds of the settled property, the husband is enabled to mortgage the settled property and to hand over the title deeds to the mortgagee, who afterwards sells the property, neither the mortgagee nor the purchaser from him having had notice of the settlement, the legal estate of the trustees is postponed to the subsequent equitable interest of the purchaser from the mortgagee, and the wife is in no better position than the trustees. Lloyd's Banking Co. v. Jones (54 L. J. Ch. 981; 29 Ch. D. 221) followed. Walkerv. Linom, 76 L. J. Ch. 500; [1907] 2 Ch. 104; 97 L. T. 92—Parker, J.

Portions—Mortgage to Raise some of the Portions—Priority of Mortgage over other Portions.—Where some of the portions charged on real property are raised by a legal mortgage of the whole estate, such mortgage is not entitled to priority over other portions not yet raisable. Nor is a portion which is secured by bond or covenant entitled to priority over a portion which is merely charged in equity under a will. Nightingale v. Reynolds, 71 L. J. Ch. 586; [1902] 2 Ch. 117; 86 L. T. 703—Kekewich, J.

Notice—Real Estate—Equitable Mortgages—Legal Estate—Breach of Trust.—A testator, after bequeathing legacies, devised his real estate to three trustees, of whom the defendant K. was one, upon trust out of the rents and profits in aid of his personal estate to pay the legacies, and subject thereto upon trust as to a certain freehold house for K., his heirs and assigns. In September, 1872, K. assigned his interest in his own right under the will by way of mortgage to the plaintiff's predecessors, and covenanted to execute all such further assurances as might be reasonably required. The mortgagees gave notice to his two co-trustees. In 1879 K. became sole trustee by reason of the death of his surviving co-trustee. In 1890 he deposited the deeds of the house and the probate of the will with his bankers with a memorandum of charge to secure an overdraft, and in 1903 he conveyed the legal estate in the house to the bank by way of mortgage to secure the existing debt and further advances. The bankers did not know of the plaintiff's equitable mortgage, but in 1890 the bank manager examined the deeds without professional legal assistance. In 1890 there was a trust legacy of 100*l.* still unsatisfied. In an action to determine the priorities of the mortgagees,—Held, that, the trust of the will not having been fully executed, K.'s equitable interest had not in 1903 become merged in his legal estate, and that the bank must be taken at that date to have had notice of all the subsisting trusts of the will, including incumbrances of which the trustees had received notice, and that their security must be postponed to the plaintiff's mortgage. Perham v. Kempster, 76 L. J. Ch. 223; [1907] 1 Ch. 373; 96 L. T. 297—Joyce, J.

The possession of a legal estate obtained through the medium of a breach of trust on the part of the mortgagor does not give a priority over a prior equitable mortgage. Ib.

Equitable Assignment of Future Crops—Irrevocable Appointment of Auctioneer to Let and Manage Lands.—M. was in the habit of employing the defendants to let the grazing and manage her land. The defendants sometimes paid in advance the rents and taxes, recouping themselves out of the rents of the meadows and price of crops sold, and paid the balance to M. M. had deposited the title-deeds of the farm with the defendants by way of equitable mortgage. M. applied to the plaintiff for advances to pay off the defendants and also some rent due, and this the plaintiff agreed to give upon getting the title-deeds and upon the security of an agreement dated December 29, 1900, whereby she, in consideration of the plaintiff paying 200*l.* for her, assigned to him the authority to let and manage her farm, and out of the proceeds of the letting to retain such sums to liquidate the above or any other sum advanced to M. or paid by him on her account; and M. appointed the plaintiff her auctioneer and salesman to dispose of same at such time and place as he thought best, and to retain the sums advanced out of the proceeds, together with commission and expenses, and hand M. the balance—the agreement to be irrevocable. The plaintiff paid off the defendants and paid the rent due. The plaintiff attempted, but unsuccessfully, to let or sell the meadows, and M. subsequently employed the defendants to auction the meadows, and they were sold. Immediately thereafter notice was given on behalf of the plaintiff to the defendants of the agreement of December 29, 1900, and cautioning them not to pay over the proceeds of the sale to M. Notwithstanding this, the defendants paid over the balance of the money to M. after deducting the expenses of the auction and commission:—Held, that the defendants, having had notice of the agreement of December 29, 1900, were liable to the plaintiff for the balance of the proceeds paid over to M. Per PORTER, M.R., and WALKER, L.J.—The agreement of December 29, 1900, conferred an equitable charge in favour of the plaintiff on the land and growing crops. Coonan v. O'Connor, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 449—C.A.

Equitable Mortgage—Correspondence Constituting Equitable Charge—Deposit of Deed—Subsequent Registered Charge—Priorities.—A customer of the respondent bank, whose account was overdrawn, undertook in letters to the bank manager to lodge the title-deeds of an estate which he was about to buy when he should have received them. When the purchase was completed the deeds were lodged with the bank without any memorandum of charge. The letters were not registered. Subsequently a second equitable charge was created in favour of the appellants and registered:—Held, that an equitable mortgage was constituted by the letters, which, not having been registered, must be postponed to the subsequent registered charge. Fullerton v. Provincial Bank of Ireland, 72 L. J. P.C. 79; [1903] A.C. 309; 89 L. T. 79; 52 W. R. 238—H.L. (Ir.)

Competing Equities — Priority — Equitable Mortgage—Subsequent Legal Mortgage — Lis Pendens—Locke King's Act—Breach of Trust not Amounting to Fraud—Cestui que Trust Bound by Acts of Trustees.—A died seised and possessed of lands, including a denomination X, and indebted to his bank in a sum of 10,000*l.*, to secure which all his title-deeds, including those of X, had been deposited with the bank by way of equitable mortgage. A made a will whereby in effect X became the property of his eldest son B. He left other lands to his two younger sons and pecuniary legacies of 1,000*l.* each to his three daughters, one of whom was the petitioner. He appointed B and two other executors and trustees, to whom probate was granted. Within nine months after his death the executors paid off the testator's debt to the bank, and obtained the title-deeds, giving a receipt to the bank for them; but on the same day the title-deeds of X were re-deposited by B with the bank to secure a past debt of his own and future advances. Upon this large advances were made by the bank to B, far more than sufficient to exhaust the value of X. A suit to establish the right of the legatees to be paid out of X was registered as a lis pendens, and immediately afterwards the bank took a legal mortgage of X from B:—Held, that under Locke King's Act, as each payment was made an equity arose in favour of the legatees in the nature of an equitable charge against X to be recouped the amount necessary for payment in full of the legacies which the remaining personal estate was insufficient to discharge; but held, also, that the conduct of the trustees, though constituting a breach of trust, was not fraudulent, and that, irrespective of the legal mortgage, the bank, as purchasers for value without notice, obtained by their equitable mortgage priority over the earlier charge of the legatees. Shropshire Union Railway and Canal Co. v. Reg. (45 L. J. Q.B.; 31; L. R.

7 H. L. 496) distinguished. Bobbett's Estate, In re, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 461—Ross, J.

— Breach of Trust—Fraudulent Conveyance of Trust Property—Receipt in Deed—No Contract of Sale—Equitable Mortgagee without Notice.—C. was sole trustee for sale of real estate under a will, and the plaintiffs were entitled to the proceeds of sale. In breach of trust C. arranged with M., a private creditor, to convey to him part of the trust property as security for the debt. M. had full notice of the breach of trust. The conveyance purported to be in execution of the trust for sale and in consideration of 2,000*l.* The receipt of this sum was acknowledged by the deed, but none of it was in fact paid or intended to be paid. M. afterwards deposited the conveyance with the defendant B. by way of equitable mortgage. B. had no notice, actual or constructive, of the breach of trust or of the non-payment of the purchase-money, and was not guilty of any conduct which would make his equity inferior to the equity of the plaintiffs, the beneficiaries:—Held, that there was no contract of sale between C. and M., and that the equity of the plaintiffs was therefore not a right to enforce a vendor's lien, but to have the land sold and the proceeds distributed according to the will; that they were not estopped by the receipt in the conveyance to M. from denying that the transaction was one of purchase and sale; and that the equities of the plaintiffs and of B. being otherwise equal, the equity of the plaintiffs, by reason of its priority in point of time, must prevail. Lloyd's Bank v. Bullock (85 L. J. Ch. 680; [1896] 2 Ch. 192) distinguished. Capell v. Winter, 76 L. J. Ch. 496; [1907] 2 Ch. 376; 97 L. T. 207; 23 T. L. R. 618—Parker, J.

— Possession of Title-deeds.—On April 1, 1897, the defendant company, which had been formed to take over the business of M., and of which he was managing director and practically the owner, being indebted to its bankers, and requiring further advances, issued debentures in favour of the bank, charging the same on all the property of the company. These documents shewed that there was power to issue further debentures. There was a collateral agreement by the company authorising the bank to hold the debentures as a collateral security for advances and transactions. On April 16, 1897, two further debentures, charged on the property of the company for the sum of 11,000*l.*, were issued to M. and T., who were the trustees of B., deceased, in respect of investments made (in breach of trust) of the trust moneys of B.'s estate in M.'s business taken over by the company, and in the company itself. On May 28, 1897, M. deposited certain title-deeds of the company's property with the bank as a collateral security for all moneys then due or to become due by the company to the bank. When this charge was given the amount due to the bank exceeded the nominal amount of the debentures issued to them on April 1. The bank had no notice of the existence of the debentures of April 16, and made no enquiries. The bank commenced an action to enforce its securities, and the company passed a resolution for voluntary winding-up. On an application by the cestuis que trust of the estate of B. for liberty to intervene in the action and to have it declared that the debentures of April 16 took priority over the equitable charge to the bank by deposit of the title-deeds on May 28.—Held, on the assumption that at the date of the issue of the two debentures for 11,000*l.* there was money due by the company to M. and T. as trustees of the B. estate, that the bank, as having the stronger equity, was entitled to priority in respect of its equitable mortgage over these two debentures. Bank of Ireland v. Cogry Spinning Co., [1900] 1 Ir. R. 219—M.R.

— Trust Fund—Advance by Bank on Deposit of Title-deeds—Absence of Notice—Blended Fund.—The trustees of a marriage settlement applied to a bank for an advance to enable them to complete the purchase of certain house property, agreeing to deposit the title-deeds thereof (with others) as security. The trustees received the advance from the bank, blended it with trust-money in their hands, and purchased the property therewith. The bank had no notice of any trust. On the date of the advance the trustees deposited the title-deeds of the purchased property with the bank. The property was subsequently sold at a loss, and the proceeds lodged in Court:—Held, that the bank had the superior equity, and were entitled to be paid the amount of their advance with interest in priority to the claim of the cestuis que trust. Bourke v. Lee, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 280—M.R.

— Notice—Equitable Interest in Personality.—Priorities, as between mortgagees of the distributive share of one of the next-of-kin of an intestate, rank according to the dates of the notices given to the administrator after administration has been taken out. Notice given before administration has been taken out to a possible or future administrator, even if he be also the holder of a fund out of which moneys may be payable to the future administrator, are ineffectual for the purpose of obtaining priority as against other mortgagees who give notice to the administrator after he has obtained administration. Kinahan's Trusts, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 321—Barton, J.

— Equitable Sub-mortgagees of Mortgage of Land—Notice to Original Mortgagor.—Effect of.—The doctrine of obtaining priority by notice does not apply as between successive equitable sub-mortgagees of a mortgage of land, and the second sub-mortgagee in time will gain no priority by being the first to give notice to the original mortgagor. Richards, In re; Humber v. Richards (59 L. J. Ch. 728; 45 Ch. D. 589), followed. Hopkins v. Hemsworth, 67 L. J. Ch. 526; [1898] 2 Ch. 347; 78 L. T. 832; 47 W. R. 26—Kekewich, J.

— First Mortgage unknown to Mortgagee.—A solicitor misappropriated a client's money entrusted to him for investment, and subsequently executed a mortgage to his client of his equity of redemption in certain life policies as security for part of the misappropriated money. The solicitor never gave notice of this mortgage to the insurance society, and, without communicating the fact of its existence to the client or any one else, executed another mortgage of the same equity in favour of another person as trustee for other clients whose moneys had been misappropriated. This trustee gave notice of his mortgage to the insurance society. On the solicitor's bankruptcy the earlier mortgage was found, and notice of it given to the society. Upon an application to determine the question of priorities, —Held, that, notwithstanding that the first mortgagee had not been guilty of laches or any want of diligence, the second mortgagee was entitled to priority over him, inasmuch as he had been the first to give notice to the society. Lake, In re; Cavendish, ex parte, 72 L. J. K.B. 117; [1903] 1 K.B. 151; 87 L. T. 655; 51 W. R. 319; 10 Manson, 17—Wright, J.

— Equitable Charge by Deposit of Title-deeds—Sale by Mortgagor—Actual Notice of Charge to Purchaser—Forged Receipt—Legal Estate.—A purchaser, before completion, had through her solicitor actual notice of an equitable charge created by deposit of title-deeds which her solicitor required to be paid off. On completion the vendor's solicitor produced the memorandum of deposit with a forged receipt, purporting to be signed by the owner of the equitable charge, which, together with the title-deeds, was handed over to the purchaser, who by her conveyance from the vendor acquired the legal estate. The owner of the equitable charge had not been guilty of negligence:—Held, that the purchaser could not set up the legal estate against the equitable charge, and must hold the property subject to the equitable charge. Jared v. Clements, 72 L. J. Ch. 291; [1903] 1 Ch. 428; 88 L. T. 97; 51 W. R. 401—C.A.

— Notice to Trustees—Chose in Action—Proceeds of Land held in Trust for Sale—Mortgagor Trustee—Notice through His Knowledge.—The knowledge of one of several trustees, who is also a beneficiary, of a mortgage, created by himself, of his own share in the proceeds of land held in trust for sale is not, by itself, notice to the trustees. Such a mortgage will be postponed to a subsequent mortgage of which due notice has been given to the trustees. Browne v. Savage (4 Drew. 635) followed. Lloyd's Bank v. Pearson, 70 L. J. Ch. 422; [1901] 1 Ch. 865; 84 L. T. 314—Cozens-Hardy, J.

A reversionary interest in the proceeds of land held in trust for sale, but not yet sold, is a chose in action within the principle laid down in Dearle v. Hall (8 Russ. 1) as to gaining priority by notice to trustees. Ib.

— Chose in Action—Notice—Charge on Expectancy under Will—Renunciation of Probate by Sole Executor—Grant of Letters of Administration—Notices to Administrator.—A testator, by his will dated July 7, 1893, gave a legacy of 10,000*l.* to his son, and he appointed the son and two other persons (who predeceased him) to be his executors. He afterwards became of unsound mind, and he had not recovered at the time of his death on December 24, 1902. On January 9, 1903, the son renounced probate, and on March 4, 1903, letters of administration with the will annexed were granted to another person. The son was aware in his father's lifetime of the legacy to him, and he from time to time charged his expectancy with sums of money lent to him by various persons. The total amount of these charges was more than 10,000*l.* Certain of the incumbancers gave notice of their incumbrances to the admi-nistratrix on March 5, 1903. Another incumbrancer, whose charge was prior in date to the charges of some of the incumbrancers who gave notice on March 5, was not aware until March 12, 1903, of the grant of the letters of administration, but he gave notice of his incumbrance directly he became aware of the grant:—Held, that the incumbrances must take priority according to the dates on which notice of them was given to the administratrix after the grant of the letters of administration. The rule laid down in Dearle v. Hall (2 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 62; 3 Russ. 1) applied; and Ward v. Duncombe (62 L. J. Ch. 881, 892; [1898] A.C. 369, 390) followed. Dallas, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 365; [1904] 2 Ch. 385; 90 L. T. 177; 52 W. R. 567—C.A.

The rule laid down in Dearle v. Hall (supra) applies, although there was no trust fund and no trustee in existence at the time of the several assignments, notices given after the fund has come into existence and there is a person who has legal control over it being effective to establish priorities. The principle of Johnstone v. Cox (50 L. J. Ch. 216; 16 Ch. D. 571; 19 Ch. D. 17) applied. Ib.

The knowledge which a sole trustee of a fund who has made charges on it has of the several incumbrances made by himself is not equivalent to notice entitling the several assignees to priority in order of date. Neither would express notice given by an incumbrancer to a sole assignor trustee be operative for the purpose of establishing priority. The principle of Brown v. Savage (4 Drew. 635) and Lloyd's Bank v. Pearson (70 L. J. Ch. 422; [1901] 1 Ch. 865) applied. Ib.

Quære (per STIRLING, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.), whether notice to an executor, who does not act and renounces, of a charge on a fund passing under the will of his testator is of any value for the purpose of establishing priority against the fund. Ib.

Notice of Charge—Conveyance subject to "payments and outgoing ecclesiastical and civil charged upon or payable out of" Hereditaments.]—Certain lands were allotted in 1834 in lieu of great tithes of a certain parish under an Inclosure Act which provided that any allotment should not prejudice any person or persons having any right or claim out of or affecting any lands allotted or inclosed, but the persons to whom any hereditaments should be allotted should be seised thereof subject to such and the same charges and incumbrances as the hereditaments whereof they were seised before the award. It was proved that the great tithes had from time immemorial been subject to the annual provision of a certain quantity of corn for the benefit of the poor of the parish, and from 1834 to 1881 the owners or occupiers of the lands allotted in lieu thereof had made payments in money or kind in respect of this charge. In 1881 the lands in question were sold to the defendants' predecessor in title, and conveyed to him "subject to the unredeemed land tax and tithe commutation rentcharge both rectorial and vicarial and to all other payments and outgoing ecclesiastical and civil charged upon or payable out of the said hereditaments." Payments had occasionally been made by him on account of the charge. The purchaser mortgaged the property, and the mortgage was made subject to the like charge as the conveyance on sale and in like terms. The mortgagee had made no enquiry and had no express notice of the charge, and was now in possession of the land:—Held, that the mortgagee ought to have enquired as to the existence of such a charge, and, no enquiry having been made, that she took with notice of and was liable to it. Alms Corn Charity, In re; Charity Commissioners v. Bode, 71 L. J. Ch. 76; [1901] 2 Ch. 750; 85 L. T. 533—Stirling, J.

— Constructive Notice—Purchase for Valuable Consideration without Notice—No Independent Solicitor.]—A., who was found, as a fact, to be a person of limited intelligence and incapable of understanding the effect of legal instruments, was induced by the fraud of his agent F. to assign by deed in 1892 all his property to F., subject to and in consideration of (inter alia) an annuity of 200*l.* payable to him for life. In the present action, brought by the heiress-at-law and personal representative of A., this deed was set aside. F. in 1896 mortgaged the property to a bank, A. joining in the deed to postpone his annuity. The bank, who had no knowledge of the state of A.'s intelligence, or that the deed of 1892 was procured by the fraud of F., but who were put on enquiry by facts appearing upon the face of the deed of 1892 and by other circumstances within their knowledge, made no enquiry, and allowed A. to execute the deed without being represented by an independent solicitor:—Held, that, as against the plaintiff, the bank could not rely on the defence of purchase for value without notice. Aldritt v. Maconchy, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 416—Ross, J.

— Past Consideration.]—F. mortgaged the property in 1901 to M. to secure a sum of 8,000*l.* then due by F. to M. M. had no notice of the infirmity of F.'s title, and made no enquiry:—Held, that M., being a purchaser for a past consideration, had no equity sufficient to prevail against the plaintiff's title. Ib.

— Innocent Trustee—Fraud.]—In 1886, I. and R., co-trustees of F.'s marriage settlement, advanced 500*l.* of the trust moneys to A. on a mortgage of A.'s property, thereby enabling F. to defraud A. of the said sum of 500*l.* I. had no knowledge or notice of the state of A.'s intelligence:—Held, assuming R. to have had such knowledge, and to be guilty of a fraud, that such fraud could not be imputed to I., and that the mortgage could not be set aside by the plaintiff. Ib.

— Non-disclosure by Solicitor to all Parties—Statute of Limitations.]—A mortgagee, who was also a solicitor, deposited the mortgage deeds with his bankers to secure an overdraft on his current account. No notice of such deposit was given to the mortgagor. Subsequently the mortgagor and mortgagee joined in a further mortgage of the property to S. The mortgagee acted throughout the transactions as solicitor for all parties, but he did not disclose the existence of the bankers' mortgage either to the mortgagor or to S.:—Held, that S. was affected with constructive notice of the bank's mortgage, and that therefore the bank was entitled to priority over S.; but that the mortgagor had not through his solicitor notice of the bank's mortgage. Dixon v. Winch (69 L. J. Ch. 465; [1900] 1 Ch. 736) distinguished. Berwick v. Price, 74 L. J. Ch. 249; [1905] 1 Ch. 632; 92 L. T. 110—Joyce, J.

Equitable Mortgage—Prior Hire-purchase Agreement—Priority.]—See FIXTURES, col. 868.

Notice—Deposit of Deeds.]—See BANKER, col. 73.

Negligence—No Enquiry as to Title, and no Production of Deeds—Legal Estate—Purchaser Postponed to Equitable Mortgagee.]—A legal purchaser for value will be postponed to a prior equitable incumbrancer, of whose charge he has had no notice, if he is guilty of such gross negligence as would make it unjust for him to be allowed to take up the position of a bona fide purchaser for value, and deprive some one else of his security. Oliver v. Hinton, 68 L. J. Ch. 533; [1899] 2 Ch. 264; 81 L. T. 212; 48 W. R. 3—C.A.

It is not necessary that he should have been guilty of fraud, or of that wilful negligence which leads the Court to conclude that he is an accomplice in the fraud. Dictum of JAMES, L.J., in Ratcliffe v. Barnard (40 L. J. Ch. 777; L. R. 6 Ch. 652), to that effect, dissented from. Ib.

A purchaser for value of land who acquires the legal estate, but does not make any enquiry as to the vendor's title, and does not ask for the production of the title-deeds, but rests satisfied with a statement by the vendor that he has the deeds, and will retain them, as they relate to other property, is guilty of such gross negligence as to make it unjust that he should be preferred to a prior equitable mortgagee by deposit, of whose charge he had no notice at the time of purchase. Ib.

—Deeds Left with Solicitor—Subsequent Deposit of Deeds.]—Shortly before his death W. P. advanced money on mortgage to his solicitor, leaving the deeds with the latter. After W. P.'s death the plaintiff, as his executor, applied to the mortgagor for the deeds, and in answer to such application received the mortgage deed, which the plaintiff was led to believe was the only one relating to the property. The mortgagor had meanwhile deposited the deeds with another mortgagee as security for money advanced without notice of the legal mortgage:—Held, that neither the plaintiff nor his predecessor had been guilty of such gross negligence as that their legal mortgage ought to be postponed to the subsequent equitable mortgage. Cotter v. National Provincial Bank of England, 20 T. L. R. 607—Swinfen Eady, J.

Trust—Fraud of Trustee—Legal Estate—Relation Back—Notice.]—An equitable mortgagee, who has made an advance without notice of a prior equitable title, cannot gain priority by getting in the legal estate if at the time when he so gets it in he has notice that it is held on an express trust in favour of persons who assert a claim to the property. Taylor v. London and County Banking Co.; London and County Banking Co. v. Nixon, 70 L. J. Ch. 477; [1901] 2 Ch. 231; 84 L. T. 397; 49 W. R. 451—C.A.

A person who on being appointed a trustee of property requires and obtains a transfer of the legal estate in that property from his co-trustee to himself and the co-trustee, jointly, becomes a purchaser for value of the property, inasmuch as he gives up a right of action against the co-trustee for the property. Thorn-dike v. Hunt (28 L. J. Ch. 417; 3 De G. & J. 563) and Taylor v. Blakelock (55 L. J. Ch. 97; 32 Ch. D. 560) followed. Ib.

Where one of two trustees is a solicitor, the lay trustee on a transfer of property to the two will not be affected with notice of a prior equitable interest known to the solicitor trustee by reason of a previous independent transaction, and fraudulently concealed by him, if such prior interest would not have been disclosed if an independent solicitor had been employed on behalf of the trustees and had made reasonable enquiries and inspections. Ib.

Where the relationship between an equitable incumbrancer and the person in possession of the title-deeds to property is not merely that of mortgagee and mortgagor, but is of a fiduciary nature (for example, of cestui que trust and trustee, or of client and solicitor), the equitable incumbrancer will not be deprived of his priority by reason of the improper acts of the person entrusted with the deeds, so long, at all events, as the incumbrancer has no ground to suppose any want of good faith on the part of that person. Shropshire Union Railways and Canal Co. v. Reg. (45 L. J. Q.B. 31; L. R. 7 H. L. 496) and Vernon, Ewens & Co., In re (56 L. J. Ch. 12; 33 Ch. D. 402), applied. Ib.

A purchaser for value without notice is entitled to the priority conferred by the legal title not only where he has actually got it in, but also where he has a better right to call for it; for instance, if he procures at the time of his purchase the person in whom the legal title is vested to declare himself a trustee for the purchaser, or even to join as party in a conveyance of the equitable interest. Ib.

Joint Advance—Trust Moneys and also Moneys of Solicitors—Security not in Names of Trustees —“Residue”—Breach of Trust—Inadequacy of Security.]—A firm of solicitors advanced on mortgage of certain freeholds a sum of money which was expressed in the mortgage-deed to belong to the mortgagees (one of whom was a member of the firm) on a joint account. The money was in fact advanced as to one moiety by trustees out of trust funds, and as to the other moiety by the firm out of their partnership assets. The security contemplated advances on the footing of equality, and contained no unusual provisions. The firm acted on the occasion of the mortgage as the solicitors of the trustees, and advised the investment, and subsequently became bankrupt. The mortgaged property was not at any time a sufficient security for the money advanced:—Held, that the firm were involved in a breach of trust, on the ground that the security was inadequate, and that it ought to have been taken in the names of the trustees, and that for omitting to advise the trustees that the investment was a breach of trust the firm might be answerable in damages, but that the benefit acquired by the firm under the security was one which was in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the advance, and was not a sufficient ground for declaring the firm to be trustees in the whole or in part of their moiety of the mortgage debt and security, and that consequently the trustees were not entitled to be paid out of the security in priority to the persons claiming under the firm. Stokes v. Prance, 67 L. J. Ch. 69; [1898] 1 Ch. 212; 77 L. T. 595; 46 W. R. 183—Stirling, J.

Inclosure—Land Allotted in Lieu of Tithes—Annual Payment for Poor of Parish—Charge on Tithes.—Certain lands were allotted in 1834 in lieu of great tithes of a certain parish under an Inclosure Act which provided that any allotment should not prejudice any person or persons having any right or claim out of or affecting any lands allotted or inclosed, but the persons to whom any hereditaments should be allotted should be seised thereof subject to such and the same charges and incumbrances as the hereditaments whereof they were seised before the award. It was proved that the great tithes had from time immemorial been subject to the annual provision of a certain quantity of corn for the benefit of the poor of the parish, and from 1834 to 1881 the owners or occupiers of the lands allotted in lieu thereof had made payments in money or kind in respect of this charge. In 1881 the lands in question were sold to the defendants' predecessor in title, and conveyed to him "subject to the unredeemed land tax and tithe commutation rentcharge both rectorial and vicarial and to all other payments and outgoing ecclesiastical and civil charged upon or payable out of the said hereditaments." Payments had occasionally been made by him on account of the charge:—Held, that the payment constituted a valid charge on the property allotted in lieu of tithes, and that the purchaser took subject thereto under his conveyance. Lanchbury v. Bode (67 L. J. Ch. 196; [1898] 2 Ch. 120) distinguished. Alms Corn Charity, In re; Charity Commissioners v. Bode, 71 L. J. Ch. 76; [1901] 2 Ch. 750; 85 L. T. 593—Stirling, J.

Notice of Charge—Conveyance subject to "payments and outgoing ecclesiastical and civil charged upon or payable out of" Hereditaments.—The purchaser mortgaged the property, and the mortgage was made subject to the like charge as the conveyance on sale and in like terms. The mortgagee had made no enquiry and had no express notice of the charge, and was now in possession of the land:—Held, that the mortgagee ought to have enquired as to the existence of such a charge, and, no enquiry having been made, that she took with notice of and was liable to it. Id.

9. LEASES BY MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE.

Lease by Mortgagor—Surrender of Lease—Consent of Mortgagee.—A mortgagor who has granted a lease under the power given him by section 18 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, cannot accept a surrender of the lease without the concurrence of the mortgagee. Municipal Permanent Investment Building Society v. Smith (58 L. J. Q.B. 61; 22 Q.B. D. 70) applied. Robins v. Whyte, 75 L. J. K.B. 38; [1906] 1 K.B. 125; 94 L. T. 287; 54 W. R. 105; 22 T. L. R. 106—Warrington, J.

Lease by Mortgagor in Possession—Landlord and Tenant—Sporting Rights—"Occupation lease."—Section 18 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, enables a mortgagor in possession of land, part of which is at the date of the mortgage leased to tenants reserving sporting rights, to bind the mortgagee by a lease of the remainder of the land together with sporting rights over the whole of the land. Browne v. Peto, 69 L. J. Q.B. 869; [1900] 2 Q.B. 653; 83 L. T. 303; 49 W. R. 324—C.A.

Lease by Mortgagee—Appointment of Receiver—Distress.—In 1896 a house was let to K. by the defendant, who was at that time a mortgagor in possession. There was some dispute as to the first quarter's rent, and part of it was never in fact paid, but with this exception rent was regularly paid. In July, 1898, the mortgagee appointed a receiver. In 1899 the mortgagor asked the receiver to distrain for the first quarter's rent, and on his declining to do so put in a distress:—Held, that the effect of the appointment of a receiver was to deprive the mortgagor of the power of distress, and that the distress was illegal. Woolston v. Ross, 69 L. J. Ch. 363; [1900] 1 Ch. 788; 82 L. T. 21; 48 W. R. 556; 64 J. P. 264—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Breach of Covenant—Action by Mortgagee for Damages.—Semble, it is no objection to an action by a mortgagee for damages for breach of covenant in a lease that he has not realized his security to test its sufficiency. Molynaux v. Richard, 75 L. J. Ch. 39; [1906] 1 Ch. 34; 93 L. T. 698; 54 W. R. 177; 22 T. L. R. 76—Kekewich, J.

Action by Mortgagor—Lease Granted before Mortgage.—A mortgagor cannot as reversioner sue for possession of the mortgaged property and damages, on the ground of breach of a covenant in a lease granted before the mortgage. Matthews v. Usher (69 L. J. Q.B. 856; [1900] 2 Q.B. 535) followed. Id.

Lease by Mortgagee and Mortgagor.—Where a lease is granted by a first mortgagee and the mortgagor, the lessee must take by the better title. Since the Conveyancing Act the mortgagor if in possession can give the better title. Such a lessee will therefore be bound by the covenant of the mortgagor contained in a second mortgage, and will not be deemed to take under the paramount title of the first mortgagee. John Brothers Abergarw Brewery Co. v. Holmes, 69 L. J. Ch. 149; [1900] 1 Ch. 188; 81 L. T. 779.

10. REDEMPTION.

Notice to Pay Off—Tender after Notice—Withdrawal of Notice.—A mortgagee who had given notice to the mortgagor to pay off the principal moneys and interest owing on the mortgage was not entitled to withdraw the notice without the mortgagor's consent. Santley v. Wilde, 68 L. J. Ch. 681; [1899] 1 Ch. 747; 80 L. T. 154; 47 W. R. 297—Byrne, J. See s.c. in C.A., supra.

Payment off—Tender—Cheque instead of Cash—Solicitor's Authority.—A solicitor, having authority from the mortgagees to accept a tender of the amount due under the mortgage, has no implied authority to accept the tender of a cheque in lieu of cash, so as to make such a tender good in law as against the mortgagees. Baumberg v. Life Interests and Reversionary Securities Corporation, 66 L. J. Ch. 127; [1897] 1 Ch. 171; 75 L. T. 637; 45 W. R. 246—Keke-wich, J. Affirmed on the facts, 67 L. J. Ch. 118; [1898] 1 Ch. 27; 77 L. T. 506—C.A.

Amount Recoverable—Covenant for Payment—Joint-Account Clause—Payment to Partner—Implied Agency—Survivorship.—Payment to one of two joint creditors is a good discharge of a joint debt. A partner has no implied authority to receive payment of a debt due to his co-partner in his individual capacity. The amount recoverable upon a covenant for repayment of the principal moneys secured by a mortgage is not necessarily the only relevant consideration in determining the amount recoverable in foreclosure or redemption proceedings. Where therefore a payment was made on account of a mortgage debt to the partner of one of two mortgagees entitled under a deed which contained the usual joint-account clause, the payment was held bad at law and in equity, although the partner mortgagee survived his co-mortgagee. Matson v. Dennis (4 De G. J. & S. 345) followed. Powell v. Brodhurst, 70 L. J. Ch. 587; [1901] 2 Ch. 160; 84 L. T. 620; 49 W. R. 532—Farwell, J.

Trust Fund—Right of Mortgagee to Receive Whole of Fund Mortgaged.—Trustees of a fund which is mortgaged are, under section 22, subsection 1 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, if they act honestly, and without notice of anything wrong, safe in handing over the money to the mortgagee upon his receipt, and are not concerned to enquire whether any money remains due on the mortgage or not. They are not, however, obliged to do so in all cases, and if there is any circumstance which makes it reasonable for the trustees to decline to be satisfied with the statutory receipt they will be justified in paying the money into Court under the Trustee Act, 1893. Bell, In re; Jeffery v. Sayles (65 L. J. Ch. 188; [1896] 1 Ch. 1), approved. Hockey v. Western, 67 L. J. Ch. 166; [1898] 1 Ch. 350; 78 L. T. 1; 46 W. R. 312—C.A.

Mortgagee in Possession—Accounts—Sale-moneys—Rents and Profits—Rests—Practice.—In taking the accounts in a mortgagee's redemption action against a mortgagee in possession, and in the absence from the order, according to the practice, of any direction for making any rests in such accounts, the account of rents and profits, unlike that of purchase-moneys, should be taken as a whole without rests. Wrigley v. Gill (74 L. J. Ch. 160; [1905] 1 Ch. 241) approved. Thompson v. Hudson (40 L. J. Ch. 28; L. R. 10 Eq. 497) explained. Ainsworth v. Wilding, 74 L. J. Ch. 256; [1905] 1 Ch. 435; 92 L. T. 679; 53 W. R. 281—Joyce, J.

Consolidation—Express Contract—Different Properties.—The owner of freehold property created thereon three different mortgages, all dated after 1882, the second being subject to the first, and the third to the two prior mortgages. The first mortgage expressly provided that section 17 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, should not apply in respect to redemption of the mortgage thereby created. The other mortgages were silent with regard to consolidation. The third mortgage included property other than that comprised in the earlier mortgages. The first and third mortgages subsequently became vested in the second mortgagees. Upon an application by the trustees in bankruptcy of the mortgagor for a declaration that they were entitled to redeem the third mortgage without redeeming the other two,—Held, that the proviso in the first mortgage expressly reserved the mortgagee's right of consolidation, and that, as there was nothing to exclude either of the other mortgages from the benefit of the proviso, the second mortgagees were entitled to consolidate, and the trustees were not entitled to the declaration for which they asked. Semble, section 17 applies only to cases where the several mortgages include different properties. Salmon, In re; Trustee, ex parte, 72 L. J. K.B. 125; [1903] 1 K.B. 147; 87 L. T. 654; 51 W. R. 288; 10 Manson, 22—Wright, J. And see infra, CONSOLIDATION AND TACKING.

Option of Purchase to be Exercised before Time Fixed for Repayment—“Once a mortgage always a mortgage”—Clog on Equity of Redemption—Conditional Sale—Independent Transactions.—In July, 1898, the defendant was indebted to the plaintiffs in the sum of 5,000*l.* and interest, which was secured by an agreement dated April 23, 1896, and certain mortgages dated July 4, 1896, and June 27, 1898, on the defendant's ship, the Norfolk, and other property. The agreement contained an option of partnership to be exercised by the plaintiffs within two years from its date. The plaintiffs did not exercise the option within the two years. By an agreement dated July 9, 1898, and made between the plaintiffs and the defendant (after reciting that the time limited by the mortgage of the Norfolk for the repayment of the loan having expired, the plaintiffs had applied to the defendant to pay off the mortgage, and that the defendant, being unable to do so, had requested the plaintiffs to extend the time for such repayment), the time for repayment was extended for a further period of five years, which would expire on July 9, 1903, and an option was given to the plaintiffs by the defendant at any time within the five years to enter into a partnership with him, on the terms (inter alia) that the consideration to be paid by the plaintiffs for a half-share of the partnership should be the release by them of the 5,000*l.* and interest, and that the partnership assets should comprise the Norfolk. On February 24, 1900, the plaintiffs exercised the option reserved to them by the agreement of July 9, 1898, and elected to enter into partnership with the defendant, but the defendant refused to enter into such partnership. The plaintiffs thereupon commenced an action claiming specific performance of the agreement, or in the alternative damages for breach of it:—Held, by the COURT OF APPEAL (affirming BUCKLEY, J., on different grounds), that the agreement of July 9 was an independent transaction, and not part of the mortgage transactions, and ought to be supported as a fair contract for the purchase of the mortgaged property by the mortgagees.

Lisle v. Reeve, 71 L. J. Ch. 42; [1902] 1 Ch. 53; 85 L. T. 464—C.A. Affirming on other grounds, 49 W. R. 188—Buckley, J.

Held, by BUCKLEY, J. (but doubted by the COURT OF APPEAL), that, treating the agreement of July 9 as part of the mortgage transactions, still, inasmuch as the option of purchase was exercised before the date for redemption at law, and therefore before any equity of redemption arose, the doctrine of clogging the equity of redemption had no application. Ib.

Redemption by Puisne Incumbrancer—Costs of Preparing Security—Right to Claim.]—A mortgagee is not entitled to claim payment of the costs incident to the preparation of his mortgage security from a puisne incumbrancer, as a term of redemption. Wales v. Carr, 71 L. J. Ch. 483; [1902] 1 Ch. 860; 86 L. T. 288; 50 W. R. 313—Farwell, J.

Redemption Action—Costs of Mortgagee.]—A customer of a bank deposited certain shares with the bank as security for a loan, with a memorandum of deposit. The bank afterwards obtained judgment against her in respect of the debt, when an arrangement was made under which her husband guaranteed payment of part of it by instalments. The bank sued him on his guarantee, and obtained judgment with costs; and, although the wife's debt to them had now been satisfied, they declined to retransfer the shares to her until these costs were paid. In an action by her against the bank to obtain a retransfer of the shares or their value:—Held, that the action was in effect one of redemption; that the costs of the action against the husband were properly incurred, and the wife was bound to indemnify him against them; and that the bank were entitled to the benefit of the indemnity and to retain the shares till payment of the costs of the action against him, on the principle laid down in National Provincial Bank of England v. Games (55 L. J. Ch. 576; 81 Ch. D. 582). Sachs v. Ashby, 88 L. T. 393—Joyce, J.

Leaseholds—Voluntary Assignment—Payment of Mortgage Debt by Assignor's Executors—Liability of Assignee to Contribute.]—The assignee of leasehold property, the deeds of which have been deposited by the assignor with a bank as security for payments owing on an account, is not liable to contribute to the payment of the debt to the bankers which the executors of the assignor have paid. Ker v. Ker (Ir. R. 4 Eq. 15) explained and distinguished. Darby's Estate, In re; Rendall v. Darby, 76 L. J. Ch. 639; [1907] 2 Ch. 465; 97 L. T. 900—Warrington, J.

11. ENFORCING SECURITY.

(a) Entry.

Title by Relation Back—Mortgagee.]—The entry of a mortgagee relates back to the time when he had the right to enter, so as to support an action against a wrong-doer for a trespass committed after the accrual of the right and before actual entry. Barnett v. Guilford (Earl) (24 L. J. Ex. 281; 11 Ex. 19) followed. Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation v. Ilford Gas Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 799; [1905] 2 K.B. 493; 93 L. T. 381; 21 T. L. R. 610—C.A.

(b) Receiver.

Receiver Appointed by Mortgagee—Arrears of Interest Due at Date of Appointment—Duty to Pay Same.]—A receiver appointed by a mortgagee under the powers conferred by section 19 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, is bound under section 24, sub-section 8 of that Act to pay arrears of interest due to the mortgagee at the time of the appointment, and not merely interest accruing due after that date. National Bank v. Kenney, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 197—V.C.

— Powers of.]—A receiver appointed by a mortgagee in pursuance of either an express power contained in the mortgage-deed, or the implied power conferred by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, is in the exercise of his duties the agent of the mortgagor for all purposes. He is not restricted to matters between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, but may affect the mortgagor's relations with third persons. Hale, In re; Lilley v. Foad, 79 L. T. 463; 47 W. R. 174—Byrne, J. See s.c. in C.A., infra.

Receiver and Manager—Appointment of, after Mortgagor's Death—Unsecured Debt.]—The power to appoint a receiver and manager conferred by a mortgage-deed is not revoked by the death of the mortgagor, and a receiver and manager of a business appointed by a mortgagee under such a power after the death of the mortgagor, becomes the agent of the mortgagor's executor to the extent of his assets. Hale, In re; Lilley v. Foad, 68 L. J. Ch. 517; [1899] 2 Ch. 107; 80 L. T. 827; 47 W. R. 579—C.A.

Whether a receiver, acting under the powers conferred by section 24 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, can pay an unsecured debt of the mortgagor out of the moneys received by him as receiver, having regard to the fact that sub-section 8 of section 24 only confers power to apply such moneys in payment of debts and charges which affect the mortgaged property, quære. Ib.

Action by Puisne Incumbrancer to Enforce Security—Receiver—Right of Prior Incumbrancer to Rents in Receiver's Hands.]—A prior incumbrancer who intervenes in an action by a subsequent incumbrancer to enforce his security is entitled to the rents in the hands of a receiver appointed in the action which have been received after the date when he (the prior incumbrancer) first applies to the Court for the discharge of the receiver. Preston v. Tunbridge Wells Opera-house, Lim., 72 L. J. Ch. 774; [1903] 2 Ch. 323; 88 L. T. 53—Farwell, J.

Account—Allowances—Costs of Repairs—Receiver—Mortgagee not in Possession.]—A receiver appointed by a mortgagee under the powers of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, cannot, on the account taken in a foreclosure action of what is due to the mortgagee, be allowed any costs of repairs to the mortgaged property, except costs of necessary or proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee as provided by clause 3 of sub-section 8 of section 24 of the Act. It is immaterial in such a case that the receiver be the manager of a society which has guaranteed the mortgagee against loss in respect of his security, and that the costs of repairs in question have been paid out of moneys supplied by the society. Where the mortgagee by whom such money spent on repairs is to be taken to have been expended is a first mortgagee, he has no right or authority to charge it against the second mortgagee. White v. Metcalf, 72 L. J. Ch. 712; [1903] 2 Ch. 567; 89 L. T. 164; 52 W. R. 280—Kekewich, J. And see PRACTICE.

(c) Foreclosure.

Action for—Parties—Executrix only made Defendant—Rector and Churchwardens Residuary Legatees.]—A testator, after making certain bequests, gave to his wife an estate for life (determinable on certain events) in the residue of his estate, with remainder over to the rector and churchwardens of W. C. Church. The estate of the testator was, however, mortgaged to the extent of 30,000*l.* In a foreclosure action by the mortgagee against the wife, the sole legal representative of the testator, the wife entered an appearance but delivered no defence. On a motion for judgment it was ordered that the rector and churchwardens of W. C. Church be made parties to the action. Watts v. Lane, 84 L. T. 144—Joyce, J.

Parties—Debenture-Holders—Floating Security.]—The holders of debentures (subsequent in date to a specific mortgage on a company's property) which constitute a "floating charge" on all the property of the company are necessary parties to an action for foreclosure of the mortgage, even although their charge has not yet crystallised. Wallace v. Evershed, 68 L. J. Ch. 415; [1899] 1 Ch. 891; 80 L. T. 523; 6 Manson, 351—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Accounts and Enquiries, Foreclosure or Sale—Summons for Directions.]—An order for accounts and enquiries, foreclosure or sale, if made without objection on the hearing of a summons for directions under Order XXX., cannot subsequently be set aside solely on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The Court has jurisdiction to make an order for foreclosure in chambers on a summons under Order XV. Whether there is any jurisdiction to make the usual order for accounts and enquiries, foreclosure or sale, on the hearing of a summons for directions under Order XXX., quære. Horton v. Bosson, 80 L. T. 435—C.A.

Account—Allowances—Costs of Repairs—Receiver—Mortgagee not in Possession.]—A receiver appointed by a mortgagee under the powers of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, cannot, on the account taken in a foreclosure action of what is due to the mortgagee, be allowed any costs of repairs to the mortgaged property, except costs of necessary or proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee as provided by clause 3 of sub-section 8 of section 24 of the Act. It is immaterial in such a case that the receiver be the manager of a society which has guaranteed the mortgagee against loss in respect of his security, and that the costs of repairs in question have been paid out of moneys supplied by the society. Where the mortgagee by whom such money spent on repairs is to be taken to have been expended is a first mortgagee, he has no right or authority to charge it against the second mortgagee. White v. Metcalf, 72 L. J. Ch. 712; [1903] 2 Ch. 567; 89 L. T. 164—Kekewich, J.

Decree—Bankruptcy Court.]—By consent of the parties, the Bankruptcy Court will, in a proper case, make the decree for accounts and foreclosure usual in a foreclosure action in the Chancery Division. Salmon, In re; Trustee, ex parte, 72 L. J. K.B. 125; [1903] 1 K.B. 147; 87 L. T. 654; 52 W. R. 288; 10 Manson, 22—Wright, J.

Counterclaim for Redemption—Arrears of Interest.]—Notwithstanding that in a foreclosure action, where the plaintiff is not claiming under the covenant in the mortgage, he can only recover six years' arrears of interest, yet where a mortgagor claims to redeem (this not being a suit to recover interest within the meaning of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833), he will be allowed to redeem only on payment of all arrears of interest. Edmunds v. Waugh (35 L. J. Ch. 234; L. R. 1 Eq. 418) followed. Dingle v. Coppen, 68 L. J. Ch. 337; [1899] 1 Ch. 726; 79 L. T. 693; 47 W. R. 279—Byrne, J.

Covenant to Pay at Future Date with Interest then Due—Separate Covenant to Pay Interest Half-Yearly—Proviso for Redemption—Other Provisoes—Construction.]—A mortgage contained a covenant to pay the principal on January 1, 1914, with interest that might be then due, and to pay interest from the date thereof half-yearly. The proviso for redemption was that if on January 1, 1914, the mortgagor should pay the principal, with interest in the meantime that might be due and unpaid, the mortgagee would reconvey. There was also a proviso that if interest was paid on the half-yearly days appointed, or within twenty-one days after each of such days, the mortgagee would not call in the principal sum before January 1, 1914. The mortgagor made default in payment of interest on July 1, 1905. The mortgagee claimed to foreclose:—Held, that no condition had been broken according to the tenor of the deed, default in payment on January 1, 1914, not having arisen, and that the claim for foreclosure must be dismissed. Turner, In re; Turner v. Spencer (43 W. R. 153), followed. Williams v. Morgan, 75 L. J. Ch. 480; [1906] 1 Ch. 804; 94 L. T. 473—Swinfen Eady, J.

Choses in Action—Shares in Limited Company.]—The deposit of a certificate of shares to secure the repayment of money amounts to an agreement to transfer the shares by way of mortgage, and the deposit is entitled to a decree for foreclosure, and is not restricted to a remedy by sale. Carter v. Wake (46 L. J. Ch. 841; 4 Ch. D. 605) distinguished. Harold v. Plenty, 70 L. J. Ch. 562; [1901] 2 Ch. 314; 85 L. T. 45; 49 W. R. 646; 8 Manson, 304—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Deposit of Shares—Statute-barred Debt.]—The time at which a bar to an action for foreclosure arises under or by analogy to the Statute of Limitations is not that at which the personal remedy ceases, but that at which the remedy against the property which is the subject of the charge is taken away. London and Midland Bank v. Mitchell, 68 L. J. Ch. 568; [1899] 2 Ch. 161; 81 L. T. 263; 47 W. R. 602—Stirling, J.

There is no provision in any Statute of Limitations with reference to personal property similar to the provisions contained in the Real Property Limitation Act, 1883, whereby the title to land is extinguished after a certain period; so that, though a debt may be barred after six years by the Limitation Act, 1623, in the sense that no personal action can be brought to recover it, yet the debt is not at an end and a mortgagee's right to the property is not destroyed. Ib.

Costs—Solicitor—Mortgagee—Foreclosure Judgment in 1893—Profit—Costs—Taxation in 1898.—Where a foreclosure order has been made prior to the Mortgagees' Legal Costs Act, 1895, finally settling the terms of redemption on payment of principal, interest, and costs, a solicitor-mortgagee will not be entitled to the benefit of section 3 of that Act because the taxation of his costs takes place under an order made after the Act has come into force. Eyre v. Wynn-Mackenzie (65 L. J. Ch. 194; [1896] 1 Ch. 135) followed. Day v. Kelland, 70 L. J. Ch. 3; [1900] 2 Ch. 745; 83 L. T. 447; 49 W. R. 66—C.A.

Foreclosure—Second Action for Principal and Interest—Abuse of Process.—See PRACTICE.

(d) Sale.

Power of—Right to Exercise—Agent.—An agent merely authorised to receive a mortgage debt cannot by virtue of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 21, sub-s. 4, execute the power of sale conferred on mortgagees by section 19 of the Act. Dowson & Jenkins' Contract, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 684; [1904] 2 Ch. 219; 91 L. T. 121—C.A.

Implied Power of—Shares—Notice Demanding Payment.—In cases unaffected by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 19, the law is that a mortgagee of stock or shares may sell the same at any time after the day originally fixed for payment of the loan, or, if no day was originally fixed, then after reasonable notice has been given to the mortgagor and default made by him in payment after such notice. De Verges v. Sandeman, Clark & Co., 71 L. J. Ch. 328; [1902] 1 Ch. 579; 86 L. T. 269; 50 W. R. 404—C.A.

Requisites of Notice—Reasonable Time—Measure of Damages.—The requisites of such a notice considered. Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The object of such notice is to give to the mortgagor a reasonable opportunity to redeem, and it must fix a day certain for payment by the mortgagor. Per STIRLING, L.J.—Such notice must give a reasonable opportunity to the mortgagor to pay what is due under the mortgage, and it is at least desirable that it should fix a day for that purpose, and also convey to the mind of the mortgagor that if he fails to avail himself of the opportunity to redeem, the mortgagee will be in a position to put in force his rights. Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—The notice need not state that the mortgagee will sell; it is sufficient that the notice requires payment of the mortgage-money; but before the power can be exercised a reasonable time must elapse after the notice requiring payment. A mistake as to the amount due will not destroy the effect of the notice. Ib.

Brokers who advanced the money on a purchase of shares by their client had the shares registered in their names under a verbal agreement to hold them by way of mortgage to secure the debt. The mortgagees frequently wrote pressing for payment. In August, 1898, a reconstruction of the company was proposed, under which assenting shareholders were to obtain new shares with 3s. liability in lieu of the old shares. On August 22, 1898, the mortgagees wrote to the mortgagor asking whether he intended to participate in the scheme, or whether he would adopt the only other alternative of allowing his shares to be forfeited. They also gave him notice that they would not take up the new shares (which must be done before a named day) on his behalf; also that, as they were unprotected by any security, they should take any necessary steps to recover the debt owing to them. The mortgagor did not pay, and the mortgagees ultimately took up the new shares, paying the 3s. per share themselves; and acting under the belief that they were absolute owners thereof, sold the shares, which subsequently to the sale rose in value. The mortgagor, who did not know of the sale till after the rise in value, claimed damages for a wrongful sale:—Held (dissentiente VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.), that sufficient notice had been given by the mortgagees to entitle them to exercise their implied power of sale over the old shares; that such notice remained in force as to the new shares acquired under the reconstruction scheme, and that the sale could be justified under the power of sale though made by the mortgagees under the mistaken belief that they were absolute owners. Held, by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., that no sufficient notice had been given by the mortgagees to enable them to exercise their implied power of sale, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for a wrongful sale, which, however, under the circumstances of this case, must be estimated at the price of the shares at the time of sale (less the amount owing to the mortgagees), and not at the highest price which the shares had subsequently obtained. Ib.

Sale of Part of Security—Preservation of Remainder.—A mortgagee of shares is justified at any time in selling part of his security in order to make payments necessary for the preservation of the remainder. De Verges v. Sandeman, Clark & Co., 70 L. J. Ch. 47; [1901] 1 Ch. 70; 83 L. T. 706; 49 W. R. 167—Farwell, J.

Easement of Light.—A mortgagee who bona fide sells a portion of the mortgaged property under his statutory power of sale grants it so as to carry all legal incidents ordinarily accompanying a grant—for example, a right to light over the unsold portion. Born v. Turner, 69 L. J. Ch. 593; [1900] 2 Ch. 211; 83 L. T. 148; 48 W. R. 697—Byrne, J.

Sale under Power—Friendly Society—Sale by Auction—Purchase by Officer of Society—Sale Set Aside.—Where a friendly society, being mortgagees, acting by their investment committee in exercise of their power of sale put up the mortgaged property for sale by public auction, and the property was sold under suspicious circumstances to a member of the investment committee,—Held, that the onus was on the member to prove the fairness of the transaction, and that in the absence of such proof the sale must be set aside. Martinson v. Clowes (51 L. J. Ch. 594; 21 Ch. D. 857; affirmed, 52 L. T. 706) followed. Hodson v. Deans, 72 L. J. Ch. 751; [1903] 2 Ch. 647; 89 L. T. 92; 52 W. R. 122—Joyce, J.

Sale of Portion of Mortgaged Property—Action for Redemption—Taking Accounts—Rests.—It is not the practice in taking the account against a mortgagee in possession who has sold a portion of the mortgaged property, that a rest as at the date of sale should be taken of the rents and profits as well as of the principal and interest. Thompson v. Hudson (40 L. J. Ch. 28; L. R. 10 Eq. 497) distinguished. Wrigley v. Gill, 74 L. J. Ch. 160; [1905] 1 Ch. 241.

Lease—Goodwill—Subsequent Incumbrances—Marshalling—Apportionment.—A mortgagor by deed dated February 24, 1894, mortgaged a leasehold house, in which he was carrying on the business of a restaurant keeper, to A. This mortgage included the lease, the goodwill of the business, the fittings, and fixtures. On August 16, 1894, the mortgagor mortgaged the house alone to B., and on August 22, 1894, gave a charge on the lease, goodwill, fixtures, and fittings to C. The interest on the mortgage fell into arrear, and the property was sold for 1,300*l.*, which in the assignment was apportioned, 160*l.* for the lease, 1,000*l.* for the goodwill, and 140*l.* for the fixtures. B., the holder of the second mortgage, claimed to be entitled to the whole proceeds. It was said that it was quite impossible to sever the goodwill from the lease. For C. it was said that the principle of Barnes v. Raester (1 Y. & C. C.C. 401) applied, and that the purchase-money ought to be apportioned between the goodwill and the house:—Held, that the purchase-money must be apportioned. Baglioni v. Cavalli, 83 L. T. 500; 49 W. R. 236—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Order Nisi for Foreclosure—Exercise of the Power of Sale.—An order nisi for foreclosure does not extinguish the power of sale of the mortgagee over the mortgaged property, but, until foreclosure absolute, the power can only be exercised by leave of the Court. Stevens v. Theatres, Lim., 72 L. J. Ch. 764; [1903] 1 Ch. 857; 88 L. T. 458; 51 W. R. 535—Farwell, J.

Purchase under Power of Sale by Solicitor of Mortgagee—Validity.—As a mortgagee, selling under a power of sale in the mortgage, is not a trustee for the mortgagor, he may in good faith sell to his own solicitor who has acted for him in the mortgage, though not in the sale. Such a sale is not void, but possibly voidable, and might under certain circumstances be impeached by the selling mortgagee, but not by the mortgagor, who never stood in the position of client to the solicitor, especially where the mortgagor, having full knowledge of the facts, stands by for ten years without taking any steps to impeach the sale. Nutt v. Easton, 68 L. J. Ch. 367; [1899] 1 Ch. 873; 80 L. T. 853; 47 W. R. 430—Cozens-Hardy, J. Affirmed, 69 L. J. Ch. 46; [1900] 1 Ch. 29; 81 L. T. 530—C.A.

Sale by Mortgagor—Notice of Charge before Completion—Priority.—See Jared v. Clements, 72 L. J. Ch. 291, post, VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

12. CONSOLIDATION AND TACKING.

Consolidation—Right of Sole Mortgagee to Consolidate Prior Mortgage Vested in Him Jointly with Another.—The right to consolidate two mortgages arises when the title of the mortgagees in respect to each mortgage can be shown to be vested in one and the same hand, and this fact must be established in order to bring into operation the doctrine of consolidation; consequently, in the case of a mortgage of freehold hereditaments in which A. and another were mortgagees advancing money on a joint account, and a second mortgage of the same hereditaments and certain leasehold premises in which A. was sole mortgagee, although there is a possibility of the mortgages becoming vested in one and the same hand, namely, in A. upon his surviving his co-mortgagee, and notwithstanding the fact that A. could give a good receipt for the moneys secured on both mortgages, the doctrine of consolidation does not apply. Beevor v. Luck (L. R. 4 Eq. 537) disapproved. Riley v. Hall, 79 L. T. 244—Stirling, J.

— Express Contract—Equity of Redemption—Subsequent Mortgages with Notice—Priority.—A mortgagor gave the defendants a first mortgage of a leasehold property, Whiteacre, and on the next day mortgaged it, subject to the first mortgage, to the plaintiffs. He subsequently mortgaged Blackacre and Greenacre to the defendants, with notice of the second mortgage to the plaintiffs. Prior in date to all these mortgages he had given to the defendants a mortgage of Blackacre, which contained a provision that he should not be entitled to redeem without first paying all other moneys that might be secured to the mortgagees by any other mortgage executed by the mortgagor. The plaintiffs sued for redemption of Whiteacre:—Held, that the defendants as first mortgagees could consolidate their prior mortgage on Blackacre with their mortgage on Whiteacre, but not their subsequent mortgages. Hughes v. Britannia Permanent Benefit Building Society, 75 L. J. Ch. 739; [1906] 2 Ch. 607; 95 L. T. 327; 22 T. L. R. 806—Kekewich, J.

— Tacking—Right of Surety for one Debt—Principal Debtor or Surety—Construction of Deed.—In 1821 a mortgage was created on estate A to secure 1,500*l.* In 1842 a mortgage was created on the equity of redemption in estate A and also on other real estate to secure 2,500*l.* In 1874 the 1,500*l.* mortgage was transferred to the owner of the 2,500*l.* mortgage, and by the deed of transfer the then tenant for life of both estates by way of collateral security personally covenanted with the transferee for payment of the 1,500*l.*, subject to a proviso that, as between the covenantor on the one part, and estate A and the owners thereof on the other part, estate A should be the primary fund for payment of the 1,500*l.*, and the covenant should be only a collateral security, but that the transferee should be at liberty to resort to either means for enforcing payment in preference to the other means. In an action by the transferee's representatives to enforce payment of the 1,500*l.* by the covenantor's executors, and for foreclosure or sale of both estates,—Held, by BYRNE, J., on the authority of Farebrother v. Wodehouse (26 L. J. Ch. 81, 240; 23 Beav. 18), that the transferee was entitled to tack or consolidate the two sums of 1,500*l.* and 2,500*l.* as against the right of the covenantor on payment of the 1,500*l.* to call as surety for a transfer to himself of that mortgage. Held also, by BYRNE, J., that the covenantor was not entitled to a rateable proportion of the two consolidated securities. Held, on appeal, by ROMER, L.J., and STIRLING, L.J. (dissentiente VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.), that the covenantor was in the position of a principal debtor, and was not entitled to the rights of a surety as against the transferee, and that on this ground the decision of BYRNE, J., ought to be affirmed in accordance with the law stated by EARL SELBORNE, L.C., in Duncan, Fox & Co. v. North and South Wales Bank (50 L. J. Ch. 355, 357, 358; 6 App. Cas. 1, 11). Held, by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., that, according to the true meaning of the deed of transfer, on payment of the 1,500*l.* by the covenantor the transferee was bound to assign to the covenantor the 1,500*l.* mortgage, and that on this ground the decision of BYRNE, J., ought to be reversed. Nicholas v. Ridley, 73 L. J. Ch. 145; [1904] 1 Ch. 192; 89 L. T. 653; 52 W. R. 226—C.A.

Tacking — Collateral Security — Covenant by Surety.—Certain lands were mortgaged in 1821 to secure 1,500*l.* and interest. Subsequently a mortgage comprising the same and other lands was executed, subject to the prior mortgage, to secure 2,500*l.* and interest. By a deed subsequently executed, the 1,500*l.* mortgage was transferred to the holder of the later mortgage for 2,500*l.*; and by this deed the tenant for life of all the mortgaged property covenanted with the transferee as a collateral security only to pay the 1,500*l.*, the transferee to be at liberty to enforce payment by means of either security. Upon action brought by the representatives of the transferee against the executors of the tenant for life to recover the amount due on the securities and claiming a declaration that they were entitled as against the defendant executors to tack the later mortgage to the earlier one, payment of what was due on the earlier mortgage, and foreclosure or sale,—Held,—that the plaintiffs were entitled to tack their securities. Nicholas v. Ridley, 89 L. T. 234—Byrne, J.

13. MERGER.

Lease—Mortgage by Sub-demise—Conveyance of Fee-simple to Lessee—Mortgage of Fee-simple—Intention.—Equitable merger depends upon intention; and the intention must be construed so as to do justice between the parties. A lessee mortgaged his leasehold interest by sub-demise to the defendants, and he afterwards purchased the fee-simple and mortgaged it immediately to the plaintiffs. The defendants took possession under their mortgage:—Held, that the plaintiffs had no better title than their mortgagor, and were not entitled to re-enter on non-payment by the defendants of the rent reserved by the lease. Capital and Counties Bank v. Rhodes, 71 L. J. Ch. 573; 87 L. T. 17—Kekewich, J.

Redemption by Tenant for Life—Reconveyance to Himself—Intention to Keep Alive Charge.]

—A mortgagor who settles the equity of redemption, becoming tenant for life thereof, and who afterwards pays off the mortgage and takes a reconveyance to himself of the mortgaged premises freed from the mortgage debt, is entitled, on proving that he intended to keep the mortgage on foot for his benefit, to have a declaration by the Court to that effect, notwithstanding the form of the reconveyance. Gifford (Lord) v. Fitzhardinge (Lord), 68 L. J. Ch. 529; [1899] 2 Ch. 32; 81 L. T. 106; 47 W. R. 618—North, J.

Mortgage of Fund and Right to Balance

—Assignment to Same Person—Intention to Keep Incumbrance Alive—Merger.]

—Where a person entitled to share in certain property has charged his rights by way of mortgage, and both the charge and the right to receive the balance of the share subject to the charge are assigned to the same person, the charge will not be held to have been merged and extinguished if there is nothing on the face of the assignment or in the nature of the transaction to shew an intention to effect such extinguishment. Liquidation Estates Purchase Co. v. Willoughby, 67 L. J. Ch. 251; [1898] A.C. 321; 78 L. T. 329; 46 W. R. 589—H.L. (E.)

Fund in Another's Hands—Notice of Assignment—Rights of Assignee of Charge.]

—Where a person in possession of a fund has received notice of an assignment of his rights by one of several persons entitled to charges on the fund, and nevertheless wrongfully makes payment out of the fund to the assignor, the rights inter se of the several persons entitled to the charges to what remains of the fund cannot in any way be affected by such payments. The mortgagee of a charge on a fund, or his assignee, when notice of the mortgage has been given to the holder of the fund, cannot be affected by transactions between the holder of the fund and the mortgagor unknown to the mortgagee. Id.

Loan to Pay Off Mortgage—Mortgagor-Trustee

—Equitable Mortgage to Secure Loan—Redemption by True Owner—Rights of Lender—Release.]

—Money was lent to a mortgagor on his promise to pay off a mortgage and transfer it to the lender. The borrower suppressed the fact that he was trustee for his wife of the property mortgaged. He applied some of the money in part payment of the mortgage debt, and gave the lender an equitable mortgage of the property to secure repayment of the loan. In an action by his wife to redeem the charges on her property,—Held, that a charge thereon subsisted in favour of the lender to the extent the loan had been applied in paying off the mortgage, the equitable mortgage to the lender not operating as a release or extinguishment of the charge, nor causing it to become merged therein. Chetwynd v. Allen, 68 L. J. Ch. 160; [1899] 1 Ch. 353; 80 L. T. 110; 47 W. R. 200—Romer, J.

14. TRANSFER.

Statutory Acknowledgment of Consideration.—A statement in statutory form in a statutory form of transfer that the consideration for the transfer has been paid, is sufficient to estop the person making such statement from asserting his title as against any person claiming under the transfer in good faith and for value. Rimmer v. Webster, 71 L. J. Ch. 561; [1902] 2 Ch. 163; 86 L. T. 491; 50 W. R. 517—Farwell, J.

Transfer with Concurrence of Mortgagor—Arrears of Interest Paid by Transferee Treated as Principal Bearing Interest.—Transferee of a mortgage, the mortgagor joining in the transfer, held entitled to treat as principal bearing interest arrears of interest on the original debt due at the date of the transfer, and paid by him to the mortgagee. Agnew v. King, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 471—V.O.

Leasehold—Conveyance of Benefit of Mortgage—Legal Estate in Term.—In a transfer deed of a mortgage of leasehold property made by a sub-demise (not being a transfer of a statutory mortgage within section 27 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881), a conveyance of the "benefit of the said mortgage," without more, will not pass the legal estate in the mortgage term to the transferee. Beachey, In re; Heaton v. Beachey, 73 L. J. Ch. 68; [1904] 1 Ch. 67; 89 L. T. 685; 52 W. R. 309—C.A.

State of Account between Mortgagor and Mortgagee—Negligence—Contemporaneous Deeds.—In 1892 the plaintiff, a tenant for life of freehold property which was subject to a mortgage for 1,500*l.*, put her solicitor in funds for the purpose of paying off the mortgage. The solicitor misappropriated the money and concealed the fraud by continuing to pay interest. The plaintiff did not enquire respecting a reconveyance or receipt for the money nor require the delivery of the deeds. The defendant and his co-trustee (who died before action brought) were also clients of the same solicitor, and on October 4, 1895, forwarded to him a cheque, which the solicitor paid into his private account on the following day. On October 4, 1897, the solicitor took a transfer of the mortgage debt and security to himself, drawing on his firm's account for the consideration-money. On the following day, October 5, 1897, he transferred the mortgage debt and security to the defendant and his co-trustee. It did not appear that the defendant and his co-trustee had bargained with the solicitor for any particular investment for the proceeds of their cheque:—Held, that the two deeds of October 4 and 5, 1897, could not be regarded as part of one transaction; that the solicitor as mortgagee could not have set up the mortgage against the plaintiff, and the defendant as transferee took subject to the state of account between the solicitor and the plaintiff, and was in no better position. A reconveyance of the property was accordingly directed upon the footing that the defendant was a satisfied mortgagee. Turner v. Smith, 70 L. J. Ch. 144; [1901] 1 Ch. 213; 83 L. T. 704; 49 W. R. 186—Byrne, J.

Successive Transfers—Absolute Assignment—Death of Second Transferee—Notice of Assignment by Executor—Solicitor and Client—Advances by Solicitor—Mortgage to Secure Advances—Acknowledgment in Body of Deed—State of Account—Transferee—Constructive Notice.—A solicitor, having advanced money to the defendants, who were his clients, took from them in the name of a nominee a mortgage containing in the body of the deed an acknowledgment of the receipt by the defendants of a sum of 9,200*l.* alleged to have been advanced by the nominee, and a covenant to repay that sum. Having received from another client money to invest on mortgage, the solicitor requested the nominee to transfer the mortgage to that client. The nominee refused to transfer to the client, but subsequently transferred to the solicitor himself by a deed which recited that the principal sum of 9,200*l.* was still due and owing on the security of the mortgage deed. The solicitor then executed a transfer to the client. Neither the solicitor himself nor the transferee gave the defendants any notice of the assignments. On the death of the transferee, his executors, the plaintiffs, gave to the defendants, under section 25, sub-section 6 of the Judicature Act, 1873, notice of the assignment to their testator. In an action by the plaintiffs on the covenant in the mortgage deed,—Held, that there was nothing to prevent them from giving, after the death of their testator, notice in writing under section 25, sub-section 6 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and that they were entitled to sue in their own names. Held, further, that, assuming the amount advanced to the defendants by the solicitor was less than 9,200*l.*, the plaintiffs were nevertheless entitled to recover the full amount, for that, not having either actual or constructive notice of the relation between the defendants and the solicitor or of the state of accounts between them, they were entitled to rely on the acknowledgment in the mortgage deed that the full amount had been advanced. Bickerton v. Walker (55 L. J. Ch. 227; 31 Ch. D. 151) applied. Bateman v. Hunt, 73 L. J. K.B. 782; [1904] 2 K.B. 530; 91 L. T. 331; 52 W. R. 609; 20 T. L. R. 628—C.A.

Fraudulent Sale—Solicitor—Purchase-money Paid to Mortgagee—Payment off of Mortgage—General Agency—Imputed Notice—Priority.—A mortgagor in 1893 mortgaged land to his solicitor, who shortly afterwards transferred the mortgage to a transferee who gave no notice of the transfer to the mortgagor. Afterwards, in 1893 and 1894, the solicitor and the mortgagor, who put himself entirely in the solicitor's hands, conveyed the land to the plaintiff, the conveyances containing false recitals suppressing the mortgage then vested in the transferee. A statement of account was made out by the solicitor between himself and the mortgagor, and the solicitor retained the mortgage debt out of the purchase-money. In an action by the plaintiff claiming a declaration whether the mortgage was a valid and subsisting incumbrance against her,—Held (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dubitante), that the solicitor's knowledge of the transfer must be imputed to the mortgagor, who could not, therefore, justify his payment of the mortgage debt to the solicitor by his actual ignorance of the transfer; that the plaintiff had no better right than the mortgagor, and that the mortgage in the hands of the transferee was therefore a valid and subsisting incumbrance. Dixon v. Winch, 69 L. J. Ch. 465; [1900] 1 Ch. 736; 82 L. T. 437; 48 W. R. 612—C.A.

15. DEVOLUTION AND ADMINISTRATION.

Portions—Mortgage Pursuant to Order of Court to Raise some of Portions—Position of Mortgage as regards Portions not yet Raisable—Priority.]—M. had three daughters, and in the case of two of them, D. and R., he secured by bond or covenant on their respective marriages the payment of a portion of 5,000*l.* after his death to the trustees of their marriage settlements, and an annuity until the 5,000*l.* became payable. By his will M. gave to his third daughter, E., then unmarried, an annuity for life, and in case she should marry he gave a portion of 5,000*l.* for her children attaining twenty-one, and he charged all the three sums of 5,000*l.* on his real estate. The real estate was settled by the will. In 1880 the tenant for life (who was also legal personal representative of M.) commenced an action to get the real estate cleared of the charges. The defendants to that action were the remaindermen. The two portions given to D. and E. were then raisable, and an order was made that those portions should be raised by a mortgage of the estate to be settled by the Judge, together with a sum paid for the enfranchisement of certain copyholds, part of the estate. The annuitant R. and the portioners were served with notice of the judgment. The mortgage was executed, and the money paid into Court and distributed amongst the persons entitled. The mortgage was made by the tenant for life, who was appointed to execute the mortgage for the purpose of conveying the interests of the remaindermen. It contained a recital of the proceedings in the action, and was expressed to be without prejudice to any charge subsisting in the mortgaged property under the will. The mortgagee brought an action for a declaration that his mortgage took priority over the third portion:—Held, that the course of the proceedings and the orders made shewed that the Court in authorising the mortgage had not intended to interfere with the annuity of R., or the portion raisable for her children, and the mortgage did not as regards the money advanced, other than the enfranchisement money, take priority over that annuity and portion. Held, also, by COZENS-HARDY, L.J., that, treating the action as an action for the administration of the unadministered estate of

M., and the annuitant and portioners as legatees whose legacies were payable out of the real estate solely, the Court had jurisdiction to direct the two portions to be raised, and to give the mortgage a title free from the third portion, but the onus was on the mortgagee to shew that what was originally a pari passu charge had been postponed, and he had not done so. Nightingale v. Reynolds, 72 L. J. Ch. 564; [1903] 2 Ch. 236; 88 L. T. 654; 52 W. R. 1—C.A.

Mortgage-debt—Possession by Testator of Mortgaged Property—Continuance of Possession by Administratrix and Tenant for Life—Equity of Redemption Barred—Devolution of Mortgaged Property—Realty or Personality.]—A testator who died in 1864, by his will appointed his widow his executrix, and devised and bequeathed to her all his real and personal estate during widowhood. Subject to this gift he died intestate. At the time of his death the testator was entitled to a mortgage-debt of 1,075*l.*, secured upon certain real estate. In 1861, three years before his death, he entered into possession of the mortgaged property, and so remained until his death. After his death his widow, who did not marry again, went into possession, and so remained until her death in 1900:—Held, that, although the equity of redemption in the property had since the testator's death become barred by the Statute of Limitations, the property devolved upon the testator's legal personal representative as personality. Flack v. Longmate (8 Beav. 420) followed. Ellis v. Guavas (2 Ch. Ca. 50) explained. Loveridge, In re; Drayton v. Loveridge, 71 L. J. Ch. 865; [1902] 2 Ch. 859; 87 L. T. 294—Buckley, J.

Freehold Land—Mortgagee in Possession—Partial Intestacy—Reversionary Interest in Mortgage—Equity of Redemption Barred—Personalty or Realty—Conversion.]—A mortgagee, who since 1861 had been in possession of freehold land the subject of the mortgage, died in 1864, having by will given his residuary real and personal estate to his wife during widowhood. As to the reversionary interest, after his wife's death or re-marriage, he died intestate. His widow and brother were under the Statute of Distributions entitled to his personal estate. In 1879 the equity of redemption was barred by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874. The brother died intestate in 1880 in the lifetime of the widow (who never re-married):—Held, that in 1879 a moiety of the reversion of the freeholds vested beneficially in the brother and passed on his death to his co-heiresses. Loveridge In re; Pearce v. Marsh, 73 L. J. Ch. 15; [1904] 1 Ch. 518; 89 L. T. 503; 52 W. R. 138—Buckley, J.

Marshalling—Legacies Charged on Lands—Mortgage of Portion of Lands Charged—Covenant against Incumbrances.]—A B devised Blackacre and Whiteacre to C D, subject to legacies in favour of M N. C D mortgaged Whiteacre to a bank to secure 7,000*l.* The mortgage contained a covenant against incumbrances. After C D's death, in an action to administer his real and personal estate, Whiteacre was sold, and the legacies were paid out of the proceeds of the sale, thereby nearly sweeping away the fund out of which the mortgage debt was payable. Blackacre was subsequently sold:—Held, that the mortgagees were, under the doctrine of marshalling, entitled to resort to the fund produced by the sale of Blackacre for payment of the mortgage in priority to simple contract creditors of the deceased C. D. M'Carthy v. M'Cartie, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 100—C.A.

Whether the other circumstances above stated, apart from the covenant against incumbrances contained in the mortgage, would have entitled the bank to resort to the proceeds of the sale of the unmortgaged lands—quære. Ib.

Marriage Settlement—Representation that Lands are Unincumbered—Contribution to Charge—Right of Settled Lands to Indemnity—Purchaser for Value of Unsettled Lands—Marshalling.—The owner of two estates subject to a mortgage settled one of them on his daughter's marriage. There was no covenant against incumbrances in the settlement, but a verbal representation was made previously to the execution of it by the settlor to the intended husband that the estate was free from incumbrances, and it was conveyed without reference to incumbrances. The other estate passed under the settlor's will to his widow, who conveyed to a purchaser for value with notice of the settlement, but not of the verbal representation:—Held, that the purchased estate was bound to indemnify the settled estate from the mortgage debt. Averall v. Wade (Ll. & G. 252, temp. Sugden) followed. Barnes v. Raxter (1 Y. & C. C.C. 401) explained and distinguished. Tighe v. Dolphin, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 305—M.R.

Security by Partner for Partnership Debt—Death of Mortgagor—Partnership Assets Sufficient to Pay Joint Debts—Exoneration of Land Charged.—Real estate belonging to a partner and mortgaged by him to secure a partnership debt is not primarily liable to be applied in payment of the mortgage debt. If at the time of the death of that partner the joint assets are sufficient to pay the joint debts in full, no liability in respect of the mortgage falls on his estate. A dispute between the legatees of his personality and the devisee of the mortgaged land as to the incidence of the liability is therefore not a dispute between "persons claiming through or under the deceased person," within the meaning of Locke-King's Act, and the legatees cannot call upon the devisee to discharge the mortgage. Ritson, In re; Ritson v. Ritson, 63 L. J. Ch. 77; [1899] 1 Ch. 128; 79 L. T. 455; 47 W. R. 213—C.A.

Power of Sale—Surplus Proceeds to be Paid to Mortgagor, his "Heirs or assigns"—Mortgagor a Lunatic at Time of Sale—Right to Surplus—Real or Personal Estate—Conversion.—On a sale of real estate by a mortgagee under a power of sale in the lifetime of the mortgagor, surplus proceeds of sale are personal estate of the mortgagor notwithstanding that the mortgage deed directs them to be paid to the mortgagor, his "heirs or assigns," and that the mortgagor was a lunatic from before the date of the sale till his death. *Grange, In re; Chadwick v. Residuary Real and Personal Estate—Trust for Conversion—Money Charged upon Land—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874.—Where a mortgagee's right of action, in respect of a sum of money charged upon proceeds of sale of land, is barred under section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, the mortgage is not dead; and, if money representing the property charged is paid into Court, the mortgagor can only obtain payment of it out of Court upon condition of his doing equity and satisfying the mortgage. *Lloyd, In re; Lloyd v. 2. ACCIDENTS, FATAL (LORD CAMPBELL'S ACT).

Negligence Causing Death—Action by Father of Child—Damages—Funeral Expenses.—An action cannot be maintained either under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (commonly called Lord Campbell's Act), or at common law, by a parent for the funeral expenses of a child whose death has been caused by the negligence of another person. Clark v. London General Omnibus Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 907; [1906] 2 K.B. 648; 95 L. T. 435—C.A.

Action against Public Body—Right to Sue within Six Months of Ceasing of "injury or damage"—Injury or Damage to Plaintiff.—The injury or damage in respect of which an action lies under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, known as Lord Campbell's Act, is the injury or damage to the deceased by the act, neglect, or default which caused his death, and not the injury or damage resulting from his death to the plaintiff; consequently, where the action is brought against a statutory body, the period of six months within which section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, requires it to be commenced must be calculated from such act, neglect, or default, or, in case of a continuance of injury or damage to the deceased, from the ceasing thereof. Markey v. Tolworth Joint Hospital District Board, 69 L. J. Q.B. 738; [1900] 2 Q.B. 454; 83 L. T. 28; 64 J. P. 647—D.

An action under the Act of 1846 against a statutory body cannot be commenced at any time within the period of twelve calendar months mentioned in section 3 of that Act, but must be commenced within the period of six months prescribed by section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. Ib. See cols. 1156, 1289, and PUBLIC AUTHORITIES PROTECTION ACT.

Death more than Six Months after Accident Caused by Negligence of Public Authority.

A widow brought an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, to recover damages in respect of the death of her husband, which occurred in 1904, from injuries occasioned by the negligence of a public authority in 1902:—Held, that, as by reason of the provisions of section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, no action could have been brought by the deceased man (if death had not ensued) in respect of the alleged negligence after the lapse of six months from the date thereof, the widow could not maintain the action. Williams v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, 74 L. J. K.B. 481; [1905] 1 K.B. 804; 92 L. T. 444; 53 W. R. 488; 69 J. P. 196; 3 L. G. R. 529; 21 T. L. R. 397—C.A.

Two Actions Commenced in Respect of Death of Same Deceased Person—Next-of-Kin—Administrator.—The Court will not, in the absence of bad faith, make an order staying an action under Lord Campbell's Act brought by one of the next-of-kin of the deceased within six months after the death and before administration is taken out, although administration is subsequently taken out by another of the next-of-kin, and a second action in respect of the death of the same deceased person is instituted by the administrator. M' Cabe v. Great Northern Railway, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 123—C.A.

3. ANIMALS.

Bees Kept in Unreasonable Numbers and at Unreasonable Place—Smoking Hives with Knowledge of Danger to those in Immediate Neighbourhood—Remoteness of Damage.]—The defendant kept a large number of beehives close to the boundary-fence between his and the plaintiff's yard. Complaints had been made as to the annoyance caused to those on plaintiff's farm by the bees swarming. On the occasion in question the defendant, for the purpose of removing honey, smoked the hives with a "smoker." There was evidence that he knew or ought to have known that the plaintiff was likely to be tackling his horse at this spot, and that his horse was there, but he did not warn the plaintiff or take any precautions on his account. The bees, irritated by the smoking operation, swarmed upon the plaintiff and his horse; the horse, stung by the bees, dragged the plaintiff and threw him violently against a wall, causing him severe injuries. The jury found that plaintiff's injuries were caused by the bees having stung him and his horse; that the bees were kept on defendant's land negligently, in unreasonable numbers, at an unreasonable place, and with appreciable danger to the inhabitants of the adjoining farm; that the bees were to the defendant's knowledge of a dangerous and mischievous nature and accustomed to sting mankind and domestic animals; and that the honey was not taken from the hives on the occasion in question with reasonable care, skill, and prudence; and returned a general verdict for the plaintiff with 200% damages:—Held, that the verdict ought not to be disturbed, and that the damage was not too remote. O'Gorman v. O'Gorman, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 573—K.B. D.

Runaway Horse and Carriage—Presumption of Negligence.]—Where a runaway horse and carriage runs down a person in broad daylight in a public street the presumption is that the owner of the horse and carriage is in fault. Snee v. Durkie, 6 F. 42—Ct. of Sess.

Accident to Member of Public Caused by Horse Let Out on Hire—Liability of Owner of Horse.]—An accident was caused to a child in the public street by an ammunition-waggon belonging to a Volunteer regiment. The waggon was drawn by horses which had been hired out by a firm of carting contractors, two of the Volunteers being the drivers. The pursuer alleged that the horses had run off and got beyond the control of the drivers, who were young members of the Volunteer regiment; that the horses were unsuited for the purpose for which they were hired, being young and restive and unaccustomed to drawing ammunition-waggons; that they had never previously been driven as a pair; and that the defenders were aware of these defects:—Held, that the pursuer had not stated a relevant case of fault against the defenders. Wilson v. Wordie, 7 F. 927—Ct. of Sess.

officers at the trial of the plaintiff on a charge of forgery (which trial terminated in his conviction), does not disclose any cause of action whilst the conviction stands. *Basee v. 5. CARRIER.

Omnibus Driver—Finding by Jury of Negligence and Contributory Negligence—Disagreement of Jury as to whether Defendants could have Avoided Accident by Reasonable Care—Effect of Findings.]—In an action for personal injuries against the defendants, an omnibus company, the jury found that there had been negligence on the part of the defendants' omnibus driver and also contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. Two other questions were put to the jury—namely, whether notwithstanding the negligence of the plaintiff, the defendants' driver could have avoided the accident by the use of reasonable care, and whether the defendants' driver and the plaintiff could each of them up to the moment of the collision have prevented the accident by the use of reasonable care—but upon these questions the jury were unable to agree:—Held, that the Judge on these findings was right in entering judgment for the defendants. Regnolds v. Tilling, 20 T. L. R. 57—C.A.

—Projection—Injury to Passenger—Liability of Owner of Omnibus.]—The plaintiff was a passenger on the top of one of the defendants' omnibuses. The driver of the omnibus, in turning out of one street into another, drove the omnibus close to the kerb to avoid an electric tramcar which was passing in the same direction, and while passing an electric-light standard, which was on the pavement, the jolt of the omnibus grating round the kerb caused the plaintiff's arm to come in contact with a fire-alarm finger-post fixed to and standing out from the electric standard. The plaintiff's arm was at the time projecting from the omnibus, but the fire-alarm finger-post did not project over, but came flush with the kerb. In an action to recover damages for negligence there was no evidence that the driver either saw or knew of the fire-alarm finger-post:—Held, that, as it was not shewn that there was an obstruction of such a nature that with reasonable care the driver ought to have seen it and ought to have realized the fact that it would or might hit a passenger on the omnibus, there was no evidence of neglect. Simon v. London General Omnibus Co., 23 T. L. R. 463—D.

The plaintiff was a passenger on the top of one of the defendants' omnibuses. In consequence of the road along which the omnibus usually travelled being closed, the driver of the omnibus had to pass through side streets, and in turning the corner of one of the side streets the omnibus was driven close to the kerb, so that the top of the omnibus, owing to the camber of the road, projected over the foot pavement. A street lamp stood at the corner with a small iron arm projecting from it, but not sufficiently far to extend over the roadway. While the omnibus was being driven round the corner the iron arm struck the plaintiff on the chest and injured him. There was no traffic which prevented the omnibus from being driven further away from the kerb. In an action in the County Court to recover damages for negligence, the Judge found that the driver did not see the projecting arm, and that he was not guilty of negligence in not having seen it and in having driven close to the kerb, and he gave judgment for the defendants:—Held, that there was evidence to support the finding of the County Court Judge, which was a finding of fact, and therefore the Court could not interfere. Hase v. London General Omnibus Co., 23 T. L. R. 616—D.

6. DANGEROUS ARTICLE.

Bath Bun—Stone Found in—“Res ipsa loquitur.”—In an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the defendant's servant having negligently sold to the plaintiff a bath bun which contained a stone or other hard substance, the Judge told the jury that they should be cautious in taking a single instance as evidence of carelessness on the part of the defendant's servant; that if he had been careless the thing might have been expected to occur oftener, and that frequently accidents happened without any negligence; that if they thought there was negligence in the process by which the stone was allowed to get into the bun the jury must so find, but that it was for the plaintiff to make it out:—Held, that there must be a new trial, as the Judge's summing-up involved the possibility of two misapprehensions on the part of the jury—first, that, if the defendant's servant was generally cautious, and was only careless in this particular instance, they would be justified in not considering it as evidence of carelessness; and secondly, that the plaintiff was bound to make out a specific act of negligence. The presence of the stone in the bun was prima facie evidence of negligence, and threw on the defendant the onus of rebutting it. Chaproniere v. Mason, 21 T. L. R. 633—C.A.

Brazier, Unfenced, on Public Road—Injury to Child.—A contractor used a lighted brazier in connection with public works on an open road. The brazier, which was placed on the footpath, was neither fenced nor watched, and a child five years old, going too near it, sustained injuries by burning. It was proved that the use of such braziers in such a way was customary:—Held (LORD YOUNG dissenting), that the contractor was not liable in damages for the injury sustained by the child, inasmuch as no negligence was attributable to him. M'Lelland v. Johnstone, 4 F. 459—Ct. of Sess.

Gun left Loaded by Defendant on his Own Land—Intervening Act of Third Party—Proximate Cause of Injury.—The defendant left a gun loaded and at full cock standing inside a fence on his land, beside a gap from which a path led over the defendant's land from the public road to his house. The defendant's son, aged between fifteen and sixteen, coming from the road through the gap on his way home, found the gun. He went back with it to the public road, and, not knowing that it was loaded, pointed it, in play, at the plaintiff, who was on the road.

The gun went off and the plaintiff was injured:—Held, that the defendant was liable in respect of the injury. Sullivan v. Creed, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 317—C.A.

Motor Car left Unattended—Horses Shying at.] The driver of a motor car drew up his car at the side of the road, leaving ample room for traffic to pass, stopped the engine, and left the car there unattended while he paid a visit of fifteen minutes to a house near by. While he was away the horses of a passing waggonette shied at the motor car, got out of control, and damage was done to the waggonette and the horses. In an action by the owner of the waggonette against the owner of the motor car,—Held, that the accident had not resulted from the car being left unattended, but through the shying of the horses and the inability of the driver to control them, and that the defender was not liable. Macfarlane v. Colam, [1908] S.C. 56—Ct. of Sess.

Rope Defective—Supply of by Shipowners to Stevedore—Liability of Shipowner to Stevedore's Workman.]—In an action of damages against shipowners arising out of an accident to a stevedore's labourer it was averred that the injuries sustained were due to a defect in a rope supplied, as was the custom, by the shipowners to the stevedore for the purpose of being used in the discharge of the ship; that this defect could have been discovered by a proper inspection or test of the rope by the shipowners; that they did not inspect or test it, and that it was their duty to do so; that the stevedore was entitled to rely on the sufficiency of the rope so supplied to him, and that its defective condition was not known by him, and could not have been discovered by him by an ordinary examination:—Held, that these averments were relevant. Heaven v. Pender (52 L. J. Q.B. 702; 11 Q.B. D. 503), as explained in Caledonian Railway v. Mulholland (67 L. J. P.C. 1; [1898] A.C. 216), commented on. Traill v. Actieselskabet Dalbeattie, Lim., 6 F. 793—Ct. of Sess.

Rope Sling Defective—Liability of Stevedore—Claim of Relief against Shipowner Supplying Sling—Defective Plant.]—A firm of stevedores contracted with a shipowner to unload his vessel. In the course of unloading, a workman, employed by the stevedores, was injured by the breaking of a rope sling which was being used in the process of unloading. The workman sued the stevedores under the Employers' Liability Act, and recovered damages from them on the ground of their negligence in failing to inspect the sling. The stevedores then sued the shipowner to recover the amount of damages in which they had been found liable; and in that action it was found that it was the duty of the shipowner to supply, and that he did supply, rope slings for the discharge of the cargo; that as the rope slings were not part of the permanent apparatus of the ship, the shipowner's duty was not absolutely to warrant that the rope slings would be fit for the work, but was merely to supply rope slings to the satisfaction of the stevedores; that the rope sling which broke was not fit for the purpose for which it was being used; and that its defect could have been easily ascertained on inspection:—Held, that the shipowner was not liable on the grounds—first, that, as the shipowner's duty was merely to supply rope slings to the satisfaction of the stevedores, he was not liable in respect of injury caused by the breaking of the defective sling; and secondly, that in any event, as the sole ground on which the stevedores had been held liable in damages was their own negligence in failing to inspect the sling, they could not have an action of relief against the shipowner based on breach of contract. Mowbray v. Merryweather (65 L. J. Q.B. 50; [1895] 2 Q.B. 640) considered. Wood v. Mackay, 8 F. 625—Ct. of Sess.

Steam Roller on Highway—Damage to Gas Pipes—Explosion—Personal Injury.—An explosion was caused through the gas mains under a roadway being damaged owing to the pressure thereon of a steam roller used by the highway board. The pipes were at such a depth as to be uninjured by ordinary traffic. By the explosion the plaintiff sustained personal injury:—Held, that the highway board was liable. Driscoll v. Poplar Board of Works, 62 J. P. 40—D.

Tinned Salmon—Retailer of—Liability to Customer where Contents of Tin are Poisonous.—In an action for damages on account of the death of his son, the pursuer averred that the son had died of ptomaine poisoning caused by eating tinned salmon purchased from the defender, a retail grocer; that the salmon as sold by the defender was unfit for human food; that the tin containing it had no label on it, and was dented in as if it had been knocked about; that "it was the duty of the defender to examine all tins containing foods which he was selling to the public in order to satisfy himself that these were air-tight and in order. He should have taken reasonable and proper precautions to prevent such an occurrence as that before condoned on. He did not make any such examination of the foresaid tin, nor did he take any such precautions, and in these respects he failed in his duty, and caused the death of the said" son:—Held, that the action was irrelevant. Gordon v. McHardy, 6 F. 210—Ct. of Sess.

Ship at Quay—Accident to Visitor through Insufficient Plank Used as a Gangway.—The wife of the chief officer of a steamship which was lying in harbour at the quay loading coals came on board to spend some hours with her husband before the vessel started. When she was going to leave the vessel, and while her husband was speaking to the pilot, a rigger temporarily in the employment of the shipowner took a plank (used to protect deck skylights), which was lying on deck, laid it from the ship to the quay, and proceeded to lead her across by it. When both were on the plank it broke, being rotten, and she fell into the water and sustained injuries. In an action of damages at her instance,—Held, that the shipowners were not liable, in respect—first, that the pursuer was on board the ship by permission merely, and not by invitation; and secondly, that they were not responsible for the rigger having taken it upon himself outwith the scope of his employment to use the plank for a purpose it was never intended to serve. O'Brien v. Arbib, [1907] S. C. 975—Ct. of Sess.

7. DANGEROUS PREMISES.

Barge—Berth—Representation—Liability of Person Using River Bank for Purpose of Discharging Cargo from Barge.—The defendants had entered into a contract for a supply of stone to be delivered alongside a landing-place at Iken Cliff, on the river Alde, in Suffolk, and the seller of the stone employed the plaintiff's barge to carry the stone. The defendants had no interest in or right to use the bank of the river at Iken Cliff except by permission of the owner obtained before they entered into the contract. At Iken Cliff there was no wharf or quay, or even bank, alongside which a barge could discharge, and there was no fixed or defined berth; but the landing-place at Iken Cliff was a place at which barges such as the plaintiff's could safely discharge by means of planks laid upon trestles from the barge to the bank of the river. Upon arrival at Iken Cliff, the master of the barge, by the advice of her pilot and a man in a fishing boat, selected a place as near the bank as her draught would permit, at which the barge was moored. She lay upon uneven ground, and was damaged:—Held, that the defendants were not liable to the plaintiff for the damage, upon the ground that there was no representation, expressed or implied, by the defendants that any particular spot was a proper place to take the ground, or to lie in for discharging; and that it was for the master of the barge, knowing his own barge and her draught, to select the place where he would lie to discharge. He had no reason to expect that the bed of the river would be free from all inequalities, and there was nothing of which the defendants were bound to give any warning to him. The Moorcock (14 P. D. 64; 58 L. J. Adm. 73) distinguished. Parker v. Plomesgate Rural Council, 9 Com. Cas. 107—Walton, J.

Injury to, Hired by Wharfowner to Deliver Cargo at Wharf—Obstruction in Bed of River—Liability of Wharfowner.—The defendants, who were lessees of a wharf in a tidal river, hired a barge of the plaintiff to carry goods to the wharf at a place where the barge must necessarily ground at low water. The defendants had no control over the bed of the river. A block of hardened cement had fallen off the quay into the river; it was visible at low water, but its existence was not known to the defendants. The plaintiff's barge, while alongside the wharf for the purpose of discharging its cargo, grounded on the block of cement when the tide fell, and was injured. In an action for damages for the injury,—Held (HOLMES, L.J., dissenting), that the defendants, having invited the plaintiff to discharge the goods at the wharf, where bound to take reasonable care to ascertain that the berthage was reasonably safe, and, not having discharged this duty, were liable for the injury. The Moorcock (58 L. J. P. 73; 14 P. D. 64) followed. Butler v. McAlpine, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 445—O.A.

Building Materials—Deposit of, against Wall Separating Street from Pond—Safety of Children.—In an action for damages on account of the death of a child seven years of age, the pursuer averred that the defender was engaged in building operations adjoining a public street; that the street on one side was separated from a mill pond ten feet deep by a stone wall eight feet high; that the defender deposited a large heap of building material close to this wall and reaching to within thirty inches of its top; that the child, while playing with other children on the top of this heap, fell over the wall into the pond and was drowned; that the defender in heaping up the material close to the wall made the pond a practically unprotected source of danger to the public; that he knew that children were in the habit of playing on the top of the heap; and that in depositing the heap and failing to take precautions for the safety of children playing on it, the defender was guilty of gross negligence, in consequence of which the child lost its life. THE COURT dismissed the action as irrelevant. Horsburgh v. Sheach, 3 F. 268—Ct. of Sess.

Game Playing on Ground where there is Obvious Danger.—If grown men choose to play a game on ground where they are permitted to do so, but where there is a danger openly and obviously before them, the owner of the ground is not liable for injuries caused by such danger to one of the players. Giles v. London County Council, 68 J. P. 10; 2 L. G. R. 326—Kennedy, J.

Hole on Private Ground—Liability of Owner.—If the public enter upon private ground without invitation they take the risk of injury; but if there is a hole or pit near a public road there may be a duty on the owner or occupier to fence it. Devlin v. Jeffray's Trustees, 5 F. 180—Ct. of Sess.

Key to View given by House agent—Invitation—Owner's Liability.—The plaintiff had obtained the key of some premises which were to be let from a house agent, in order that he might look over the premises and possibly become tenant of them. The front doorsteps gave way when he went to the premises, and in consequence he received injury:—Held, that the landlord was liable for the want of repair. Wright v. Lefever, 51 W. R. 149—C.A.

Machinery, Unfenced, on Waste Ground near Public Road—Use of Waste Ground by Children as Playground.—In an action against the owners of a colliery for damages on account of injuries to the pursuer's child, a boy eight years old, the pursuer averred that for the purpose of hauling waggons in connection with their colliery the defenders used a horizontal wheel which was situated on waste ground belonging to the defenders; that this wheel was about three and a-half feet in diameter and turned upon a post at a height of about eighteen inches from the ground, with a groove round its circumference into which was fitted a wire rope for haulage; that the wheel was not fenced or protected in any way; that it was generally stationary, but was used for short periods about five times a day, and was set in motion, without any warning, by means of a drum at the pit-head about seventy yards from the wheel; that the wheel was about eighteen yards from the public road and about fifty yards from the terrace in which the pursuer and his son lived; that the waste ground was not fenced off from the public road, and was used as a playground by children "with the sanction and approval of the defenders"; that on a day specified, when the pursuer's child was playing close to the wheel, it was set in motion without warning and the child's leg was caught between the rope and the wheel and severely injured; that "it was gross fault on the part of the defenders to have such an unprotected wheel, which was set in motion several times a day, at various times, for short periods, and without notice, in ground adjoining a public road, and known by them to be the daily resort of children and others for the purposes of play. Their said fault was the direct cause of the injuries to the pursuer's son":—Held, that the pursuer's averments were irrelevant. Cummings v. Darnagavil Coal Co., 5 F. 513—Ct. of Sess.

Oyster Beds Laid Down by Trespasser in Tidal River—Grounding of Ship without Negligence—Standard of Care and Skill Required in Avoiding Damage to Property of Trespasser.—Oyster beds were laid down in a tidal river by a person who in so doing was a trespasser. A screw steamer, while proceeding down the river, accidentally grounded where the oysters were laid down, and her bow stuck in the ruins of an old beacon. It was two hours after high water, and she lay there till the return of high water. Shortly before the return of high water the captain got her off, and in doing so he used the propeller as well as a hawser attached to a post on the opposite shore. The captain deposed that he was ignorant of the existence of the oyster beds, but it was proved that at low water a portion of the vessel was high and dry, and the oysters were visible all around her. The oysters were damaged very considerably by the vessel in taking the ground, and still more so in getting her off:—Held, that the captain, although bound not to recklessly or carelessly injure the oysters, was entitled to get off his ship by any reasonable exercise of seamanship that his own reasonable knowledge might suggest; and there being no sufficient evidence of recklessness or gross negligence on his part, the owner of the oysters was not entitled to recover in respect of the injuries to them. Petrie v. Rostrevor (Owners), [1898] 2 Ir. R. 556—C.A.

Railway Station—Overcrowded Platform—Injury Due to Overcrowding—Regulation of Crowd.—The pursuer in an action for damages for personal injury against a railway company alleged that the defenders were in fault in respect that they had, knowingly, and without taking any steps to prevent it, permitted a greater crowd of intending passengers, of whom the pursuer was one, to congregate in a station than its platforms could accommodate, and had failed to provide a sufficient staff of servants to cope with the crowd, and that in consequence, by the pressure of the crowd, the pursuer had been carried along and hurled from the platform on to the railroad and injured:—Held, that the pursuer had stated a relevant case. Fraser v. Caledonian Railway, 5 F. 41—Ct. of Sess.

Vehicles left in Position and Condition which may become Dangerous—Risk known to Railway Company—Interference with Vehicles by Trespassers—Consequent Injury to Third Person—Liability of Railway Company.—A railway company is not responsible for injury to a person using a highway caused by a brake-van which the interference of trespassers has sent running down an inclined siding on to the highway, where the danger of such interference as a probable cause of injury to persons using the highway was not known to the railway company, and where, independently of such interference, the brake-van was in a position and condition not at the time dangerous. McDowall v. Great Western Railway, 72 L. J. K.B. 652; [1903] 2 K.B. 331; 88 L. T. 825—C.A. And see RAILWAY, infra.

Ship—Loading—Invitation to Come upon Premises for Business Purposes—Duty of Occupier—Charterer of Ship—Injury to Stevedore's Workman.]—A person who intends that others shall come upon property of which he is the occupier or controller, for purposes of work or business in which he is interested, owes a duty to those who do so come to use reasonable care to see that the property and the appliances upon it, which it is intended shall be used in the work, are fit for the purpose to which they are to be put; nor does he discharge this duty by merely contracting with competent people to do the work for him. Marney v. Scott, 68 L. J. Q.B. 736; [1899] 1 Q.B. 986; 47 W. R. 666—Bigham, J.

The defendant, having chartered a ship under a charterparty which represented that she was tight, staunch, and strong, and fit for the service for which she was chartered, and provided that she should be maintained in that condition by the owners, contracted with a stevedore to stow her cargo. The plaintiff, who was one of a gang of men employed by the stevedore for that purpose, went on board the vessel about two hours after she had been placed at the defendant's disposal, and was proceeding to the main hold, where his work lay, when, owing to the defective state of the ladder by which he had to descend, and without any negligence on his part, he fell into the hold and was injured:—Held, that the defendant ought to have made some examination of the tackle and appliances of the ship which were to be used by the stevedore's workmen, and that, as the defect was one which a slight examination would have revealed, the defendant was liable to the plaintiff in damages for the injuries which he had sustained. Ib.

—Open and Unlighted Hatch on—Liability of Employers.]—A workman, who was accustomed to take chipping and scaling jobs, was engaged to execute chipping work on a ship which was undergoing repairs in a shipbuilding yard. In going to the place on board the ship where his work was to be done he fell into an open hatchway on the middle deck and was injured. He sued the shipbuilders for damages on the ground that the accident was due to their negligence in not having the hatchway covered or sufficiently lighted or fenced. It was proved that the pursuer had gone from broad daylight to the middle deck, where the light was dim, but sufficient to enable the pursuer to see the hatchway if he had proceeded cautiously:—Held, that the accident was not due to negligence on the part of the defenders, but was due to want of care on the part of the pursuer. Burns v. Henderson, 7 F. 697—Ct. of Sess.

Licensor—Danger in the Nature of a Trap.]—The plaintiff, an inspector in the employment of the engineer engaged upon the construction of a tube or underground railway, when returning from his work along a wooden platform erected by the side of the excavated tunnel for the purpose of allowing the work of inspection to be done, was invited by a superintendent in the employment of the defendant, the contractor who was constructing the railway, to ride upon a small engine used for drawing the trucks filled with excavated material along a temporary line of railway laid down in the tunnel. The engine, while the plaintiff was riding upon it, ran into a truck standing upon the temporary line of railway and the plaintiff was injured. The place where the truck was standing was dark, but at the time of the accident the engine ought not to have been used at all over the part of the line where the truck was, and where repairs were going on. In an action by the plaintiff to recover damages for the personal injuries caused by the alleged negligence of the defendant's servants, the jury found that the plaintiff at the time of the accident was on the engine with the permission of the defendant's superintendent, but for the plaintiff's own convenience, and that the accident was due to the negligence of the defendant's servants. Judgment was given for the plaintiff:—Held, upon an application by the defendant for judgment or a new trial, that the judgment must be affirmed, because, first, even assuming the standard of the defendant's liability were the same as in the case of a bare licensee passing through the premises of the licensor, there was evidence on which the jury might have found that the danger was such as to be in the nature of a trap; but secondly, because the measure of duty towards a bare licensee is different where the licensor accepts the duty of carrying him, from what it is where he merely permits him to pass through his premises; and there was evidence on which the jury might find, as they must be taken to have done, that there was on the part of the defendant's servants a failure of the ordinary care due from one who undertakes the carriage of another gratuitously. Harris v. Perry, 72 L. J. K.B. 725; [1903] 2 K.B. 219; 89 L. T. 174—C.A.

Wharf—Damage to Vessel Lying in Berth—Liability of Wharf-owners.]—The plaintiffs' vessel, which was found to be in a fit condition to take the ground for the purpose of unloading a cargo of iron ore, was damaged through straining, by reason of her lying on an uneven bottom in the defendants' wharf. THE COURT held the defendants to blame in not keeping the berth in a fit and proper condition to receive the vessel, and held the plaintiffs entitled to recover such damages as were assessed by the Registrar and merchants. The Ville de St. Nazaire, 52 W. R. 68—C.A.

8. ELECTRICITY.

Explosion in Electric Main—Insufficient Ventilation—Personal Injuries to Passer-by—Nervous Shock.]—An explosion took place in an electric main belonging to a local authority who were carrying on an electric-lighting undertaking under statutory powers, with the result that a woman who was passing by, though not actually struck by anything thrown up by the explosion, experienced a nervous shock of such a character as to injure her. In a County Court action brought by the woman against the local authority expert evidence was called to shew that the explosion was due to gas in the main, and would not have occurred had the main been properly ventilated; but the County Court Judge nonsuited the plaintiff on the ground that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence which should have been left to the jury, and that the case could not properly be withdrawn from them merely because the injury was due to nervous shock only. Solomons v. Stegney Borough Council, 3 L. G. R. 912; 69 J. P. 360—D. And see NUISANCE.

Overhead Electric Wires—Failure to Insulate Wires — Evidence.]—The respondents were authorised by Act of Parliament “to enter upon and construct under or over the streets and public highways” of Montreal “all such pipes, lines, conduits, and other constructions as may be necessary for the purposes of its business.” The appellant’s husband was killed by a current of electricity in consequence of contact of the derrick on which he was at work with the overhead wires of the respondents:—Held, that, as the Act conferred alternative powers of constructing overhead or underground wires, there was no obligation on the respondents, on the ground of affording greater protection to the public, to lay their wires underground and not overhead. Held, also, in the absence of evidence that such a precaution would have been efficient, that there was no negligence in the respondents in not insulating or guarding the wires. Dumphy v. Montreal Light, Heat, and Power Co., 76 L. J. P.C. 71; [1907] A.C. 454; 97 L. T. 499; 23 T. L. R. 770—P.C.

9. FLOOD.

Retaining Wall Built by Local Authority—Flood Caused by Wrongful Act of Third Party—Liability of Local Authority.]—The plaintiffs were the owners of a house adjoining the Y. Road, within the district of the defendants. There was a channel at the side of this road for the purpose of carrying off surface-water from the road. On a certain occasion, after a heavy rain, the water coming down this channel broke through it, and forced its way into the cellar of the plaintiff’s house, thereby doing damage. The plaintiffs alleged that the damage occurred owing to a retaining wall which the defendants had built on the Y. Road when raising the level of another street running into it, their contention being that it might have been anticipated that on occasions water would be diverted on to their land by the way in which the wall was placed. On the facts found by the Judge at the trial, the wall in no way interfered with the ordinary flow of water down the channel, even when caused by heavy rain; but the flood on the day in question was caused by water running into the channel owing to the wrongful act of the owners of adjoining land in allowing a conduit on their land to become blocked:—Held, that the defendants were not liable for the damage to the plaintiffs’ house, there being no negligence on their part in not building their retaining wall in such a way as to prevent its interfering with an unusual flow of water caused by the wrongful act of other persons. Ely Brewery Co. v. Pontypridd Urban Council, 2 L. G. R. 40; 68 J. P. 3—C.A.

10. RAILWAY COMPANY.

Fire caused by Sparks from Engine.]—A railway company is not liable for damage resulting from a fire caused by sparks from an engine running on their line, in the absence of negligence in the construction or use of such engine. Canadian-Pacific Railway v. Roy, 71 L. J. P.C. 51; [1902] A.C. 220; 86 L. T. 127; 50 W. R. 415—P.C. And see RAILWAY.

Carriage Doors—Failure of Railway Servants to Close.]—An action of damages for personal injuries brought against a railway company by a passenger who had been knocked down by an open carriage-door as a train was leaving a station dismissed as irrelevant, where the only averment of negligence against the railway company was that they had failed to close the carriage doors before setting the train in motion. Toal v. North British Railway, [1908] S.C. 48—Ct. of Sess.

Level Crossing—Liability to Public using Crossing for Safe Condition of Rails—Negligence.]—A public road crossed a railway by means of a level crossing. A horse which was being taken over the level crossing was injured through one of its feet being caught between one of the rails and a chair on which the rail rested, owing to the wooden wedge which kept the rail in position not being completely driven in. In an action by the owner of the horse against the railway company it was proved that the line, including the level crossing, was regularly inspected by platelayers twice a day for the purpose, inter alia, of seeing that the wedges, which were liable to be displaced by trains passing along the line, were properly driven in; that the crossing had been so inspected within an hour before the accident, and that two trains had passed along the line after the inspection and before the accident:—Held, that the railway company had taken all usual and reasonable precautions to keep the level crossing in a safe and proper condition; that the accident was not due to their fault; and that they were not liable in damages to the pursuer. Bell v. Caledonian Railway, 4 F. 431—Ct. of Sess.

Platform — Passenger Alighting — Distance from Carriage to Platform—Evidence as to Other Stations—Admissibility.]—The plaintiff, who was a passenger on the defendants’ railway, when alighting from the train at a station injured herself. The height of the footboard of the carriage in which the plaintiff was travelling above the platform of the station was twenty-two inches, and the plaintiff alleged that this was an unreasonable height, and that the defendants were negligent in not providing reasonably fit and safe facilities for her to alight. In an action to recover damages the defendants tendered evidence that the platforms at a large number of their other stations in the district were as low as the one in question and that no accident had happened. The Judge admitted the evidence, and the jury found a verdict for the defendants:—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Manning v. London and North-Western Railway, 23 T. L. R. 222—C.A.

Siding near Cottages—Failure to Fence—Engine-driver Killing Own Child.—An engine-driver, in the course of backing some trucks down a siding, ran over and killed his own son, a child two years old, who was playing with other children in the siding. He brought an action for solatium against his employers, in which he averred fault in respect that they had failed to provide a shunter to assist him in backing the trucks, and had left the siding unfenced, although there were houses belonging to them and let to their workmen immediately adjoining, and the only access to a bleaching-green used in connection with these houses was across the siding:—Held, that the action was relevant. Innes v. Fife Coal Co., 3 F. 835—Ct. of Sess.

Truck—Defect in—One Company Using the Trucks of Another—Breach of Implied Duty.—The respondent's husband, who was a servant of the G. Railway, was killed in consequence of the defective condition of a truck belonging to the appellants, which had been lent, in the ordinary course of railway exchange, to the G. Railway for the conveyance of goods to one of the latter's customers:—Held, that the appellants were under no liability to the respondent. Heaven v. Pender (52 L. J. Q.B. 702; 11 Q.B. D. 503) distinguished. Caledonian Railway v. Mulholland, 67 L. J. P.C. 1; [1898] A.C. 216; 77 L. T. 570; 46 W. R. 236—H.L. (Sc.)

Sudden Stoppage of Express—Injury to Passenger in Train.—The plaintiff was injured by reason of the sudden pulling up of the express train in which he was travelling. The train was pulled up suddenly because a man who had just arrived by a down train had found his way on to the line by an access which was under the control of the railway company. The defendants proved that it was necessary to stop the train, and that the driver acted reasonably and properly in stopping it as he did. The passenger for whose safety the train was stopped was not called. The jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff, Held, that there was evidence upon which the jury could find that the defendants had not established that the cause which led to the necessity of stopping the train was not brought about by any negligence on their part. Angus v. London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway, 22 T. L. R. 222—C.A.

Vehicles left in Position and Condition which may become Dangerous—Risk Known to Railway Company—Interference with Vehicles by Trespassers—Consequent Injury to Third Person—Liability.—A railway company who for their own convenience in shunting operations leave a brake-van or other vehicle in a position and condition not at the time dangerous to other persons, but which to their knowledge may become so if interfered with by trespassers, and who also know that there is a risk of such interference and consequent danger to others, will, if they might have guarded against the danger by the exercise of reasonable care, be liable for any injury the occurrence of which is materially and effectively caused by their want of reasonable care and skill in keeping and placing the vehicle in such a condition and position. McDowall v. Great Western Railway, 71 L. J. K.B. 830; [1902] 1 K.B. 618; 86 L. T. 558—Kennedy, J.

Nervous Shock resulting from Fright—Railway—Carriage of Passengers—Door of Compartment not properly Secured.—In an action for damages against a railway company, the pursuer, a widow of fifty-six years of age, averred that when travelling on the defendants' line, one of the doors of the compartment in which she was seated swung open, and almost at the same moment the motion of a passing train caused the open door to swing back and forward with great violence against the carriage. That the glass of the window was broken into fragments, and the woodwork of the door was splintered. That it seemed to the pursuer that the passing train had dashed into collision with the other. That by the occurrence the pursuer was greatly alarmed, and her nervous system received a shock, which resulted in lasting injury. That the occurrence was caused by the fault of the defendants' servants in not seeing that the door was properly fastened. The defendants pleaded that the action was irrelevant:—Held, that the pursuer had stated a relevant case. Cooper v. Caledonian Railway, 4 F. 880—Ct. of Sess.

— Damages—Remoteness.—Damages for injuries resulting from a nervous shock caused by fright may be recovered in an action for negligent driving although there has been no actual physical impact upon the plaintiff's person. Victorian Railways Commissioners v. Coultas (57 L. J. P.C. 69; 13 App. Cas. 222) discussed and not followed. Dulieu v. White, 70 L. J. K.B. 837; [1901] 2 K.B. 669; 85 L. T. 126; 50 W. R. 76—D.

Measure of Damages—Prospective Loss of Earnings—Mode of Estimation by Jury—Practice—New Trial.—In an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff while travelling on the defendants' line the jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff with 3,000*l.* damages; 450*l.* of this represented expenses and loss of income incurred at the date of the trial and 2,550*l.* was compensation for prospective loss in professional earnings. The plaintiff was twenty-eight years of age. He had been trained as a marine engineer, and he had prospects of obtaining the post of superintendent engineer, as he had relations who were shipowners, but at the time of the accident he was in the employment of his father's firm at a salary of between 2*l.* and 3*l.* a week. There was evidence that the plaintiff was competent to perform the duties of a superintendent engineer, but that since the accident he would not be able for physical reasons to do so; that the salary attached to the office of superintendent engineer varied from 600*l.* to 1,000*l.* a year, sometimes amounting to 1,500*l.*; and that the plaintiff had applied to a company for such a post on their staff with a salary of 600*l.* rising annually, and had been refused on account of his injury. The Judge at the trial told the jury that the plaintiff had lost the possibility of such a livelihood as he had expected, but he was able to earn something, though not in any way equal to what he would have earned but for the accident; that there were the accidents of life and other elements which had to be taken into consideration which ought to prevent the jury giving him such a sum as would be simply for him an investment and enable him to do nothing; still he was entitled to a fair sum considering the position that he was fitted for and the position that he was in:—Held, that it could not be said that the amount of the damages was such that no twelve men could have reasonably awarded; that the jury had not been misdirected by the Judge; that it could not be said that the jury had taken into consideration matters which they ought not to have taken into consideration, or had applied a measure of damages which they ought not to have applied; and that there was no ground for a new trial. Johnston v. Great Western Railway, 73 L. J. K.B. 568; [1904] 2 K.B. 250; 91 L. T. 157; 52 W. R. 612; 20 T. L. R. 455—C.A.

11. RECKLESS STATEMENTS.

Breach of Duty—Contractual Relation—Reckless Misrepresentation apart from Fraud—Cause of Action.]—The defendant, a professional waterfinder, undertook for reward to indicate a spot upon the plaintiff's land where a supply of water might be found. He came to the plaintiff's land, marked out a spot, and stated definitely that water would be found there at a particular depth from the surface. The plaintiff, on the faith of this statement, bored to a depth exceeding that named by the defendant, but found no water. The plaintiff brought an action in the County Court to recover the expense of boring. The County Court Judge found that the defendant made the statement recklessly, but did not find that he made it fraudulently:—Held, that the contractual relation between the parties imposed upon the defendant the duty to refrain from making reckless statements; that the defendant had committed a breach of this duty, and was therefore liable in an action for damages. Le Lievre v. Gould (62 L. J. Q.B. 353; [1893] 1 Q.B. 491) distinguished. Pritty v. Child, 71 L. J. K.B. 512—D.

Recommending Bankrupt Broker.]—The defendants, the proprietors of a paper called M.A.P., published in that paper a paragraph to the effect that readers desiring financial advice in the columns of the paper should address their queries to the City editor. The plaintiff, a reader of the paper, wrote to the City editor asking for certain advice, and also for the name of "a good stockbroker." The editor recommended one T., an outside broker, who traded as a stock and share dealer, but who to his knowledge was not a member of the Stock Exchange. T. was, in fact, an uncertificated bankrupt, but this was unknown to the editor, though he could easily have ascertained his financial position by enquiry. As a result of the introduction, the plaintiff sent T. several sums of money for investment, which the latter applied to his own use. In an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendants to recover damages for a breach of duty to them and for negligence,—Held, that the defendants' negligence or breach of duty in recommending T. as "a good stockbroker" was the primary and substantial cause of the plaintiff's loss, and that the defendants were liable for the amount of such loss, notwithstanding that T. might have been guilty of a criminal offence in appropriating the plaintiff's money to his own use. De la Bere v. Pearson, Lim., 76 L. J. K.B. 309; [1907] 1 K.B. 483; 96 L. T. 425; 23 T. L. R. 264—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

12. WORK, IN DOING.

Architect Preparing Plans—Plans not used.]

—The plaintiffs employed the defendant to prepare plans for a building to be erected on a site belonging to them. The defendant neglected to measure the site, and, acting on information which was unauthorised by the plaintiffs, prepared plans on the assumption that the site was smaller than it was in fact. The plaintiffs, having paid the defendant for the plans, were unable to raise funds to build on the site, and ultimately parted with it, and then discovered the error in the plans. In an action to recover the money paid for the plans on the ground of a total failure of consideration, or, in the alternative, for damages for negligence,—Held, that there had not been a total failure of consideration, but that as the defendant had been negligent the plaintiffs were entitled to damages, although, as they had sustained no loss from his negligence those damages would be only nominal. Columbus Co. v. Clowes, 72 L. J. K.B. 330; [1903] 1 K.B. 244; 51 W. R. 366—Wright, J.

Defective Welding of Ring on Buoy—Omission of Adequate Test—Liability of Harbour Commissioners.]—Owing to its defective welding the ring of a buoy broke off, and a ship which was attached thereto by a cable parted from her moorings and sustained damage. The buoy had been in use a short time only; it had been purchased by the harbour commissioners from a first-class manufacturer, and the defect in the welding could not have been discovered by inspection or by the ordinary test of hammering. It is not usual for manufacturers to submit such rings to any test unless required to do so by the specification; but if so required (which is frequently but not universally done), they are tested by a public department in a well-known and recognised manner analogous to the testing of cable chains. This precaution had not been taken by the harbour commissioners:—Held, that the omission was actionable negligence rendering the commissioners responsible for the result of the accident. Burrell v. Tuohy, [1896] 2 Ir. R. 271—Q.B. D.

Negligent Repair by Wheelwright—Injury to Servant of Van-owner—Right of Action.]—By a contract between a firm of mineral-water manufacturers and the defendant, a wheelwright, the latter agreed to keep in repair for a specified time a number of vans belonging to the firm. The defendant failed to keep a certain van in repair, the result being that the wheel came off the van while it was being driven by the plaintiff, a servant of the firm, and the plaintiff was injured:—Held, that the plaintiff could not maintain an action against the defendant. Heaven v. Pender (52 L. J. Q.B. 702; 11 Q.B. D. 503) discussed. Winterbottom v. Wright (11 L. J. Ex. 415; 10 M. & W. 109) followed. Earl v. Lubbock, 74 L. J. K.B. 121; [1905] 1 K.B. 253; 91 L. T. 830; 53 W. R. 145; 21 T. L. R. 71—C.A.

Laying of Sewer—Want of Reasonable Care by Contractor.—The plaintiffs' premises having been damaged by the defendants in constructing a sewer, and as it appeared that the defendants had not exercised reasonable care and skill in carrying out the work, whereby the damage was occasioned, the plaintiffs were held entitled to recover damages in respect thereof. London General Omnibus Co. v. Tilbury Contracting and Dredging Co., 71 J. P. 534—Neville, J.

Valuation of Property—Valuer—Exercise of Reasonable Care and Skill.—C., a solicitor, was applied to by V., who was not his client, but who owned a mineral-water factory and three licensed houses, to find some one who would advance money on the premises. C. knew that R., another solicitor, who represented the plaintiff, under a power of attorney, had money to advance, and at an interview between C. and R. it was arranged that an advance, to be guaranteed by an insurance society, should be made to V., but no stipulation for an independent valuation of the premises was then made. C., with authority to conduct the mortgage on these lines, requested an insurance society to insure the mortgage, knowing that the society usually employed the defendant, a local valuer of repute. C. applied to the society for a copy of the defendant's valuation, and this application was ultimately acceded to by them, they saying that on future occasions when C. was acting for the mortgagee he should have a copy. The society repudiated responsibility for the defendant's fee, which was afterwards paid by V. through C. The society instructed the defendant to value the premises, and he reported to them by a valuation written on their printed form. C. relied to the knowledge of the defendant on his valuation in making the advance on mortgage to V.:—Held, that no contractual relation of principal and agent between the plaintiff and the defendant was established; that the defendant never agreed to value for the use of the plaintiff; and that therefore the plaintiff had not established any duty on the part of the defendant towards him to exercise reasonable care and skill in and about the valuation. Love v. Mack, 93 L. T. 352—C.A.

Appointment of—Discretion of Master of Faculties as to Appointments in Colonies—Practice—Costs.—The jurisdiction of the Court of Faculties to appoint notaries public in the colonies is derived from the statute 25 Hen. 8, c. 21, and neither that nor any other statutory enactment prescribes any qualifications to be possessed by applicants, who in all cases are appointed in the discretion of the Master of the Faculties. Where, therefore, a chartered accountant, holding the appointments of official assignee of insolvent estates in the State of Victoria and commissioner for taking affidavits in the Supreme Courts of several States of the Australian Commonwealth, applied to be appointed a notary public for the State of Victoria and supported his application by an influential memorial and the usual certificate of personal fitness, the Master of the Faculties, though the more recent practice had been to appoint solicitors, thought fit in the special circumstances of the case to grant the applicant a faculty for his appointment as prayed. Circumstances which guide the Master of the Faculties in fixing the number of notaries public to be appointed in any particular place where the appointments are made in his discretion. Bailleau v. Victorian Society of Notaries, [1904] P. 180; 20 T. L. R. 251—Court of Faculties.

Striking off Roll—Jurisdiction.—The Master of the Court of Faculties has inherent jurisdiction to strike the name of any notary public off the roll of notaries public for misconduct. Champion, In re, 75 L. J. P. 45; [1906] P. 86; 22 T. L. R. 264—Court of Faculties.

Secretary of Two Companies—Knowledge in One Character—Presumption of Notice in Other Character.—Where a man acts as secretary of two companies, it is not true as a general proposition that a fact which comes to his knowledge as secretary of one company is notice to him as secretary of the other company from the mere existence of the common relationship. In order to make it notice, it must be shewn that it was his duty to the first company to communicate his knowledge to the second company. Fenwick, Stobart & Co., In re; Deep Sea Fishery Co.'s Claim, 71 L. NUISANCE.

Collection of Crowd—Injury to Neighbouring Property—Interlocutory Injunction.]—A large number of workmen were employed by the defendants on certain works, in going to and from which the workmen committed several acts of trespass on adjoining land which was not fenced off from the road leading to the works:—Held, that no case had been made out for an interlocutory injunction against the defendants. Chase v. London County Council, 62 J. P. 184—Stirling, J.

Electricity—Escape of—Non-Natural User of Property—Leakage—Statutory Powers.]—The principle of Rylands v. Fletcher (32 L. J. Ex. 161; L. R. 3 H.L. 330), that an owner, even apart from wilfulness or negligence, who brings on his land something which is itself dangerous and may become mischievous if not kept under control, is liable to a neighbour who is damaged thereby, is not inconsistent with the Roman Dutch law of the Cape Colony, but cannot be so extended as to impose liability when the injury done is in part the consequence of the neighbour's using his own property in a manner which creates a special susceptibility to the damage done. Eastern and South African Telegraph Co. v. Cape Town Tramways Companies, 71 L. J. P.C. 122; [1902] A.C. 381; 86 L. T. 457; 50 W. R. 657—P.C.

Disturbances were caused in the working of the appellants' submarine cables by electricity, stored by the respondents for the propulsion of their tramcars, which had from time to time left the tramway system and caused pecuniary loss to the appellants. There was no defect in the respondents' apparatus, and the escape was the necessary result of its working in accordance with the statutory powers of the respondents:—Held, that the respondents were not liable in damages to the appellants, the escape not being a "leak" which under their Act the respondents were called upon to remedy. Ib.

— Vibration and Noise — Electric-Light Station—Ordinary and Reasonable User of Property—Temporary or Occasional Annoyance—Injunction.]—An electric-light company will be restrained by injunction from so using their generating station as to cause serious annoyance, by vibration, noise, and smell, to occupiers of adjoining premises. Such an annoyance is not to be excused on the ground that the defendant is making an ordinary and reasonable use of the land, nor on the ground that the annoyance is temporary and occasional. Knight v. Isle of Wight Electric Light and Power Co., 73 L. J. Ch. 299; 90 L. T. 410; 68 J. P. 266; 2 L. G. R. 390; 20 T. L. R. 173—Joyce, J.

— Injury to Fabric—Temporary Nuisance—Local Authority—Injunction.]—A local authority in London which under a provisional order, containing a clause that the undertakers shall not be exonerated from any action or proceedings for nuisance, has erected works for the supply of electricity, and by vibration and otherwise has caused a nuisance in law materially interfering with the comfort of neighbouring owners and occupiers of houses, is, although a public authority, liable to an injunction to restrain it from carrying on the works at all unless or until it can do so without occasioning a nuisance to the neighbouring owners and occupiers. Broder v. Saillard (45 L. J. Ch. 414; 2 Ch. D. 692) and Bamford v. Turnley (31 L. J. Q.B. 286; 3 B. & S. 62) applied. Harrison v. Southwark and Vauxhall Waterworks Co. (60 L. J. R. 236—Joyce, J.

— Statutory Monopoly—Combination of Two Undertakings—Condition Imposed on One Undertaking—Application of Condition to the Other Undertaking.]—The appellants were incorporated by the Demerara Electric Ordinance, 1899, and by an order of 1899, which authorised them to "supply energy for all public and private purposes," they were not to be exonerated from any proceedings for nuisance. On the same day as that on which the order was obtained, the appellants were granted a licence under the Tramways Ordinance, 1899, for the supply of electricity as a motive and lighting power, "anything in any Ordinance of the Colony notwithstanding." The two undertakings were combined into one system and under one roof:—Held, that the appellants were not relieved by the words "anything in any Ordinance of the Colony notwithstanding" from the obligation imposed by the contemporaneous instrument, the Order of 1899, which applied to the production of electricity for every purpose, motive power as well as lighting and heating. Demerara Electric Co. v. White, 76 L. J. P.C. 54; [1907] A.C. 330; 96 L. T. 752—P.C.

Fence Adjoining Highway Defective—Injury by Fence Falling on Child Climbing upon it.]—The plaintiff, a boy of the age of four years, while passing along a highway, climbed upon a fence situate upon the defendant's adjoining land and separating it from the highway, for the purpose of looking at other boys at play on the further side of the fence, and not for the purpose of climbing over it. The fence, which was so defective as to constitute a nuisance, fell upon the plaintiff and injured him:—Held, in an action to recover damages for the injury, that, as the plaintiff in climbing upon the fence was merely indulging the natural instinct of a boy of his age, and doing an act which the defendant ought to have contemplated as likely to be done by children using the highway, the defendant was not entitled to avail himself of the defence that the injury was caused by the plaintiff's own act, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Harrold v. Watney, 67 L. J. Q.B. 771; [1898] 2 Q.B. 320; 78 L. T. 788; 46 W. R. 642—C.A. See also LOCAL GOVERNMENT; METROPOLIS.

Heat—Flat—Alteration of Premises—Reasonable User.—The Court, in determining whether the user by a person of a building occupied by him constitutes an actionable nuisance to his neighbour, must have regard to the question whether he is using the building in a reasonable and usual manner for the ordinary purposes for which it was intended. Dicta of Kekewich, J., as to reasonable user, in Reinhardt v. Mentasti (58 L. J. Ch. 787, 789; 42 Ch. D. 685, 690), dissented from. Sanders-Clark v. Grosvenor Mansions Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 579; [1900] 2 Ch. 373; 82 L. T. 758; 48 W. R. 570—Buckley, J.

Molestation—Watching and Besetting Workmen.—Watching and besetting workmen will support an action for nuisance at common law, to which proof that the watching and besetting was for the purpose of peaceful persuasion would be no defence. Lyons v. Wilkins, 68 L. J. Ch. 146; [1899] 1 Ch. 255; 79 L. T. 709; 47 W. R. 291; 63 J. P. 339—C.A.

Noise—Working Machinery—Neighbouring Houses—District where Noisy Trades Prevalent—Substantial Addition to Noise—Injunction.—The plaintiff had for about seventeen years resided with his family in a house in Gough Square, Fleet Street, and had carried on in a shop on the ground-floor his business of a dairyman. In September, 1904, the defendants, who were printers and publishers, went into occupation of an adjoining house, and set up and worked there machinery for the purpose of their business. The plaintiff alleged that the noise produced by the working of this machinery penetrated into his house at night as well as in the daytime, and caused a nuisance, and he claimed an injunction. The defendants denied the plaintiff's allegations, alleged that their machinery was of the most modern type and was properly fixed, and also that the plaintiff's premises were situated in the heart of a district which was almost entirely devoted to the printing and allied trades. The evidence was that there were printing works in the neighbourhood of the plaintiff's house at some of which work was done at night, but that until the defendants occupied their house no noise came from that house. The Judge at the trial found that, although in the daytime the plaintiff must always have been subject to noise from printing works in his neighbourhood, no disturbance at night was so caused; that, as regards ordinary working hours in the daytime he had not proved such a substantial addition to pre-existing noises as would amount to a legal nuisance; but the night working of the defendant's machinery (which was carefully and properly worked) caused a serious disturbance to the plaintiff and his family such as had not previously been experienced by them:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from so carrying on their printing works at the house in question as by reason of noise to cause a nuisance to the plaintiff as occupier of the adjoining house, or to his family. The principles laid down in St. Helens Smelting Co. v. Tipping (35 L. J. Q.B. 66, 72, 73; 11 H.L. C. 642, 650, 653) and Sturges v. Bridgman (48 L. J. Ch. 785, 791; 11 Ch. D. 852, 865) applied. Crump v. Lambert (L. R. 3 Eq. 409) discussed by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. Rushmer v. Polsue & Alfieri, Lim., 75 L. J. Ch. 79; [1906] 1 Ch. 234; 93 L. T. 823; 54 W. R. 161; 22 T. L. R. 139—C.A.

Per STIRLING, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J. —A person who resides in a neighbourhood devoted to a particular trade must put up with a certain amount of noise caused by that trade being carried on, and the standard of comfort must vary according to the situation of the property and the class of persons who inhabit it; but there may be such an addition to the noise as with the noise already existing will be more than a person can be reasonably expected to endure even in the particular district, and which will amount to a legal nuisance; and it would be no answer to say that the neighbourhood is noisy and the machinery which caused the additional noise was first-class machinery and properly worked. Id. On appeal to the HOUSE OF LORDS, THE HOUSE dismissed the appeal, being of opinion, as a matter of fact, that the appellants' machinery added so greatly to the noise as to constitute a nuisance. Polsue & Alfieri v. Rushmer, 76 L. J. Ch. 365; [1907] A.C. 121; 96 L. T. 510; 23 T. L. R. 362—H.L. (E.)

Injunction—Amount of Damages.—Where a plaintiff in an action for nuisance by noise and vibration claims an injunction which, or its equivalent undertaking, is granted by the Court, and also asks for general damages as ancillary to the real remedy sought, he is not entitled to substantial damages, but is entitled to recover something, not as compensation, but acknowledgment of the wrong he has suffered. Lipman v. Pulman, 91 L. T. 132—Kekewich, J.

Noxious Fumes—Reasonable Use of Property—Injunction.—A "reasonable" nuisance has no existence in law. Att.-Gen. v. Cole, 70 L. J. Ch. 148; [1901] 1 Ch. 205; 83 L. T. 725; 65 J. P. 88—Kekewich, J.

If a man so carries on his business as to create a nuisance he is acting unreasonably, and ought to be restrained by injunction. Reinhardt v. Mentasti (58 L. J. Ch. 787; 42 Ch. D. 685) explained. Id.

Overhanging Branches of Trees—Damage.—An action for an injunction will lie against a person who allows the branches of his trees to overhang his neighbour's land, whereby his neighbour's trees are damaged. Smith v. Giddy, 73 L. J. K.B. 894; [1904] 2 K.B. 448; 91 L. T. 296; 53 W. R. 207; 20 T. L. R. 596—D.

Pigs—Keeping—Public Nuisance—Abatement—Costs.—The defendants kept some hundreds of pigs in a farmstead contiguous to a village street, feeding them partly on wash from London hotels. Residents within two hundred yards of the farmstead having complained of noxious smells alleged to arise from the pigs and their food, an action to restrain a public nuisance was brought, on the relation of the local authority. Witnesses for the defence, some of whom lived on the premises, attributed the smells wholly to defects in the sewer in the street, and experts testified to the careful manner in which, since action brought, the pigs had been kept:—Held, that a public nuisance had been created by the defendants, but had been abated; that no injunction nor leave to apply for one in case of recurrence should be granted; and that both parties should pay their own costs. Att.-Gen. v. Squires, 5 L. G. R. 99—Swinfen Eady, J.

Pollution of Water by Gas—Evidence.—The plaintiffs were the owner and occupiers of two houses which obtained their water supply from a well by means of a pipe laid in the main road and belonging to the owner of the houses. The defendants were a gas company incorporated under Acts of Parliament, and owned gas mains and pipes which were laid in the same road. In an action by the plaintiffs to restrain the company from polluting the water supply with gas escaping from their pipes, which the plaintiffs alleged to be defective,—Held, that the defendants had no statutory authority to create a nuisance, and that there was a nuisance; as, however, it had ceased after action brought, there would be no injunction, but a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to pollute the plaintiffs' water. Held also, that evidence was inadmissible on the following three points raised by the defendants—first, that their pipes were well laid and they had a statutory right to do what they did, some escape of gas being unavoidable; secondly, that the plaintiffs' water pipe was defective; thirdly, that the plaintiffs' water supply was otherwise unfit for domestic purposes. Batcheller v. Tunbridge Wells Gas Co., 84 L. T. 765; 65 J. P. 680—Farwell, J.

Pollution of Oyster Beds by Sewage—Right to Drain into the Sea—Injuring Oyster Bed—By-law of Local Fisheries Committee.—At common law there is no right to discharge sewage into the sea so as to cause nuisance to another, neither does any such right exist under the Public Health Act, 1848, or the Public Health Act, 1875. If the sewage pollutes an oyster bed in a fishery this amounts to an injury to the bed within section 53 of the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868; and where a local fisheries committee have made a by-law under the Sea Fisheries Regulation Act, 1888, prohibiting the deposit or discharge of any substance detrimental to sea fish or sea fishing, such pollution is also illegal as a breach of the by-law. Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation, 75 L. J. K.B. 805; 94 L. T. 337; 54 W. R. 454; 70 J. P. 192; 4 L. G. R. 757; 22 T. L. R. 307—Buckley, J. Compromised in C.A., 22 T. L. R. 530.

Prescriptive Right to Discharge Sewage into Existing Sewers—Injunction.—Even if householders have a prescriptive right to discharge their sewage into existing sewers, an injunction may, notwithstanding Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation (74 L. J. Ch. 219; [1905] 1 Ch. 205), be granted to restrain a nuisance by pollution arising from the sewage if, on the facts of the case, it does not appear that any interference with such rights will result from the injunction. Ib. See also FISHERY.

Pollution by Sewage from Houses Discharged on to Land—Permission by Owner of Land to Corporation to Discharge Surface-water on to Land—Injunction—Costs.—By permission of the plaintiff the Corporation of C. had for many years discharged surface-water from a public road into a pond on the plaintiff's land through a drain belonging to the corporation. Subsequently, as the drain became offensive, the water was at the plaintiff's request diverted into a cesspool made by the corporation on his land. By direction of the corporation the defendant H. connected some newly built houses belonging to him with the drain, and the sewage from these houses was accordingly discharged into the plaintiff's lands through the drain. No permission was given by the plaintiff for this to be done:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction against the corporation and H., restraining them from discharging the sewage on his land, and to a mandatory injunction to disconnect the houses from the drain, but that the corporation should pay the costs both of the plaintiff and H. Gibbings v. Hungerford, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 211—C.A.

Racecourse—Sunday Racing—Noise and Disturbance to Residents and Worshippers in Churches.—Injunction granted to restrain horse races from being held on Sunday on a racecourse adjoining a residential locality, it being shewn to the satisfaction of the Court that the quiet and comfortable enjoyment of their houses by the inhabitants in the neighbourhood was interfered with, and the services in churches in the locality interrupted, by the shouting and cheering of the crowds collected on the course and the cries of the bookmakers, and also that the public thoroughfares leading to the racecourse were obstructed by vehicles conveying persons to and from the races, and by vehicles drawn up near the racecourse waiting for fares. Dewar v. City and Suburban Racecourse Co., [1899] 1 Ir. R. 345—V.C.

Smallpox Hospital—Apprehended Danger—Quia Timet Action—Aërial Convection—Empirical Opinions—Evidence—Admissibility.—In a quia timet action to restrain the use of a building as a smallpox hospital, the plaintiffs, relying on evidence in support of the theory of aërial convection and on the empirical opinions of experts founded upon other cases of smallpox hospitals, attempted to establish the proposition that all smallpox hospitals necessarily constituted a serious danger to the health of persons resident, working, or passing by within a certain radius of the hospital. The defendants called evidence to rebut both the contentions of the plaintiffs:—Held, that, in the absence of a consensus of expert opinion upon the questions in dispute, the theory of aërial convection was not proven, and that the inference which the Court was asked to draw from what had happened in other cases was destroyed by the negative instances adduced by the defendants, and that consequently the plaintiffs' claim failed. Att.-Gen. v. Nottingham Corporation, 73 L. J. Ch. 512; [1904] 1 Ch. 673; 90 L. T. 303; 52 W. R. 231; 63 J. P. 125; 2 L. G. R. 698; 20 T. L. R. 257—Farwell, J.

Quære, whether the admission of evidence-in-chief of what had happened with other hospitals, although allowed in deference to the opinion expressed in Hill v. Metropolitan Asylum District Managers (42 L. T. 212; 47 L. T. 29), is not wrong in principle as raising a number of side issues on which it is impossible for the Court to adjudicate without injury to absent parties. Ib.

— Residential District—Conflicting Evidence.—The defendants had commenced to erect a smallpox hospital. Within a quarter of a mile of the building there were 137 houses with about 753 inhabitants, and within half a mile there were 422 houses with about 2,321 inhabitants and four public institutions with about 361 residents. There was nothing to shew that the defendants were precluded from selecting a site outside their respective districts, if necessary, or that they had attempted to do so. There was conflicting expert evidence as to the suitability of the site selected, and as to the risk of the spread of smallpox from a small-pox hospital by reason of the possibility of the disease being carried, without actual contact, through the air for a considerable distance:—Held, that an injunction to restrain the erection of a smallpox hospital should not be granted. Att.-Gen. v. Rathmines and Pembroke Hospital Board, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 161—C.A.

Subsidence of Neighbouring Land—Causing Soil and Water.—Beneath the surface where were the plaintiff's houses and the defendants' works was a stratum of running silt, and the land on which the plaintiff's houses stood was supported by this stratum of silt, and the earth above and below it. The defendants in excavating their own land for the purpose of their works reached down to and cut through this stratum of silt, with the result that the land under the plaintiff's houses subsided and the subsidence caused damage. There was a conflict of evidence as to how far this running silt was liquid rather than solid—that is, whether it was muddy water or wet sand:—Held (dissentiente VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.), that the damage to the plaintiff's houses was caused by the withdrawal of sand or soil in the shape of silt from under his land owing to the acts of the defendants on their land, and what the defendants had done was an actionable nuisance at common law. Jordeson v. Sutton, Southcoates, and Drypool Gas Co., 68 L. J. Ch. 457; [1899] 2 Ch. 217; 80 L. T. 815; 63 J. P. 692—C.A.

Held, by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., that the subsidence of the plaintiff's land had been caused merely by the withdrawal of water support produced by the excavations of the defendants on their own land, that the plaintiff had no right to support by water, and what the defendants had done was not actionable. Ib.

Per LINDLEY, M.R., and RIGBY, L.J.—Whether Popplewell v. Hodgkinson (38 L. J. Ex. 126; L. R. 4 Ex. 246) is an authority that under no circumstances can there be a right to support to land from underground water, quære. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Popplewell v. Hodgkinson is a clear authority that there is so such right, and that a landowner is under no obligation at common law so to deal with his land as not to withdraw water support from the land of another person. Ib.

Action—Conversion—Order for Sale—Sale at Request of all Parties.]—Where a sale of freehold lands in which an infant is interested is ordered in a partition action, but the order for sale is not founded on the infant's interest, there is no conversion of his share, and in the event of his death under age his share of the proceeds of sale will devolve as realty and not as money. It is immaterial that the infant has joined with the other persons interested in requesting a sale in lieu of partition. Norton, In re; Norton v. Norton, 69 L. J. Ch. 31; [1900] 1 Ch. 101; 81 L. J. Ch. 310; 7 Ch. D. 708), followed as binding on a Court of first instance, notwithstanding the criticisms in Smith, In re (58 L. J. Ch. 108; 40 Ch. D. 386). Morgan, In re; Smith v. May, 69 L. Legal Mortgage of Share by one Co-owner—Mortgagor in Possession of the Entirety—Occupation Rent—Set-off as against Mortgagee.]—Where one co-owner of real property executed a legal mortgage of his share and remained in possession of the entirety of the property, but not as tenant or bailiff of his co-owners, and in a partition action the chief clerk, in answer to an enquiry directed by the judgment, found that a certain sum was due from the co-owner for rent in respect of his occupation of the premises, and the property was sold, such sum cannot be set off as against the co-owner's share of the proceeds to the prejudice of his mortgagee. Heckles v. Heckles (W. N. (1892), p. 188) commented on. Hill v. Hickin, 66 L. J. Ch. 717; [1897] 2 Ch. 579; 77 L. T. 127; 46 W. R. 137—Stirling, J.

Sale in Lieu of Partition—Tenant of Undivided Moiety.]—An order for sale in lieu of partition can be made under the Partition Acts where the plaintiffs are the owners of one undivided moiety of the premises and the sole defendant is the lessee of the other undivided moiety under a lease for seven years granted by the owner of that moiety. Mason v. Keays, 78 L. T. 33—C.A.

Sale—Mortgages on Shares—One Set of Costs in respect of each Share—Discretion.]—In an action for sale and distribution of the proceeds in lieu of partition, it appeared from the chief clerk's certificate that six persons were beneficially interested in the property, and that some had mortgaged their shares. The property was sold and the proceeds paid into Court to the credit of the action, and invested in New Consols. Upon the further consideration of the action, the question was raised whether each mortgagee who had been served with notice of the proceedings and attended ought to be allowed a separate set of costs out of the fund in Court before distribution thereof, or whether only one set of costs should be allowed out of the fund in respect of each share:—Held, that only one set of the costs should, as a general rule, be allowed out of the fund in respect of each share, but that the Court had a discretion in the matter. Vase, In re; Langrish v. Vase, 84 L. T. 761—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Trustees for Purchaser—Direction as to Conveyance—Form of Order.]—Where an action was brought by infants to obtain a sale in lieu of a partition of certain freeholds of which they were entitled to one undivided third, the Court made an order declaring that upon any sale being made such of the parties interested as were infants would be trustees for the purchaser, and appointing the next friend of the infants to convey their share or shares to the purchaser. Davis v. Ingram, 66 L. J. Ch. 386; [1897] 1 Ch. 477—Kekewich, J.

Sale not Claimed—Defendant's Objection to Partition—Costs to Date of Hearing.]—The owners of five equal undivided twelfth shares in certain freehold properties brought a partition action against the owners of the remaining seven-twelfths, but did not ask for a sale. The defendants objected to partition. An order for partition with the usual enquiries having been agreed to, the question arose as to how the costs up to the date of the hearing should be borne, it being agreed that subsequent costs must be shared rateably between plaintiffs and defendants:—Held, that, having regard to the circumstances of the case, there should be no order as to costs up to the date of the hearing of the action. Hills v. Archer, 91 L. T. 166—Farwell, J.

Costs—Enquiries—Discretion of Court.]—In a partition action the property long ago had been served in moieties, one of which was held by the defendant for life with remainders over, and the other had to be divided among a great number of persons. The parties representing the different aliquot parts appeared in chambers. Subsequently, a partition action was brought, and an ordinary judgment directed with one special enquiry:—Held, that, since the Partition Act the usual practice had been to give the costs of all parties out of the proceeds of sale. That Order LXV. rule 14 (b) was not inapplicable to such a case, and that it did not appear that the plaintiffs would suffer any injustice if the ordinary practice were departed from. But that in all the circumstances the usual order as to costs would be made. Graham v. Clinton (Lord), 81 L. T. 717—Stirling, J.

Advances to Business—Control—Provision that Person Making Advance, &c. is not to be Deemed a Partner.]—The defender let certain premises to A for a term of years, the defender agreeing to advance a large sum for fitting up the premises for the purpose of the business to be carried on therein; the fittings, &c. at the termination of the lease to be the property of the defender in the absence of payment of loan. By a contemporaneous agreement the defender, in addition to the sums to be advanced under the lease as aforesaid, agreed to advance a further sum, the total amount of the advances to be placed to the credit of the defender on loan capital account in connection with the business, and on which he should receive interest at 7½ per cent. per annum, payable monthly. A was, with the consent of the defender, to engage assistants for the business; he was to keep proper books and accounts, devote his whole time to the business, charge same with a certain salary, which might be raised from time to time with the defender's consent. The receipts were to go in paying salaries and current charges, and in payment of interest on the defender's outlays on the loan capital account; and any surplus was to be divided between A in name of profit and the defender in name of extra interest. The defender could in certain events appoint a cashier (whose salary should be paid by A), who should collect all sums and make all payments in connection with the business. The agreement further provided that the defender should not be or be held to be a partner in the business, or liable for its debts or obligations: Held, that the defender was a partner in the business, and liable for its debts. Stewart v. Buchanan, 6 F. 15—Ct. of Sess.

Holding Out—Name of Individual same Name as Firm.]—Where a person carries on business in the name of an individual with the addition of the words "and Co.," and employs that individual as manager of the business, to whom the entire management of the business is left, that does not amount to a holding out of that person as the sole owner of the business. It may amount to a holding out that he is a partner in the business. Bevan v. National Bank, 23 T. L. R. 65—Channell J.

Construction — “Professional misconduct” — Dentist — Order of General Medical Council Erasing Names from Register—Report of Dental Committee—Admissibility in Evidence—Judgment in Rem.]—Where two persons, being registered dentists, entered into three separate partnerships with three other persons for carrying on the profession of dentists, under articles which provided respectively that if either partner should be guilty of professional misconduct, or of any act calculated to injure the partnership business, the other partners respectively might determine the partnerships by notice in writing, and the names of those two persons were erased from the Dentists Register by an order of the General Medical Council under the Dentists Act, 1878, upon the ground that, on facts found by the Dental Committee (on whose report the council act), they had been proved guilty of conduct which was “infamous or disgraceful in a professional respect” within section 13 of the Act, they having appeared before the council and having by their counsel admitted that they had been guilty of professional misconduct, and the other partners thereupon gave notices determining their respective partnerships, and actions were brought, in one of which the two persons were defendants and in the other two were plaintiffs, to determine the validity of such notices,—it was held by COZENS-HARDY, M.R., and BUCKLEY, L.J., that the order of the General Medical Council was admissible as prima facie evidence of conduct which was “infamous or disgraceful in a professional respect,” and, no rebutting evidence having been given, that the statutory misconduct was proved—SIR GORELL BARNES, P., doubting whether the order was admissible as evidence of the existence of professional misconduct, but considering that such misconduct had been proved by the admissions and evidence; and it was further held by all the members of the COURT OF APPEAL that no distinction could be drawn between conduct which was disgraceful in a professional respect and professional misconduct within the meaning of the respective articles of partnership, and that consequently the notices were valid. Decision of WARRINGTON, J., in Clifford v. Timms (76 L. J. Ch. 265; [1907] 1 Ch. 420) reversed. Hill v. Clifford; Clifford v. Timms, 76 L. J. Ch. 627; [1907] 2 Ch. 236; 97 L. T. 266; 23 T. L. Agreement not to Transact Business with “original clients”—Action for Injunction.]—In July, 1880, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into partnership as solicitors. Clause 7 of the partnership agreement provided: “Either party is to be at liberty to transact any business in his own name (if he wishes, to do so), and also to transact any business for any private friends, or poor persons, without charge, he in such case paying all office out-of-pocket expenses.” Clause 8 provided: “Either party is to be at liberty to terminate this agreement by three months’ notice in writing at any time, and in such case neither is to transact any business for, or in any way to influence business with any clients who were original clients of the other.” No notice was given to terminate the partnership, but it was dissolved by mutual consent on August 10, 1889. The plaintiff now moved for an injunction:—Held, that, notwithstanding no notice was given, the eighth clause of the agreement came into operation when the partnership was dissolved on August 10; that “original clients” comprised those who were clients of either plaintiff or defendant before they became partners, and also those for whom the plaintiff or defendant, in pursuance of clause 7, transacted business as for private friends or poor persons. Badham v. Williams, 83 L. T. 141—Kekewich, J.

Partnership Continued after Period Fixed for Determination — Pre-emption Clause — Whether Applicable to Partnership at Will.]—In an action for declaration that the partnership between the plaintiff and defendant was dissolved by the issue of the writ, and that the plaintiff was entitled to exercise the rights conferred by clause 25 of the partnership articles for the purchase of the interest of the defendant, it appeared that by the articles the partnership was fixed for ten years from January 1, 1889, unless sooner determined as therein provided. By clause 25 the plaintiff was to be at liberty to determine the partnership by giving the defendant six months’ notice, and whether so determined or by effluxion of time she should have the right to purchase the share of the defendant at a valuation. Since January 1, 1899, the partnership had been carried on on the like terms, as a partnership at will. At the hearing the defendant contended that the continued partnership was not a partnership at will, and that in any event clause 25 was now inapplicable:—Held, that such continued partnership was a partnership at will, under section 27 of the Partnership Act, 1890, and that clause 25 was not inconsistent with a partnership at will, and that accordingly the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration as asked. Brooks v. Brooks, 85 L. T. 453—Farwell, J.

Auctioneers — Trading Firm — Bill of Exchange—Authority to Bind Firm—Partner to Sign Bills Specified in Partnership Deed — Acceptance by other Partner — Liability to Holder of Bill of Exchange.]—The COURT OF APPEAL, without expressing any opinion as to whether or not the decision of the Divisional Court (75 L. J. K.B. 627; [1906] 2 K.B. 321) that auctioneers are not traders was right, allowed the appeal upon the ground that, as the terms of a certain partnership deed between the defendants shewed that it was contemplated that bills of exchange would be drawn, accepted, and indorsed in the course of carrying on a partnership business of auctioneers, a holder in due course of a bill of exchange accepted by one of the partners in the name of the firm—although by the terms of the deed the other partner only was to sign bills—was entitled to recover in an action upon the bill of exchange. Wheatley v. Smithers, 76 L. J. K.B. 900; [1907] 2 K.B. 684; 97 L. T. 418; 23 T. L. R. 585—C.A.

Bill Granted by all Partners of a Firm—Presumption.]—Semble, When all the partners of a firm which carries on its business under a descriptive name grant a bill, the presumption is that it is granted for the purposes of the firm, but the contrary may be proved. Rosslund Cycle Co. v. McCreadie, [1907] S. C. 1203—Ct. of Sess.

4. NOMINATION OF NEW PARTNER UNDER ARTICLES.

Rights of Person Nominated.]—Where articles of partnership contain power for one partner to nominate and introduce into the firm a person for the whole or any part of his share in the business and the profits thereof, that is a consent by the other partners to admit into partnership any person who is willing to be introduced into the firm and to observe the conditions of his admission; and the nominee, on accepting his nomination, becomes in the eye of the Court a partner, and entitled as against the other partners to such relief as Courts of equity are in the habit of granting to persons who stand in the relationship of partners to others. Lovegrove v. Nelson (3 L. J. Ch. 108; 3 Myl. & K. 1, 20) and England v. Curling (8 Beav. 129) applied. Byrne v. Reid, 71 L. J. Ch. 830; [1902] 2 Ch. 735; 87 L. T. 507; 51 W. R. 52—per Stirling, L.J.

5. PURCHASE BY PARTNER.

Purchase without Consent of other Partners—Right of Excluded Partner to Share—Scope of Partnership.]—A partner who on his own account makes a purchase of a property or business which is not within the scope of the partnership and is neither in rivalry or in any way connected with the partnership, and who acts on information not acquired by reason of his position as partner, is not liable to account to his co-partners. Cassels v. Stewart (6 App. Cas. 64) followed. Trimble v. Goldberg, 75 L. J. P.C. 92; [1906] A.C. 494; 95 L. T. 163; 22 T. L. R. 717—P.C.

Purchase of Freehold by Firm—Misdescription of Purchasers' Name—Evidence of Identity—Legal Estate.]—William Wray carried on business under his own name at Laurel House, North Hill, Highgate, in partnership with his sons and another person. He died in 1885, and his widow was admitted as a partner in his place. The business was carried on as before and under the same name. In 1890 the partners bought a house and paid for it out of the partnership assets. The conveyance was made between the vendor of the one part and "William Wray, of Laurel House, Highgate," of the other part, and the property was conveyed to William Wray in fee-simple:—Held, that the legal estate passed by the conveyance to the four partners as joint tenants. Maugham v. Sharpe (34 L. J. C.P. 19; 17 C. B. (N.S.) 443) followed. Wray v. Wray, 74 L. J. Ch. 687; [1905] 2 Ch. 349; 93 L. T. 304; 54 W. R. 136—Warrington, J.

6. FRAUD OR WRONGFUL ACT OF PARTNER.

Liability of Firm for Partner by Unlawful Means Obtaining Information of Transactions of Competing Trader—Bribery of Trader's Clerk—Partner Acting in Ordinary Course of Business of Firm—Scope of Authority.]—A partner in a firm, carrying on a business similar to that carried on by the plaintiff, bribed a clerk in the employment of the latter to disclose information as to transactions connected with certain contracts of purchase and sale entered into with some of the plaintiff's customers, and the clerk also abstracted from the plaintiff's office the customers' contract book and disclosed its contents to the partner. In an action against the firm to recover damages for the acts of the partner in inducing the clerk to commit a breach of his contract with the plaintiff not to divulge or make known the secrets of his employer's business, the jury found, inter alia, that it was in the course of the business of the firm to obtain by legitimate means information in regard to contracts made and tendered for by competing firms; that the moneys paid to the clerk were paid in consideration of such information and were moneys of the firm, which profited by what the partner had done:—Held, that as the partner was acting within the scope of his authority in obtaining the information, although he made use of unlawful means in doing so, the firm were liable for his acts. Hamlyn v. Houston, 72 L. J. K.B. 72; [1903] 1 K.B. 81; 87 L. T. 500; 51 W. R. 99—O.A.

— Assignment of Book Debts—Deed Executed by One Partner—Other Partner's Name Added without Knowledge or Consent.]—One of the partners of a firm executed a deed assigning the book debts specified in a schedule to the deed to a creditor of the firm to secure his debt. The deed appeared to be executed by both partners, but the signature of the other partner had been added to the deed without his knowledge or consent, and he had no knowledge of the assignment. The deed was accepted in good faith by the creditor, who gave notice of the assignment to the scheduled debtors. Subsequently a receiving order was made against the firm, and both of the parties became bankrupt:—Held, that, whether or not the assignment was a valid deed, it was by virtue of section 6 of the Partnership Act, 1890, effective as an equitable assignment of the book debts, being a document relating to the business of the firm and executed in a manner shewing an intention to bind the firm by a person thereto authorised. Briggs & Co., In re; Wright, ex parte, 75 L. J. K.B. 591; [1906] 2 K.B. 209; 95 L. T. 61—Bigham, J.

— Fraud—Contract with Individual before Partnership—Novation—Election to Abide by Contract with Individual.]—Where A has a contract with B, and B takes C into partnership and gives A notice, A has an option whether he will abide by his contract with B alone or accept the liability of the partnership. If he elect to abide by his contract with B, C is not liable for a fraud committed by B against A in respect of the contract, though B was acting within the scope of the partnership business. British Homes Assurance Corporation v. Paterson, 71 L. J. Ch. 872; [1902] 2 Ch. 404; 86 L. T. 826; 50 W. R. 612—Farwell, J.

A solicitor who enters into partnership with another solicitor during the negotiation of a mortgage, for which the latter has been specially retained and of which the former was unaware, cannot be made liable for the fraud of his partner in misappropriating the mortgage-money without his knowledge, unless the client, upon learning of the change in the constitution of the firm, has elected to adopt the new firm as his solicitors for the completion of the mortgage. Ib.

— Matter outside Partnership.—Where a secretaryship held by one partner is included in the partnership business, the partners of the secretary are not liable for fraud committed by him outside his duties as secretary. It is no part of the duties of the secretary of a company to accept conveyances of the company's real estate in his own name. Tendring Hundred Waterworks Co. v. Jones, 73 L. J. Ch. 41; [1903] 2 Ch. 615; 52 W. R. 61—Farwell, J.

7. PROFITS.

How Ascertained.—In ascertaining the "profits" of a partnership, in the absence of special agreement to the contrary, the net profits of each year must be ascertained upon the footing of the moneys actually received and paid in that year without reference to when the work is done in respect of which the moneys are received. Badham v. Williams, 86 L. T. 191—Kekewich, J.

8. BOOKS OF ACCOUNT.

Right of Partners to Inspection by an Agent.—The ordinary right of inspection of partnership books conferred on a partner by articles of partnership, or under the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 24, sub-s. 9, may be exercised by an agent to whom no personal objection can be made, as well as personally. Bevan v. Webb, 70 L. J. Ch. 536; [1901] 2 Ch. 59; 84 L. T. 609; 49 W. R. 548—C.A.

9. SHARE IN PARTNERSHIP.

Purchase of—Vendor's Right to Indemnity.—A contract to purchase a share in a partnership implies a contract by the purchaser to indemnify the vendor against the liabilities of the partnership, although the contract is silent on the point and although the purchaser is, under the Partnership Act, 1890, s. 31, not entitled to become a partner. Dodson v. Downey, 70 L. J. Ch. 854; [1901] 2 Ch. 620; 85 L. T. 273; 50 W. R. 57—Farwell, J.

Mortgage of—Action by Mortgagee for Account.—One partner, W. S. W., mortgaged his share in the partnership to the knowledge of the other partner, D.:—Held, that the partner W. S. W. could not, on the dissolution of the partnership, sell his share to the other partner D. without the consent of the mortgagee. Watts v. Driscoll, 82 L. T. 255—Farwell, J. Affirmed, 49 W. R. 146—C.A.

Sale by one Partner to Co-partner—Fiduciary Relation—Duty to Disclose Assets—Action to Set Aside Sale—Consent Order—Confirmation of Sale—Election.—In a transaction between co-partners for the sale by one to the other of a share in the partnership business there is a duty resting on the purchaser who knows, and is aware that he knows, more about the partnership accounts than the vendor, to put the vendor in possession of all material facts with reference to the partnership assets, and not to conceal what he alone knows. Unless such information has been furnished the sale is voidable. Law, In re; Law v. Law, 74 L. J. Ch. 169; [1905]

After the sale by one partner to his co-partner of his interest in the partnership business the selling partner discovered that certain partnership assets had not been disclosed to him at the time of the sale, and brought an action for misrepresentation against the purchasing partner. This action was settled by a consent order, by which all charges of fraud were withdrawn and a sum was paid to the selling partner in discharge of every claim between the plaintiff and defendant. The selling partner alleged the subsequent discovery of further assets of the partnership, and brought an action to set aside the sale and the consent order:—Held, that the plaintiff had elected not to avoid the transaction, and that the sale could not, after the consent order, be re-opened. Clough v. London and North-Western Railway (41 L. J. Ex. 17; L. R. 7 Ex. 26) followed. Ib.

Assignment of Share to Stranger—Payment of Salaries to Partners—Right of Assignee to Interfere—"Management or administration of partnership business."—The effect of section 31 of the Partnership Act, 1890, is to substitute the assignee of a share in a partnership for the assignor as the person entitled to such profits as the assignor would have received if there had been no assignment by him of his share, but it gives to the assignee no right to interfere with anything done in the management or administration of the partnership business. Garwood's Trusts, In re; Garwood v. Paynter, 72 L. J. Ch. 208; [1903] 1 Ch. 236; 51 W. R. 185—Buckley, J.

Although under section 24 of the Act partners are prima facie prohibited from receiving any remuneration for acting in the partnership business, yet where a partner has assigned his share in the partnership assets a bona fide arrangement subsequently made between the partners for the payment to themselves of salaries for work done in connection with the partnership business may be supported as against the assignee of the share as an act done in the "management or administration of the partnership business" under section 31, sub-section 1 of the Act. Ib.

Partnership at Will—Assignment by Partner of his Share—No Notice.—An agreement between three persons for a partnership at will contained a clause that "in the event of any partner . . . desiring to retire, he shall give one calendar month's notice to allow his shares to be purchased by the remaining partners. . ." The defendant, who was one of the partners, without giving notice as provided by the above clause, sold his share to one of the partners without the knowledge of the other, who only heard of it subsequently. A creditor who did work for the firm after the sale sued the defendant as a partner:—Held, that, as the defendant had not complied with the above clause in the partnership agreement, he remained a partner, the mere assignment of his share to one of his co-partners not operating as a dissolution of the partnership. Sturgeon v. Salmon, 22 T. L. R. 584—D.

Where at the date of the dissolution the partnership account with the firm's bank is overdrawn and the account is subsequently continued by the surviving partner in the partnership name, the bank are, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, entitled to assume that the account was continued for the purpose of realisation, and that sums paid into and drawn out of that account by the surviving partner are paid in and drawn out for the purposes of the partnership. The rule in Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572) has no application, and an equitable mortgage by the deposit of the title-deeds of certain real property belonging to the late partnership given by the surviving partner to the bank to secure an overdraft existing at the date of the equitable mortgage is entitled to priority over the lien of the executors of the dead partner. Ib.

— Effect of Assignment of Share.—Whether in a partnership at will in which there are more than two members an assignment by one of the partners of his share in the partnership to another partner effects a dissolution of partnership, quære. Emanuel v. Symon, 76 L. J. K.B. 147; [1907] 1 K.B. 285; 96 L. T. 231; 23 T. L. R. 94—Channell, J.

10. DEBTS OF PARTNERSHIP.

Goods Ordered before but Delivered after Death of one Partner—Moneys Received by Surviving Partner and not Accounted for—Liability of Deceased's Estate—"Obligation."—Where F. & Co., a firm of commission agents, in 1894 procured an order for certain goods, and the order was executed by E. & Co., and the goods delivered subsequently to the death of one of the partners in the firm, but in ignorance of his death, and the purchase-money was received by the surviving partner and not accounted for, no "obligation" was incurred by the estate of the deceased partner within section 9 of the Partnership Act, 1890. Friend, In re; Friend v. Friend, 66 L. J. Ch. 737; [1897] 2 Ch. 421; 77 L. T. 50; 46 W. R. 139—Stirling, J.

— Liability of Estate of Deceased Partner—"Obligation."—An action for goods sold and delivered will not lie against the personal representative of a deceased partner to recover the price of goods ordered by the partnership before but not delivered till after the death of the partner. Bagel v. Miller, 72 L. J. K.B. 495; [1903] 2 K.B. 212; 88 L. T. 769; 8 Com. Cas. 218—D.

Security by Partner for—Death of Mortgagor—Partnership Assets Sufficient to Pay Joint Debts—Exoneration of Land Charged.—Real estate belonging to a partner and mortgaged by him to secure a partnership debt is not primarily liable to be applied in payment of the mortgage debt. If at the time of the death of that partner the joint assets are sufficient to pay the joint debts in full, no liability in respect of the mortgage falls on his estate. A dispute between the legatees of his personalty and the devisee of the mortgaged land as to the incidence of the liability is therefore not a dispute between "persons claiming through or under the deceased person," within the meaning of Locke-King's Act, and the legatees cannot call upon the devisee to discharge the mortgage. Ritson, In re; Ritson v. Ritson, 68 L. J. Ch. 77; [1899] 1 Ch. 128; 79 L. T. 455; 47 W. R. 213—C.A.

Will of Partner—Specific Devise of Part of Partnership Property—Solvent Partnership—Validity of Devise.—A partner specifically devised his share of certain lands and hereditaments forming part of the partnership property to his executors upon trust for sale and to divide the proceeds amongst certain persons:—Held, that this specific devise was valid, and that, the partnership being solvent, the legatees were entitled to take the proceeds of the share so devised free from the partnership debts and liabilities. Farguhar v. Haddon (41 L. J. Ch. 260; L. R. 7 Ch. 1) distinguished. Holland, In re; Brettell v. Holland, 76 L. J. Ch. 449; [1907] 2 Ch. 88; 97 L. T. 49—Neville, J.

11. DEATH OF PARTNER.

Lien of Executors of Dead Partner—Overdraft at Firm's Bank—Partnership Real Estate—Equitable Mortgage by Surviving Partner—Priority.—Where a partnership between two persons is dissolved by the death of one of the partners, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the partnership articles it is the duty as well as the right of the surviving partner to realise the partnership property, and he may for that purpose not only sell the partnership assets, but he may also mortgage them or any part thereof to secure a partnership debt whether incurred before or after the dissolution, and in this respect there is no difference between real estate held for partnership purposes and personal estate. Bourne, In re; Bourne v. Bourne, 75 L. J. Ch. 779; [1906] 2 Ch. 427; 95 L. T. 131; 54 W. R. 559—C.A.

The lien of the executors of the deceased partner in respect of his interest in the partnership does not attach to each particular property belonging to the partnership so as to affect that property in the hands of any person dealing in good faith with the surviving partner, but it is a general lien upon the surplus assets after realisation. Ib.

12. GOODWILL.

Death of Partner—Brokers on London Stock Exchange.—There is no objection in law to the existence of a goodwill in a partnership business of brokers on the London Stock Exchange, and, unless provision is made to the contrary in partnership articles, the value of the goodwill must be included among the assets of the partnership. Wilson v. Williams (29 L. R. Ir. 176) explained. Hill v. Fearis, 74 L. J. Ch. 237; [1905] 1 Ch. 466; 53 W. R. 457; 21 T. L. R. 187—Warrington, J.

Mode of Valuation.—Where under articles of partnership a surviving partner takes over a deceased partner's share at a valuation, the valuation should proceed on the footing that the business is being sold, so that as against the purchaser the surviving partner would be at liberty to carry on a rival business, but not to use the firm name—that name not being identical with his own—nor to solicit the old customers of the firm. Jennings v. Jennings (67 L. J. Ch. 190; [1898] 1 Ch. 378) considered and followed. David and Matthews, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 185; [1899] 1 Ch. 378; 80 L. T. 75; 47 W. R. 813—Romer, J.

Trustee Partner—Employing Assets in Business—Account of Profits.—Under articles of partnership entered into in 1872, C. N. and his brothers E. N. and G. N., with two other persons, became partners for a term of ten years for the carrying on of an already existing business consisting of the manufacture and sale of isinglass, gelatine, and glue. Under the provisions of the articles as modified by a declaration of trust executed by the brothers N. in March, 1877, the capital of any one of the brothers dying during the term was to remain in the business till the expiration of the term, and was then to be held by the survivors on trust to dispose of it as his will should direct. C. N. died in August, 1877, having by his will of the preceding March appointed E. N., G. N., and another executors, and bequeathed to them his capital and shares of profits of the business. Until the expiration of the partnership term the shares of profits were to be divided between testator's children, with provisions for maintenance and accumulation, and thereafter the capital and shares of profits were to be held by the executors on trust to enter into such arrangements as they might think desirable for carrying on the business in partnership with such persons as they might think proper. The testator declared his ultimate object to be the introduction of one or more of his sons into the business, but made provision for the division of the profits on his share among all his children. He left numerous children, most of whom were infants at his death, and on the determination of the partnership in 1882 his share, with accumulations, amounted to about 30,000*l.* The two surviving brothers N. formed a new partnership with another person, and until 1887 employed the testator's share in the business, paying his children interest thereon at 10 per cent. The profits made were much larger. In 1887 the business was converted into a limited company, and the children were allotted 10 per cent. preference shares to the value of the 30,000*l.* at par. In an action by the children of C. N. against E. N. (G. N. having died) claiming a declaration that the defendant was bound to make good the profits made between 1882 and 1887 attributable to the share of C. N. employed in the business and also claiming a share in the goodwill,—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to anything in respect of goodwill, and that, with regard to the former part of the claim, the case was not materially different from Vyse v. Foster (44 L. J. Ch. 37; L. R. 7 H.L. 318), and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to more than the 10 per cent. which they had received. Smith v. Nelson, 92 L. T. 313—Joyce, J.

Soliciting Customers.—Upon the expiration of a partnership between two persons, the partner who has purchased the goodwill and assets of the business under the terms of the articles of partnership can restrain his former partner from soliciting the customers of the old firm, although the articles contain a proviso that nothing therein contained "shall prevent either partner from starting a similar business in the neighbourhood after the expiration of the partnership." Such a proviso only expresses what the law would have implied. Trego v. Hunt (65 L. J. Ch. 1; [1896] A. C. 7) followed. Pearson v. Pearson (54 L. J. Ch. 32; 27 Ch. D. 145) explained. Gillingham v. Beddow, 69 L. J. Ch. 527; [1900] 2 Ch. 242; 82 L. T. 791; 64 J. P. 617—Cozens-Hardy, J.

13. DISSOLUTION.

Termination by Notice—Arbitration—Sufficiency of Notice—Stay of Proceedings.—Where articles of partnership provide that if any of the partners should be guilty of immorality the other partners may by notice in writing determine the partnership, and that any question whether such a case has happened should be referred to arbitration, and the articles also contain a general clause referring all matters in dispute to arbitration, a question of the sufficiency of a notice to determine the partnership on the ground of immorality is one which should be decided by the Court and not by arbitration, and a stay of proceedings will not be ordered under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, where such sufficiency is in question in an action. Barnes v. Youngs, 67 L. J. Ch. 263; [1898] 1 Ch. 414; 46 W. R. 332—Romer, J.

Validity.—A notice of dissolution of the partnership given under such a power is insufficient if the offending partner has not previously been informed of the cause of complaint and given an opportunity of explaining. Ib.

Action for—Professional Misconduct—Dentist.—The publication of statements by a dentist expressed in terms of profuse self-praise and of disparagement of other practitioners held to constitute "professional misconduct" such as to justify a partner, under the terms of a partnership deed, in demanding the dissolution of the partnership. Clifford v. Timms, 77 L. J. Ch. 91; [1908] A.C. 12; 98 L. T. 64—H.L. (E.)

—Order by Consent for Sale of Assets to one Partner—No Stipulation as to Goodwill—"Assets"—Right of Vendor to Canvass Old Customers.—On a sale by one of two partners of all his interest in the partnership assets to the other partner, goodwill not being expressly mentioned, the vendor is under an obligation not to canvass the old customers of the firm. Jennings v. Jennings, 67 L. J. Ch. 190; [1898] 1 Ch. 378; 77 L. T. 786; 46 W. R. 344—Stirling, J.

Where an action for dissolution of a partnership was compromised on the terms that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff for a particular sum of money, that the partnership should be dissolved, and that the defendant should retain the "assets," but goodwill was not mentioned, the Court in a subsequent action held that the judgment amounted to a sale of the goodwill, and granted an injunction restraining the plaintiff in the previous action from canvassing the old customers of the firm. Gray v. Smith (59 L. J. Ch. 145; 43 Ch. D. 208) and Pearson v. Pearson (54 L. J. Ch. 32; 27 Ch. D. 145) distinguished. Ib.

Receiver and Manager—Management—Interference—Injunction.—Two brothers carried on a business in partnership for some years, when the business began to fail, and one brother brought an action for dissolution of the partnership against the other, to whose mismanagement he attributed the failure. The plaintiff obtained an order appointing a receiver and manager of the business, who dismissed the defendant from the management, and afterwards an order was made for the dissolution of the partnership, the taking of the partnership accounts, and the realisation of the partnership effects. The defendant set up and managed a rival business under a similar name, which he alleged belonged to his sons as partners, and for which his wife and her sisters advanced the capital. On a motion by the plaintiff for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the management of the old business by the receiver and manager, it was proved that the defendant had spread rumours to the effect that the old business would shortly be closed and sold by auction, and had induced some of the employees of the old business to leave, after giving due notice, and to enter the employment of the new business, and also had attempted to obtain from the landlord the tenancy of a field which had long been in the occupation of the old partnership, and used in the old business:—Held, that any act calculated to injure property under the control of the receiver and manager was an interference with the management of the receiver and manager, whom the Court was bound to protect; and an injunction was granted restraining the defendant from interfering with the management of the receiver and manager. Dixon v. Dixon, 89 L. T. 272—Swinfen Eady, J.

Action for Partnership Accounts—Partner Appointed Receiver—Debt Due from Receiver as Partner—Inability to Pay—Money in Receiver's Hands—Receiver's Remuneration and Costs—Right to Deduct.—In an action for the usual partnership accounts, the defendant, who was the surviving partner, was appointed receiver on the usual terms to collect and get in the partnership assets. Upon taking the accounts, it appeared that the sum of 1,392*l.* 12*s.* 8*d.* was in the defendant's hands as receiver, and that the defendant was indebted to the partnership to the extent of 1,457*l.* 19*s.* 5*d.*, which he was quite unable to pay. The creditors had received 10*s.* in the pound, and the Master had fixed the defendant's remuneration as receiver at 280*l.* and his costs at 48*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* On further consideration,—Held, that, inasmuch as the receiver was an officer of the Court, and had entered into an arrangement with the Court to do certain work for remuneration, the honour of the Court was involved to see that the arrangement was carried out, and that as the receiver had done his work properly he was entitled to deduct his remuneration and costs out of the money in his hands as receiver, and not merely to set them off against the amount of his indebtedness to the partnership. Davy v. Scarth, 75 L. J. Ch. 22; [1906] 1 Ch. 55; 54 W. R. 155—Farwell, J.

Losses and Deficiencies of Capital—Unequal Shares—Distribution of Assets between Partners on Final Settlement of Accounts.—Where partners agree to provide capital in unequal shares, but to divide net profits equally, and where, on dissolution, there is a deficiency of capital, the true principle as to the distribution of assets available for the partners is, under section 44 of the Partnership Act, 1890, that each partner contribute to the assets an equal share of the deficiency of capital, and that the assets be then applied in paying to each rateably what has been found due to him in respect of capital. Garner v. Murray, 73 L. J. Ch. 66; [1904] 1 Ch. 57; 89 L. T. 665; 52 W. R. 208—Joyce, J.

Ascertaining Deceased Partner's Share—Annual General Account—Goodwill—Inclusion in Account.—Articles of partnership provided that a full and general annual account and valuation of all the capital, stock-in-trade, property, profits, moneys, credits, and effects whatsoever of the partnership should be made, and that if a partner should die before the expiration of the partnership his executors, administrators, and assigns should be entitled to such sum of money as his share of the capital and property of the partnership should upon the last general annual account amount to. A partner died during the continuance of the partnership, and his executors claimed that in ascertaining the amount of his share they were entitled to have a sum for the goodwill of the partnership business, which was of considerable value, included in the account and valuation. The articles contained no express provision as to the goodwill. On a summons taken out to determine whether they were entitled to have a sum for the goodwill included,—Held, that there was no material difference between the present case and Stewart v. Gladstone (10 Ch. D. 626), and, the principle of that decision being that, where the accounts from which the sum to be paid is to be ascertained are accounts for the purpose of ascertaining profits, the goodwill is not to be included, a sum for the goodwill ought not to be included in the account. Scott v. Scott, 89 L. T. 582—Joyce, J.

Mortgage of Partner's Share—Purchase of Mortgaged Share by Partner—Rights of Mortgagee—Account.—Under sub-section 2 of section 31 of the Partnership Act, 1890, the assignee of a share in a partnership business is entitled upon a dissolution of the partnership to receive the actual share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled as between himself and the other partners, and to an account for the purpose of ascertaining that share. Therefore, where partners have knowledge of an assignment of a share, any arrangement between them for a dissolution of the partnership upon the terms of the share of the assigning partner being purchased by the other partner at a price agreed upon between them, would not be binding upon the assignee if made without his consent. Watts v. Driscoll, 70 L. J. Ch. 157; [1901] 1 Ch. 294; 84 L. T. 97; 49 W. R. 146—C.A.

Expulsion Clause—Conduct Detrimental to Partnership or Flagrant Breach of any Duties of a Partner—Travelling without a Ticket—Conviction at Police Court—Injunction to Restrain Expulsion.—Three persons carried on business as general drapers under a deed of partnership which empowered the managing partner, in the event of either of the other partners being addicted to conduct detrimental to the plaintiff's business, or being guilty of any flagrant breach of any of the duties of a partner, to remove the offending partner from the partnership, on giving him not less than six days' notice in writing, and the partnership, as regards such partner, was to determine on the expiration of the notice. One of the partners was convicted for travelling on a railway without a ticket with intent to avoid payment, and the managing partner having thereupon given him formal notice determining the partnership, he brought an action against the managing partner for a declaration that the notice of dissolution was void:—Held, that the case was exactly within the expulsion clause, and that there was ample justification for the notice of dissolution. Carmichael v. Evans, 73 L. J. Ch. 329; [1904] 1 Ch. 486; 90 L. T. 573; 20 T. L. R. 267—Byrne, J.

14. NAME.

Covenant by Partner against Trading after Determination of Partnership—Assignment of Goodwill—Benefit of Covenant.—A covenant by a man with his partner that he will not after the determination of the partnership carry on a similar business within certain limits, is incident to the business and constitutes an asset of the partnership, and the benefit of the covenant will pass on an assignment by the partners of their respective shares in the goodwill of the business, so that the covenantee cannot afterwards restrain the covenantor, who ultimately purchases the goodwill from the assignee, from carrying on the business or using the trade name of the original partnership. Townsend v. Jarman, 69 L. J. Ch. 823; [1900] 2 Ch. 698; 83 L. T. 366; 49 W. R. 158—Farwell, J.

A company incorporated under the Companies Act, 1862, does not by the addition of the word "limited" to the trade name of a business purchased and subsequently carried on by the company prejudice the company's power to transmit to a purchaser from it the right to the original trade name. Ib.

Grantor's Name on Freehold—Right to Compel Erasure.—A trader who assigns the goodwill of his business and conveys his freehold business premises to a purchaser unconditionally cannot afterwards compel the purchaser to erase from the freehold the name of the trader carved thereon, notwithstanding that the purchaser is not trading under that name, and that the name was not the trade name of the original business.

Solicitors—Right to Use Firm Name.—On dissolution of a partnership between solicitors, in the absence of express stipulation, each partner is entitled to use the old firm name, provided such use does not expose the other partners to liability or risk. Risk for this purpose means appreciable risk in a business sense. Burchell v. Wilde, 69 L. J. Ch. 314; [1900] 1 Ch. 551; 82 L. T. 576; 48 W. R. 491—O.A.

A firm of solicitors carried on business as "Burchell & Co." The firm consisted of two persons named Burchell and W. In 1899 the partnership was dissolved by consent, it being agreed that the existing business should be divided between the Burchells and W., but nothing in terms was said as to the use of the firm name. The Burchells were carrying on business as "Burchells & Co.," and W. carried on business in partnership with his son—first, as "Burchell & Co.," and now as "Burchell, W. & Co."—Held, that the Burchells were not entitled to restrain W. and his son from practising under the style of "Burchell & Co.," or any other style of which "Burchell" formed part. Ib.

15. ACTION AGAINST FIRM.

Action in Firm Name—Execution of Judgment—Claim to Issue Execution "against any other person as being a member of the firm"—Issue to Determine Liability of such Person—Liability of Person by having held Himself out as a Partner.—Where the plaintiff in an action brought against partners in the firm name, who has obtained judgment against the firm, claims to be entitled under Order XLVIII.A, rule 8, to issue execution against a person, who has not been served with the writ in the action, as being a member of the firm, and an issue is directed to try the liability of such person, the plaintiff is entitled upon the trial of such issue to shew that such person is liable to the plaintiff by reason of his having held himself out as a partner. Davis v. Hyman, 72 L. J. K.B. 426; [1903] 1 K.B. 854; 88 L. T. 284; 51 W. R. 598—C.A.

Receiver—Judgment Order in Subsequent Action against Firm—Charging Order.—By a judgment in an action in the Chancery Division the partnership carried on under the name of S. & Co. was dissolved, and a receiver and manager was appointed. Subsequently D., a creditor, without knowledge of these proceedings, sued the firm in the King's Bench Division on certain bills of exchange accepted by the firm for partnership purposes, and served one partner only, who entered an appearance, and obtained judgment for the sum due and costs. D. then having become aware of this action, applied in it for leave to issue execution, notwithstanding the possession of the receiver, which leave was accordingly granted, and a charging order obtained. On a motion on behalf of the partner not served with the writ in the action in the King's Bench Division to discharge the charging order for irregularity,—Held, that the motion was, in effect, to obtain a declaration that the judgment of the King's Bench Division was void, and that there was no jurisdiction to so hold; that Order XLVIII.A, rules 1 and 3, were intended for the protection of the individual partner, and not of the assets of the firm; that, therefore, the order previously made in chambers following the terms of that in Kewney v. Attrill (55 L. T. R. 805) would stand, and the motion be refused with costs. Brand v. Sandground, 85 L. T. 517—Farwell, J.

2. STATUTE OF MONOPOLIES.

Invalid Patent — "Pretext of monopoly" — Action for Treble Damages—Saving Clause as to New Inventions — Construction.—The proviso contained in section 6 of the Statute of Monopolies, 1623, which exempts letters patent for new inventions from the operation of the Act, is to be construed as including in the exemption letters patent for new inventions which, by reason of some defect in the specification capable of amendment by disclaimer, cannot for the time being, and until the necessary disclaimer has been filed, be enforced. Peck v. Hindes, 67 L. J. Q.B. 272—Mathew, J.

Prior User—User not Amounting to Publication—Statute of Monopolies (21 Jac. 1 c. 3), s. 6.—Under section 6 of the Statute of Monopolies there may be a user, not amounting to publication, by a third person of the process for which a patent is claimed so as to render the patent invalid. Robertson v. Purdey, 23 T. L. R. 343—Parker, J.

Action for Declaration of Invalidity.—See North-Eastern Marine Engineering Co. v. Leeds Forge Co., 75 L. J. Ch. 178.

3. GRANT.

Opposition—Invention Previously Patented—Opponent not Interested in Prior Patent—Right of Opponent to be Heard.—The question whether a person who has, under section 11, sub-section 1 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, given notice of opposition to the grant of a patent on the ground that the alleged invention has been patented in this country on an application of prior date, may be heard before the Comptroller-General, is one to be decided ultimately by the law officer of the Crown. Reg. v. Comptroller-General of Patents; Tomlinson, ex parte, 68 L. J. Q.B. 563; [1899] 1 Q.B. 909; 80 L. T. 777; 47 W. R. 567—C.A.

Where the Comptroller-General, after consulting the law officer, declined to hear such a person on the ground that he had no interest in the prior patent, the Court refused to compel him by mandamus to do so. Ib.

"Exercise."—In the grant of letters patent of the sole authority "to make, use, exercise, and vend" an invention, the word "exercise" means "put in practice." Saccharin Corporation v. Reitmeyer, 69 L. J. Ch. 761; [1900] 2 Ch. 659; 83 L. T. 397; 49 W. R. 199—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Sale and Delivery Abroad—Contract in England.—The principle laid down in Elmslie v. Boursier (39 L. J. Ch. 328; L. R. 9 Eq. 217) and Von Heyden v. Neustadt (50 L. J. Ch. 126; 14 Ch. D. 230), that the importation into and sale in England of an article manufactured abroad according to a process protected by an English patent is an infringement of the patent, does not apply to a case where the defendant in an action for infringement has as commission agent entered into an agreement for delivery of the article at a foreign port, but has not himself either imported into or sold in England the infringing article. Such a defendant will not be deemed to have "exercised" the invention. Ib.

Grant to Two, their Executors, Administrators, and Assigns—Joint Tenancy—Agreement for Sale—Construction—Covenant by Vendors—Joint or Several.—Certain patents were granted to two persons, their executors, administrators, and assigns. The patentees entered into an agreement under seal for the sale of the patents to the plaintiff company, and the agreement provided that the vendors should establish a title to the patents, and assign and transfer the same to the company, and that "such assignments respectively shall contain a covenant by the said vendors" that the patents were valid, "and also such other covenants and provisions as may be reasonably required by the said company for giving effect to the sale hereby agreed to be made":—Held, that the true construction of the agreement was that the vendors had jointly covenanted to assign the patents, and that such assignments should contain joint and several covenants by them that the patents were valid; and the rights of the company against the personal representative of one of the vendors who had died before any assignment had been made must be ascertained upon that footing. National Society for the Distribution of Electricity v. Gibbs, 69 L. J. Ch. 457; [1900] 2 Ch. 280; 82 L. T. 443; 48 W. R. 499—C.A.

4. VALIDITY.

Insufficiency of Specification.—The owners of a patent for a wheel-rim of a particular shape intended to hold a solid indiarubber tyre without pinching or cutting it, and without wires or bands to hold it in its place, claimed the wheel-rim in combination with a tyre fitted into it, but not the tyre without the rim, and brought an action against a firm of indiarubber merchants for infringement of their patent. The specification said that the tyre was to be made so as to "approximately fit" the rim; but it appeared that while the base of the rim was flat the tyre would have to be made convex where it fitted on to the base of the rim, and would also have to be somewhat longer than the base of the rim, and would require to be forced into the rim by machinery:—Held, that the specification did not particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the invention, and the manner in which it was performed, and that the patent was therefore bad. Sirdar Rubber Co. v. Wallington, 97 L. T. 113—H.L. (E.)

Novelty—Combination—Subject-matter—Supplying and Fitting New Component Part—Repair—Infringement.—Decision of SWINFEN EADY, J. (74 L. J. Ch. 315; [1905] 1 Ch. 451), affirmed on the ground that the plaintiffs' patent was invalid, without deciding whether the fitting by the defendants of a new rubber tyre to an old patent rim of the plaintiffs was merely fair repair and not a repair amounting to a reconstruction so as to infringe the plaintiffs' patent, if it were a valid patent. Sirdar Rubber Co. v. Wallington, 75 L. J. Ch. 233; [1906] 1 Ch. 252; 94 L. T. 183; 22 T. L. R. 246—C.A.

Combination of Two Old Machines—Want of Invention—Validity.—The Court held that a patent for the combination of two well-known printing machines, erected end-on with a space between them, and a single or double longitudinal folding machine placed in the space for folding the paper web or webs and passing the same on to any other machine, either for transverse folding, cutting, or delivery, or any two or all three of these operations or processes, was not a valid patent, upon the ground that such an arrangement, having regard to the state of knowledge at the time, required no substantial exercise of invention, and did not furnish sufficient subject-matter for a patent. Northern Press and Engineering Co. v. Hoe, 22 T. L. R. 723—C.A.

Combination of Elements of Mechanism in Prior Use.—In an action by the patentee of a meat-slicing machine against an alleged infringer, it was proved that each element in the mechanism of the machine was known and had been in use prior to the date of the patent, but that the machine, when patented, was the only known and workable meat-slicing machine, and had been a great commercial success:—Held, that the patent was valid, in respect that the patentee had shewn inventive skill in combining and adapting known mechanical elements to produce a machine which efficiently attained a result not previously accomplished so effectively. Van Berkel v. Simpson, [1907] S.C. 165—Ct. of Sess.

Specification—Claim for Machine and Claim for Parts—Parts not Novel.—A patentee in his specification claimed first for a machine for slicing meat, consisting of a combination of certain specified mechanical parts and movements, and, under subsequent heads of the specification, also claimed certain of the parts and movements "in a slicing machine of the kind described," and "substantially as and for the purposes" described in the earlier portion of the specification. It was proved that the parts and movements so claimed were known and used prior to the date of the patent, and it was maintained that the claims for these component parts and movements rendered the whole specification invalid:—Held, first, on a construction of the specification, that the component parts and movements were claimed not substantially or independently as subordinate integers, but merely as subsidiary or appendant to the principal claim (namely, the adaptation and combination of the parts to constitute the machine claimed); and therefore, secondly, that the subsequent claims for component parts were mere surplusage and did not invalidate the specification. Ib.

Mechanical Equivalents—Anticipation.—In an action by the patentee of a machine for slicing meat against an alleged infringer, the defendant maintained—first, that his machine was not in fact an infringement of the plaintiff's patent; and secondly, that the plaintiff's whole invention had been anticipated by Kolbe's patent. Kolbe's patent was a machine for cutting bread:—Held—first, that the defendant's machine was an infringement of the plaintiff's patent in respect that his machine was substantially similar to that of the plaintiff, and designed to serve the same purpose; and that, in so far as there existed differences between the machines, these differences consisted merely in the use by the defendant of mechanical equivalents of parts of the plaintiff's machine; and secondly, that the plaintiff's patent had not been anticipated by Kolbe's patent, in respect that that patent differed essentially as regards an important part of its mechanism from the plaintiff's patent, and was not designed to perform, or capable of performing, the operation of meat slicing. Ib.

"Utility."—"Utility," in patent law, does not mean either abstract utility, or comparative utility, or commercial utility. Welsbach Incandescent Gas Light Co. v. New Incandescent (Sunlight Patent) Gas Lighting Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 343; [1900] 1 Ch. 343; 82 L. T. 293; 48 W. R. 362—Buckley, J.

An invention is useful if it provides a thing better in some respects though worse in others than what is already known. Thus, a mode of producing illuminant appliances more durable than those previously known, or which offers to the public a new choice of materials to be used in the production of illuminant appliances, is patentable, although the new appliance is less illuminant than the old one. Id.

Costs—Validity of Patent Questioned in Previous Action—Certificate—Solicitor and Client Costs.—An action commenced but not determined at the time a certificate in another action is obtained is not a "subsequent action for infringement" within the meaning of section 31 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and the plaintiff cannot claim solicitor-and-client costs on the production of the certificate of the first determined action. Automatic Weighing-Machine Co. v. Combined Weighing-Machine Co. (6 Rep. Pat. Cas. 475) followed. Saccharin Corp. v. Anglo-Continental Chemical Works, 70 L. J. Ch. 194; [1901] 1 Ch. 414; 48 W. R. 444—Buckley, J.

5. AMENDMENT OF SPECIFICATION.

Application for Leave to Apply to Amend Specification—"Disclaimer"—"Correction or explanation."—The word "disclaimer" in section 19 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, is to be construed strictly, and is not to be read as extending to "correction or explanation." Where, therefore, proceedings for the revocation of a patent were pending, the Court refused to make an order giving the patentee liberty to apply at the Patent Office for leave to amend his specification by way of correction. Lang's Patent, In re (7 Rep. Pat. Cas. 469), and Gaulard and Gibbs's Patent, In re (57 L. J. Ch. 209; 5 Rep. Pat. Cas. 192), discussed and distinguished; Owen's Patent, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 63; [1899] 1 Ch. 157; 47 W. R. 180; 79 L. T. 458—Stirling, J.

Petition for Revocation Presented after Application to Amend—Jurisdiction of Comptroller.—Where an application for leave to amend a specification has been made, under section 18 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, the subsequent commencement of an action for infringement or presentation of a petition for revocation of the patent will, notwithstanding the provisions of sub-section 10 of section 18, not deprive the Comptroller of jurisdiction to allow the amendment. Section 19 of the Act, requiring the leave of the Court or a Judge to an application for leave to amend, does not apply to a case where the application has been made, although not finally dealt with, before litigation. Woolfe v. Automatic Picture-Gallery, Lim., 72 L. J. Ch. 84; [1903] 1 Ch. 18; 87 L. T. 539—C.A. Affirming, 51 W. R. 121—Kekewich, J.

Original Claim Framed in Good Faith and with Reasonable Skill and Knowledge.—Where, in an action for infringement of their patent, patentees have amended the original specification by way of disclaimer under section 19 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, and established at the trial their claim for an infringement of the amended specification as it stands, the Court will not, for the purpose of certifying under section 20 that the original specification was framed in good faith and with reasonable skill and knowledge, read the erased portions of the specification; to do so would be in effect to allow the plaintiffs to raise a fresh issue after judgment. Jandus Arc Lamp Co. v. Arc Lamps, Lim., 92 L. T. 447; 21 T. L. R. 308—Kekewich, J.

Terms on which Granted—Discretion of Judge.—Where a Judge who hears a petition for revocation of a patent has in the exercise of his discretion given leave to the patentee, under section 19 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, to apply for leave to amend the specification by disclaimer on certain terms, the Court of Appeal will not review the discretion thus exercised by the Judge in imposing terms. Geipel's Patent, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 215; [1904] 1 Ch. 239; 90 L. T. 70; 52 W. R. 339—C.A.

6. PETITION FOR REVOCATION.

Disclaimer—Leave to Amend Specification—Terms.—On a petition for revocation of a patent, where the petitioner had made use of such parts of the patent as by disclaimer would become good, leave was given to the patentee to amend the patent by disclaimer, on the terms that he should ask for no injunction in any action brought for infringement of the patent in respect of articles made prior to the date of the leave, unless he should establish to the satisfaction of the Court that his original claim was framed in good faith and with reasonable skill and knowledge. Deeley v. Perkes (65 L. J. Ch. 912; [1896] A.C. 496) and Pitt's Patent, In re; Luddington Cigarette Co. v. Baron Cigarette Co. (69 L. J. Ch. 321; [1900] 1 Ch. 508), see col. 1795, applied. Geipel's Patent, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 47; [1903] 2 Ch. 715; 89 L. T. 127; 52 W. R. 63—Buckley, J.

Amendment of Specification—Disclaimer—Application for Liberty to Apply—Tribunal to Determine as to Disclaimer.—Upon an application under section 19 of the Patents Act, 1883, for liberty to apply at the Patent Office for leave to amend a specification by way of disclaimer the Court should be informed generally as to the nature of the amendment proposed, and if it sees clearly that it is not an amendment by way of disclaimer it ought not to give leave; but where from a perusal of the specification the Court is not satisfied that the proposed amendment is not one by way of disclaimer it ought not to refuse leave to the patentee to apply at the Patent Office, which is the proper tribunal for determining such a question. The view taken in Armstrong's Patent, In re; Yates v. Armstrong (14 Rep. Pat. Cas. 747, 754), and in Chatwood's Patent, In re (16 Rep. Pat. Cas. 370), approved. Alsop's Patent, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 184; [1906] 1 Ch. 85; 94 L. T. 38; 54 W. R. 323; 22 T. L. R. 157—C.A.

Evidence as to Prior User—Admissibility of Evidence.—Where a single instance of prior user is relied on to support a petition for the revocation of a patent, and a witness thereto gives in cross-examination other instances of prior user, evidence cannot be called to disprove these other instances, for, although the result might be to discredit the witness, yet such evidence would be as to matters not relevant to the issue before the Court. Haggenmacher's Patent, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 675; [1898] 2 Ch. 280—Romer, J.

Consent Order — Application in Court.—A petition for the revocation of a patent should be heard in open Court, and not in chambers, even by consent. Scott's Patent, In re (20 Rep. Pat. Cas. 604), commented on. Clifton's Patent, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 597; [1904] 2 Ch. 357; 91 L. T. 284; 52 W. R. 629—Buckley, J.

7. ASSIGNMENT.

Agreement for—Notice—Subsequent Licence to Manufacture — Registration — Equities — Priority.—Where the owner of a patent has entered into an agreement to assign it for value, and express notice of such agreement has been given to persons who subsequently obtain a licence from the owner for value, and register it before the registration of the agreement, the fact of such notice will enable the assignees of the patent under the agreement to set up their prior equity against the licensees, by virtue of the proviso in section 87 of the Patents Act, 1883, which proviso keeps open all equities in respect of registered patents, so that they may be enforced in like manner as in respect of other personal property. New Ixion Tyre and Cycle Co. v. Spilsbury, 67 L. J. Ch. 557; [1898] 2 Ch. 484; 79 L. T. 229—C.A. Affirming, 46 W. R. 567—Kekewich, J.

Assignment of Provisional Protection—Assignee's Right to Sue.—An assignment of the provisional protection acquired by the application for a patent does not constitute a legal assignment of the patent when granted, but merely confers an equitable right to have the patent assigned. Accordingly, the assignee of a provisional protection cannot, before the patent has been actually assigned to him, sue for infringement of the patent without joining the patentee as a party to the action, either as plaintiff or defendant. Bowden's Patents Syndicate, Lim. v. Smith, 73 L. J. Ch. 522; [1904] 2 Ch. 86; 52 W. R. 630—Warrington, J. Appeal dismissed. See s.c. sub tit. APPEAL.

Distress for Rent—Patented Chattel—Sale to Purchaser with Notice of Restrictions on User.—The purchaser of a patented article at a sale of a distress for rent does not acquire the right to use the article, in breach of a contract entered into by the tenant with the patentee restricting the right to use the article, if at the time of purchase he has notice of the contract. British Mutoscope and Biograph Co. v. Homer, 70 L. J. Ch. 279; [1901] 1 Ch. 671; 84 L. T. 26; 49 W. R. 277—Farwell, J.

Sale in England of Article Manufactured Abroad by Use of Patented Process with Subsequent Use of other Processes.—The importation and sale in England of a chemical product made abroad by subjecting a body prepared according to a process patented in this country to further chemical treatment so as materially to alter its chemical composition is an infringement of the English patent. Elmslie v. Boursier (89 L. J. Ch. 328; L. R. 9 Eq. 217) and Von Heyden v. Neustadt (50 L. J. Ch. 126; 14 Ch. D. 230) followed. Saccharin Corporation v. Anglo-Continental Chemical Works, 70 L. J. Ch. 194; [1901] 1 Ch. 414; 48 W. R. 444—Buckley, J.

Sale of Patent by Company in Winding-up—Dissolution of Company—Vesting Order.—See General Accident Assurance Corporation, In re, ante, COMPANY, col. 483.

9. INFRINGEMENT.

Article made Abroad—Transmission by Post to England—Injunction against Sender—Jurisdiction.—A foreign manufacturer, who manufactures abroad, and sends by post at their request to a firm in England articles which infringe an English patent, does not himself infringe the patent, and is not liable to an injunction restraining infringement in an action by the owner of the English patent. Badische Anilin- und Soda-Fabrik v. Basle Chemical Works Bindschedler, 67 L. J. Ch. 141; [1898] A.C. 200; 77 L. T. 573; 46 W. R. 255—H.L. (E.)

The Court has no jurisdiction to restrain a foreigner abroad as regards transactions carried on by him in his own country. Ib.

Exercise and Vend—Contract in England—Delivery of Goods Abroad.—The respondent contracted in England to sell to a purchaser in England goods manufactured abroad according to an invention protected by the appellants' English patent, and pursuant to the contract completed the sale by delivery of the goods to the purchaser's order in Switzerland. The purchaser afterwards imported the goods into England.—Held, that there had been no infringement of the appellant's patent by the respondent. Badische Anilin- und Soda-Fabrik v. Hickson, 75 L. J. Ch. 621; [1906] A.C. 419; 95 L. T. 68; 22 T. L. R. 641—H.L. (E.) Affirming, 54 W. R. 174—C.A.

Importation of Patented Articles Before and After the Expiration of Patent—Loss—Measure of Damages.—The plaintiffs were the owners of a patent of the United Kingdom for improvements in the insulation of electric cables. The defendant company entered into a contract during the continuance of the patent with an American company for the supply of cables similar to those protected by the patent, some of which were delivered to the defendant company during the continuance of the patent, the remainder being delivered after its expiration. It was conceded at the trial that the delivery of cables by the American company to the defendants during the continuance of the patent was an infringement.—Held, that damages should be awarded only upon the cables actually delivered during the continuance of the patent, and should not be extended to the whole profit which might have been made if the contract had been entered into with the plaintiffs instead of with the American company. British Insulated Wire Co. v. Dublin United Tramways Co., [1900] 1 Ir. R. 287—V.O.

Infringing Articles Bought in England—Articles sent Abroad for Sale There—"Exercise"—"Use"—"Put in practice"—Measure of Damages.]—The defendants purchased in England twenty-seven articles which had been made in infringement of the plaintiffs' patent. They sold seven of them and used another in England. The remaining nineteen they sent to their branch house in France, where the article was not patented, and sold them there to various foreign persons;—Held, that there had been an infringement of the plaintiffs' patent in respect of all the twenty-seven articles, and that in estimating the damages the test was what the defendants would have had to pay for the permission to do that which they did wrongfully. British Motor Syndicate v. Taylor, 70 L. J. Ch. 21; [1901] 1 Ch. 122; 83 L. T. 419; 49 W. R. 183—C.A.

Per LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.—It was not intended in Minter v. Williams (5 L. J. K.B. 60; 4 Ad. & E. 251) to lay down as a rule of law that the exposure for sale of a patented article by a person not having a licence from the owner of the patent could not be an infringement of the patent. If the decision could bear that construction it ought to be overruled. Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—It was intended in Minter v. Williams to lay down the above rule, and the case was wrongly decided. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Mere possession of a patented article need not necessarily constitute a user, but acquisition and possession of such an article for trade purposes constitute a user, whatever the nature of the article may be. Ib.

Combination—Manufacture and Sale of Component Part—Infringement—Intention.]—The mere manufacture and sale of an article, part of a combination patent, is not an infringement of that patent even if the article has no use except for the purpose of infringement. Townsend v. Haworth (48 L. J. Ch. 770n.; 12 Ch. D. 831n.) followed. Sikes v. Howarth (48 L. J. Ch. 769; 12 Ch. D. 826) distinguished. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Moseley, 73 L. J. Ch. 417; [1904] 1 Ch. 612; 91 L.T. 40; 52 W. R. 454; 20 T. L. R. 814—C.A.

Combination—Subject-matter—Supplying and Fitting New Component Part—Repair not Reconstruction.]—A patentee by his specification claimed to have invented a wheel rim of a particular shape intended to receive a solid rubber tyre. The merit claimed for the invention was that the rim would hold the tyre without pinching and without the aid of inextensible wires. The patentee made separate claims for the rim, and the rim in combination with the tyre, but made no claim for the tyre itself. The defendants made a new rubber tyre and fitted it to an old patent rim of the plaintiffs, the owners of the patent, to replace a previous tyre which had become worn out. In an action brought by the plaintiffs for infringement,—Held, that what the defendants had done was a fair repair, and not a repair amounting to a reconstruction and a new article, and that there was therefore no infringement. Held, also, that, assuming the claim for the rim to be valid, the claim for the combination of the rim with the rubber tyre was invalid, inasmuch as that was the only and obvious manner in which the rim was intended to be used, and that there was no invention or merit in the combination apart from the novelty in the shape of the rim itself. Sirdar Rubber Co. v. Wallington, 74 L. J. Ch. 315; [1905] 1 Ch. 451; 92 L. T. 564; 53 W. R. 346; 21 T. L. R. 283—Swinfen Eady, J.

Chemical Process—Use Abroad—Part of Manufacture of Commercial Article—Sale in England—Infringement.]—The sale in England of an article imported from abroad, in the manufacture of which a process patented in this country has been used, is an infringement of the patent, even although the process is only the first part of the manufacture, which also consists of subsequent processes not patented. Saccharin Corporation v. Anglo-Continental Chemical Works, 48 W. R. 444—Buckley, J.

Repair of Patented Article—Work Done at Instance of Plaintiff's Agent—Intention to Continue Infringement—Injunction.]—In an action for infringement of a patent, where the infringement complained of is making a new patented article under guise of repairing an old one, the only question is whether the defendant has exceeded the fair limits of repair. The sale of a patented article gives no licence to use its materials separately, and the use of some part of an old purchased patented article in making a new one is no defence, even where the patent is for a combination, in which the old part used is the only novelty. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Neal, 68 L. J. Ch. 578; [1899] 1 Ch. 807; 80 L. T. 746; 47 W. R. 632—North, J.

The accepting in the ordinary way of business of one order to execute repairs amounting to making a new article is evidence of intention to continue doing so, which may justify an injunction. The fact that the act complained of was done on the order of the plaintiff's agent is no defence, unless that agent had authority to order, and did order, the actual work done. Kelly v. Batchelar (10 Rep. Pat. Cas. 289) distinguished. Ib.

Master or Pioneer Patent—Mechanical Equivalent.]—B. patented an invention for the economy of steam in steam steering-engines by means of a cut-off valve actuated by the control valve. The object of the invention was to prevent the loss of steam during the intervals in steering when the engine was at rest. Prior patentees had used the same and other similar mechanical devices for the economy of steam in engines of various kinds while at work, but the application of this device to an engine at rest was a novelty, and the result attained—the economy of steam while the engine was at rest—had never been achieved before. In a question with the holder of a patent of later date for a device, also designed to prevent the escape of steam from steam steering-engines when the engine was at rest, but using to obtain that result a stop valve worked in unison with the control valve by a steam relay instead of a stop valve worked by the direct mechanical action of the control valve,—Held, that B.'s patent was a master or pioneer patent, and that the new patent was an infringement. Brown v. Hastie & Co., 7 F. 97—Ct. of Sess.

Application of Known Principles—Omission in

Infringing Machine of Material Part of Patent.]

—Where the merit of a patented invention consists in the idea or principle embodied in it, and not merely in the means used to carry the principle into effect, there may be an infringement in the application of the principle by other methods. But where there is no new idea, but only a new combination of old ideas, in the patented article, there is no infringement where some only of the means are used, but a material element is omitted. Consolidated Car Heating Co. v. Came, 72 L. J. P.C. 110; [1903] A.C. 509; 89 L. T. 224—P.C.

Restricted Licence to Sell—Purchaser Ignorant of Restriction—Implied Licence—Estoppel—Liability of Purchaser.]

—If a patentee sells the patented article imposing no restriction or condition at the time of sale he cannot impose a condition subsequently, by delivery of the goods with the condition indorsed on them, and unless the purchaser knows of a condition and buys subject to it he has the benefit of an implied licence to use the article free from restrictions. If, on the other hand, the purchaser buys from the holder of a conditional licence, nothing turns on the question whether the purchaser knows of the condition or not, and he is an infringer if he exceeds the limits of the licence, even innocently and ignorantly. Badische Anilin- und Soda-Fabrik v. Isler, 75 L. J. Ch. 411; [1906] 1 Ch. 605; 94 L. T. 367; 22 T. L. R. 326—Buckley, J. This decision was affirmed on the facts, the Court holding that the only restrictions on the licence to sell the patented article were those contained in the labels attached to the tins. Badische Anilin- und Soda-Fabrik v. Isler, 75 L. J. Ch. 749; [1906] 2 Ch. 443; 95 L. T. 273; 22 T. L. R. 710—C. A.

But the patentee may be estopped from denying that the purchaser is licensed to use the article. Ib.

Patentees of certain drystuffs in 1888 agreed to grant to a society a licence to manufacture them and sell them to consumers only, not to persons who sold again. They agreed to grant to the society licences in regard to any further patents for dyes which they might take out. In 1892 they took out such a patent, but never granted any express licence in regard to it. The patentees and the society both sold the dye manufactured under the patent of 1892 with a label stating that purchasers were not licensed to re-sell it except in the unopened original package, in an unchanged condition, and with the labels intact. A dealer procured the dye first from the society, and afterwards from other firms, and re-sold it. He was ignorant that the society's licence was restricted. In an action for infringement brought against him by the patentees, Held, that, whatever were the terms between the patentees and the society, the patentees could not, on the doctrine of Incandescent Gas Light Co. v. Cantelo (12 Rep. Pat. Cas. 262), set up against the defendant that the licence was other than a licence to sell, subject only to the restrictions in the label; that the implied licence was a licence to the society to sell subject to those restrictions, and to no others; and that the defendant, therefore, had not infringed. Ib.

Action—Numerous Separate Patents—Joinderof Causes of Action—Limitation of Claim.]

Where an action is brought for the alleged infringement of numerous different letters patent all relating to the same process of manufacture, the order limiting the number of letters patent to be sued upon should not be qualified by the words "in the first instance." Saccharin Corporation v. White, 88 L. T. 850—C.A.

— Several Patents Covering every known Mode of Production—Evidence of Infringement—Damages—Injunction.]

Where a plaintiff is entitled to several patents, which between them cover every possible method of production of a particular article, he is entitled to damages for infringement against a person selling such article, on proof that one of the patents must have been infringed, without shewing which. Saccharin Corporation v. Quincey, 69 L. J. Ch. 580; [1900] 2 Ch. 246; 82 L. T. 792; 64 J. P. 633—Cozens-Hardy, J.

He is not entitled to an injunction if one of the patents has expired before the hearing. Ib.

— Anticipation—Prior Publication—International Convention.]

On February 28, 1894, W. applied in the United States for protection for an invention. On March 16, 1894, M. published in England an invention. On September 1, 1894, W. applied in England for a patent for his invention. On June 20, 1895, he applied, claiming the benefit of section 103 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, to have his patent dated February 28, 1894. On June 27, 1895, he lodged his complete specification, which was accepted on November 30, 1895, and letters patent were granted dated September 1, 1894. In an action by W.'s successors for infringement, the defendant alleged M.'s publication to be an anticipation of W.'s patent:—Held, that W.'s patent was rightly dated September 1, 1894, as W. had not applied for the benefit of section 103 within seven months of his foreign application. But, whether rightly dated or not, the date actually appearing on the letters patent was conclusive that the defendant was entitled to give evidence that M.'s publication was in fact an anticipation of W.'s invention. Acetylene Illuminating Co. v. United Alkali Co., 71 L. J. Ch. 301; [1902] 1 Ch. 494; 50 W. R. 861—Buckley, J.

— Certificate that Validity of Patent had come in Question.]

Where the Court holds that a patent is invalid it will refuse to certify under section 31 of the Act that the validity of the patent came in question. Haslam Co. v. Hall (5 Rep. Pat. Cas. 1, 27), not followed on this point. Ib.

— Certificate that Particulars of Objections are Reasonable—Costs.]

On an application by a defendant under section 29 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, for a certificate that the particulars of objections delivered by him are reasonable and proper, the Court will distinguish between what are objections to the validity of the patent and what are merely matters of evidence, and will not allow the costs of the latter. Ib.

— Application for Inspection of Machines Relied on as Anticipating Plaintiff's Patent.—In an action for infringement of a patent the Court has power, under section 30 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, to order inspection of a machine in the possession of the defendant relied on as evidence of publication of the alleged invention within the realm prior to the date of the plaintiff's patent. Garrard v. Edge (58 L. J. Ch. 397) discussed. Van Berkel v. Booth, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 383—M.R.

— Prosecuting Action with due Diligence—Motion for Injunction to Restrain Threats.—On April 19, 1904, the plaintiff issued their writ for an injunction to restrain an alleged infringement by the defendants of their letters patent for improvements in golf balls by selling balls known as Springvale Eagle and Springvale Hawk. On June 8, 1904, the plaintiffs inserted in a golfing paper a statement that it had come to their notice that golf balls known as the Springvale Eagle and Springvale Hawk were being offered for sale "in infringement of letters patent belonging to the Haskell Co."; that actions had been commenced to restrain such infringement; and that the plaintiffs would enforce their rights against all persons buying or selling or otherwise dealing in or using such infringing balls. The plaintiffs were also alleged to have issued circulars to dealers in golf balls. On May 20 the plaintiffs delivered their statement of claim. On June 13 the defendants (who had not yet put in their defence) served notice of motion to restrain the plaintiffs until the trial of the action from representing by advertisement or otherwise that the golf balls made and sold by the defendants as Springvale Eagle and Springvale Hawk were infringements of any patent belonging to the plaintiffs:—Held, dismissing the motion, that it could not be said that the plaintiffs had not "with due diligence" commenced and prosecuted their action; and secondly, that the advertisements and circulars were not a contempt of Court. Haskell Golf Ball Co. v. Hutchinson, 20 T. L. R. 606—Buckley, J. And see THREATENING PROCEEDINGS.

— Petition for Revocation—Application for Leave to Amend Specification—Terms of Leave—Special Circumstances.—On application for leave to apply to amend a specification under section 19 of the Patents Act, 1883, it is not a matter of course to put the patentee on terms not to bring any action in respect of the future user of machines already made in alleged infringement of the amended specification. Such terms were imposed in Deeley v. Perkes (65 L. J. Ch. 912; [1896] A.C. 496), not as common form, but on the special facts of the case. Luddington Cigarette Machine Co. v. Baron Cigarette Machine Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 321; [1900] 1 Ch. 508; 82 L. T. 173; 48 W. R. 505—C.A.

Section 20 of the Patents Act, 1883, applies to all cases where an amendment has been allowed, whether leave was obtained before litigation under section 18, or after litigation under section 19; but the law officers under section 18, or the Court under section 19, may impose more onerous conditions on the patentee if sufficient reason is shown. Ib.

Where patentees of a patent taken out in 1892 brought an action for infringement in 1899, and, the defendants having presented a petition for revocation, applied under section 19 for leave to apply to amend their specification by omitting twenty out of twenty-two claims, and a large number of expensive machines had been placed on the market by the defendants before the commencement of the plaintiff's action, only two small parts of which were in alleged infringement of the amended specification, liberty to apply for leave to amend was only granted on the terms that the plaintiffs should not bring or maintain any action for infringement in respect of any machines, or parts of machines, made prior to the date of the order. Ib.

— Combined Claim—Particulars—Embarrassment.—Plaintiffs were owners of twenty-three patents for the manufacture of a substance called "Saccharin," and brought an action in which they claimed that the defendants had by the sale of a certain article infringed some of their twenty-three patents, but stated that they were unable to ascertain which had been infringed. The defendants applied for an order limiting the plaintiffs' claim:—Held, that the burden was on the plaintiffs in a patent action, just as in any other action, to prove the infringement of their rights; that their claim under all the twenty-three patents was embarrassing to the defendants, who desired to dispute the validity of the patents they were alleged to have infringed; and that the plaintiffs' claim must be limited to such three of their patents as the plaintiffs might select. Saccharin Corporation v. Wild, 72 L. J. Ch. 270; [1903] 1 Ch. 410; 88 L. T. 101—C.A.

Per STIRLING, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.
—A consent order made before the hearing of the appeal that one of the defendants should make an affidavit disclosing when he had acquired and what he knew of the manufacture of the substance alleged to be an infringement of the plaintiffs' patents is not to be regarded as a precedent in similar cases. Ib.

Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Where an order for the making of such an affidavit is made, the affidavit should be treated as conclusive, and not subject to cross-examination before trial. Ib.

— Particulars of Objection—Certificate.—Where the defendant fails to prove one of his objections to the plaintiff's patent, but his particulars of that objection are necessary for the purpose of the trial, it is the practice to give him a certificate that the particulars were reasonable and proper, so that he may get the costs of them, although the objection itself has failed. Castner Kellner Alkali Co. v. Commercial Development Corporation, 68 L. J. Ch. 402; [1899] 1 Ch. 803; 80 L. T. 476; 47 W. R. 534—C.A.

When in an action for infringement of a patent the plaintiffs offer no evidence and the action is dismissed with costs, the Court will not hear evidence that the defendants' particulars of objections were reasonable and proper, and will not grant a certificate under section 29, sub-section 6 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, to that effect. American Steel and Wire Co. v. Glover, 50 W. R. 284—Farwell, J.

— Discontinuance—Costs—Certificate as to Particulars of Objections being Reasonable and Proper.—Where the plaintiffs in an action for the infringement of their alleged letters patent gave notice, after delivery of the defendants' particulars of objections, of discontinuance of the action in consequence of another action against other defendants for infringement of the same alleged letters patent having been decided against them, the Court, having no materials before it to enable it to exercise its discretion as to granting a certificate under section 29, sub-section 6 of the Patents Act, 1883, that the particulars of objections were reasonable and proper, so that the defendants might be entitled to the costs of them on taxation, declined to grant such certificate. Cooper Patent Anchor Rail Joint Co. v. British Electric Equipment Co., 95 L. T. 177—C.A.

— Summons for Leave to Discontinue—Terms—No other Action to be Brought against Defendant in Respect of same Infringements—Correcting Patent—Rules of Supreme Court, Order XXVI. rule 1.—In an action to restrain the alleged infringement of a patent, the plaintiff, after delivering a reply, discovered that he ran a risk of failing in the action if it were continued without correcting the patent, and applied for leave to discontinue the action:—Held, that the leave ought only to be granted on the terms that the plaintiff should not bring any other action against the defendant in respect of any infringement alleged in the present action; since if this term were not imposed the Court would in substance be allowing the plaintiff to correct his patent pending the action. Robertson v. Purdey, 75 L. J. Ch. 685; [1906] 2 Ch. 615; 95 L. T. 330—Buckley, J.

— Compromise—Action Standing Over Generally—Amendment of Specification—Action Pending—Invalidity of Amendment.—An action for infringement of a patent which, with a view to a compromise between the parties, has with their consent been ordered by the Judge to stand over generally with liberty to either party to apply to restore, and has been allowed to sleep for some years, is an "action for infringement . . . pending," within the meaning of sub-section 10 of section 18 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, and will render invalid any amendment of the specification applied for and obtained without the order of the Court or Judge under section 19 of the Act, while such action is still pending. Brooks v. Lycett Saddle and Motor Accessories Co., 73 L. J. Ch. 319; [1904] 1 Ch. 512—Farwell, J.

— Measure of Damages.—The defendants bought a motor car which was fitted with certain accessories, the accessories being an infringement of the plaintiffs' patent. In an action to recover damages for the infringement, —Held, that the measure of damages was the difference between the value of the car with and its value without the accessories. Clement

— Account of Profits—Disclosure of Names of Purchasers of Goods.—Where a patentee has succeeded in an action for infringement of his patent and has obtained an order for an account of profits made by the defendant by selling, supplying, or using the articles infringing the patent, he is entitled to disclosure by the defendant of the names and addresses of the customers of the defendant to whom the infringing articles have been sold. Saccharin Corporation v. Chemicals and Drugs Co., 69 L. J. Ch. 820; [1900] 2 Ch. 556; 83 L. T. 206; 49 W. R. 1—C.A.

10. THREATENING PROCEEDINGS.

Injunction to Restrain—Threats of Proceedings by Persons other than Person Enjoined—Breach of Injunction.—An order restraining the defendant, his servants and agents, from threatening the plaintiffs or any of their customers with "any legal proceedings or liability" in respect of the manufacture, sale, or purchase of a certain patented article is not disobeyed by the circulation by the defendant of a pamphlet with his name thereon as agent for a third person, containing a notice signed by the third person, and stating that he was the exclusive maker of the article, and it was his intention to prosecute all infringers of his patents (dissentiente CHITTY, L.J.). Ellam v. Martyn, 68 L. J. Ch. 123; 79 L. T. 510; 47 W. R. 212—C.A.

Held, by CHITTY, L.J., agreeing with ROMER, J., that the injunction was not restricted to threats of proceedings to be taken by the defendant himself, and that the circulation of the pamphlet in question was a breach of the injunction. Ib.

Request to Cease Sale—Threat of Liability—Action to Restrain—Action for Infringement—Discontinuance—"Due diligence" in Commencement and Prosecution.—On May 24, 1906, the patent agents of the defendant, a corsetière, wrote a letter to P. R. & Co., Lim., who were advertising and selling a corset bodice under a trading arrangement with the plaintiffs, calling attention to her patent for a new corset bodice, and continuing:—"Of which patent the above-named article now being advertised and sold by you is regarded by our client as an infringement. We therefore beg to request you to cease advertising and selling the article in question." P. R. & Co., Lim., ceased for a time advertising and selling the article. Subsequently, on July 11, 1906, the defendant's patent agents admitted that P. R. & Co., Lim., had produced goods to them which were very similar to garments made under her patent. The defendant then gave leave to P. R. & Co., Lim., to advertise and sell the plaintiffs' goods. On July 13, 1906, the plaintiffs brought a threats action grounded on the letter of the patent agents, and on July 18, 1906, the defendant commenced an action claiming an injunction against the infringement, which, after defence and particulars given of numerous other alleged patents for the same invention, was discontinued, and the plaintiffs proceeded with their action:—Held, that the letter was more than a mere warning, and contained a request to discontinue advertising and selling the article intended to be insisted on, amounting to a threat within the meaning of section 32 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, although it was not added that if the request was not complied with legal liability would be incurred. Held, also, that the plaintiffs' right of action was not affected by the proviso to the section, since the defendant could not be said with due diligence to have commenced and prosecuted her action to try the question of the validity of her patent and the infringement of it, since, after the admissions of her agent, that question could not have been tried in it, and it was in that sense a sham action, although there was nothing dishonest or improper in bringing it. Craig v. Dowding, 97 L. T. 683—Kekewich, J.

11. PROLONGATION.

Petition by Assignee of Patent—Inventor Dead.]—The merit which entitles a patentee who has been insufficiently remunerated to an extension of his patent differs in kind and degree from that which is enough to sustain a patent. An application for prolongation refused in a case in which there was no special merit and no real invention, in which there was little energy or business capacity displayed in pushing the invention, and the applicant for extension was the assignee of the patent, the inventor having died, and there being no possibility of advantage to him if he had been alive. Van Gelder's Patent, In re; Thompson, ex parte, 76 L. J. P.C. 44; [1907] A.C. 174; 96 L. T. 333—P.C.

Application for Extension—Advertisement.]—Section 25, sub-section 1 of the Patents Act, 1883, authorises a patentee, "after advertising" in the prescribed manner, to present a petition to her Majesty in Council for the prolongation of his patent:—Held, that it is not competent for the Judicial Committee to entertain a petition for extension of time when there has not been any previous advertisement. Friese-Greene's Patent, In re, 76 L. J. P.C. 105; [1907] A.C. 460; 97 L. T. 223—P.C.

Expiration of Foreign Patents.]—Petition for the prolongation of a patent refused on the grounds that the petitioners were assignees and purchasers, and that there was no satisfactory evidence that the inventor had not been adequately remunerated. Bower-Barff Patent (In re), [1895] A.C. 675; Hopkinson's Patent, In re (66 L. J. P.C. 38; [1897] A.C. 249), and Saxby's Patent, In re (L. R. 3 P. C. 292), followed. Henderson's Patent, In re, 70 L. J. P.C. 119; [1901] A.C. 616; 85 L. T. 358—P.C.

The failure of a patentee to push his invention for several years in this country and the expiration of foreign patents for the same invention are also serious obstacles to the success of an application for prolongation. Ib.

Adjournment for New Evidence.]—Petition by assignees for extension of a patent refused on the ground that no information was afforded whether the inventor had been remunerated. An adjournment for the purpose of obtaining such information also refused, as no such application had ever been granted. Peach's Patent, In re, 71 L. J. P.C. 98; [1902] A.C. 414; 87 L. T. 153—P.C.

Novel Combination of Parts not Novel—Loss through Want of Business Capacity.]—Prolongation of a patent refused for an invention consisting in the novel application of known principles in which there was no striking or unusual merit, and the inadequacy of remuneration (if any) for which was due in part to defects in the patentee's method of carrying on his business. Thornycroft's Patent, In re, 68 L. J. P.C. 68; [1899] A.C. 415—P.C.

Merit of Invention.]—Prolongation for five years granted to a patent of conspicuous merit, by which, in one form of its application both at home and from the foreign patents for the invention, the patentee had, if allowance were made for his services, made little if any profit, and in another application the profit would depend on the success of a company which had not started operations, and the prosperity of which would depend largely on the prolongation of the original patent. Parsons' Patent, In re, 67 L. J. P.C. 55; [1898] A.C. 673—P.C.

Loss Incurred by Patentee—Merit of Invention and Difficulty of Introduction.]—A patent of great merit, in the perfecting and introduction of which the patentee had incurred loss, and which could only gradually replace existing machinery, extended for a term of ten years. Currie and Timmis's Patent, In re, 67 L. J. P.C. 66; [1898] A.C. 847—P.C.

Insufficiency of Accounts.]—The accounts submitted on an application for the prolongation of a patent must be intelligible and complete, and it is not competent for a petitioner, except perhaps in very special circumstances, to re-cast or supplement the accounts which he has lodged by oral evidence at the hearing. Wuterich's Patent, In re, 72 L. J. P.C. 60; [1903] A.C. 206; 88 L. T. 306—P.C.

12. SECRET PROCESS.

Co-owners—User by one Co-owner without Consent of other Co-owners.]—One co-owner of a secret process or invention cannot, in the absence of contract, be restrained by another co-owner from using the knowledge which he possesses for his own benefit. Heyl-Dia v. Edmunds, 81 L. T. 579; 48 W. R. 167—Kekewich, J.

13. PATENT AGENT.

Qualification—Right of Person Describing Himself as a Patent Agent before 1888.]—Section 27 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, which provides that "nothing in this Act shall affect the validity of any . . . right acquired . . . before the commencement of this Act," does not entitle a person who for many years before the Act had practised and described himself as a patent agent to continue to do so after the Act, without being registered as a patent agent in pursuance of its provisions. Starey v. Graham, 68 L. J. Q.B. 257; [1899] 1 Q.B. 406; 80 L. T. 185; 47 W. R. 392—D.

Registration—Payment of Fee—Board of Trade Rules—Repeal of Rules—Reviver of Rules.]—Section 101, sub-section 4 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, provides that rules made in pursuance of the section are to be laid before both Houses of Parliament and advertised twice in the official journal issued by the Comptroller. Section 1, sub-section 2 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, provides that the Board of Trade is to make such rules as are required for giving effect to the section, and that the provisions of section 101 of the Act of 1888 are to apply to all rules so made as if they were made in pursuance of that section. In 1889 rules were duly made under section 1 of the Act of 1888. Rules made in 1890 purported to repeal the Rules of 1889. In 1891, rules duly made under that section provided that the Rules of 1889 should "have effect" subject to certain modifications:—Held, that the Rules of 1889, assuming them to have been repealed by those of 1890, were revived by those of 1891, although a copy of them was not a second time laid before the Houses of Parliament; and consequently that a fee prescribed by them to be paid on the registration of a patent agent might still be demanded. Id.

PAWNBROKER.

Licence — Magistrates' Certificate — Exemption — "Successors."]—By section 39 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, a pawnbroker's licence is not to be granted to any person except upon the production of a certificate granted under the Act, "save that it shall not be necessary for any person being at the commencement of this Act a licensed pawnbroker, or for his . . . assigns, or successors, to obtain such a certificate":—Held, that the exemption was confined to "successors" in the particular business carried on by such pawnbroker, and that a person who had succeeded to a pawnbroker's business and had afterwards set up a new business in another town was not entitled to obtain a licence for such second business except upon production of a certificate. Re v. Inland Revenue Commissioners; Silvester, ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 41; [1907] 1 K.B. 108; 96 L. T. 201; 71 J. P. 86; 23 T. L. R. 83—D.

— Refusal of Certificate by District Council—Appeal to Quarter Sessions—District Council

Ordered to Pay Costs of Appeal.]—L. applied to the A. district council for a certificate under section 40 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, authorising the grant to him of a pawnbroker's licence under section 37 of that Act. The district council refused the application, whereupon L. appealed to quarter sessions from such refusal. At the hearing of the appeal, which was allowed, the district council did not appear, but the Court ordered them to pay L.'s costs of the appeal:—Held, that the quarter sessions had no power to order the district council to pay those costs. Re v. Northumberland Justices, 96 L. T. 700; 71 J. P. 331; 5 L. G. R. 1110—D.

Loss of Article Pledged—Neglect to Deliver — Reasonable Excuse — Liability to Criminal Proceedings.]—A pawnbroker who, acting honestly, has lost the article pledged with him, and is therefore unable to deliver it to the person entitled to have delivery thereof, is not liable to be convicted under section 31 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, of neglecting or refusing to deliver a pledge without reasonable excuse; the fact that the pledge is not in his possession when demanded being a "reasonable excuse" within the meaning of that section. Allworthy v. Clayton, 76 L. J. K.B. 934; [1907] 2 K.B. 655; 96 L. T. 31; 71 J. P. 20; 21 Cox C.C. 352—D.

Pawning of Stolen Goods—Conviction of Thief —Order for Restitution—Compensation to Pawnbroker—Order no Bar to Action.]—Certain goods were stolen and pawned. Upon the conviction of the thief, an order was made by the magistrates (but not upon the application of the owner of the goods), under section 30 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, for the delivery up of the goods upon payment to the pawnbroker of the amount of the loan:—Held, that this order did not preclude the owner from bringing an action at common law against the pawnbroker for the return of the goods. Leicester v. Cherryman, 76 L. J. K.B. 678; [1907] 2 K.B. 101; 96 L. T. 784; 71 J. P. 301; 23 T. L. R. 444—D.

— Liability of Pledger to Subsequent Proceedings by Pawnbroker.]—A person wrongfully pawning with a pawnbroker the goods of another person, who subsequently recovers the goods, is liable to proceedings under section 33 of the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872, at the instance of the pawnbroker, notwithstanding that he has previously been convicted of larceny of the goods. Pickford v. Corsi, 70 L. J. K.B. 710; [1901] 2 K.B. 212; 84 L. T. 627; 49 W. R. 597; 65 J. P. 628—D.

Purchase at Auction—Right to the Chattel—Property Passing.]—By the Pawnbrokers Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 93), s. 19: "A pledge pawned for above ten shillings shall, when disposed of by the pawnbroker, be disposed of by sale by public auction, and not otherwise. . . . A pawnbroker may bid for and purchase at a sale by auction, made or purporting to be made under this Act, a pledge pawned with him; and on such purchase he shall be deemed the absolute owner of the pledge purchased":—Held, that no property was given to the pawnbroker by this section as against the true owner of the pledge. Burrows v. Barnes, 82 L. T. 721—D.

PAYMENT.

Appropriation—Payment on Account—Items of Account Stated.]—The rule in Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572) that where there is an account current between parties, and payments are made without appropriation by either debtor or creditor, such payments are to be attributed to the earliest items in the account, does not apply to a case in which debts arise from distinct transactions which are not brought into a common account, and where with respect to the items to which it is sought to appropriate the payments there has been only a temporary abandonment of a remedy in rem. The Mecca, 66 L. J. P. 86; [1897] A.C. 286; 76 L. T. 579; 45 W. R. 687; 8 Asp. M.C. 266—H.L. (E.)

The appellants supplied necessaries to a ship of the respondents, and bills were drawn by the captain which were dishonoured. Thereupon the respondents offered to pay a sum due to them from third parties if the appellants would hand over dishonoured bills to the same amount. The appellants accepted the offer, and in consideration of the payment agreed to abstain from arresting any of the respondents' ships for three months. The appellants subsequently delivered an account of moneys due on various transactions to them from the respondents, giving credit for the amount received from the third parties. Two of the items of this account were of the same date, and the first in order was in respect of the ship. The appellants subsequently arrested the ship for the balance due:—Held, that the delivery of the account did not constitute an appropriation of the sum received from the third parties to the earliest items in the account, and the appellants were therefore justified in their arrest of the ship for the balance. Ib.

The principle of Clayton's Case cannot apply to two transactions of the same date.—Per LORD HALSBURY, L.C. Ib.

— Dentist — Consideration.] — The Dentists Act, 1878, s. 5, prevents an unqualified person from recovering any fee or charge for dental operations or dental attendance or advice, but there is nothing in the Act which renders the contract to do such work illegal, and notwithstanding section 5 an unqualified person can recover in respect of mechanical work done or materials supplied in the course of such dental operations or attendance. Where, therefore, money has been paid to the unqualified person on general account of services partly within and partly without the scope of section 5, he may appropriate it to the payment of the fees and charges which he could not recover under that section, and maintain an action for the balance which is not within the scope of section 5. Seymour v. Pickett, 74 L. J. K.B. 418; [1905] 1 K.B. 715; 92 L. T. 519; 21 T. L. R. 302—C.A.

Where the debtor makes no appropriation at the time of payment the creditor has the right to appropriate up to the very last moment, and may exercise his right in the witness-box after action brought, provided that there has been no proceeding in the action amounting to a previous exercise or determination of his right, and that nothing else has happened to prevent him from so doing. Ib.

The Mecca (66 L. J. P. 86; [1897] A.C. 286) followed and applied; and Friend, In re; Friend v. Friend (66 L. J. Ch. 737; sub nom. Friend v. Young, [1897] 2 Ch. 421), and Smith v. Betty (72 L. J. K.B. 853; [1903] 2 K.B. 317) distinguished. Ib.

— Creditor's Intention.]—A mortgaged his lands of B to secure 500*l*. After his death this mortgage was assigned to an insurance company. His widow was a party to the assignment, and covenanted to pay the mortgage debt and interest. Under A's will the lands of B were devised in trust for sale for payment of legacies. His widow raised these legacies from the insurance company by several mortgages, and she personally covenanted to pay the principal and interest thereon. She died, and her estate, which was insolvent, was administered in the Court of Chancery. The insurance company proved for the mortgage debts, under the personal covenants, and received several dividends thereon. The lands of B were sold in the Land Judge's Court. The insurance company claimed the right to appropriate these dividends towards the subsequent mortgages and to be paid the sum of 500*l*. out of the proceeds of the sale of the lands:—Held, that as they had proved in the action for the 500*l*. they could not appropriate. Broune's Estate, In re, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 245—Ross, J.

— Banker's Account.]—The rule that payments on account are to be appropriated to interest before principal does not apply where, in the case of bankers' accounts, the interest has, upon making up the account half-yearly, been converted into capital. Parr's Banking Co. v. Yates, 67 L. J. Q.B. 851; [1898] 2 Q.B. 460; 79 L. T. 321; 47 W. R. 42—C.A. And see Egg v. Craig, ante, CONTRACT.

— Cheque—Sale of Business—Book Debts, Contracts, and Securities—Uncashed Cheque or Bill in Hands of Vendor.]—A cheque or bill of exchange given for a debt is a conditional payment and, if the cheque or bill is subsequently honoured, then as between the payee and a purchaser from him of book and other debts due to the vendor, and of securities for debts, contracts, engagements, rights, and privileges of the vendor in relation to his business, there has been a payment to the vendor as from the date of the giving of the cheque or bill, and the debt does not pass to the purchaser under the contract for sale. Felix, Hadley & Co. v. Hadley, 67 L. J. Ch. 649; [1898] 2 Ch. 630; 79 L. T. 299; 47 W. R. 238—Byrne, J.

— By Bearer Cheque.]—A, in payment for certain shares which he had instructed a firm of stockbrokers to buy for him, sent by post to the firm, or handed to B, their clerk, a cheque payable to the stockbrokers or "bearer." B cashed the cheque and appropriated the proceeds. In an action by A against the stockbrokers for delivery of the share certificates or for the value of the shares, the stockbrokers pleaded that they had never received payment:—Held, that sending an uncrossed bearer cheque was not a remittance in ordinary course of business, and consequently that the stockbrokers, not having received the cheque, were entitled to judgment in their favour. Robb v. Gow, 8 F. 9—Ct. of Sess.

—Statute of Limitations—Option of Creditor to Appropriate—Limit on Exercise of Option—Set-off—Solicitor and Client—Solicitor's Bill—Sum Received on Account of Client.—The executor of a deceased solicitor brought an action in 1902 to recover costs alleged to be due to his testator's estate from the defendant, of which a bill had been delivered to the defendant, together with a cash account, on December 2, 1899. The items of the bill extended over a period from 1878 to 1899, and, the Statute of Limitations being pleaded, the Judge at the trial gave judgment for the defendant in respect of all items prior to 1893, as being statute-barred. He referred the rest of the bill to a Master for taxation, and to take the cash account from 1893, directing that credit should be given to the defendant for all sums of money received by the plaintiff's testator for or on account of the defendant, in respect of, or which ought to be treated as reducing or discharging, the bill of costs so taxed. Upon taxation the defendant brought in a surcharge in respect of a sum of 66*l.*, which had been received by the plaintiff's testator, as the defendant's solicitor in an action brought by the defendant, in 1894, and not accounted for to the defendant. No cash account had been delivered by the plaintiff's testator to the defendant except the account of December 2, 1899, which, through an inadvertence, contained no entry of the said sum of 66*l.* The plaintiff claimed that this sum should be treated as appropriated to payment or satisfaction of items which had accrued due from the defendant to the plaintiff's testator prior to 1893:—Held, that the said sum of 66*l.* could not be set off against the statute-barred items under the statutes of set-off; and that, assuming that the plaintiff's testator would have had a right to appropriate the said sum to these items, yet, there having been no such appropriation, it was not, having regard to the terms of the judgment of the learned Judge at the trial, open to the plaintiff so to appropriate the said sum subsequently to that judgment; and therefore that the surcharge in respect of the said sum of 66*l.* must be allowed. Smith v. Betty, 72 L. J. K.B. 853; [1903] 2 K.B. 317; 89 L. T. 258; 52 W. R. 197—C.A.

Bankruptcy of Agent—Following Trust Money—Banking Account—Appropriation of Payments—Rule in Clayton's Case.—A firm of stockbrokers had two accounts with their bankers—namely, an ordinary current account and a loan account. The firm became bankrupt, and the bankers thereupon closed the current account, and transferred both the balance thereon, being 1,362*l.*, and an indebtedness on the loan account of 7,500*l.*, to a special liquidation account. They, however, did not require to appropriate the 1,362*l.* to meet the loan account, and repaid themselves by selling securities wrongfully deposited with them by the bankrupts for the purposes of the loan:—Held, that, as there had been no appropriation by the bankers of the cash balance, the rule in Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572, 585) did not apply, and that there was no equity entitling cestuis que trust of the deposited securities, as against cestuis que trust whose money formed part of the current account, to be paid out of the cash balance. Mutton v. Peat, 68 L. J. Ch. 668; [1899] 2 Ch. 556; 48 W. R. 62—Byrne, J.

Creditor Abroad—Direction to Pay Bank within Jurisdiction.—The defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff during her life a yearly allowance, payable quarterly on the usual quarter days. Before the quarter's allowance became due on December 25 the plaintiff, who was about to go abroad, by a written authority directed the defendant to pay the quarter's allowance to her account at a London bank. The plaintiff was abroad when the quarter's allowance became due, and the defendant, desiring to obtain her indorsement, and thus to ascertain that she was alive, sent to her solicitors a cheque for the amount drawn to the plaintiff's order. The solicitors returned the cheque, and issued a writ for the amount of the quarter's allowance:—Held, that the direction to pay the amount to the plaintiff's account at the bank was a valid direction, it being in effect a direction to pay to her at the bank, and the plaintiff was entitled to have the amount paid there. Shrewsbury v. Shrewsbury, 23 T. L. R. 277—Kennedy, J.

Mortgage—Voluntary Deed—Marshalling Securities.—Lands were subject to incumbrances ranking in priority as follows: (a) mortgage for 2,000*l.* vested in A; (b) 1,500*l.* portions for the younger children of the owner; (c) mortgage for 1,000*l.* vested in A; (a) and (c) were collateral securities for a larger mortgage debt of 4,000*l.* The charge (b) was created by a voluntary post-nuptial deed which contained no covenants for title. By deed made between the owner, his eldest son, and trustees, to which A was not a party, certain policies of insurance were assigned in trust to pay the proceeds when realised in discharge of (a) and (c) described in the deed as "3000*l.* part of said sum of 4000*l.*," so as to relieve the inheritance of the lands. The amount secured by some of the policies having been received by some of the trustees, they paid 1,000*l.* thereout to A on account of his demand, without any express appropriation. Six months afterwards A appropriated this sum to payment of (c), which would not be reached by sale of the estate:—Held, first, that A was entitled to make such appropriation; and secondly, that the younger children of the owner were not entitled to marshal the securities against A. Lysaght's Estate, In re, [1903] 1 Ir. PEERAGE.

Jurisdiction of Courts of Law.—Questions connected with a peerage cannot be tried by a Court of law, but are only cognisable by a Committee for Privileges of the House of Lords. Cowley v. Cowley, 70 L. J. P. 83; [1901] A.C. 450; 85 L. T. 254; 50 W. R. 81—H.L. (E.)

Surrender of Peerage to the King—Re-grant of Same Peerage to Another Person—Subsequent Creations.]—A peer of the realm cannot surrender his dignity to the King so as to affect the rights of his descendants therein. The resolutions of the House to this effect in the Grey de Ruthyn Case in 1640 and in Viscount Purbeck's Case in 1678 are retrospective in their operation and still binding on the House. Accordingly, the surrender to King Edward 1 by Roger de Bygod of the Earldom of Norfolk in 1302, and the re-grant of the same earldom in 1312 to Thomas de Brotherton, were invalid, and the claim to that peerage through descent from Thomas de Brotherton made by Lord Mowbray disallowed. The Norfolk Earldom, 76 L. J. P.C. 9; [1907] A.C. 10; 95 L. T. 682; 23 T. L. R. 114—H.L.

A writ commanding attendance in Parliament was sufficient to confer a peerage, but not to confer a particular rank in the peerage, and the mere naming of the person summoned as an earl did not operate to create him an earl. Ib.

Peer—Right of, to Vote—University Election.]—A peer of Parliament is not entitled to vote at an election for members of the House of Commons for a university. So held, following Beauchamp (Earl) v. Madresfield Overseers (42 L. J. C.P. 32; L. R. 8 C.P. 345). Bristol (Marquis) v. Beck, 96 L. T. 55; 71 J. P. 99; 23 T. L. R. 224—Bray, J.

—Right of Audience at the Bar of House of Lords.]—A peer is entitled to appear as counsel in an appeal to the House of Lords, but not before a committee of the House, or before the House when sitting for the trial of a peer on a criminal charge as the Court of the Lord High Steward. So resolved by a Committee for Privileges. Kinross (Lord), In re, 74 L. J. P.C. 137; [1905] A.C. 463—H.L. (Sc.)

PENALTY.

1. Penalty or Liquidated Damages, 1807.
2. Amount, 1809.
3. Recovery, 1810.

1. PENALTY OR LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

Contract—Delay in Fulfilment—Sums Payable in Proportion to Duration of Delay.]—Where under a contract a sum is made payable for the breach of a stipulation, and the amount is proportioned to the extent of the breach, such sum must prima facie be regarded as liquidated damages and not as penalty. Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Co. v. Yzquierdo y Castaneda, 74 L. J. P.C. 1; [1905] A.C. 6; 91 L. T. 666; 21 T. L. R. 58—H.L. (Sc.)

The appellants contracted for the construction of vessels of war for the Spanish Government, each of which was to be completed at a given date. In the event of non-completion they were to pay 500*l.* in respect of each ship for every week's delay. There was considerable delay:—Held, that the sums stipulated were liquidated damages payable in full and not a penalty. Ib.

Retention Moneys on Non-fulfilment.]—Under a stipulation in a contract the criterion whether a sum—described either as penalty or liquidated damages—is truly liquidated damages, and as such not to be interfered with by a Court, or a penalty which covers, but does not assess the damage, lies in the ascertainment whether the sum stipulated for can or cannot be regarded as “a genuine pre-estimate of the creditor's probable or possible interest in the due performance of the principal obligation,” or is a sum liable to fluctuation in amount according to circumstances. Clydebank Engineering and Shipbuilding Co. v. Yzquierdo y Castaneda (74 L. J. P.C. 1; [1905] A.C. 6) followed. Public Works Commissioner v. Hills, 75 L. J. P.C. 69; [1906] A.C. 368; 94 L. T. 833; 22 T. L. R. 589—P.C.

Word “penalty” used in Contract—Amount Recoverable.]—By a contract for electric lighting installation it was provided that the work should be “completed in all respects on or before the 26th Nov. 1898, subject to a penalty of 15*l.* a day, and the plant by the 10th Dec., subject to a penalty of 3*l.* per day for every day the work remains unfinished to the satisfaction of the authorities or engineers”:—Held, that, although the word “penalties” was used, the amounts accrued owing to the default of the contractor were in fact “liquidated damages.” White and Arthur, In re, 84 L. T. 594; 50 W. R. 81—D.

Breach—Several Provisions.]—By an agreement W. agreed to purchase a public-house of B. and the fittings, and to take the stock to a certain amount and pay for the same; B. agreed to assign the licences and pay certain rates and taxes and give possession, and not carry on the business of a licensed victualler within one mile, W. further agreeing to pay the purchase-money and produce references. It was further provided “that if either of the said parties should neglect to perform or refuse to comply with any part of this agreement” the party refusing or neglecting should pay the other 25*l.* as liquidated damages:—Held, that this was a penalty. Bradley v. Walsh, 88 L. T. 737—D.

Bond for Lump Sum—Condition to Refrain from Several Acts.]—In an action to recover 100*l.*, money due upon a bond for that amount, the condition of which was that the defendant should, in obedience to an injunction of the High Court, refrain from trespassing on certain lands or the walls, gates, or fences thereof, and pulling down or removing, or otherwise injuring the same, or inciting others to commit any such trespasses, it appeared that the bond was executed by the defendant upon his release from imprisonment for disobedience to the injunction, which was in the same terms as those set out in the condition of the bond:—Held, that the sum payable by the bond became payable on a single event only—namely, on disobedience to the injunction—and was therefore liquidated damages, and not a penalty, and consequently the plaintiff was entitled to proceed by writ specially indorsed under Order III. rule 6, and to apply for final judgment under Order XIV. rule 1. Strickland v. Williams, 68 L. J. Q.B. 241; [1899] 1 Q.B. 382; 80 L. T. 4—C.A.

Deposit to be Forfeited on Breach of any one of several Stipulations—Stipulations of Different Degrees of Importance—Intention of Parties.]—Although the general principle of law is that where, in a contract containing a variety of stipulations of different degrees of importance, one large sum is made payable on breach of performance of any one of them, such sum is to be treated as a penalty and not as liquidated damages, the Court is entitled to look at all the circumstances in which the contract came into existence, at what the parties did and at the language they have used, in order to ascertain whether they meant the sum mentioned to be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages. The fact that one party has deposited with the other the sum in question, and agreed that it shall be forfeited on the breach by him of any one of the several conditions as and by way of liquidated damages, is one of the circumstances so to be taken into consideration in ascertaining their intention. The words used by the parties in describing a sum in the contract as "liquidated damages" are only to be disregarded in plain cases where the sum is obviously intended to be a penalty. Pye v. British Automobile Commercial Syndicate, 75 L. J. K.B. 270; [1906] 1 K.B. 425; 22 T. L. R. 287—Bigham, J.

Sale for Shipment by Instalments—"Penalty for non-execution of contract"—Fixed Sum Payable on Portion of Contract not Executed.]—The defendants by a contract, made in Glasgow, contracted to supply 10,000 tons of coal to the plaintiff at Lübeck, to be delivered by five specified monthly shipments. The coal was to be partly small steam coal and partly screened steam coal, and the prices varied according to the quality of coal and the month of shipment. The contract contained the following clause: "Penalty for non-execution of this contract by either party one shilling per ton on the portion unexecuted and the amount of proved loss, if any, on freight actually arranged by us":—Held, upon failure by the vendors to deliver one of the monthly shipments, that the damages which the buyer could recover was the amount stipulated for in the clause in the contract, which must be construed as liquidated damages, and not as a penalty. Diestel v. Stevenson, 75 L. J. K.B. 797; [1906] 2 K.B. 345; 96 L. T. 10; 12 Com. Cas. 1; 22 T. L. R. 673—Kennedy, J.

Penalty Clause in Act of Parliament—Action for Damages.]—See STATUTE.

2. AMOUNT.

Shortage of Water.]—The Huddersfield Water Act, 1869, which provides, inter alia, that in case of neglect on the part of the corporation to deliver the statutory quantity of compensation water, the corporation shall, for every day on which the neglect occurs, pay to the occupiers of each of the mills and works affected thereby, who may sue for the same, the sum of 5*l.*, and also make compensation for any damage sustained by such occupiers, or any of them, in respect of which such penalties are an insufficient compensation:—Held, that the liability of the corporation to penalties was not limited to one penalty of 5*l.* for each day during which the shortage of water continued; but that they were liable in that sum for each day to each of the plaintiffs. Lewis v. Swansea Corporation (4 Times L. R. 122, 706) distinguished. Beaumont v. Huddersfield Corporation, 1 L. G. R. 118; 67 J. P. 57—C.A.

3. RECOVERY.

Alternative Remedy—Election.]—The plaintiffs appointed the defendant their agent under an agreement by which he agreed that, if he should cease to act for the plaintiffs under the agreement, he would not give information about the plaintiffs' connections, or interfere, directly or indirectly, with their business, or represent any other corporation doing a similar business within a certain radius from the place to which he should be appointed, within one year at least from the date of his ceasing to receive remuneration from the plaintiffs. In case of breach of the agreement the defendant was to pay to the plaintiffs 100*l.* by way of liquidated damages. The defendant having committed breaches of the agreement,—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction as well as to the 100*l.* liquidated damages, but were bound to elect between the two remedies. General Accident Assurance Corporation v. Noel, 71 L. J. K.B. 236; [1902] 1 K.B. 377; 86 L. T. 555; 50 W. R. 381—Wright, J.

Waterworks—Compulsory Taking of Water—Compensation Water—Neglect to Supply—Penalty for Neglect.]—Under a local water Act a corporation were bound to supply certain compensation water, as compensation for the waters taken by them for the purposes of the Act, and in case of neglect to supply the same they were, for every day on which such neglect occurred, to "forfeit and pay to the occupiers of each of the mills and works affected thereby, who may sue for and recover the same, the sum of five pounds," and were in addition to make compensation for any loss sustained by such occupiers in respect of which the penalties were not a sufficient compensation, and such compensation might be sued for in any Court of competent jurisdiction. The provisions of sections 140 and 145 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, which provided that every penalty or forfeiture, the recovery of which was not otherwise provided for, might be recovered by summary proceedings before two Justices, were incorporated with the local Act:—Held, that an action in the High Court could be maintained for the recovery of the penalties for the neglect of the corporation to supply the compensation water, and that the incorporated sections of the Railways Clauses Act as to the recovery of the penalties before two Justices did not apply, as the section of the local Act itself had "otherwise provided" for the recovery of the penalties. *Meltham Spinning Co. v. PERPETUITIES.

Annuity Charged on Land—Option to Purchase Annuity at a Time Unlimited.—Lands were in 1887 conveyed by a grantor to a trustee in fee, in trust, inter alia, to pay and apply 90l. per annum out of the rents of the lands for the support of the Protestant religion, provided, however, that the persons for the time being beneficially interested in the lands as the representatives of the grantor should, if they should think fit, in lieu of the said 90l., pay the interest on eighteen Russian Imperial bonds for 100l. each to and for the aforesaid purpose:—Held, that the proviso was void under the rule against perpetuities, and that the annuity of 90l. could not be redeemed by assigning eighteen Russian Imperial bonds in lieu thereof. Tyrrrell's Estate, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 292—C.A.

Rentcharge—Chattel Interest—Terms of Five Hundred Years—Proviso for Redemption at Fixed Price—Remoteness.—J. granted an annuity or rentcharge of 80l. (Irish) a year, for a term of five hundred years to trustees upon certain trusts, and charged same on leasehold premises, with a proviso that it should be lawful for the grantor, his executors, administrators, or assigns, at any time during the five hundred years, to purchase or redeem the annuity for 300l. (Irish), which was then to determine and be void:—Held, that the proviso for redemption of the annuity did not infringe the rule against perpetuities, and was not void for remoteness. Switzer v. Rochford, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 399—M.R.

Appointment—Limitation to Unborn Persons Equally during their Respective Lives—Remainder to Survivor for Life—Vested Remainder—Contingent Remainder.—Every vested interest must be one which may vest in possession. By a will exercising a special power of appointment under a settlement, real estate was limited to two persons unborn at the date of the settlement equally during their respective lives, and on the death of either to the survivor for life:—Held, that there could not be two vested life estates in remainder, since one or other of them could never vest in possession; and that the remainder, limited to the survivor, was therefore contingent, and void for remoteness. Whitby v. Lueddecke, 75 L. J. Ch. 359; [1906] 1 Ch. 783; 94 L. T. 432; 54 W. R. 415—Buckley, J.

Special Power of—Exercise by Will—Validity.—In exercise of a special power of appointment in favour of an appointee living at the date of the creation of the power "and his present and future issue of whatever degree . . . within the limits of remoteness allowed by law," the testatrix by will appointed the property the subject of the power in trust for the appointee for life with remainder in trust for all his children "who being male have attained or shall attain the age of 25 years if born in my lifetime or 21 years if born after my decease, or being female have attained or shall attain the age of 25 years if born in my lifetime or 21 years if born after my decease, or shall being female be previously married, and if more than one such child in equal shares." The appointee had nine children, all of whom had attained twenty-five before the death of the testatrix:—Held, that the appointment was a valid exercise of the power and not void under the rule against perpetuities, because upon the appointment coming into force—that is, at the death of the donee of the power—it was absolutely certain that within the prescribed period of a life or lives in being at the creation of the power and twenty-one years after not only would the persons to take be ascertained, but their interests would be vested and the amount or number of their aliquot shares be fixed. Von Brockdorff v. Malcolm (55 L. J. Ch. 121; 30 Ch. D. 172) and Hallinan's Trusts, In re ([1904] 1 Ir. R. 452), followed. Thompson, In re; Thompson v. Thompson, 75 L. J. Ch. 599; [1906] 2 Ch. 199; 95 L. Gift to Maintain Monument—Conditional Devise—Direction to Apply Moneys in Maintaining Monument on Part of Devised Real Estate.—A testator by his will devised two freehold farms to his nephew on condition that he should set apart the rents and profits thereof for the term of five years "for the use and purpose of erecting on some portion" (suggesting a particular situation) a monument to the memory of John Locke, and at the expiration of the five years he directed that his nephew should enjoy three-fourths of the rents and profits, but should devote the balance or remaining one-fourth towards the maintenance and keeping in order of the monument:—Held, that the erection of the monument was not intended as a mode of enjoyment of the property by the devisee, and that the application of one-fourth of the rents and profits was intended to perpetuate the memory of John Locke, and, therefore, as to such one-fourth there was an intestacy. Jones, In re; Parker v. Lethbridge, 79 L. T. 154—Stirling, J.

Gift of Leasehold Houses to Officers of Regiment.—Gift of leasehold houses for old officers of a regiment at a small rent during their life held void for perpetuity. Good, In re; Harington v. Watts, 74 L. J. Ch. 512; [1905] 2 Ch. 60; 92 L. T. 796; 53 W. R. 476; 21 T. L. R. 450—Farwell, J.

Gift to Charity.—An immediate gift to charity is valid, although the particular application of the fund directed by the will may not of necessity take effect within any assignable limit of time, or may never take effect at all except on the occurrence of events in their essence contingent and uncertain; while, on the other hand, a gift in trust for charity which is conditional upon a future and uncertain event is subject to the same rules as any other estate depending on its coming into existence upon a condition precedent. Swain, In re; Monckton v. Hands, 74 L. J. Ch. 354; [1905] 1 Ch. 669; 92 L. T. 715—C.A.

Where, subject to a prior life interest, a testator's residuary real and personal estate is by the will devoted to charity as from the testator's death, a direction to postpone the payment of the charitable gift until the formation of a reserve fund, directed without any limit of time to be accumulated out of income as an increment to the charitable fund, is not a condition precedent to the charitable gift coming into effect so as to render the gift void as a perpetuity. Martin v. Maugham (13 L. J. Ch. 392; 14 Sim. 230) and Chamberlayne v. Brockett (42 L. J. Ch. 368; L. R. 8 Ch. 206) followed and applied. Id.

Married Woman—Restraint on Anticipation—Severance of Class.—A restraint on anticipation imposed by a general clause in a will upon all the shares of daughters of the testator's children is good as to the shares of daughters who are born in the testator's lifetime, though void for perpetuity as to the shares of those who are born afterwards. Herbert v. Webster (49 L. J. Ch. 620; 15 Ch. D. 610) followed. Michael's Trusts, In re (46 L. J. Ch. 651), and Ridley, In re; Buckton v. May (48 L. J. Ch. 563; 11 Ch. — Validity—Severance of Class.—A testator directed his trustees to stand possessed of a fund upon trust for his daughter for life and after her death upon trust for her children who should attain twenty-one, or if daughters marry, "as to the share of any girl for her separate use without power of disposing of the income or capital otherwise than by will":—Held, that the restraint on anticipation was valid as to the shares of granddaughters born in the testator's lifetime. Game, In re; Game v. Tennent, 76 L. J. Ch. 168; [1907] 1 Ch. 276; 96 L. T. 145—Warrington, J.

Power to Appoint Life Estate to Surviving

Husband—Ultimate Gift—Independent and Alternative Trusts.—A testatrix directed her executors to stand possessed of an aggregate principal sum in trust as to a certain specified share thereof for each of her four nieces for life with power to appoint a life or any less interest to any husband who might survive her, and subject thereto in trust for such nieces' children at twenty-one, with a proviso for accruer to the other shares of the share of any niece dying without leaving either husband or children who should take an interest in her share; and in case neither of her nieces should have any child who should become entitled to her share under the trusts aforesaid, then the testatrix directed the aggregate principal sum to be held in trust for such of her nephews, sons of a deceased sister, as should be living at the time of the determination of the trusts aforesaid, or the issue then living of any of her said nephews who might be then dead leaving issue, as the last surviving of her said four nieces, might by her will appoint. None of the nieces ever had any children, or exercised her power of appointment in favour of a husband, and the survivor duly appointed the fund to objects of the power. On the death of the survivor the question arose whether the ultimate gift or power was not void for remoteness, because the husbands to whom the nieces had power to appoint life interests need not necessarily have been born in the testatrix's lifetime, and consequently the period for ascertaining the class to take under the ultimate gift might have been postponed beyond the period prescribed by the rule against perpetuities:—Held, that this was a case of independent and alternative gifts, and that the ultimate gift or power to appoint in favour of the testatrix's nephews and their issue was not void for perpetuity, and that the appointment in their favour was valid. *Bowles, In re; Page v. Trust to Accumulate During Minority—Minor Who, if of Full Age, would be entitled to the Rents and Profits—Minor Born after Testator's Death.—Section 1 of the Accumulations Act, 1800, renders void any direction by a settlor or testator for the accumulation of the income arising from a fund for a longer term than (inter alia) during the minority of any person who would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the income of the fund. Will—Devise—Limitations—Unborn Persons—Successive Life Estates—Contingent Interest in Remainder to Survivor—Legal Contingent Remainder—Determination of Settlement by Beneficiaries.]—Legal contingent remainders are subject not only to the rule that an estate for life to an unborn person cannot be followed by an estate to the child of such unborn person, but also, equally with contingent equitable limitations of real estate and all contingent limitations of personalty, to the rule against perpetuities. Ashforth's Trusts, In re; Ashforth v. Sibley, 74 L. J. Ch. 361; [1905] 1 Ch. 535; 92 L. T. 534; 53 W. R. 328; 21 T. L. R. 329—Farwell, J.

A testatrix devised her real estate to her trustees and their heirs upon trust to pay the rents and profits unto her three children and the survivors and survivor of them during their lives and the life of the survivor, and after the death of the survivor upon trust to pay and divide the rents and profits as soon as conveniently could be after Lady day and Michaelmas Day in each year unto and equally amongst all such of the children born in her lifetime or within twenty-one years after her death of her said three children who should be living on the Lady Day or Michaelmas Day preceding such payment and division; and after the death of all such grandchildren except one she devised her said real estate to such surviving grandchild and the heirs of his or her body in tail, with remainder over. Of the testatrix's three children, all of whom survived her, two died without issue, and the third died leaving three children, the plaintiffs, who desired, in the events which had happened, to determine the settlement. Upon a summons for the determination of the question whether any of the above trusts or limitations were void for remoteness,—Held, that the contingent estates tail in remainder were void inasmuch as they would not become indefeasibly vested in any person necessarily ascertainable within the limits prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, and that therefore the plaintiffs could not by combining to release or destroy the right of survivorship render themselves presently entitled to the property in fee-simple, because, the contingent interests being void, there was no present estate of inheritance in existence available for dealings by way of conveyance or otherwise, and nothing would be left but the three life estates of the grandchildren. Ib.

Held also, that as the rule against perpetuities is applicable to legal contingent remainders, the fact that the limitation in question was a legal contingent remainder supported by a particular estate vested in trustees during the lives of the grandchildren did not avail the plaintiffs. Ib.

— Gift to the Members of a Class who should Attain Twenty-five—Remoteness.]—A testatrix directed her trustees to divide her residuary estate into two equal parts or shares and to pay one such equal part or share to the children of her niece R. who should live and attain the age of twenty-five years, or the lawful issue of such children who should have married and predeceased R. and left issue, such issue only to take the share that would otherwise have been payable to their parents; and as to the other equal part or share to pay the same to the children of her nephew C., or their issue, under precisely similar terms and conditions as those under which the children of R. became entitled to take their share. During such suspense of absolute vesting, the trustees were to invest the said moneys and the income thereof for the benefit of such children on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-five years; and the will also contained an advancement clause. One of R.'s children had attained twenty-five at the testatrix's death, but none of C.'s children had attained that age:—Held, that there was a good and valid disposition of the moiety of the residue given to R.'s children, not infringing the rule against perpetuities; but that the disposition of the other moiety infringed that rule and was invalid. Barker, In re; Capon v. Flick, 92 L. T. 831—Joyce, J.

— Child en Ventre sa Mère—Rule as to Assuming Birth—Benefit of Child.]—In applying to the limitations of a will the rule of remoteness, which only admits of absolute ownership being suspended for a life or lives in being and twenty-one years afterwards, the Court for all the purposes of the rule treats an infant en ventre sa mère at the date of the testator's death (who is subsequently born) as then existing, and that whether the effect of its so doing is beneficial or prejudicial to the infant. Wilmer's Trusts, In re; Moore v. Wingfield, 72 L. J. Ch. 670; [1903] 2 Ch. 411; 89 L. T. 148; 51 W. R. 609—C.A.

A testatrix devised real estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to her daughter for life, and after her death to stand possessed of the real estate upon trust for the second and every younger son of her daughter born or to be born successively during his life, with remainder after the death of each such son upon trust for his first and other sons successively in order of seniority in tail male, with remainders over. And the testatrix provided that if any person other than the eldest son of her daughter should become entitled to the B. estate, then the gift over in remainder should take effect. At the death of the testatrix her daughter had had an eldest son, who died in the lifetime of the testatrix, and a second son who subsequently became entitled to the B. estate, and was thereby precluded from taking under the limitation, and she was pregnant of a third son, who was born shortly afterwards:—Held, that the limitations of the will to the first and other sons successively in tail male of the third son of the testatrix's daughter were not, in the events which had happened, void for remoteness. Ib.

PETROLEUM.

Jurisdiction — Composition containing Petroleum and giving off Inflammable Vapour.]—A composition used for coating ships' bottoms contained 33 per cent. of petroleum oil and an equal quantity of linseed oil mixed with pigments, gum, &c., so as to form a paint or paste. When the composition was tested in the manner set forth in Schedule I. to the Petroleum Act, 1879, 25 per cent. of the petroleum oil contained in it gave off an inflammable vapour at a temperature of less than 73° F.:—Held, that such oil was "petroleum to which this Act applies," within the meaning of section 3 of the Petroleum Act, 1871, as amended by section 2 of the Act of 1879, notwithstanding that it was mixed with other ingredients; and consequently that the composition could not be kept except in pursuance of a licence given by the local authority. *London County Council v. Pension—Chief Constable—Incapable of appointment—Order of Police Authority—Survivor Examination—Object outside Act.—The authority have no jurisdiction under the question—sections 1 and 3 of the Police Act or power make an order for the medical examination of a pensioner, not really to satisfy to appoint to the state of his health, but to have been outside the Act—namely, to assist frequently receiver in his bankruptcy to execute to take for his arrest for non-attendance at a post-nation in bankruptcy—and the pensioner rule bound to obey such an order. Reg. was a Leigh, 66 L. Cancellation of Pension—Requisition to retire—An order of the police authority, made under section 5, sub-section 4 of the Police Act, 1890, cancelling a police pension upon the ground that the pensioner had failed to attend and be medically examined, is invalid, where no option is given to the pensioner to return to the force; and that is so whether the constable was a chief constable, or any other constable. Id.

Fixing Time and Place of Examination—Failure of Constable to Attend.—The fixing in an order for medical examination of the time and place where such examination is to take place does not make the order invalid, for the police authority or the medical practitioner have jurisdiction to fix the time and place; but it is not the substantial part of the order, and consequently a pensioner cannot be treated as having disobeyed such order if he has attended and been examined, though at some other time and place than those named. Id.

Basis of Calculation—Salary—Increase Subject to Condition that Increase should not be Reckoned for Pension—Resignation.—In 1901, the salary of the plaintiff, who was the head constable of Liverpool, was increased by the watch committee from 1,400l. to 1,650l., subject to his agreeing that the amount of the increase should not be taken into account for the purpose of pension. In March, 1902, the plaintiff retired, and the watch committee granted him a pension of 933l. 6s. 8d., based on a salary of 1,400l. a year. In the same month the plaintiff was appointed Commissioner of Police of the City of London at a salary of 1,250l. a year. In January, 1903, the Liverpool City Council passed a resolution suspending the payment of 483*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, part of the pension granted to the plaintiff, so long as he remained in the service of the City of London Police.—Held, first, that whether the plaintiff did agree, or did not agree, in the sense either that he did not in fact or could not in law agree to the condition, the pension must be calculated on the basis that his salary remained at 1,400*l.*; secondly, that the “police authority” of Liverpool under the Police Act, 1890, was the watch committee and not the city council, and that there was, therefore, no existing resolution suspending the pension within section 13, sub-section 1 of the Act; thirdly, that three-fourths of the expenses of the City of London Police being borne by the rates, the commissionership was an office remunerated out of a borough rate or fund within section 13, sub-section 2, and consequently that the provisions of that sub-section as to reduction of pensions applied. Nott Bower v. Liverpool Corporation, 2 L. G. R. 494; 63 J. P. 243; 20 T. L. R. 261—Buckley, J.

— Allowance for Special Service — “Pay” — “Annual pay.” — An allowance for special duties in addition to the ordinary pay of a constable does not constitute part of the “pay” of a constable within the meaning of the Police Act, 1890, and ought not to be taken into account in estimating the pension to which he is entitled on his retirement. Upperton v. Lloyd, 72 L. J. K.B. 535; [1903] A.C. 281; 1 T. 642; 1 L. G. R. 659; 67 J. P. 349—aff. (E.)

— LORD DAVEY. — Such allowance constitutes extra pay, and is as truly part of the constable’s pay as his ordinary wages. But it is not entitling him to contract himself out of his service, and he does so contract by signing the desired pay-sheets in which his ordinary pay is set down under one column entitled “Amount for pay,” and the allowances under another column, and the allowances properly so-called for lodgings, &c. Ib.

— “Annual pay.” — The “annual pay” within the meaning of the First Schedule to the Police Act, 1890, of a constable paid weekly is not fifty-two times his weekly, but three hundred and sixty-five times his daily pay. Ib. S.C. in C.A., 70 L. J. Q.B. 249; [1901] 1 Q.B. 384.

— Police Inspector — Free House with Use of Fuel, Gas, and Water — “Pay” — “Annual pay.” — The free use, during his term of service, of a house, in which he is required to reside, and of fuel, gas, and water, is not part of the “pay” of a police inspector within the meaning of the Police Act, 1890, and ought not to be taken into account in estimating the pension to which he is entitled under the Act on his retirement. Goodwin v. Sheffield Corporation, 71 L. J. K.B. 492; [1902] 1 K.B. 629—D.

— Right to Appeal to High Court by Case Stated.] — Section 11 of the Police Act, 1890, does not prevent an appeal to the High Court by Case stated from being maintained against an order of quarter sessions made pursuant to that section. Ib.

— “Approved service” — Continuous Service — “Diligent and faithful service.” — The twenty-five years’ “approved service” which under section 1 of the Police Act, 1890, entitles a constable to receive a pension need not be continuous service. (LORD DAVEY doubting.) Garbutt v. Durham Joint Committee, 75 L. J. K.B. 459; [1906] A.C. 291; 94 L. T. 525; 54 W. R. 596; 4 L. G. R. 647; 70 J. P. 265; 22 T. L. R. 444—H.L. (E.)

The chief officer’s certificate of “approved service” under section 4, sub-section 2, is only evidence of the period of service, and is not conclusive of the “diligent and faithful service” which under sub-section 1 of section 4 must be certified under the order of the police authority. Case remitted to quarter sessions for the reception of evidence whether in fact the service had been “diligent and faithful.” Ib. And see, as to amount of pension, *Liverpool Watch Committee v. 2. GUARDIANS.

Election of—Returning Officers—Urban Council.—Where the boundaries of a parish are not co-extensive with an urban district council, or with any of the wards of the urban district, or where the county council has not given directions that the polls for the election of guardians and of urban district councillors shall be taken together, the clerk to the guardians, and not the clerk to the urban district council, is entitled to act as the returning officer at an election of guardians. Re v. Carter, 63 J. P. 466—D.

—Equality of Votes—Casting Vote—Petition—Costs.—At an election of guardians two of the candidates, W. and H., received an equal number of votes. The deputy returning officer, who had no vote in the particular ward, under the erroneous belief that he had a casting vote, gave it for H., and the result was declared accordingly. W. presented an election petition making H., but not the returning officer, a respondent. No notice was given by H. that he would not oppose the petition, but at the hearing he did not oppose except as to costs:—Held, that the election was void, that no order as to costs could be made against the returning officer as he was not a party, but that the respondent must pay the petitioner's costs (including the costs of the Special Case) as from the time when he might have given notice of his intention not to oppose the petition. Watts v. Hemming, 71 J. P. 504—D.

Disqualification for Office—Interest in Contract—Time when Guardian Ceases to be a Member.

—By section 46, sub-section 1 of the Local Government Act, 1894, "A person shall be disqualified for . . . being a member . . . of a board of guardians if he . . . (e) is concerned in any bargain or contract entered into with the . . . board . . . ;" and by sub-section 7, "Where a member of a . . . board of guardians becomes disqualified for holding office . . . the . . . board shall forthwith declare the office to be vacant, and signify the same by notice signed by three members and countersigned by the clerk of the . . . board, and notified in such manner as the . . . board direct, and the office shall thereupon become vacant":—Held, that a member of a board of guardians who is concerned in a contract entered into with the board is disqualified for being a member, and the disqualification does not cease by reason of the termination of the contract. Re v. Rowlands, 75 L. J. K.B. 501; [1906] 2 K.B. 292; 95 L. T. 502; 70 J. P. 463; 4 L. G. R. 983—D.

—Composition or Arrangement with Creditors—Administration Order of County Court for Partial Payment of Debts.—Section 46, sub-section 1 (c) of the Local Government Act, 1894, which provides that a person shall be disqualified for being a parish or district councillor or guardian if he has made a composition or arrangement with his creditors, applies to every composition, howsoever made, which the debtor has made with his creditors. A guardian, against whom a judgment had been recovered in a County Court, preferred to that Court a request under section 122 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for an order for the administration of his estate and the payment of his debts, and stated that he proposed to pay 10s. in the pound. The Court made an order for the payment of his debts to that extent:—Held, that he had made a composition with his creditors, and was therefore disqualified for being a guardian. Bradfield v. Cheltenham Guardians, 75 L. J. Ch. 618; [1906] 2 Ch. 371; 95 L. T. 78; 54 W. R. 611; 70 J. P. 371; 4 L. G. R. 961; 13 Manson, 207; 22 T. L. R. 689—Buckley, J.

Contract—Tender for Supply of Coal to Union Workhouse—Acceptance of Tender—Mistake by Contractor as to Price—Attempted Withdrawal of Tender.—Contractors tendered in the form prescribed by the Order of the Local Government Board of December 31, 1877, for the supply to a board of guardians for a year of a certain kind of coal to be used in the workhouse. The guardians caused the tender to be sealed and signed in accordance with the Order of 1877, and fixed a later day for the execution of a bond securing the performance of the contract. Before that day arrived, the contractors, discovering that they had, owing to overlooking the cost of cartage, tendered at a price too low by 3s. a ton, intimated to the guardians that they withdrew their tender; and they subsequently declined to supply coal in accordance with it:—Held, that as from the sealing and signature of the tender there was a completed contract between the guardians and the contractors, for breach of which, by non-delivery of coal, the guardians, in the absence of mala fides on their part, could sue. Islington Union v. Brentnall, 5 L. G. R. 1219; 71 J. P. 407—Grantham, J.

Building Contract—Breach by Guardians—Damages—Reference to Arbitration—"Neglect or default in the execution of any public duty."—A breach by the guardians of a union of a private contract entered into by them in the performance of their public duties is not "a neglect or default" in the execution "of any public duty or authority" within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and consequently the limit of six months prescribed by section 1 (a) for the commencement of proceedings does not apply to a reference to arbitration in respect of such breach. Sharpington v. Fulham Guardians, 73 L. J. Ch. 777; [1904] 2 Ch. 449; 91 L. T. 739; 52 W. R. 617; 68 J. P. 510; 2 L. G. R. 1229; 20 T. L. R. 648—Farwell, J.

Negligence of Guardians' Servant—Action against Guardians—Liability—Common Employment.—The plaintiff, an inmate of the defendants' workhouse, was ordered to do certain work in connection with an extension of the electric-lighting installation at the workhouse infirmary. The plaintiff was required to work upon a scaffold which had been erected in a negligent manner by a servant of the guardians, and which was unsafe. The scaffold gave way while the plaintiff was at work upon it, and he sustained personal injuries. In an action brought to recover damages from the defendants,—Held, that the doctrine of common employment had no application, inasmuch as the plaintiff was compellable by law to do the work which he was ordered to do. Held, further, that the action, not being one for the mere neglect of an ordinary administrative duty, was maintainable against the defendants. Tozeland v. West Ham Guardians, 75 L. J. K.B. 353; [1906] 1 K.B. 538; 94 L. T. 486; 54 W. R. 531; 70 J. P. 134; 4 L. G. R. 411; 22 T. L. R. 300—D.

Fraud by Clerk of Guardians—Guardians Damned.—By a resolution of poor-law guardians their clerk's salary was increased, such increase to include all claim to remuneration for work in connection with all elections of guardians. This resolution the clerk was directed to forward to the Local Government Board for their sanction. Without the knowledge of the guardians, and intentionally, the clerk communicated to the Local Government Board only a part of the resolution, omitting that part which had reference to the increased salary being inclusive of all remuneration in relation to elections. The Local Government Board sanctioned the increase, which was accordingly paid to the clerk. Some years later the guardians discovered what the clerk had done, whereupon they made a claim against the defendants who had guaranteed to the amount of 300*l.* the due and faithful performance by the clerk of the duties of his office:—Held, that the guardians were entitled to recover, as the clerk had not duly and faithfully discharged the duties of his office, and the guardians had been damnedified by having made payments of the increased salary on a resolution to which the sanction of the Local Government Board had not been obtained, which payments were consequently ultra vires. Bramley Union v. Guarantee Society, 64 J. P. 308—C.A.

Pauper Inmate of Workhouse—Order to Assist in Certain Work—Injury caused by Negligence of Permanent Official—Common Employment—Action for Damages—Liability of Guardians.—A pauper inmate of a workhouse was ordered by the master to assist in certain work in connection with an extension of the electric lighting installation at the workhouse infirmary. While he was working on a scaffold, which had been erected in a negligent manner by a permanent official of the guardians, and which was unsafe, the scaffold gave way, and the pauper was severely injured. In an action by him for damages for negligence against the guardians,—Held, that the doctrine of common employment had no application, inasmuch as the pauper was compellable by law to obey the order to assist in the work. Tozeland v. West Ham Guardians, 76 L. J. K.B. 514; [1907] 1 K.B. 920; 96 L. T. 519; 71 J. P. 194; 5 L. G. R. 507; 23 T. L. R. 325—C.A.

Held, further, that the guardians in their corporate capacity were acting ministerially in the performance of their statutory duty to maintain and employ the pauper, and that consequently the action would not lie against them. Ib.

Brennan v. Limerick Guardians (2 L. R. Ir. 42) and Dunbar v. Ardee Guardians ([1897] 2 Ir. R. 76) applied. Southampton and Itchin Floating Bridge and Roads Co. v. Southampton Local Board (28 L. J. Q.B. 41; 8 E. & B. 801) and Levingston v. Lurgan Guardians (Ir. R. 2 C.L. 202) distinguished. Ib.

Proceedings against—Limitation of Time for Commencement of—"Debt claim or demand lawfully incurred or become due."—A demand for a reference to arbitration under an arbitration clause in a building contract in respect of an alleged breach of that contract by the guardians of a union is not a commencement of proceedings within the meaning of section 4 of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, and a claim for damages for breach of such a contract does not constitute "a debt claim or demand lawfully incurred or become due" within the meaning of section 1 of that Act until the amount of the damage has been ascertained either by the award of an arbitrator or in some other manner provided by law. Sharpington v. Fulham Guardians, 73 L. J. Ch. 777; [1904] 2 Ch. 449; 52 W. R. 617; 63 J. P. 510; 2 L. G. R. 1229; 20 T. L. R. 648—Farwell, J.

"Debt or demand"—Unliquidated Damages.—The plaintiffs sued to recover from the defendants 49*l.* 1*l.* 9*d.* for water supplied to the defendants' workhouse from January 1, 1902, to the date of the writ in the action—namely, July 6, 1904. In the statement of claim this sum was claimed as damages for wasting water passing through the meter at the workhouse, but at the trial in 1906 the claim was treated as amended by adding an alternative claim for money due for water supplied by contract:—Held, that the action till amended was not a "proceeding" within the meaning of section 4 of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, and that as the amendment in the form of the claim was made after the time specified in section 1 of that Act, the plaintiffs were precluded from recovering any part of the sum sued for. Chester Waterworks Co. v. Chester Union, 96 L. T. 566; 71 J. P. 133; 5 L. G. R. 215; 23 T. L. R. 245—Jelf, J.

3. OVERSEERS.

"Parish council."—By virtue of the operation of the Local Government Act, 1894, the word

"overseers" in section 4 of the Poor Relief Act, 1743, is to read as "parish council." King's Lynn Docks Co., Ex parte, 69 L. J. Q.B. 341; [1900] 1 Q.B. 521; 82 L. T. 324; 48 W. R. 348; 64 J. P. 375—D.

Assistant Overseer — Appointment — Rate Books—Right to Temporary Possession.]—The Court will grant a writ of mandamus calling upon the overseers of a parish to deliver to an assistant overseer temporary possession of the rate books and other books in their custody as overseers, for the purpose of enabling him to perform the duties of his office. Reg. v. Powell, 68 L. J. Q.B. 274; [1899] 1 Q.B. 396; 80 L. T. 184; 63 J. P. 84—D.

A person may be appointed assistant overseer by a resolution of the parish council signed by the chairman of the council. Id.

Liability of Overseers for Acts of Assistant Overseer — Excessive Distress.]—An assistant overseer is not the servant of the overseers, but of the vestry. As there is statutory recognition of the office of assistant overseer, the overseers are not liable for his acts in the same way as a sheriff is for the acts of his subordinates. Therefore, where an assistant overseer is party to an excessive distress in the execution of a distress warrant issued for non-payment of rates, the overseers do not incur liability unless they do some act which makes them responsible. Baker v. Wicks, 73 L. J. K.B. 410; [1904] 1 K.B. 743; 90 L. T. 706; 52 W. R. 556; 68 J. P. 263; 2 L. G. R. 1155; 20 T. L. R. 382—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

4. UNIONS AND TRANSFERS OF AREAS.

Union — Alteration of — Division of "Property"—Annual Grants by County Council—Valuation.]—Where a parish is separated from a union under section 32 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, the annual sums granted by the county council to the union under section 24, sub-section 1 (d), and section 26, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1888, are property within the meaning of the words "other property held or enjoyed by such union" in section 32 of the Act of 1834, and in case the parties do not agree under section 11 of the Dissolved Boards of Management and Guardians Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 2), upon the manner of the valuation of these payments, it is the duty of the Local Government Board upon the true construction of section 32 of the Act of 1834 to ascertain the proportionate value of these payments to every parish of the union according to their existing capital value at the time of the alteration, and upon the basis of that value to fix once for all an amount to be received or paid or secured to be paid by every parish affected by the alteration. Reg. v. Local Government Board, 70 L. J. K.B. 272; [1901] 1 K.B. 210; 83 L. T. 648; 49 W. R. 226; 65 J. P. 36—C.A.

Alteration of Areas — Order for Division of Old Parish into New Parishes — Provision for Continuation of Pauper Settlements in New Parishes—Validity.]—Pursuant to section 36 of the Local Government Act, 1894, an order for the division of a parish was made by a county authority and confirmed by the Local Government Board. The order contained a clause providing that every person who had acquired a settlement in the original parish should be deemed to have acquired a settlement in one of the newly formed parishes which comprised the place where the circumstances conferring the settlement in the original parish had occurred:—Held, that the clause was not ultra vires of the provisions of that section. Held, further, that, in any case, by virtue of section 42, no objection to the legality of the clause could be entertained in legal proceedings commenced more than six months after the confirmation of the order. Reg. v. Middlesex Justices; Walsall Union, Ex parte, 75 L. J. K.B. 784; [1906] 2 K.B. 365; 95 L. T. 419; 70 J. P. 385; 4 L. G. R. 873—D.

Separation of Parish from Union—Adjustment of Rights and Interests—"Property" of Union—"Fixing" Amount to be Paid by Union to Parish.]—By section 32 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, the Local Government Board may make an order for the separation of a parish from a union, and in such case the board are required to ascertain the proportionate value to every parish of the union of the "work-houses, or other property" held or enjoyed by the union for the use of the poor, and "to fix the amount" to be received or paid by every parish affected by the separation. On the separation of a parish from a union under this section, and on the adjustment of the rights and interests of the union and parish respectively,—Held, that annual sums which the union is entitled to receive from the county council of the county under the Local Government Act, 1888, in respect of the salaries of registrars and the costs of the officers of the union, are "property" within the meaning of the section, and that the Local Government Board have jurisdiction to apportion the same and to fix the amount to be paid by the union to the parish in respect of such sums. Held, also, that an apportionment of these annual sums according to the rateable values of the union and parish respectively, as shown, by the valuation lists in force during the year, is a "fixing of the amount" to be paid by the union to the parish within the meaning of the section, and that the Local Government Board have jurisdiction so to make the apportionment and to order that the union shall in each year pay to the parish the amounts of such annual sums so fixed according to the rateable values. Reg. v. Local Government Board, 82 L. T. 385; 64 J. P. 516—D.

5. CASUAL WARDS.

Provision of Permanent Casual Wards—Value of Land—Metropolitan Common Poor Fund.]—Permanent casual wards for paupers were erected by the Holborn Union upon land which they had acquired many years before, the union borrowing money for the purpose of erecting the wards, which was repaid by instalments out of the Metropolitan Poor Fund, as established by the Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867.

The Holborn Union sought to have the value of the land so used repaid to them out of the Metropolitan Common Poor Fund in one particular half-year. The auditor disallowed the item. Upon rules for a certiorari to quash the disallowance and for a mandamus to grant a certificate of allowance,—Held, that the whole sum could not be allowed in one half-year, and therefore the rules must be discharged. Quare, whether the union were not entitled to include in their accounts for the purpose of having repaid to them out of the Common Poor Fund the fair value of the land for the six months. Reg. v. Mowatt; Holborn Union, ex parte, 93 L. T. 789; 69 J. P. 461; 21 T. L. R. 646—D.

6. SETTLEMENT AND REMOVAL.

Statute.—63 & 64 Vict. c. 23 is the Poor Removal Act, 1900.

Parish Enlarged by Amalgamation of Part of Adjoining Parish.—Where by order of the Local Government Board, under the Divided Parishes Act, 1876, as amended by the Poor Law Act, 1879, a small part of one parish ceases to be part of that parish, and is joined on to and amalgamated with the next parish, the latter parish is not destroyed, nor are settlements gained in it by paupers, prior to the order, destroyed by reason of the amalgamation. St. Saviour's Union v. Dorking Union (67 L. J. Q.B. 408; [1898] 1 Q.B. 594) and Reg. v. Tipton (11 L. J. Q.B. 89; 3 Q.B. 215) distinguished. West Ham Union v. London County Council, 70 L. J. K.B. 503; [1901] 1 K.B. 720; 84 L. T. 471; 49 W. R. 443; 65 J. P. 358—D.

Division of Parish.—A settlement acquired by a person in the parish of Claines, Worcestershire, before September 30, 1885, is, by the operation of the Worcester Extension Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. clxiv.), which divided the parish of Claines into two portions, preserved in that portion of the parish in which it has been acquired. Worcester Union v. Birmingham Union, 65 J. P. 771—D.

Parish in which Settlement Acquired Added to by Amalgamation of Part of another Parish.—Where by an Order of the Local Government Board made under the Divided Parishes Act, 1876, as amended by the Poor Law Act, 1879, a part of one parish ceases to be part of that parish and is amalgamated with another parish, the identity of the latter parish is not destroyed, nor are settlements acquired in it prior to the Order lost. Reg. v. Tipton Inhabitants (11 L. J. Q.B. 89; 3 Q.B. 215) and St. Saviour's Union v. Dorking Union (67 L. J. Q.B. 408; [1898] 1 Q.B. 594) distinguished. West Ham Union v. London County Council, 71 L. J. K.B. 299; [1902] 1 K.B. 562; 86 L. T. 134; 50 W. R. 275; 66 J. P. 356—C.A.

Division of Parish into Separate Parishes—Loss of Birth Settlement.—Where a parish partly within and partly without a rural sanitary district has been divided by the operation of section 1, sub-section 3 of the Local Government Act, 1894, a pauper loses his birth settlement acquired there before the passing of the Act, because the place of such settlement has ceased to exist, and he cannot be treated as having a birth settlement in the new parish which originally formed the part of the old parish where he was born. Reg. v. Tipton (11 L. J. M.C. 89; 3 Q.B. 215) followed. St. Saviour's Union v. Dorking Union, 67 L. J. Q.B. 408; [1898] 1 Q.B. 594; 78 L. T. 29; 46 W. R. 309; 62 J. P. 308—C.A.

Division of Parish into Separate Parishes by Order—Pauper Deemed to have Acquired Settlement in New Parish.—An order of the Local Government Board dividing an existing parish into two separate parishes, which provides (inter alia) that, as between the two new parishes, every person who has acquired, or shall on or before a given date acquire, a settlement in the existing parish shall be deemed to have acquired such settlement in either of the separate parishes, does not apply to persons who are in the process of acquiring a settlement in the existing parish. Accordingly, a pauper who had resided in the old parish for two years and ten months up to the given date, and continued his residence in one of the new parishes for eighteen months after the given date, cannot add the two periods of residence together and claim to have acquired a settlement in the new parish. Calne Union v. St. Mary, Islington, Guardians, 69 L. J. Q.B. 400; 82 L. T. 121; 64 J. P. 246—D.

Division of Parish by Provisional Order.—By the Local Government Act, 1894, the parish of Broadwater, in which at that date the pauper had acquired a settlement by residence from 1886 to 1891, was divided into two parishes—Broadwater and Worthing. The residence of the pauper had been in that part of the original parish of Broadwater which under the Act became the parish of Worthing. By a Provisional Order in 1902, a part of the then parish of Broadwater, with parts of other parishes, was added to Worthing, so as to form a new parish. The Provisional Order provided for the preservation of settlements which had been acquired at the date of the Order in any existing parish affected by the Order; it further provided that, for all purposes of settlement and removal, residence prior to the commencement of the Order in any part of the existing parishes of Broadwater, certain other parishes, or Worthing, should be deemed to have been residence in the parish in which the part was included in the Order:—Held, that the Provisional Order did not operate to restore the settlement of the pauper in the old parish of Broadwater which had been destroyed by the Act of 1894, and that the pauper was not settled in the parish of Worthing. East Preston Union v. Lewisham Union, 91 L. T. 498; 2 L. G. R. 1077; 68 J. P. 404—D.

Addition to Original Parish of Part of Area of Another Parish.—Where by a statutory order of the Local Government Board the area of a parish is enlarged by the inclusion of a part of an adjoining parish, the identity of the original parish is not destroyed, nor are settlements acquired therein previously to the order lost. Reg. v. Tipton Inhabitants (11 L. J. M.C. 89; 3 Q.B. 215) and St. Saviour's Union v. Dorking Union (67 L. J. Q.B. 408; [1898] 1 Q.B. 594) distinguished. West Ham Union v. London County Council, 73 L. J. K.B. 85;

Residential Settlement—Break of Residence—Absence on Military Service.—In order that a person should acquire a residential settle-ment under section 34 of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876, he must reside in a parish under the conditions men-tioned in the section for a period of three consecutive years. Separate periods of resi-dence cannot be added together to make up the three years, even though the interval between those periods is such as is, under section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, to be excluded in the computation of time for the purpose of that section. St. Olave's Union v. Canterbury Union (66 L. J. Q.B. 471; [1897] 1 Q.B. 438) followed. Newark Union v. Maidstone Union, 93 L. T. 602; 3 L. G. R. 1005; 69 J. P. 413—D.

The absence of a person from the parish where he lives on military service breaks his residence in that parish for the purposes of section 34 of the Act of 1876, notwithstanding that his house is kept up, that his wife and children continue to live there, and that he intends to return to his home at the conclusion of the service. Ib.

Illegitimate Child—Derivative Settlement.—On an enquiry as to the settlement of an ille-gitimate pauper with no settlement of his own, whose mother also has acquired no settle-ment of her own, it is not necessary, in order that the pauper shall be deemed to be settled in the parish in which he was born, within para-graph 3 of section 35 of the Divided Parishes Act, 1876, to ascertain what the mother's de-rivative settlement is; it is enough to shew that the mother was the legitimate offspring of an English father. Plymouth Union v. Aarminster Union, 67 L. J. Q.B. 871; [1898] A.C. 586; 79 L. T. 4; 47 W. R. 33; 62 J. P. 612—H.L. (E.)

—Mother's Settlement—Child under Sixteen—Residence for Three Years—Irremovability.—There is nothing to prevent a child under the age of sixteen years from acquiring a settlement. A person who has for three years so resided in a parish as to become irremovable is to be deemed to be settled therein within the mean-ing of section 34 of the Divided Parishes Act, 1876, although such person, being a wife or child, may also have acquired a derivative settlement. The child of such a person can take the parent's settlement under section 34, and is not relegated to its birth settlement under section 35, since it is not necessary to enquire into the derivative settlement of the parent within the meaning of the latter section. Reg. v. Elvet (Inhabitants) (29 L. J. M.C. 17; 2 E. & E. 266) followed. Manchester Overseers v. Ormskirk Union (59 L. J. M.C. 108; 24 Q.B. 678) not followed. West Ham Union v. Hol-beach Union, 72 L. J. Removability—Resolution by Guardians Adopt-ing Child—Power to Remove Child while Reso-lution not Rescinded.—The fact that the guardians of a poor law union by whom a child is maintained have, acting under section 1 of the Poor Law Act, 1899, passed a resolution by which all the rights and powers of the parent of such child become vested in them, does not, even where they have not rescinded the resolu-tion, deprive them of the right to obtain an order for the removal of the child to the place of its last legal settlement. Wantage Union v. Bristol Union, 76 L. J. K.B. 25; [1907] 1 K.B. 68; 96 L. T. 118; 71 J. P. 54; 5 L. G. R. 33; 23 T. L. R. 54—D.

—Residence of Pauper for Upwards of Three Years.—A pauper resided for many years till 1897 in Bethnal Green. He was a railway goods guard travelling between Yarmouth and London. In 1897 he became tenant of a house in Yarmouth, of which he remained tenant for more than three years. He resided in that house with his wife except when absent in London, when he regularly occupied as a lodger a furnished room for an agreed weekly sum. He slept in London and Yarmouth on alternate days.—Held, that the pauper was settled in Yarmouth and was removable there. Great Yarmouth Union v. Bethnal Green Union, 97 L. T. 440; 71 J. P. 422; 5 L. G. R. 1105—D.

—Residence of Married Woman and Children for a Year—Departure of Husband with Intention of Returning—Residence of Wife.—A husband and wife, with their children under the age of sixteen, resided in a parish for part of a year. The husband, who was a foreigner with no settlement of his own, then went to America under circumstances which did not amount to desertion, and intending to return. The wife with her children continued to reside in the parish for the rest of the year, and then became chargeable to the parish. Her husband had not then returned.—Held, that the married woman and her children were irremovable from the parish. Reg. v. St. George-in-the-East (Inhabit-ants) (39 L. J. M.C. 90; L. R. 5 Q.B. 364) followed. Tewkesbury Union v. Birmingham Guardians, 73 L. J. K.B. 797; [1904] 2 K.B. 395; 90 L. T. 787; 53 W.R. 268; 68 J. P. 397; 2 L. G. R. 864; 20 T. L. R. 499—D.

—Deserted Wife—Evidence of Desertion—Wife sent Away by Husband.—Previously to October, 1895, a married woman, living with her husband, had contracted habits of intem-perance and conducted herself in a manner which rendered it impossible for her husband to keep a respectable home for their children. In that month her husband told her that he would no longer put up with her, that he and she must live apart for a time, that she must find some other lodging, and that he would allow her eight shillings a week so long as she kept straight, and give her furniture for a room elsewhere, and if she reformed he and she could live together again. The wife, upon this, left her husband's house, and went to live in a room elsewhere, which she furnished with furniture taken from her husband's house. For eleven months the husband made her the weekly allowance he had expressed his inten-tion of making, but at the end of that time stopped it on discovering that his wife had committed adultery. The wife then went to live with a man in the S. Union, and lived with him there from September, 1896, till 1903, when she was found wandering in a state of lunacy, and was removed to an asylum. An order of Justices was then made under section 294 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, adjudging that she was irremovable from the S. Union by reason of her residence in that union. On appeal the quarter sessions affirmed the order on the ground that the pauper, at the time of her residence in the S. Union, had been "deserted by her husband" within the meaning of section 3 of the Poor Removal Act, 1861, and was capable accordingly of acquiring a status of irremovability in that union:—Held (RIDLEY, J., dissenting), on the authority of Reg. v. Maidstone Union (49 L. J. M.C. 25; 5 Q.B. D. 31), that there was evidence on which the quarter sessions could so find. Southwark Union v. City of London Union, 93 L. T. 184; 3 L. G. R. 568; 69 J. P. 265—D.

— Break of Residence.—A female pauper, whose legal settlement was at C., acquired a status of irremovability from the E. Union, and became an inmate of the E. workhouse. On January 10, 1899, she left the E. workhouse with the intention of going to reside in the C. workhouse, and of not returning to the E. Union, and went to the house of her niece in the W. H. Union. On January 16, 1899, she left the house of her niece and returned to the E. Union, not with the intention of permanently residing there, but of being passed on therefrom to the C. Union, and was readmitted into the E. workhouse:—Held, that when she left the E. Union on January 10, 1899, she had broken her residence therein and lost her status of irremovability therefrom, and that she was therefore properly removable from the E. Union to the C. Union. Cambridge Union v. Edmonton Union, 69 L. J. Q.B. 584; [1900] 2 Q.B. 111; 82 L. T. 495; 48 W. R. 559; 64 J. P. 533—D.

— Pauper in Receipt of Relief—Exclusion of Period.—The provisions of section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, as to the exclusion for all purposes in the computation of time under the section of any period, inter alia, during which a person is in receipt of relief, prevent a pauper who has acquired a status of irremovability under the section, and who is in receipt of relief, from losing that status by a change of residence so long as he continues to be in receipt of relief. Hartfield Overseers v. Rotherfield Overseers (21 L. J. M.C. 65; 17 Q.B. 746) followed. Poplar Union v. West Ham Union, 94 L. T. 769; 4 L. G. R. 512; 70 J. P. 255—D.

— Animus Revertendi.—A female domestic servant who had acquired a status of irremovability in the T. Union by reason of her residence in service there fell ill and was, at her own wish, taken by her mistress to a home for weak-minded girls in another union, where she had been brought up. She expressed a hope that she might, if she got better, be taken back again into the situation she was leaving; but in fact, though she was not aware of this, the mistress had determined not to take her back. She shortly afterwards became insane:—Held, that under the circumstances there was no evidence of animus revertendi on the pauper's part; and that her leaving her situation in the

T. Union broke her residence there. Tendring Union v. Ipswich Union, 1 L. G. R. 574; 67 J. P. 304—D.

— Illegitimate Child under Sixteen—Residence for Three Years—Independent Settlement.—Illegitimate children under sixteen, residing with their mother and putative father in a union from which the putative father is irremovable, acquire a settlement of their own in that union by virtue of section 3 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846. Fulham Union v. Woolwich Union, 76 L. J. K.B. 739; [1907] A.C. 255; 97 L. T. 117; 71 J. P. 361; 5 L. G. R. 801; 23 T. L. R. 583—H.L. (E.)

By the LORD CHANCELLOR.—Section 34 of the Divided Parishes Act, 1876, by which any person who shall have resided for the term of three years in a parish from which he has become irremovable shall be deemed to be settled therein until he shall have acquired a settlement elsewhere, is applicable to illegitimate children under sixteen. The section is not qualified by section 35, by which, with the exception of wives and children under sixteen, derivative settlements are abolished. Ib.

By LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The proviso to section 1 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, that a wife or children having no other settlement than that of the husband or parent are removable or irremovable, according as the husband or parent is removable or irremovable, applies to the case of illegitimate as well as to that of legitimate children. Ib.

— Residence with Reputed Father.—A woman left her husband in 1895, and went to live with another man in the W. Union, by whom she had three children. The man, woman, and children lived together in the W. Union from April, 1902, until February 23, 1905, when the woman died. On March 2, 1905, the reputed father and the children, who were under the age of sixteen years, were admitted into the workhouse of the W. Union, and on March 3, 1905, the reputed father died there:—Held, that by virtue of section 3 of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, the children were irremovable from the W. Union. Maidstone Union v. Wandsworth Union, 95 L. T. 125; 70 J. P. 403; 4 L. G. R. 1052—D.

— Residence with Parent and Mother's Husband.—An illegitimate child lived for three years with her mother and her mother's husband, being still under sixteen at the end of the residence:—Held, that she had acquired her mother's settlement—by the LORD CHANCELLOR on the ground that, the House having in Highworth and Swindon Union v. Westbury-on-Severn Union (59 L. J. M.C. 29; 14 App. Cas. 465) decided that part of the residence under sixteen was available to make up a settlement, it followed logically that the whole residence under that age would constitute a settlement; by LORD MACNAGHTEN on the ground that the child's mother took her husband's settlement, and that the child followed her mother's settlement till she attained sixteen and thereafter retained that settlement, the settlement thus acquired and retained ceasing to be a derivative and becoming a statutory settlement under section 35 of the

Divided Parishes Act, 1876. West Ham Union v. Holbeach Union, 74 L. J. K.B. 868; [1905] A.C. 450; 93 L. T. 557; 54 W. R. 137; 69 J. P. 442; 3 L. G. R. 1179; 21 T. R. 713—H.L. (E.)

Order of Justices Effective as a Judgment in Rem—Abortive Appeal—Appeal Dismissed on Technicality.—An order of two Justices, adjudging the settlement of a pauper to be in a particular union, is effective as a judgment in rem and conclusive as to the settlement of the pauper at the time; and an abortive appeal against it does not rob the order of its effect as a judgment in rem, notwithstanding the fact that such appeal has not been heard upon its merits, but has been dismissed merely upon a technical ground. Uxbridge Union v. Winchester Union, 91 L. T. 533; 2 L. G. R. 969; 68 J. P. 525—D.

7. MAINTENANCE.

Wilful Neglect to Maintain—Bona Fide Belief of Wife's Adultery.—The respondent T. E. was charged under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, for that he, being able to work and maintain himself and his wife and family, "wilfully refused or neglected" to do so. The magistrates found that he refused to maintain his wife because of the bona fide belief that she had committed adultery, and that he had offered under certain conditions to support his children. They dismissed the summons, holding that under these circumstances T. E., the respondent, had not "wilfully refused or neglected":—Held, that the magistrates were right. Morris v. Edmonds, 77 L. T. 56; 18 Cox C.C. 627—D.

Refusal of Work Offered at Labour Colony—Vagrancy Act.—Upon the prosecution of an able-bodied pauper, under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, as a person able wholly or in part to maintain himself and neglecting or refusing so to do, because he has refused work offered outside the workhouse for which he would receive board, lodging, and a small weekly wage, the Court must consider the conditions upon which such work has been offered, and whether the pauper's refusal to accept it was or was not reasonable. Poplar Union v. Martin (No. 1), 91 L. T. 550; 2 L. G. R. 1012; 68 J. P. 526; 20 Cox C.C. 742; 20 T. L. R. 659—D. And see VAGRANT.

Maintenance of Parent—Coverture—Married Woman having Separate Estate.—A married woman having separate estate is not liable under the Poor Law Acts to maintain a parent, even though she be of sufficient ability so to do. Pontypool Union v. Buck, 76 L. J. K.B. 66; [1906] 2 K.B. 896; 95 L. T. 795; 4 L. G. R. 1148; 71 J. P. 5; 23 T. L. R. 17—D.

of Wife—Order against Husband—Liability of Son—Concurrent Liability.—Justices have power, under section 7 of the Poor Relief Act, 1601, to make a maintenance order against the son of a woman who is a pauper lunatic, notwithstanding that a similar order has already been made against her husband under section 5 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1850. Cole v. Brown, 76 L. J. K.B. 847; [1907] 2 K.B.

301; 96 L. T. 710; 71 J. P. 335; 5 L. G. R. 727—D.

— of Son—Assignment by Father by Post-nuptial Settlement on Second Marriage—"Sufficient ability."—Where a father, in order to avoid a claim for the maintenance of his son, conveys all his property to his second wife by way of post-nuptial settlement, the Justices can draw the inference that the father is of "sufficient ability" to maintain such son within section 7 of the Poor Relief Act, 1601. Coulson v. Davidson, 96 L. T. 20; 71 J. P. 17; 5 L. G. R. 56—D.

— of Relatives—Running Away and Leaving Children Chargeable—Failure to Remove Children from Workhouse after Expiration of Sentence for Previous Offence.—A parent who has been convicted under section 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, of running away and leaving his children, whereby they became chargeable, and who has in consequence undergone a sentence of imprisonment, may be again convicted under the section of running away and leaving such children chargeable, if on the expiration of his sentence he fails to remove them from the workhouse and absconds. Bannister v. Sullivan, 91 L. T. 380; 2 L. G. R. 874; 68 J. P. 390; 20 Cox C.C. 685—D.

— of Bastard—Marriage of Mother—Liability of Husband—Liability of Putative Father.—A bastard child may become "chargeable to a parish" within the meaning of section 5 of the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1873, although its mother has married a man who is able to maintain the child. Plymouth Guardians v. Gibbs, 72 L. J. K.B. 38; [1903] 1 K.B. 177; 87 L. T. 685; 51 W. R. 157; 67 J. P. 61; 1 L. G. R. 48—D.

— of Pauper Children sent from Outside Area to Infection Hospital.—A number of pauper children, who were chargeable to the Chorlton Union, were sent, with the sanction of the Local Government Board, to a school certified for the reception of pauper children, situated in the urban district of Tottington. Tottington formed one of the constituent districts of the united district of which the plaintiff board (which was formed by a provisional order of the Local Government Board under section 279 of the Public Health Act, 1875) was the governing body; Chorlton Union was outside the plaintiff board's district. An outbreak of scarlet fever having occurred in the Tottington school, some of the children who had been sent there by the Chorlton Union were, at the instance of the medical adviser to the school, who was also medical officer of health for the Tottington district, sent to the hospital maintained by the plaintiffs. There was no evidence of any authority by the Chorlton Union to such removal. The plaintiffs claimed to recover from Chorlton Union the expense of such maintenance:—Held, that the action failed, there being no statutory liability on the part of Chorlton Union, and no evidence of any contractual liability, either express or to be implied from the urgency of the circumstances. Bury and District Joint Hospital Board v. Chorlton Union, 70 J. P. 31; 4 L. G. R. 489—Bray, J.

Pauper Lunatic — Out-Union Patient — Expenses of Maintenance—Amount Chargeable.]—The visiting committee of a lunatic asylum are not empowered under sub-section 3 of section 283 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, to fix a weekly sum, not exceeding 14s., in respect of the maintenance in the asylum of out-county pauper lunatics, in addition to the weekly sum already fixed by them, under sub-section 1, in respect of the maintenance of each pauper lunatic in the asylum; but where they have, under sub-section 1, fixed a weekly sum of less than 14s. in respect of each pauper lunatic, they have power to differentiate between in-county and out-county pauper lunatics by fixing the maximum weekly sum of 14s. in respect of out-county pauper lunatics. Fitch v. Bermondsey Guardians, 74 L. J. K.B. 250; [1905] 1 K.B. 524; 92 L. T. 343; 53 W. R. 308; 3 L. G. R. 300; 69 J. P. 102; 21 T. L. R. 206—C.A.

— Wife Deserted by Her Husband—Misconduct of Wife.]—A wife having given way to habits of intemperance and having conducted herself in a manner rendering it impossible for her husband to keep a respectable home for the children of the marriage, the husband told her that he and she must part for a time; that she must find some other lodging and might take enough furniture to furnish it; and that he would allow her eight shillings a week so long as she continued chaste. Both parties then left the house in which they had been living, and separated, the wife taking with her enough furniture to supply a room for herself. For eleven months the husband paid the wife eight shillings a week. At the end of that time he found that she had committed adultery, and from thenceforth he neither saw her nor contributed towards her maintenance. She lived for nearly seven years with the adulterer in the appellants union. She was then found a pauper wandering in a state of lunacy in the respondent union, and was removed to a lunatic asylum in that union. An order having been made by Justices adjudging that the place from which she was then irremovable was in the appellants union,—Held, that she was a married woman “deserted by her husband” within the meaning of section 3 of the Poor Removal Act, 1861; and that, therefore, having resided in the appellants union for more than the three years prescribed by that section [now one year by virtue of section 17 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1866], she was irremovable from the appellants union. Reg. v. Maidstone Union (49 L. J. M.C. 25; 5 Q.B. D. 31) followed. Southwark Union v. City of London Guardians, 75 L. J. K.B. 559; [1906] 2 K.B. 112; 94 L. T. 763; 54 W. R. 547; 4 L. G. R. 730; 70 J. P. 449; 22 T. L. R. 568—C.A.

— Adjudication of Settlement — Order on Guardians for Expenses of Maintenance—Action for Recovery of Expenses Ordered to be Paid — Defences — Adjudication of Settlement made in Ignorance of Facts—Fresh Settlement Acquired since Adjudication.]—In an action brought under section 314, sub-section 2 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, for the recovery of the expenses of maintenance of a pauper lunatic from a board of guardians in whose union the pauper's settlement has, under section 289, been adjudged to be, and who have been ordered by Justices to pay such expenses, the adjudication is conclusive as to the settlement. Accordingly, evidence to shew either that the adjudication was erroneous and made in ignorance of the facts, or that the pauper has since the adjudication acquired a fresh settlement, is not admissible. Where the pauper has acquired a fresh settlement since the adjudication, the remedy of the guardians is to apply for a fresh adjudication under sections 288 and 289. Suffolk County Asylum v. Nottingham Union, 3 L. G. R. 362; 69 J. P. 120—D.

Arrears of Maintenance — Recovery — Adult and Sane Pauper.]—Where an adult and sane pauper, who has been in a workhouse for some years, comes into money, the guardians have a common-law right of action against him to recover six years' arrears of money expended by them in respect of his maintenance. Birkenhead Union v. Brookes, 95 L. T. 359; 70 J. P. 406; 4 L. G. R. 988; 22 T. L. R. 583—D.

— — Infant Pauper — Legacy — Guardians' Right to.]—Section 16 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1849, entitling poor-law guardians to appropriate or recover out of the property of a pauper the expense incurred by them in maintaining him during the previous twelve months, leaves unaffected their common-law right of recovering in respect of expenditure necessarily incurred for his benefit. Accordingly, where an infant pauper becomes entitled to property he will be under the common-law liability to repay the guardians for expenses necessarily incurred for his benefit to the full extent of six years' arrears. Clabbon, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 853; [1904] 2 Ch. 465; 91 L. T. 316; 53 W. R. 43; 68 J. P. 588; 2 L. G. R. 1292; 20 T. L. R. 712—Farwell, J.

— — Pauper Lunatic.]—Maintenance of a pauper lunatic in an asylum by the guardians of the poor of the parish to which he is chargeable, constitutes a debt of the lunatic to the guardians. Watson, In re; Stamford Union v. Bartlett, 68 L. J. Ch. 21; [1899] 1 Ch. 72; 79 L. T. 462; 47 W. R. 359—Stirling, J.

In an action by the guardians against his legal personal representative for arrears of maintenance, the Statute of Limitations may be set up. Ib.

Arrears of maintenance from a date six years prior to the commencement of the action only are recoverable. Newbiggin, In re; Eggleton v. Newbiggin (56 L. J. Ch. 907; 36 Ch. D. 477), followed. Ib.

In such an action the Court will not, in order to grant more than six years' arrears, take judicial notice of what might have been the effect of presenting a petition in lunacy for arrears in the lunatic's lifetime. Stedman v. Hart (23 L. J. Ch. 908; Kay, 607) distinguished. Ib.

— — Payments on Account—Appropriation.]—A pauper lunatic can plead the Statute of Limitations as a defence to a claim by guardians of the poor for arrears of maintenance, but the same answers can be made to that plea as in the case of any ordinary action for debt. Wandsworth Union v. Worthington, 75 L. J. K.B. 235; [1906] 1 K.B. 420; 95 L. T. 331; 54 W. R. 422; 70 J. P. 191; 4 L. G. R. 320; 22 T. L. R. 284—Farwell, J.

When the receiver in lunacy of a pauper lunatic, acting under a general order of the Court directing him to apply the lunatic's income for her maintenance and benefit, had during a number of years made payments on account of the arrears of maintenance to the guardians of the poor, it was held that the guardians were entitled to recover from the lunatic's estate the whole of the amount still owing for arrears of maintenance, and not merely the arrears of maintenance for the six years prior to the commencement of the proceedings. Ib.

— — — Fund in Court—Form of Order—Payment on Account of Arrears of Maintenance.]

—Three pauper lunatics had for some years been confined in the L. County Asylum, and the guardians of the union to which they were chargeable had duly paid from time to time to the treasurer of the asylum the expenses of their maintenance. In 1905 the lunatics became entitled under a will to sums of money which were paid into Court by the trustees of the will, and were represented by Consols. On a summons taken out by the guardians asking that they might be recouped from the funds in Court for the past maintenance of the lunatics, and that provision might be made for their future maintenance,—Held, that the guardians ought to be paid from the funds the amounts paid annually in respect of the maintenance of the lunatics, such payments to the guardians to be deemed to be so made on account of arrears of maintenance claimed, as well as of future maintenance. Williams's Trust, In re, 96 L. T. 563; 5 L. G. R. 542; 71 J. P. 209—Parker, J.

— — — Claim in Administration of Deceased Lunatic's Estate.]—A pauper lunatic who had been maintained by the guardians since November 1, 1889, became entitled on October 14, 1895, to a sum of money as one of the next-of-kin of an uncle. The guardians, in February, 1898, applied in lunacy for the appointment of a receiver of the fund and payment thereof of the cost of the lunatic's maintenance for the then preceding six years. On January 31, 1899, an order was made in lunacy appointing a receiver and directing him to pay to the guardians 95l. 14s. for the maintenance of the lunatic from October 14, 1895, to February 14, 1899, and to apply the balance for the future maintenance of the lunatic. The lunatic died on June 29, 1899:—Held, that the claim of the guardians for the maintenance of the lunatic for the part of the six years prior to October 14, 1895, was a valid legal debt, and was not affected by the order in lunacy, and the guardians could enforce their claim against the lunatic's estate now that she was dead. Taylor, In re; Edmonton Union v. Deeley, 70 L. J. Ch. 332; [1901] 1 Ch. 480; 84 L. T. 35—C.A.

Failure to Comply with Maintenance Order—Jurisdiction to Commit Defendant—Evidence of Means.]—Justices have no jurisdiction to commit to prison a person for disobedience to an order made upon him for the payment of a weekly sum towards the maintenance of his father in the absence of proof that such person has, or has had since the date of the order, the means of payment, and has refused or neglected to pay in accordance with the terms of the order. Gamble, In re, 68 L. J. Q.B. 195; [1899] 1 Q.B. 305; 79 L. T. 642; 63 J. P. 101; 19 Cox C.C. 225—D.

Money due under such an order is merely a civil debt, and comes within the provisions of sections 6 and 35 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. Ib.

Order for Maintenance—Appeal to Quarter Sessions.]—An appeal does not lie to quarter sessions against an order of petty sessions for the maintenance of a pauper. Reg. v. London Justices; Greenwich Union, Ex parte, 69 L. J. Q.B. 364; [1900] 1 Q.B. 438; 82 L. T. 296; 48 W. R. 319; 64 J. P. 357—D.

Summary Reception Order—Pauper Lunatic.]—See LUNATIC, col. 1439.

8. RELIEF.

Outdoor Relief.]—4 Edw. 7 c. 32 is the Outdoor Relief (Friendly Societies) Act, 1904.

Duty of Guardians—Objection to Rate.]—Guardians are bound to give relief in urgent cases, even though such urgency may have arisen from the wilful refusal of those requiring it to work, the proper course for the guardians to adopt in case of wilful persistence in such refusal being to prosecute under the Vagrancy Act, 1824. Generally speaking, while the Court has jurisdiction in a proper case in an action at the instance of ratepayers to restrain guardians from applying poor rates for unauthorised purposes, it is not proper for ratepayers objecting to a poor rate as excessive to come to the Court by way of appeal against it and ask for an injunction, instead of going before the auditors appointed by the Local Government Board, and appealing therefrom as provided by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1844. Att.-Gen. v. Merthyr Tydfil Union, 80 L. T. 618; 63 J. P. 536—Romer, J.

Able-Bodied Workmen who Refuse to Work—Wives and Children—Workmen on Strike.]—It is not lawful for the guardians of the poor of a union to give relief by means of relief works, or otherwise, to able-bodied men who are physically fit to work and able to obtain work at wages sufficient to support themselves and their families, but who refuse to perform such work. If the men become so reduced by want as to be unable to work they may be relieved, but they would then be liable to prosecution under the Vagrancy Act, 1824. Att.-Gen. v. Merthyr Tydfil Union, 69 L. J. Ch. 299; [1900] 1 Ch. 516; 82 L. T. 662; 48 W. R. 403; 64 J. P. 276—C.A.

The fact that there are large numbers of men who refuse to work owing to a trade strike does not create a case of urgent necessity within the meaning of section 54 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, or give to the men collectively any right to relief which they would not have individually. Ib.

Relief may be given to the wives and children of the men who refuse to work, and also to other men who are thrown out of work in consequence of their refusal, if such persons are destitute. Ib.

The Local Government Board as the successors of the Commissioners appointed under the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, to carry out the provisions of that Act, have no power under that Act, or the Poor Law Audit Act, 1848, s. 4, to extend the application of the Poor Law statutes to persons not entitled to relief under them. They have not this power even in cases of emergency. Ib.

The High Court has jurisdiction to make a declaration to prevent an illegal application of the rates by guardians, but it cannot control the power of the Local Government Board to remit the disallowance of unlawful payments under section 4 of the Poor Law Audit Act, 1848. Ib.

— Workmen on Strike.—During a strike in the coal trade poor law guardians opened labour yards, with the sanction of the Local Government Board, and gave employment therein to numbers of those on strike, although it appeared that these men had been offered work at the mines at a wage sufficient to maintain themselves and their families, but that they had refused such offer. On the hearing of a motion for an interim injunction at the instance of certain ratepayers to restrain the guardians from paying for such relief out of their common fund, it appeared that the labour yards had then been closed and that all the expenses connected therewith had been paid except an amount due for stone supplied to the yards. Except for the purpose of meeting this particular amount the guardians gave an undertaking that until the trial of the action they would not draw further on their common fund in connection with the matter, and upon this undertaking no order was made on the motion. Att.-Gen. v. Bedwellty Union, 62 J. P. 792—Stirling, J.

9. MISCONDUCT OF PAUPER.

Order of Workhouse Officer—Disobedience—“Misbehaviour.”—A refusal by a pauper when outside a workhouse to obey a lawful order to go to another workhouse is not “misbehaviour” within the meaning of section 5 of the Poor Relief Act, 1815. Mile End Guardians v. Sims, 74 L. J. K.B. 647; [1905] 2 K.B. 200; 92 L. T. 238; 69 J. P. 145; 3 L. G. R. 349; 20 Cox C.C. 807; 21 T. L. R. 241—D.

Refusal to Work—Reasonableness of Conditions upon which Work Offered.—Where an able-bodied pauper is offered work upon the conditions that he promises to abstain from all intoxicating drink whilst resident on “the Colony,” and not to enter any premises where intoxicating drink is sold, and to discourage others from doing so; also to abstain from the use of all profane or obscene language whilst on the colony, and to attend the Saturday-night roll-call meetings in the citadel, and any special meetings which may from time to time be arranged by the governor of the colony, and to attend some place of worship once on a Sunday; he does not, by refusing to accept the work, wilfully refuse or neglect to maintain himself within the meaning of section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, and therefore is not liable to be convicted under that section. Any conditions imposed upon the person to whom work is offered must, in order to bring him within the section if he refuses to accept the work, have reference to the work or the wages that are offered for it. Poplar Union v. Martin (No. 2), 74 L. J. K.B. 306; [1905] 1 K.B. 728; 92 L. T. 197; 53 W. R. 398; 69 J. P. 146; 3 L. G. R. 340; 20 Cox C.C. 785; 21 T. L. R. 240—D.

Casual Pauper—Task Imposed upon—Breaking Stones—“Pounding” Stones.—Under the General Order of the Local Government Board, dated December 18, 1882, casual male paupers who are detained more than one night may be required to break 7 cwt. of stone, or such other quantity not less than 5 cwt., nor more than 13 cwt., as the guardians, having regard to the nature of the stone, may prescribe—the stone to be broken to such a size as the guardians, having regard to the nature thereof, may prescribe:—Held, that this did not authorise the imposing upon a casual male pauper the task of pounding 1 cwt. of stone. Rea v. Baddeley; Moore, Ex parte, 70 J. P. 346—D.

10. RATEABILITY.

Beneficial Occupation—Caretaker or Servant.—If a person is a mere caretaker of a house, put in to preserve the house from depredation, the master who puts in such caretaker is not liable to be rated in respect of the house, because he has no beneficial occupation. The question in each case is whether there is a beneficial occupation. Bertie v. Walthamstow Overseers, 63 J. P. 545; 2 L. G. R. 1178—D.

The appellant, who was building a number of houses, put his foreman, who was receiving as such the usual wage of 2l. 15s. a week, into one of the houses. He paid no rent, and was subject to removal to any other of the appellant's houses at twenty-four hours' notice. The foreman's duty, besides his ordinary work as such, was to answer enquiries and look after the appellant's houses. The Justices held that the appellant was in occupation through his servant the foreman:—Held, that there was evidence to support that finding, and that the Court would not interfere with the Justices' determination. Ib.

Licensed Premises—Rateable Value—Hypothetical Tenant—Competing Firms of Brewers.—For the purpose of the assessment of premises to the poor rate, any circumstances which affect their annual value in the market must be taken into consideration in arriving at the gross estimated value—that is, at the sum which may reasonably be expected to be obtained from a tenant from year to year. Therefore, in the case of a public-house, if a demand for premises of that kind exists, whether by brewers or others, such demand must be considered, inasmuch as that demand directly affects the value. But any sums paid by the tenant, not by reason of the value of the premises, but for reasons personal to himself, ought not to be taken into account, except so far as the probability of such sums being obtained raises the market value of the premises generally. White

v. Bradford-on-Avon Assessment Committee, 67 L. J. Q.B. 643; [1893] 2 Q.B. 630; 78 L. T. 758; 46 W. R. 603; 62 J. P. 533—D.

Agricultural Land—Market Garden—Glass-houses—Buildings.—The occupier of a market garden covered with glass-houses is not an occupier of agricultural land within the meaning of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, and is not entitled to the exemption conferred by that Act upon the occupiers of agricultural land. Smith v. Richmond, 68 L. J. Q.B. 898; [1899] A.C. 448; 81 L. T. 269; 48 W. R. 115; 65 J. P. 804—H.L. (E.)

Rating of Shooting Rights—Land Used as “arable meadow or pasture ground.”—A person who rents shooting rights over lands being arable, meadow, or pasture ground and woodlands is not an occupier of land used as “arable meadow or pasture ground only or as woodlands” within section 211, sub-section 1 (b) of the Public Health Act, 1875, but is the occupier of the special hereditament made rateable by section 3, sub-section 2 of the Rating Act, 1874, and is therefore liable to be rated under the Act of 1874 to the net annual value, and is not entitled to be assessed under the Act of 1875 in the proportion of one-fourth only of such annual value thereof. Alton Urban Council v. Spicer, 73 L. J. K.B. 280; [1904] 1 K.B. 678; 90 L. T. 576; 52 W. R. 624; 68 J. P. 256; 2 L. G. R. 507; 20 T. L. R. 296—D.

Canal—No Beneficial Occupation.—By an Act of 30 Geo. 3 the appellants were authorised to make a canal, and they were to be rated in respect of the lands and grounds purchased and taken in pursuance of the Act in the same proportion as other lands and grounds lying near were or should be rated, and “as the same lands and grounds so to be purchased or taken would be rateable in case the same were the property of individuals in their natural capacity.” Coal being worked near a portion of the canal, it began to subside and had to be closed and could not be used.—Held, that this portion was rateable as if it were open for canal traffic, and capable of being and in fact being so used. Glamorganshire Canal Co. v. Merthyr Tydfil Union, 88 L. T. 85; 67 J. P. 52; 1 L. G. R. 34—D.

Church and Mission Halls.—Church and mission halls sometimes used for temperance meetings and for congregational social meetings are not exclusively appropriated to public religious worship so as to be exempt from rating within section 1 of the Rating Exemptions (Scotland) Act, 1874 (which corresponds to section 1 of the Poor Rates Exemption Act, 1833). College Street U.F. Church v. Edinburgh Parish Council, 3 F. 414—Ct. of Sess.

Churchyard—Additional Land for Extension—Sale of Places for Interment—Receipt of Fees by Incumbent—Occupation by Incumbent—Liability to be Rated.—The ancient churchyard of a parish having become full, additional land, three hundred yards from the church, was acquired and consecrated as a burial ground. The incumbent of the parish received and retained to his own use the net sum derived from the sale of freehold graves, from fees for the re-opening of graves, for single interments in public graves, the placing of memorials, planting, &c.:—Held, that he was not in occupation either of the burial ground, or of the places for interment, or of the fees paid in respect thereof, so as to make him liable to poor rate as the beneficial occupier thereof. North Manchester Overseers v. Winstanley, 76 L. J. K.B. 33; [1907] 1 K.B. 27; 95 L. T. 796; 71 J. P. 48; 5 L. G. R. 7; 23 T. L. R. 35—D.

An additional piece of land annexed, although not immediately contiguous, to an ancient churchyard which has become full is, equally with the ancient churchyard, exempt from rateability. Ib.

Coal Mine—Maintenance of Permanent Main Roads and Airways in Mine—“Repairs.”—An annual expenditure was incurred in keeping in repair the permanent main roads and permanent main airways in a coal mine, such expenditure being necessary to maintain the mine in a state to command the gross rent paid for it:—Held, that such annual expenditure was in respect of “repairs” within the meaning of that term in section 1 of the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, and that such sum had therefore to be deducted from the gross rent to arrive at the rateable value of the mine. Brown v. Rotherham Assessment Committee, 83 L. T. 193; 64 J. P. 580—D.
